GREAVE, s. i. e. Grove, (qv.) Also the trees constituting the grove: also a groove.

"Leave your treasure fast closed in some hollow greave."—Spenser.

GREAVE, s. Cot calls the Fr. Grèves, "Boots, also greaves, or armour for the legs:" (grooves for the legs.)

Fr. Grèves; Sp. Grevas,—either (Sk.) from Fr. Grève, the shin or fore-part of the leg, or from L.

Gravis, because heavy to the limbs. In D. Gref-kens; probably it is from A. S. Graf-tan; D. Graven, gref-tan, to groove, to hollow out; and so called from their hollowness.

GREAVES, s. The refuse of skin, gristle, bone, &c. of substances boiled to make tallow, is so called. See GRAVY.

GREE, v. s. Fr. Gréer, to agree, or give consent unto.—Cot. Mr. Tyrw. says, Fr. Gré, pleasure, satisfaction, from L. Gratus. To receive in gre,—to take kindly. A- Con-

GREE, s. GREECE. Also written Grice, Grize. A step or degree, a step or stair.

Grease, grice, grices, or stairs, qd. degras, says Mins.; or rather, Sk. adds, though it amounts to the same thing, from the Fr. Gré, pl. grés, from the L. Gratus.

GREED, or GREET, v. Greedy, ad.—

-Y. Eager after; seeking, desiring, or

-ILY. coveting with the eagerness of

-INESS. hunger; without restraint of appetite, or desire; ravenous.

"To griet or greet,—to weep or cry; it seems to come from the It. Gridare, to cry or weep. Vox Scoticus usitatissima."—Reg. But Jamieson, with good reason, from the Go. Greit-an, (Dan. Græd-er.)

Dan. Grædig; A. S. Gried-ig, from Græd-an; Go. Greit-an, to cry, to cry out or clamour for; and, cons. to be eager after; to desire hungrily, or ravenously. Over-

GREEKLING, s. Greeklings,—a dim. of

-ISH. Greek; a little Greek; a Greek of

GRECISM. little value or esteem.

Grecism,—a mode of expression peculiar to, an idiom of, the Greek language.

"The Greeks," says Archbishop Narus, (ad v.) "were proverbially spoken of by the Romans as fond of good living and free potations, and they used the term Græci for—to indulge in these articles."—Classici assuetus Græcari. Hence in Eng. we obtain the proverbial expression, "As merry as a Greek," not as it is sometimes corrupted "Grig," (a small eel.) Latterly a Greek has been app. to a character of less openness, not to a bon vivant, but to a gambler.

GREEN, v. s. ad. Verdant; met.—having

-ISH. the verdure, the vigour, of any

-LY. thing growing, or vegetating;

-NESS. flourishing, vigorous. Also, un-

-HEAD.* ripe, as growing fruit; and thus, immature, raw, inexperienced.

Green-head is used by Chaucer:—immaturity, inexperience.

Green-horn,—an immature, simple fellow; a simpleton.—**Chaucer*.

A. S. Græn; D. & Sw. Græn; Ger. Grün; Dan. Grøn. The Ger. Grün, Wach. derives from Grünen, virere. Itho considers Græ, vireo, (A. S. Græ-an), as the root of Sw. Græn; and Sk. and Jan. the A. S. Græ-an, to be the root of the whole. Tooke (in agreement with Wach.) says, Græn is the past p. of Grænian, vireo; as Fluere of Fluere, and Præsinus from Præsinere; but Grænian may itself be from Græ-an; and app. to the colour produced by the growing or growth of vegetable life.

Green-gage

GREET, v. -ING. To proclaim, sc. a salutation, a welcome; to salute, to welcome, to congratulate; to hail.

A.S. Gret-an; D. Groeten; Ger. Gruessen; salute, saluam, dicere; probably from A.S. Gred-an, to cry or call to, to proclaim. Con- Re-

GREGFIER, s. A register or notary.

Fr. Greffier; Low L. Graphære, scribere; from Gr. Γραφω, to write. In the Spectator, No. 470, is an advertisement that a Mr. Burges had received a new supply of spa water, fresh and good, and certified as such by the Greffier of the Spa.

GREGARIAN, ad. -GARIOUS. Flocking or herding together; of the common flock or herd. A gregarius soldier,—a common soldier.

GRENADIER. See GRANADE.

GREY, or GRAY, ad. s. -ISH. App. to—One of the two extremes, white or black, dyed or stained by the other.

The s.—Darkness dawning into light; or light fading into darkness.

A.S. Gray; D. Grauw; Ger. Grau; Sw. Grus; Dan. Græs; Fr. Gris; It. Grigio. Sk. thinks it may be color Græcus; though Ger. Grau, he observes, plurimum albidit, L. Rævus. Tooke derives from A.S. Gærgen-an, inficere, to dye or dip, to stain or colour. Be-

GREY-HOUND, s. "The next kind [of dog] is the Leporarius, or Grey-hound. Dr. Caius informs us, that it takes its name from præcipui gradus sit inter canes; the first in rank among dogs: that it was formerly esteemed so, appears from the Forest Laws of King Canute, that no one under the degree of a gentleman should presume to keep a gre-hound."—Pennant.

This word is of unsettled etym. Dr. Hickes, in his Dictionarium Islandicum, says, "Grey, canis; canis in nostro grey-hound. Comp. ex grey, and hound, venator." qd. a hunting dog. Dr. Jamieson so far supplies the deficiency of Hickes as to produce an instance of the usage of the word Grey, in its simple form; but neither he nor Hickes say any thing with respect to the cause of the application. Miss. thinks that Grey-hound is Grecian-hound, because first in use among the Greeks. The D. have Grip-hound, canis rapax, from Gryps, to seize, and hound. (See Kilian.) The A.S. is Grip-hound. The etym. produced by Pennant seems doubtful; and indeed it is not very clear, whether he means that the dog took his name from his own rank, or from that of his authorized master. In addition to his reference to the Laws of Canute, it may be observed, that, by 15 Rich. II. c. 13, "No priest nor other clerke, if he be not advanced to the value of x. li. by the year, shall have or keep any greyhound, hound, or other dogge for to hunt." &c. In some of our old writers the word is contracted into Growth.

GRICE, s. App. by B. Jonson to—The cub of a badger;—usually, to swine.

Sk. acknowledges the word only as (by Piers Plowman) app. ad porcellum, to a young pig. Ital. Gris; perhaps from D. Grise; Fr. Gris, ci-neas, seu color cineritius; ashy, coloured like ash; the young of swine being of this colour, though the old ones may be darker.

GRIDE, v. s. To smite, to pierce or cut through. See GIRD, to smite.

"Spenser. Milton.

GRIDELIN,* ad. Fr. Gris-de-lin, a colour so called from its resemblance to the flower, of flax, (lin.) Men.; who adds, the Mod. Gr. call it Αελιακί, (ilac), from its resemblance to the flower of the ilac.—"Dryden.

GRIDIRON, s. An iron grate, (placed, when used, on the fire.)

Craticula ferrea, qd. grate iron.—Sk. The Fr. Grille; It. Graticola. Men. derives from Craticula, a dim. of Crates. Dr. Jamieson (in v. Gradan,) thinks that in the Eng. Gridiron, traces of Sw.-Go. Graedda, igne torrere, are to be found. Our grid is not improbably a corruption of the Fr. Grille, from which language our terms in cookery, and names of the utensils, are principally borrowed.

GRIEF, s. To grieve, (according to Sk.) -FUL. —To be or cause to be heavy;

GRIEVE, v. to bear heavily upon, weigh down, -ABLE. burthen, sink, depress; sc. with

-ANCE. sorrow or affliction.—Otherwise,

-ER. —to bereave, to deprive; to dis-

-INGLY. tress, to distract; to afflict, to

-OUS. pain; to cause or bear pain or

-OUS-LY. sorrow; to sorrow, to mourn, to

-NESS. bewail.

Grief and Grievance, in Shak. (J. Cæsar: "Speak your griefs softly;" and Two Gent. of Verona: "I pity much your grievances") would, according to modern usage, be interchanged.

"Grief is sometimes considered as synonymous with sorrow; and in this case we speak of the transports of grief. At other times it expresses more silent, deep, and painful affections; such as are inspired by domestic calamities; particularly by the loss of friends and relatives; or by the distress, either of body or mind, experienced by those whom we love and value."—Cogan.

Fr. Grever; It. Gravare; Sp. Agraviar; from L. Gravare, gravis, heavy.—Sk. Perhaps, A.S. Ge-rif-an, ge-raf-an, rapere, discerpere; ge-raf-te, discerpere.

GRIFFIN, GRYPHIN, or GRIFFON, s.

"That there are griffins in nature, that is, a mixt and dubious animal, in the forefront resembling an eagle, and behind, the shape of a lion, with directed ears, four feet, and a long tail, many affirm, and most, I perceive, deny not."—Brown.

Fr. Griffon; It. fene; D. foen; Sp. o; L. Gryphus and gryps. "The word Γρυψ, or gryps," (says Sir T. Brown) "sometimes mentioned in Scripture and frequently in humane authors, properly understood, signifies some kind of eagle or vulture; from whence the epithete grypus, for an hooked or aquiline nose." Voss. calls it avis fabulosa, having its name ab aduncæ rostro. Kilian says, qd. Grip-hoen; but it is not a creature of northern invention. See GAIRF.

GRIGG, s. A very small eel.

Sk. knows not whether from Gryce, a crooked staff, from some resemblance of the one to the other; or from Cræcus, a creek or bay, because these eels frequent such places. The A.S. Wrig-æ (in old Eng. To wrie) is to cover,—the dim. of which is wriggle; and by the name ripple, is a small sand eel known on some parts of the coast, probably so called from the quickness with which it wriggles or covers itself under the sand, when attempted to be caught. The usual prefix ge forms ge-wrig-an, which by contraction would become grig; and thus the word, as applied to the fish, may be accounted for; and from the quickness, nimbleness, liveliness of this fish may have arisen the phrase, As merry as a grig. But see GRANK, for a more probable explanation of this phrase.

GRILL, s. v. -Y. "Fr. Griller,—to broil on a grid-iron; also, to scorch, parch, or dry up with extreme heat"—Cot. See GRID-IRON. Used met.

GRILLE. Is found in our old Romances as ad. s. and v. Mr. Tyrw. says, horrible: it may be formed from Grisly, (qv.) grisle, grille. To grill, horrere: to cause horror.

GRIM, ad. Enraged, furious; fearful, -LY, ad. av. frightful; terrible; having a -NESS. fierce and stern look or countenance; fierce and stern. It appears to be sometimes popularly used, as grimy; met. clouded, gloomy.

Grimace,—Fr. "Grimace. A crab'd look; a face, wry-mouth, ill-favoured countenance made, a mowing or ape's face."—Cot.

A. S. Grame; Dan. & D. Grim; Ger. Grimm; Sw. Grym; past p. of A. S. Gramian, grymian; D. & Ger. Grimmen; sewre, fremere, to rave, or rage. (See GRAM.) Serenus and Lye would derive Grimace from the Islandic. Men acknowledge a diversity of opinion; his editor decides for Grim, in which he is confirmed by Cot.'s explanation of the usage of the word.

GRIMALKIN, s. Archdeacon Nares,—"Grimalkin, qd. grey-malkin, a name for a fiend, supposed to resemble a grey-cat."

"Grimalkin's a hell-cat, the devil may choke her." Ballad of Alley Croker.

Malkin, Sk. says, is a dim. of Maria.

GRIME, v. s. -Y. To make grim; to give a grim aspect or appearance; sc. by dark, dirty, or sooty marks or spots; and thus, to smear or rub with any thing dark, dirty, or sooty.

Sk.—from D. begriemen, beghremen, begremelen, gremelen, denigrare, maculare, to blacken, to spot; and these from the s. Grimen;—qd. deformem et aspectu torvum reddere. Be—

GRIN, v. s. -NER. Also written Girn, (qv.) To draw aside the lips, and show the teeth.

A. S. Grennan, grennagan, grinnian; D. Grinnen, -den; Ger. Grinsen; Sw. Grina; Dan. Grinser; It. Di-grig-nare; ringere, os torquere; to draw awry or withdraw the lips, sc. so as to show or display the teeth.

GRIN,* or GREEN, s. A trap, perhaps a toothed trap, and of the same origin as v. To grin, (qv.)—**Chaucer*. Udal. Str T. More. Geneva Bible, 1561.

A. S. Girene, gorn, gris. "Grine, occulpulum, laqueus, a gris, a snare."—Som.

GRIND, v. To rub together, to rub to a -ER. point or edge; to bruise or crush -ING. by rubbing together. Met.—to -STONE. press hard upon, to oppress.

A. S. Grindan, molere, conterere; (also, dentibus frendere, D. Grinden.) Grind-lothes, dentes molares, the grinders.

GRIPLE, v. s. Cot well interprets—"To -ER. seize, gripe, grasp; elineh, -ING. catch or snatch at; lay violent hold or covetous hands -PLE, ad. s. on."

-PLENESS.* To hold tight or close, to pinch; to embrace fast or firmly. Met.—to hurt, to distress, to extort.

Gripple, a dim. of Gripe. See GRAPPLE. Gripping,—pinching, stinging.—**Bp. Hall*. Go. Greipan; D. Grilpen; Ger. Griffen; A. S. Grip-an; Sw. -a; Fr. -per; Dan. Griber. Be—

GRIPLE, s. This Griph or Geire, a kind of eagle, is ravenous, and feeds much on carrion.—Holinshed.

The L. Grype, is the griffa, (qv.) The old Eng. Gripe, from the A. S. Grip-an, app. to an eagle or vulture, from the strength of its gripe, appears sometimes to be confounded with this fabled animal.

GRIS,* s. Fr. Gris, "A kind of weasel or little beast of a blewish colour."—Cot. App. to—The skin or fur of the gris. **Chaucer*. Berners.

GRIS-AMBER,* s. i. e. Amber-gris, or grey amber.—**Milton*.

GRISLY, ad. -INESS. Terrible, dreadful, frightful, hideous.

A. S. Gris-lie; D. Grisslich; Ger. Grisslich, horridus, terribilis, from v. A-gris-an, horret, to terrify, (to agrise, qv.) See GAISE. A—

GRIST, s. Corn or grain—bruised or crushed; gen.—provender.

Ge-rised, grised, grist,—that which is crushed, the past p. of Ge-risan, to crush.—Tooke.

GRISTLE, s. -Y. A strong cartilage.

A. S. Gristle, grisle, cartilago. Sk. thinks it may be from L. Crustula; since cartilage is hard, instar crusta; more probably a dim. of Grist, (qv.) that which may be crushed, is easily crushed; opposed to the strength and hardness of bone. "Catherine Douglass thrust her arm in the place where the bar should have passed; she was but young, and her bones not strong, but rather tender as a gristle, and therefore her arm was soon cracked in sunder."—Holinshed. James I.

GRIT, s. Gen. app. to—Small particles -T-Y. of stone, or hard dirt. Grit or -INESS. Groats,—the grain of oats with the husk scaled or shelled off.

A. S. Groat, gritta; D. & Ger. Groat; Sw. Gryt from Ger. Grutten, (Seren.) or Gritzen, (Wack.) comminuere, to crush. It appears to be the same word as Grist (the s. dropped) diff. app. Sen calls the A. S. Gritta, "Bran, seurt, grit, drif; any dust or powder made by sawing, filing, grinding, &c."

GRITH,* s. Concord, tranquillity, quiet **Gower*.

A. S. Grith-ian, pacificare, to pacify, to restore to peace.

GRIZE. See GREE.

GRIZZLE, ad. s. As the Fr. Grisin, -ED. "Gray with age; whitish, hoary, gris -Y. sle, oldish, or somewhat old."—Cot.

Fr. Gris, grey, (qv.) Grizzig,—Dan. Gransig.

GROAN, v. s. To groan,—to utter a complaining, pressed breathing, with some degree -FUL* of earnestness and loudness.

**Spenser*.

Grimsire

A. S. Gross-ian; D. Grossen, gemere; formed, I believe, says Sk. from the sound; for the word itself cannot be uttered without a deep and strong expiration, resembling a gros. G. Douglas writes it Gros: "The barge gan grove." (p. 178, l. 11.) Others, Grois, (qv.) It is chosen by Wilkins as an outward sign of inward passion; sc. an emission of the breath, vocal but not articulate, the outward sign:—anger, or revenge, the inward passion.—On East Character, p. 236. But anger and revenge are not the only inward passions. It may proceed from any inward passion, with which the heart groes. And the A. S. Geornian, and Gros-ian, are probably the same word diff. written and app.;—Gros-ian, more part: to the inward feeling;—Gros-ian, to the outward expression or utterance. And see Gauze.

GROAT, s. A coin so called from its great size, and formerly perhaps made of brass or iron.—Sk.

From Fr. Gros; It. Grosso.

GROATS, s. i. e. Gritts, (qv.)

GROCER, s. -y. Formerly written Grossen.

Orig.—One who buys and sells in gross, or great quantities, or weights.—Now otherwise. "A grocer is a man who buys and sells sugar, and plums, and spices, for gain."—Watts.

Fr. Grossier. Marchant Grossier,—that sells only by gross, or utters his commodities by wholesale.—Cot. The Sp. Gruesero is a wholesale dealer, one who sells in gross. So also D. Grosier. The 5th Edw. III. c. 5, is said by Rastall to have been "against grocers engrossing marchandise." (And see Excesses.) Sk. and Min. derive from Fr. Gros, but subjoin, or a grossie, sc. the figs, which they sell. Jun. calls a Grocer,—aromatarius, aromatopola.

GROFF,* ad. i. e. Groveling.—Sk. (See GROVELING.) Cons. (as Tyrw. says)—"Flat on the ground;" low, prostrate. "And grif he fell."—Chaucer.

GROGRAN, s. A stuff made of silk and mohair, thicker and coarser than ordinary taffeta.

From Fr. Gros-grain, qd. granum crassum: i. e. vela crassa; coarse grain, coarsely woven.

GROIN, s. That which separates or divides. That part (in Anatomy) where the body and lower limbs separate.

Sw. Gren.—Serenius. This from Sw. Grens, divide, to divide, to separate.

GROIN, s. s. i. e. To groom or grunt, (qv.) A groin, a groom,—the groin or snout; that which grineth, groaneth, or gruntheth. Fr. Groin de porcean.

Tyrw. says,—to hang the lip, in discontent; a hanging lip. "Whether so that lowe or groine." ... "A ring of gold that is wone in the groine of a sow."—Chaucer.

GROOM, s. One who attends, observes, takes or has the care or custody of any thing, whether of horses, chambers, garments, bride, &c.

Versapen and Min. from D. Grom, a boy. It may also (adds Sk.) be deduced from A. S. Guma, vir et vigilans; from A. S. Gymas, curare, accutere, servare, custodire; and of this A. S. e. Tooke is persuaded that Groom is the past p. and that it should be written without the r. See BAIDROU.

GROOVE, v. s. To dig, to dig out, to hollow out, to excavate.

See GRAVE. Sk. observes that, in Lincolnshire, To grove, fodere, to dig, to grave, was still in use. In A. S. Graf-an; D. Grav-en; Ger. Grab-en, to grave.

GROPE, v. -er. Cons.—To try to find, to explore the way, sc. by feeling for any thing as a guide; to feel about, to try to find, to explore, as in darkness; met. as in ignorance, or uncertainty; to explore, to examine. "To gropen tenderly a conscience."—Chaucer. "With contrite harte some grobe their conscience."—Gascoigne.

A. S. Grop-ian, contractare, palpare, palpando veluti in tenebris prestantare; to touch, to handle, to try the way by feeling, as in darkness; of the same origin, Jun. adds, as Gripe, to take hold of.

GROSS, s. ad. Fr. Gros,—"Great, big, -LY. thick; also heavy, sad, weighty; -NESS. also dull, blunt, rude, sottish, blockish."—Cot. Cons.—coarse, indelicate, inelegant, unrefined, unseemly, unbecoming.

Fr. Gros; It. Grosso; Sp. Grueso; Ger. Gross; Low L. Grossus, corruptum pro crassus, says Voss. (de Vit.) Gros may have originated in the A. S. Gehroos-an, ruere; thus, Ghroos, Gros; and have been app. to the weight of any thing fallen. (See Drusus.) And Gross, by the mere change of G into C, may have had the same origin. In- En-Over-

GROT, s. -to. A place dug or hollowed out; usually, for retirement from heat.

Fr. Grot, grotte, crot, erotte; It. Grotta; Sp. Grotta, which Sk. Jun. and Men. derive from Gr. Krypta, or L. Crypta, a hidden or secret place. The Sw. Grop, caverna, groepa, excavare, to hollow out, here derives from Go. Grab-an; and Tooke considers Grot to be Graft, (a broad,) with the f suppressed; and this to be from the Go. Grab-an; A. S. Graf-an, to dig, to hollow out. See GRAVE.

GROTESQUE, s. ad. -LY. App. to—Any thing strangely, whimsically, and uncouthly framed or constructed; fancifully and extravagantly designed and executed.

"Fr. Grotesque, as grotte. (See Grotto.) Grotesquer, to lurk in caves, or dens and obscure places. Grotesques,—pictures, wherein (as please the painter) all kind of odd things are represented without any peculiar sense or meaning, but only to feed the eye."—Cot. Such figures (says Sk.) as were usually sculptured in cryptis; or such as were formed by the drippings of water, eating into rocks or stones.

GROVE, s. -y. Also written by our old writers, Greves. And see GREAVES.

App. to—The wood, the thicket itself, as well as to the hollow way or passage between or among the trees; the open or hollow place or part surrounded by them.

* Dampier.

A. S. Graf, grafa, grove, (lucus.) Jun. thinks may be from (A. S. Graf-an) D. Graben, fodere, because they are frequently protected by a ditch, thrown up around them; more probably because a grove is cut out, hollowed out of a thicket of trees: it is not the thicket itself. The L. Nemus (locus pascuus) is not the silva; though these distinctions are not preserved either in L. or in Eng. See GRAVE.

GROVEL, s. To grub, or grubble, or -LER. dig up, sc. the ground; to lie or -LING. fall prostrate, sc. as if grubbing or grubbling in the ground; to lie or keep low or prostrate; met. to abase, to be base, or low, or mean, or dirty.

Jun. and Sk. agree in substance. Jun. says,—to fall flat and proveling; so to fall as if about to dig the earth with the hands; perhaps a frequentative of the Teut. Groesen; and Sk., from the v. To grose or grove, fodere, to dig; to dig the ground. And Groo-el, is the dim. of Grove; and so Grubb-le of Grub. See GRAVE.

GROUND, v. s. App. to—The earth, as distinguished from the other elements; to land, or territory; LESS. to that upon which any thing LESSLY. may be founded, or placed, may LESSNESS. stand; may be raised or established. -LY.* bished; from which any thing -INGLY.† may rise, or spring, or originate; the basis, the foundation, the origin, the bottom; (in the plural) to that which sinks or settles to the bottom.

To ground,—to put or place into or upon the ground; to found, to establish, to lay, fix, or settle the foundation; met. the fundamental laws or principles.

*Tyndal. Walsey. †Digby.

Go. A. S. Ger. Dan. & Sw. Grund; D. Grond; which Jun. suspects was orig. app. to that surface of the earth, quam solum dicimus, and was so used q. Grow-end, from Grow-an, virescere, germinare; thus meaning, viride solum, viridis terra, the verdant soil, the verdant earth. It may be from A. S. Ge-runnen, concretus, which would regularly form Grunnen, grunned, grund, concretum, (aliquid,) any concrete body; united, coalesced, cohered together. Mis- Un- Under-

GROUNDSEL, s. Grund- or Grun-sil.

In Drayton it is—The ground-work, the foundation. "Or who the groundsil of that work doth lay." "The ground-sell, or foot-post of a door."—Sk. See SILL.

From Ground, (A. S. Grund), and A. S. Syl, which Som. calls the Ground-post, a sill, sell or ground-sill.

GROUNDSEL, s. A plant.

Grunde-swille, perhaps (says Sk.) qd. grunde-swille, i. e. tumor terre, because it everywhere swells with this plant: it grows everywhere.

GROUP, v. s. To place or keep in bands or companies, or assemblages, in select parties or numbers.

Fr. Grouper; It. Groppa; which Men. says is formed from Globus, or from Crupis. More probably from Gruper, to hold together (to grips.) Ag-

GROUT. See GRIT, and GROAT.

GROUT-HEAD, s. -NOL. A great or gross head or knoll; a thick-head.

Fr. Grosse-tête. "Il a une grosse tête.—He is a very blockhead, growth-head, joulthead."—Cot.

GROW, v. To be or become green, verdant or vigorous; to bud, to -ING. germinate, to bear or bring forth GROWTH. leaves; to bloom, to flourish, to bear or bring forth flowers; to spring, to sprout, to be or become strong, to vegetate; to advance in youth; to increase.

To advance, to proceed, to improve; to enlarge, to magnify, to amplify, to augment.

A. S. Grow-an; D. Groe-gen; Ger. Gru-nen; Sw. Gro; Dan. Groer. This word, as early app. to vegetable nature, and gradually extended to other uses, is thus interpreted by Kühn:—Vireo, virescere, evirescere, frondere, frondescente, florere, florescere, vernare, vigere, vegetari, adolescere, crescere. Be- For- Out- Over- Un- Under- Up-

GROWL, v. s. To make a noise, (sc. like that of something rolling, or rumbling,) to grumble. App. to the angry murmur of a dog.

Growl, the s., Growler, and Growing, though common in speech, are not so in writing.

Ger. Grollen, murmurare,—perhaps formed of the common prefix Ge, and rollen, to roll, come, to rumble.

GRUB, v. s. -BLE, v. To dig, to dig up; to keep employed or busy in the dirt; in dirty works or occupations, low or base pursuits.

Go. Grub-an, fodere, to dig. Grubble, a dim. of Grub; Ger. Grubelen; qd. (says Sk.) fodicare,—to dig much or often. See GROVE.

GRUDGE, v. s. Anciently written Grutch, -ER. Gruch, and Groche.

-ING. To grieve, to groan, to grumble;

-INGLY. to grieve, to rue, to repine; to

-FULL.* fret or repine, (sc. at the good fortune of another.)

Grudgings of disease,—pains or pangs; symptomatic pains or pangs of disease.

Wiclif renders "frémebant in eam," (Mark xiv.) murmurabant adversus patrem familiam (Matt. xx.)—respectively—"They grucchilden against her"—"They grucchilden against the housbonde man."—"He grudged his mind."—Brende. "She was delivered from all grudgeyng of the ague."—Udal. *Spenser.

Sk.—from Fr. Gruger, and that from L. Criari. Jun.—from Gr. ῥοφῶν, hicere, vestire. Tooke asserts that Grudge, the s., "is the past p. of Hreco-tan, ge-hreco-tan, Arceot-tan, ge-hreco-tan, dicere, ingenierare, ponere; to grieve, to groan, to repent, to rue. Be- Un-

GRUDGEON, s. The coarse or gross portion remaining, after the finer meal is shaken through the sieve.

Sherwood writes Grudgions; Cot. (in v. Be-dondage),—Grudgoons; Sk.—Gurgians, which he thinks may be Fr. Escourgeon, from Escorre, excutere, "to thrash or sever corn from the chaff"—Cot.

GRUEL, s. Pottage of Grits, Groat, or Groat.

Fr. Gruau; Low L. Grutellum, a dim. of Gritum, i. e. Groat, (qv.)—Men. and Spel. Glm. Arch.

GRUFF, ad. s. -LY. Gruff, s.—A rift, a place riven, rove, or torn open.—"I rode to Minedeep, with an intention to make use of it (a barometer) there in one of the deepest gruffs (for so they call their pits) I could find."—Locke to Boyle, May 1666. And Gruff, ad. s.—rough (met.) app. to—voice, looks, or manners.

D. Groff. Apparently contracted (Lye.) from Geruh, gereg; i. e. the pref. Ge, and ruh, rag, kruh, kruhge, rough. Rough is the past p. of raf-an, to rive; and hence Gruff.

GRUM, ad. s. i. e. Grim, (qv.)

GRUMBLE, v. To make a confused noise, as of rolling or rumbling.
-ER. noise, as of rolling or rumbling.

-TOMIAN.† A sono fictum.

GRUMOUS, ad. -ness. Concrete, coagulated, clotted.

L. Grumus; Fr. -e, -ess. The L. Grumus is app. to a collection or concretion of parts; also to things minute, but which have been formed by the coalition of things minute.

GRUNSEL. See GROUNDSEL.

GRUNT, s. s. -ING. Grunt seems to be the same word as Groan, or formed upon its part p. Gront. Chaucer writes, "But never grunt he (J. Cæsar) at no stroke but one;" and Brende, "He gave a grunt as though he had been stricken to the heart."

To grunt is, to groan, like a hog.

Gr. γρ, minimum; a word, says Lennep, formed from the sound; γρ, γρ, ne tantillum.

GUARANTEE, v. s. -TY, s. v. To secure, or engage to secure, protect, or guard; and as Fr. Garantir,—"To warrant, make good, undertake for, sell or pass with warranty; to secure, save harmless, defend, protect, bear out."—Cot.

Fr. Garantir; Dan. -anderer; It. Guar-dare, -are; Sp. -ar, to warrant; from A. S. War-ian, (w changed into g, or Ge-war-ian, gwar, guar; ) D. Waren; Ger. Waren, to beware, -cavere, cautionem adhibere vel præstare. From the pt. Warend, (Wach.) were formed warrens and warant, fide-jussor; waranda and warandia, fide-jussor; warandator, fide-jussor: warandare and warantare, evictionem præstare. A superior dealing, or guarding an inferior, (Voss. de Vitulis, lib. ii. c. 26.) and securing him from the oppression of his enemies, is said warantizare.

GUILD, *s. -ABLE.** A payment or contribution, a tax; and cons.—those who pay or contribute; a society, a fraternity. Guild is also app. to—the place (the hall) where the society met. **Gild* signified among the Saxons,—a fraternity, derived from the v. Gildan, to pay, because every man paid his share towards the expenses of the community. And hence, their place of meeting is frequently called the guild or guildhall.—Blackstone. **Rastall.*

A. S. Gild; D. Gilde, gulde; Ger. Gilde, a society; from A. S. Gild-an, to yield or pay; and so called, (Sk.) quia collegæ pecuniam pro communi sumtu contribuant. See in Spel. Gloss. Arch.

GUILDER, or GILDER, s. A coin in Holland, worth 2s. 4d. Eng.

Dan. Gylden; D. & Ger. Guilder. A coin, qd. nummus aureus seu deauratus, (i. e. a golden or gilded coin),—unless perhaps from Geldria; nummus Geldricus.

GUILE, v. s. To guile,—to cheat, to impose upon, to deceive, to delude;—-FUL. to practise delusion, give a false colour or appearance to.
-LESS.
-ER. -ERY. "Guile is ge-wig-led, guiled, GUILT. guil'd, guilt; the past p. of Ge-wiglian; and to find guilt in any one, is to find that he has been guiled, or, as we now say, —beguiled; as wicked means —beguiled or bewitched. To pronounce guilt, is to pronounce wicked." Guilt, in our legal proceedings, is ascribed to the instigation of the devil. A guilty man, then, is—

One who has been beguiled—to do wrong, to do evil, commit injustice or iniquity, wickedness; a crime, a sin; one who has done so; without reference to the guile or deception.—"Chaucer.

A. S. Wiglian. "Hartolara, augurari, divinare, conjecturare, to conjecture, to guess, to divine; item, fascinare, incantare, praestringere, to bewitch, to enchant, to juggle, to use sorcery, to cast a mist before. Belgia, Wicchten, wicchen."—Som. From Wiglian, we have To wile; the usual pref. Ge forms ge-wiglian, whence we have Guile. "In the A. S. Wiglian, de-wiglian, ge-wiglian, means to conjure, to divine; and cons.—to practise cheat, imposture, and enchantment."—Tooke. Be- In- Un-

GUILLOTINE, s. v. An instrument for the infliction of capital punishment, proposed to the National Assembly of France by a physician, M. Guillotine, of Lyons, and from him it received its name: his project was adopted by a decree of the 20th of March, 1792. It appears to be very similar in construction to the Maiden formerly used at Halifax, in Yorkshire. (See Holinshed's Description of England, c. 11.) Evelyn (Memoirs) states that he saw an instrument of destruction in use at Naples, which he calls "a frame, like ours at Halifax."

GUINEA, s. The fowl; because found -HEN. and introduced from Guinea.
-PIO. The coin called "the Guinea, so called from the Guinea gold out of which it was first struck, was proclaimed in 1663 and to go for 20s.: but it never went for less than 21s. by tacit and universal consent."—Pinkerton.

GUISE, s. A. S. Wise,—a manner, mode, fashion, condition, custom, reason, way, wise, or (with the French, and changing the w into gu) guise."—Som.

and derives it from the Ger. Geck, foolish.
—"B. Jonson.

GULES, s. GULED. A word, says Du Cange, which our heralds frequently use to denote a red colour in arms or ensigns; Sk. thinks it may be so called from the redness of a cock's throat, (gutturis Galli.) Mr. Stevens, who produces the v. from Heywood, calls it "a term in the barbarous jargon peculiar to Heraldry, signifying red."
Fr. Gucule; Low L. Gula.

GULF, s. or GULPH, s. v. -Y. A bay; a whirlpool, or "depth that swallows up whatsoever approaches or comes into it."

Fr. Golfe, gouffre; Sp. & It. Golfo; D. Golpe, gurgus, vorage; Golpen, ingurgitare, aridit haurit, haustim bibere; Dan. Golf. The Fr. and D. are said by Sk. to be either from L. Gula, Gr. Kalros, or from the sound; and the last he thinks the more probable. Men. decides for Gr. Kalros; the It. & Fr., however, do not take immediately from the Gr., but through the L. The Fr. Gouffe is derived by Wach. from Ger. Gaffen; A. S. Go-pan, to gape, (qv.) to open. In Norfolk, a mov or bay-full of a barn is called a gulph, and a bay or division of a barn, a gulph-stead, goft-stead, or go-stead.—Groce. Gulf, or Gulph, is used as equivalent to the L. words sinus and gryps. D. Golpen; Fr. En-gouffrer. See GULP. Gulp

GUM, v. s. "The best gum in all men's judgment, is that which cometh -MY. of the Egyptian thorne Acacia, -MINESS. having veins within of chequer worke, or trailed like wormes, of colour greenish, and cleare withall: without any peeces of barke intermingled among, and sticking to the teeth as a man cheweth it."
—Holland.

A. S. & Sp. Gom-a; It. ma; Ger. ma; Fr. me, mer; D. Gumme; L. Gummi; Gr. Kopp. Of unknown origin.

GUM, s. The substance in which the teeth appear fixed.

A. S. Goma; D. Gomma; Ger. Gosum; Sw. Gom. Perhaps, (Wach.) from Gr. Γέρω, gustare, Γέρω, gustis. Jun. from Γούποι, clavel, because the teeth are fixed like nails in the gums.

GUN, v. s. Lit. A gunning engine: and -ERY. distinguished by Chaucer from -MERY. other gyms or engines: "They -NAL, or dradde non assaut, of gyne, -WALE. gonne, nor skaffaut (scaffold)."

-STER. Gun, the s., formerly written Gon, is the past p. of Gynian, hiare, (to yaw).—Tooke. Mins. derives from the L. Canon, (whence Canon is Eng. Fr. & It.) Jun. from Καναβος, strepitus. It is undoubtedly, as Selden observes, an old word with a new application; and receiving this application from what Drummond in his madrigal, The Canon, calls her gaping throat. Milton uses expressions equally characteristic, "their mouths gaping with hideous orifice," and "those deep throated engines."

GURGE, s. -ING, ad. L. Gurges,—a gulf, or whirlpool. In- (En-) Re-gurgitate.

GURGLE, s. v. The sound made by a liquid flowing from the narrow mouth of a vessel.—Sk.

To gurgle,—to emit such or a similar sound. See GARGLE.

GURNARD, or GURNET, s. A fish remarkable for its bony head.

Fr. Gournauld, gourneau, which Sk. thinks may be derived from the L. Cornu, corniculum, cornu, horn.

GUSH, v. s. To flow, pour, or rush forth; suddenly, copiously.

Gr. Gushen; A. S. Geot-an; D. Gosselen, ghiet-an; Ger. Glossen, fluere, to flow. A. S. Gyle; Ger. Guss, inundatio, an inundation. Out-

GUSSET, s. "A piece of armour, or of a shirt, whereby the armhole is covered; also a bracket in joiners' work."—Cot.

Fr. Gousset. Sk. calls it particula asuta; and suggests L. Connere, to sew together. In Hemley, he thinks it may be Hues de canote.

GUST, s. -Y. A strong and sudden rush or blast (of wind); met.—of passion.

A stronger or more violent wind or blast, (Sk.) who derives from the Ger. Giesen. It is perhaps gush, gush, gust. See GUSH.

GUST, v. s. or GUSTO, s. To taste.

-ABLE. The s. is app. to tastes of high -ATION. relish, or savour; of exquisite -VUL. vivacity.

GUT, s. s. That through which any thing flows or pours forth; the guts of an animal; the Gut of Gibraltar.

To gut,—to draw out the guts, the bowels; gut—to empty. Gutless,—Chapman.

Gr. Gushen; A. S. Geot-an; D. Gushen; Ger. Gossen; to flow, to pour forth. D. Gole, canalis. Jun. from A. S. Geot-an, effundere. Mins. the Eng. Gut, from D. Gushen, quia recrementa corporis per intestina effunduntur.

GUTTER, v. s. That through which any thing flows or passes; now usually app. to a passage for water.

Fr. Gouttière, from v. Regouler, guttatum transfluere, to flow drop by drop.—Sk. More probably from Gut, (qv.)

GUTTLE, v. Dim of Gut.

To fill or cram the gut; to eat greedily or gluttonously.

GUTTULOUS,* ad. In form or shape of a drop; after the manner of drops.

**Brown*. From L. Gutta, a drop.

GUTTURAL, ad. s. Of, or pertaining, or belonging to the throat.

L. Guttur; Fr. Guttural. Perhaps (Voss.) from Gula, q. gulutter; or rather from the sound which the food makes in most animals when passing through the throat. Qy. Geot-an, to pour forth!

GUZZLE, v. -ER. As com. app.—To drink often, to drink much, to be constantly drinking.

Fr. Gosler, It. Gozzo, is the throat; Gozzoviglia, comessatio, convivium, convivium.—See Mens. Thomson derives from It. Gozzovigliare, and this from Fr. Gosler. Perhaps a frequentative of Gust, to taste; Gust, gustis, guzzle, to taste often. Guzzle, in Marston, q. guazler.

GYBE. See GIBE.

GYMNASIUM, s. "Gymnasium properly signifies the place where

-ASTICALLY. people exercise themselves -IC. being stript."—Grew. Any -ICAL. place of exercise.

Gr. Γυμνασιον, from γυμναζειν, exercere, ac proprie nudum me exercere, est enim à γυμνος, nudus.—Voss. To exercise, and properly to exercise myself naked, as it is from γυμνος, naked.

GYMNO-SOPHIST, s. "Among the Indians be certain philosophers, whom they call gymnosophists, who from sunne rising to the setting thereof are able to endure all the day long, looking full against the sunne, without winking or once moving their eyes; and from morning to night can abide to stand sometimes upon one leg, and sometimes upon the other, in the sand, as scalding hot as it is."—Holland. Plinius.

Gymnosophista, γυμνοσοφισταί, because they used to walk naked through gloomy deserts.—Voss.

GYPSY, s. The word is sometimes app. GIPSY, ad. contemptuously for some ill qualities. GYPISME* lity, and sometimes playfully for some engaging quality.—**Overbury*.

Spel. (in v. Egyptiani), calls them a most notorious kind of vagabonds and impostors. The name (Egyptian) seems to have been for some reason assumed by themselves.

GYRE, v. s. -ATION. Fr. "Girer,—to veer or turn (with the wind); to twirl, whirl, or wheel about."—Cot. See GER-FALCON.

H.

"H," says B. Jonson, "is rarely other than an aspiration in power, though a letter in form." It is considered by Wilkins as a guttural vowel, i. e. formed by a free emission of the breath from the throat. It is usually heard distinctly, as To hang, and a hanger; but not so in—an heir, an honour, honest, hospital, herb, hour; rhapsody, rhyme; not at the end of words, as myrrh. It is slowned over in some compounds, as shepherd, dunghill, greenhouse; but pronounced in goatherd, neatherd, &c.

HA, inf. An ejaculation, denoting various feelings, and as variously uttered.

HABER-DASHER, s. -y. A dealer in wares of various descriptions,—woollens, linens, silks, &c.

Mime.—from Ger. Habt ihr das, i. e. Have you that? or from Fr. Avoir d'acheter, i. e. to have to buy. Sk. (whom Lye transcribes) runs far away. Serenius,—from Ger. Habe, goods or wares, and tauscher, to exchange; as if a haberdasher were an exchanger of wares. Mr. Thomson constructs a Ger. compound, Haabertauscher, of haab, goods, wares, and tauscher, vertauscher, a dealer, an exchanger. The Fr. Avoir de pois, we formerly wrote haber de pois; a similar corruption may have occurred in avoir d'acheter, haber d'achel, haberdash.

HABERGEON, or HAUBERK, s. Grose says the haubergeon was a coat composed either of plate or chain mail, without sleeves, (Mil. Ant. ii. 246.)

Fr. Haubergeon; It. Usbergo; Low L. Halsberga, or Halsperga, which, Voss. says, is a Sax. word, signifying armour for the neck and breast; from hals, the neck, and bergen, to cover, to protect, to defend, (De Vit. lib. ii. c. ix. p. 220.) Sk. also prefers this etym. And see BAB and TOOKE.

HABILIMENTS, s. As Fr. Habillement,—"Apparel, clothing; array, attire; a suite of apparel; also, armour or harness."

HABLE, v. ad. i. e. Able, Ableness, Ability, -NESS. (qv.) and ENABLE.

-ING. To give force, power, strength;

-BILIT-ATE, v. to strengthen, to empower;

-ATION. and, as we now say, to enable;

-Y. Habilitate, (Fr. Habilitier), to enable, and thus to qualify.

This mode of writing these words is not uncommon in old authors.

HAB-NAB, av. Hap ne hap; happen or not happen.—Tooke.

HACK, v. s. -ING. To cut, to chop; to maim or mangle by repeatedly cutting, or chopping; (to hash, to hatch, qv.)

A. S. Hac-can; Ger. & D. -ken; Sw. -ka; Dan. Hakker; Fr. Hack-er; Sp. -car. See EXA, HYV, &c.

HACK, v. s. -NEY, v. s. A hired horse, or horse let to hire; any thing hired or let out to hire; and, hence, a horse or any thing constantly in work or use, any thing constantly used. And the v.—

To use a hackney,—to convey or carry, or ride in a hackney; to let out to hire; to toil or work, as a hack; to use or practice frequently or constantly; to accustom.

D. Hac-keneye; Fr. quenée; Sp. -nea, -ci; It. Acchina, occhina, china. Men. traces this: equus, akus, akimus, akineus, akinea, haquene. Wach. from Ger. Nake, hnake, equus, a horse, (a nag.) transpositis literis; and nake, from A. S. hnapen, hinnre, to neigh. A nag, hack, or hackney, was thus,—hors hnagend, a neighing horse; a lively, active horse, distinguished for its frequent neighing. And as this kind of horse was most frequently kept for hire, the name became app. cons.—as above explained.

HACKBUT, -TER. See ARQUEBUS.

Fr. Hacquetute, a haquetut, or harguetut.—Cot. A haquetut, or arguetut, (qv.) See also Haybut and Hagg in Jamieson. The 33 Hen. VIII. c. 6, regulates the length in stock and gus of the hog-bui or demy-haque; and sets forth who may keep and use them, and under what restrictions.

HACKLE, v. s. or HECKLE, v. To hackle seems to be,—to sever, separate, or sunder, e. g. as flax in dressing. The s.—a tool or instrument for the purpose; also app. (Jamieson) to "a fly for angling, dressed merely with a cock's feather, from its resemblance to a comb for dressing flax."

Burke has revived the v. met.

D. Hekelen, to comb flax; hekel, a comb, from haeckel, a hook, haeckelen, to draw with a hook.—Kilian. Sk. calls heckle, (the s.) halfrangulum.

from D. Hackelen, "to cut or hack into small pieces," minutim consider; and refers to the v. Hack; and Lye explains the Eng. v. Hackie, or D. Hackelen, in the same words, and asserts it to be a frequentative of Hack.

HACKSTER, s. Holland renders Grass-saters, robbers and hacksters; probably from the v. To hack.

HACQUETON,* s. Fr. Hocqueton, or haqueton, a (fashion of) short coat, cassock, or jaquet, without sleeves, and most in fashion among the country people; at court, a coat for one of the guard.—Cot.

**Chaucer. Spenser.*

Written by Walsingham. Akton; by old Fr. authors. Aqueton. See Mén. "Hocke, (vetus Fland. Seper), tunica militaris, Ger. Hockels."—Kittien. I know not (Sk.) whether said, quasi jacketon.

HADDER,* s. l. e. Heather, heath, (qv.) **Burton.*

HADDOCK, s. A fish. Fr. Hadot.

HADÉ,* s. Perhaps Head, head-lands.
**Drayton.*

HAFT, s. "The haft of a knife or poniard is the haved part; the part by which it is haved, or held."

A. S. Haft, from haft-an, capere, prehendere, (Jun.) to take, to hold in the hand; and this (Sk.) from habben, habere, to have. Tooke forms it thus, "Haved, hav'd, haft."

HAFTING, s. Hesitation, indecision, inconclusion, insincerity.

Jun.—Haftē, cessare; hafter, tergiversator; A. S. Haftan, tenere. Belgis, Hechten, hachten, hafen, est apprehendere, tenere, morari; to hold or keep, to stay, tarry, or delay. And thus met—m above.

HAG, v. s. To hag,—to affright, to terrify, —sciz. to scare.

—swiz. Hagged-face, in Gray, "having the face of a witch, or hag."—Mason.

D. Heks, hez; Dan. Hæz; Ger. Hes-s; Sw. s; A. S. Hæg-sne, -leas; (Sp. Hechisera, hechisera.) A hag, or witch, a furie or fiend, a woman-divell.—Sam. Jun. says, some derive from Hecale, others from hechen, morderere. Wach. A. S. Hægese, from æp-sen, to fear, to affright, to terrify, to make afraid, (see AGUE;) and observes in confirmation, that a hag is also called æpse-grimma, velut atrox terror; grimma likewise being a name bestowed upon hags or witches.

HAGGARD, s. ad. -LY. Fr. Hagard, "wild, strange:" in Eng. app. to the countenance or features; spare and harsh, lengthened, distorted, with fatigue, with anxiety, or other strong feeling.

Fr. Hagard, from vagardus; vagus, vagardus, Agard.—Mén. And Sk. Wagard, a vagando; or from A. S. Hæg, a hedge, because—non domi, sed hæc, sc. in sepibus, agitat. Haggard, the ad. Sk. (who writes it Hagger) thinks, may be from Ger. Hager, mæser; or, as Wach. interprets it, gracilis, pusillus, or from Hagerd, the s. a kind of falcon. Tavernier, in his Book of Falconry, 1375, (quod by Mr. Stevens, in his note on Shak.'s Rich. 3do,) tells us, that "the Haggard doth come from foreign parts a stranger and a passenger." And a Fr. writer, quoted by Pennant, says, that Hager is a Heb. word, and signifies stranger.

It may have been formed upon the preceding v. To hag; thus,—Hag, hagger, haggard, hagger's, or haggard. And the bird: Haggard; qd. haggard, sc. with hunger, ravenousness.

Dr. Jamieson derives from Eng. Haw, (qv.) and geard, sepes, septimentum.

HAGGASE, or HAGGIS, s. "A kind of pudding made of chopped pork flesh," from Hogges harslet.—Mims.

Sc. Haggis,—derived by Jamieson from Hack.—See his Dictionary.

HAGGLE, v. i. e. To hackle or hack.

HAGGLE, v. HAGLER. Fr. "Harcelier, to haggle, huck, hedge, or pauitler long in the buying of a commodity." See HIGGLE, and HUCKSTER.

HAIL, v. s. -Y. Hail, the s.—"Hail seems to be the drops of rain frozen in their falling."—Locke.

To hail,—to pelt or patter, cast or pour down, hail; gen.—to cast or pour down.

A. S. Hagol, hag-ole, hagle; D. Huaghe; Ger. Hagel; Dan. Hagi; A. S. Hagol-an, grandinare. In Sw. Hælla is to pour; and Ray, in his Northern Words, has "Heald, as when you pour out of a pot." Jun. also,—"Held, hell, hill, to pour, to pour forth." See HILL.

HAIL, v. -ING. Also written Haile.

A. S. "Hæil, or haile, safe, well in health, safety; also salutation. Our ancestors used it instead of Ave, as a word of most well wishing, as when they sayd, Haile Mary, &c. I find the name of our Lord Jesus to be, in our ancient Eng. translated Hælende; that is to say, Saviour, or Saluator."—Verstegan. See HEAL, and HALE. Un—

HAINOUS, ad. Now com. written Heinous, (qv.)

HAIR, s. Anciently Heere.

—ED. An excrescence from the skin
—Y. of certain animals. "Against the —INESS. hair," (Shak.)—against the na-—LESS. tural course of growth; against the grain.

Hair, sometimes used (Chaucer) for hair-cloth.

A. S. Hær; D. Hær; Ger. Haar; Sw. Haor; Dan. Haar.—See WACH. Un—

HALBERD, or HALBERT, s. -BERD-EER, or -IER. A spear or pole ending with an axe or dagger, adapted for striking with either point or edge.

Fr. Hallebarde, hallebarde; It. Alabarda; Sp. Halabarda; D. Hallebarde, helm-barde; Ger. Hellebart; Sw. -bard; Dan. Hallebard. A word, says Jun., which all confess to be of Teutonic origin.—See Voss de Vitula, Mén., Wach, Ihre, and Kittan. Jun. (as Ihre and Kilian do) prefers helm-barde, because it (barde, securia) splits helms or helmets in battle: (Kilian notices the existence, veteribus Teutonicis, of the word helm-axe. Wach. calls it—Hæsta in securim desinens, punctum feriens aut caesim.

HALCYON, s. ad. -IAN. "This bird so notable, is little bigger than a sparrow; for the more part of her pennage, blew, intermingled yet among with white and purple feathers, having a thin small neck and long withall. They lay and sit about mid-winter when daies be shortest; and the time whiles they are broodie, is called the halcyon daies: for during that season the sea is calm and navigable, especially in the coast of Sicilie."—Holland. Plinie.

L. Halcyo; Gr. Ἀλκυων, from ἄλς, the sea, and κύνειν, to bring forth; quod in mari pariat.

HALE, ad. s. "i. e. Healed, or whole." A. S. Hal, whole, sound, safe, in health.—Som. See HEAL.

HALE, v. -ING. Also written Haul.

To drag or pull along.

D. Haelen; Sw. Häl-s; Fr. & Dan. -er; Sp. -ar.

HALF, v. s. av. As used in Eng.—To -ER. halve is, to divide into two equal

HALVE, v. parts, or shares; into moieties: to divide, to share, to part; to take or do part; and thus, in Ascham, app. to the partial obedience of Saul: "halving with God." In Gower, "Haluyng of scorne," seems to be a rendering of quasi deridens, as if in scorn; with a degree, an appearance of scorn.

Half is much used pref.

Tyrw. says, "A side, a part. A Goddess half,—on God's part, with God's favour. A' this halfe God,—on this side of God. Four halves,—four sides." Go. Halbs; A. S. Half, healfe; D. Halfe, halve; Ger. Halb; Sw. Half; Dan. Hale. The A. S., Ger., and Sw., as well as the old Eng., are not only app. to dimidium, but also to latus, ora, a side, a coast. Dimidium totius alterum quasi latus constituit,—Thre; who suspects it to come from some northern word signifying to cleave or split, to divide. Be—

HALIDAM, HALIDOME, int. By Halidam,—by the holy dame or Virgin. "So help him God alle myght, & that halldam."—R. Brunne. Gen.—By any thing holy.

Holidom, halidom, or holidame,—an ancient oath (Sk.); either, as Som. thinks, from A. S. Halldome, sanctitas, qd. by the sanctuary, or holy reliques;—otherwise from halig, sanctus, holy, and dom, doom, judgment; or from Eng. Holy-dame, qd. per sanctum dominam. Sk. coincides with Som. And see Dowce, (Illustr. of Shak. i. 44.)

HALITUOUS,* ad. Airy, vaporous.

**Boyle*.

L. Halitus, from halare, to breathe. An-Ex-In-

HALK,* s. Bowing, turning, winding, and (as Tyrw.) a corner.—**Chaucer*
A. S. Healo, hylc, hylca.

HALL, s. -IER* A covered building, where persons meet or assemble for the administration of justice, the transaction of business, &c.; where goods are stationed or deposited,—covered or protected from weather; where persons wait (under cover) till admitted into the interior building.

**Hollinshead*.

A. S. Healle; Ger. & Fr. Halle. The Ger. Halle, as app. to a structure formed for a dwelling or habitation, is derived by Wach. from Ger. Hallen, tegere, operire, to cover. And Tookes, in its general usage, as "A covered building, where persons assemble, or where goods are protected from the weather;" believes it to be past p. of A. S. v. Hælan, tegere, to cover; in old Eng. To hæle, to heal, to hîl, (qdv.)

HALLELUJAH, Heb. int. i. e. Praise ye the Lord.

HALLOO, v. s. -ING. To make or utter a loud (low-ed) noise, to shout aloud; to call or cry aloud. See HOLLA.

T. H. (In Sk.)—from It. A lei, to him; Sk.—from Fr. Haller; or from the sound. Probably from A. S. Ahlou-an, to low or bellow.

HALLOW, v. s. To worship, to purify, —ING. to sanctify, to separate from common use; to consecrate, to dedicate, to devote.

A. S. Halplan; D. Heilighen; Ger. Heiligen; Sw. Hel-ga; Dan. -iger. Thre observes of St. Diada kneige, a holiday, that the word (neige) was without doubt left among that people by the Goths. Wach. says, that Ger. Heiligen signifies (quantum potest) colere, purgare, sanctificare, segregare ab usu vulgari, consecrare, dedicare, devovere. Un—

HALLUCINATE,* v. -ION,† Met.—To offend against the light of reason; to blunder, to err, to mistake.

**Brown*. †Boyle.

L. Alucinari, allucinari, or hallucinari; of uncertain origin. Voss. enumerates various etyma; and adds, that he follows those who derive it lucis; à luce aberrare, or rather, ad lucem offender.

HALO, s. A circle sometimes appearing round the sun or moon. "This halo is made after this manner: between the body of the moon, or any other star, and our eye-sight, there gathereth a gross and misty air, by which air anon our sight cometh to be reflected and diffused: and afterwards the same incurth upon the said star, according to the exterior circumference thereof, and thereupon appeareth a circle round about the star, which being there seen is called halo: for that it seemeth that the apparent impression is close unto that, upon which our sight so enlarged, as is before said, doth fall."—Holland. Plutarch.

L. Halo; Gr. ἅλως, corona, seu circulus.

HALM, s. Straw, stubble.

D., Ger., Dan., & Sw. Halm; A. S. Hælan, from hælan, cavare, to hollow.—Wach.

HALSE, or HAWE, v. s. To hale or HALSER, or hale up. And Halser, s.—that HAUSER, which hoisteth or haleth up, or that wherewith any thing is hoisted or haled up.

Mins. calls a halser, a rope wherewith boats or boats are towed or haled amongst some channel or river. And a halster, he which haleth and draweth a ship or barge amongst the river by a rope. I know not (says Sk.) whether from H. Hauser, to raise up, because through these halse the anchor is hauled up; (i. e. hoisted, or hauled up.) And Sir T. More uses the v. To hause. See HOISE.

HALSE,* v. s. To halse, (D. Halsen, hal-sen; Sw. Halsas,)—to embrace, to take round, to throw the arms round, the neck; and cons. "to salute, to salute with reverence."—Tyrw. **Chaucer*. Phœr.

Go. A. S. Ger. D. & Sw. Hals, the neck. Schinken, (see Ihre and Wach).—from Go. Hals; A. S. Hælt-an, tenere, sustinere, to hold, to uphold, because the neck upholds or sustains the head. En-

HALT, v. ad. s. -ING. To hold, to stop or stay; met to hesitate; to stop or stay in the gait, in the free action of the limbs, and thus, to limp, (qv.)

Dan. Halter, Sk. says, perhaps from A. S. Hælt-an, retinere, tenere; to make a halt; from Ger. Halten, tenere, to hold, i. e. cessare, to stop. Tooke, that Halt (classified by him with the see.) is the imperative of A. S. Hælt-an, to hold, (qv.) and means—hold, stop, (as when we say, Hold your hand,) keep the present situation, hold still, (in Ger. Still halten, in D. Still houden.)

HALTER, v. s. Halter, the s.—that which halteth or holdeth, or causes to halt or stop; that which holdeth or keepeth.

To halter,—to confine, contain or bind, (in or with a halter.)

HAILYARDS, s. i. e. Hale-yards, yards for haling.—Sk. The ropes (says Falconer) by which sails are hoisted or lowered.

HAM, s. A ham or hamlet,—a place where -LET, s. v. people come or assemble -STRING, s. v. together, whether house or village; their home; or, as anciently written, hame.

A ham,—the part where the leg and thigh unite and meet; the thick part of the thigh, where it meets or unites with the body.

Go. Hæm; A. S. Ham; D. Hamme; Ger. Ham.—See Spei. Jua. and Wach; who have given largely upon this word, but have overlooked A. S. Hamsian, coire, to come or go together.

HAMA-DRYAD, s. So called, because they are born and die dua raus dpori, simul—que quercubus, together with the oaks.—For. See DRYAD.

HAMELED, \ ad.* Abated. Perhaps from the A. S. Hamsian, poplitibus scissis mutilatus.—Sk. And Tyrw.—to hamstring, to cut off. (See HAM.) Mins. says,—Ham-ling of dogs is q. hamholding, i. e. keeping at home, by paring their feet, so as they cannot take delight in running abroad. **Chaucer.*

HAMMER, v. s. -ING. To hammer is—To strike or drive, to beat, to knock; met. to drive or beat into the head, to work in the head or brain; to work carefully, painfully, ineffectually at.

Hammer-cloth, or hammer-box cloth,—cloth to cover the box in front of the carriage, in which a hammer and other implements, to prevent or remedy accidents in travelling, were put. Since called the Couch-box.

A Hammer; Dan. & Ger. Hammer; Sw. Hamer a word, as the etymologists observe, common to all the northern languages; and for the origin of which they resort to the Gr. or Heb. It may be from A. S. Ham-dan, to come together; and, one, that which drives or strikes together.

HAMMOCK, s. A bed—swung.

Sp. Hammaca; Fr. -nac. In D. Heng-mat; Sw. Heng-matta; Ger. Heng-matte; Dan. Hængematte. The D. Ger. Sw. and Dan. seem obviously comp. of Heng and Mat, qd. a mat hung, sc. for a bed or place of rest; but Hammaca is said to be Indian.

HAMPER, HANAPER, s. Now app. to—A kind of basket, adapted for package.

The Fr. Hanap; Low L. Hanopus, is a cup, or goblet, from the A. S. Hnæp, also a cup, or goblet. Hanaperium, a large vessel, or a place for storing or packing cups or goblets, (recondendis hanapis.)—See Mens. and Du Cange. Mins. says, Hamper, q. hand-panter.

HAMPER, v. s. Gen.—To impede, to hinder, to fetter, to shackle, to perplex, to entangle.

It seems to be of the same origin with, and to be used as equivalent (though met.) to, Hemels or Hamble; i. e. to ham-string, or lame the hams.

HANCE, \ v. -ING. i. e. Enhance*, (qv.) To raise, to elevate.—**Chaucer.*

HAND, v. s. "Hand,—that limb by which -ER. things are taken.

-FUL. "Handle, or hand-del,—a small -LE, v. s. part taken hold of."

-LESS. Hand,—that which takes or holds, -LING. —is extended in its application

-Y, ad. to that (gen.) which acts or per-

-ILY. forms, guides or manages—any

-INESS. act or performance, any work or workmanship; and is transferred to that which is taken or held; to the act, or agency, or agent, the guide or guider, manager or management, worker or workmanship; and further, to the manner, or means, or measure, the state or condition, as compared with the relation of the hand to the body.

To hand, the v.—to take, or hold; also—to do any thing with, or which may be done with, the hand; to move any thing, or perform any motion, sc. with the hand. (App. met.)

Handy,—of or pertaining to, performed by, the hand; manual; expert, experienced, with the hand; dexterous.

Hand is much used pref., e. g.—

Hand or handy-craft,—i. e. crafty work done by hand; manufacture.

Hand-fast,—that by which the hand fastens or holds fast; gen.—fast hold.

Hand-kerchief,—a kerchief, (qv.) used by the hand.

Hand-maid,—a maid who waits or attends at hand, about the person.

Go. Hændus; A. S. & Sw. Hand; D. Hand, hant; Ger. Hand, hanti; Dan. Haande; from A. S. Hent-an; Ger. Henden; Sw. Hanta, capere, to take. Wach. is persuaded to prefer this etym., quia manus in corpore humano est naturale et unicum capiendi instrumentum: the v. (Henden) he derives from L. Hendere, (used only in composition,)—which in Tooke's opinion is just the reverse of the truth. See PARIS. Fore-Mis-Over-Un-Under. Also Pre-hand.

HANDSELL, v. s. A sale, gift, or delivery into the hand of another; a taking or receiving in hand; app. to the first delivery or receiving; to a first using; to a delivery or receiving as a pledge, or earnest, of something to follow.

To handseil,—to use or try the use, to try experimentally; to try, to make, experiments.

Dan. Hand-sæl; D. ghifte; A. S. -sælen or -sælen, mancipatio, —a putting over into another's hand, or possession. Hence our Handseil.—Som. Comp. of hand and seilan, vendere, dare. Handseil is equiv. to hand-gift.—Jun. And see Janieson and Tooke.

HAND-SOME, ad. v. Dexterous, clever, skilful; cleverly or skilfully.—LY. done; and thus, further, suitable or well adapted, convenient or becoming; suiting the state, or condition, or rank; graceful, liberal, noble.—**Donne*.

Hand, and term. some, (qv.) D. Hand-saem, (having some qualities of, or same qualities as, the hand), dexter, manu promptus, dexterous or handy, prompt or ready with the hand.

HANG, v. To append, depend, impend, —ER. or suspend; to fix or fasten to, in a —ING. dependent, a pendulous state or position: to rest, or remain in a dependent state; in a pendulous, or hovering, or elevated state; as if incumbent upon, or supported by, something above.

Go. Hahan; A. S. Hang-an, pendere, suspendere; D. & Ger. Hang-en; Sw. -s; Dan. -er. Jun. derives from Go. Hauk, high. See HAWK, HAUNCH. Be-Over-Under-Up.

HANGER, s. "A short sword, so called because it is hanged to the side."—Sk.

D. Hangher, pugio de zonâ pendens; hangherken, gladiolus qui à femore suspenditur.—Kilian.

HANK, s. v. To hank is—to hang.

A hank of thread,—as much as is handkyd or hanged together. "The bodye hankydyd upon the crosse."—**Hoper*.

Lye thinks may be from Isl. Hank, vinculum; Sk.—from To hang; and Tooke, that, "to have a hank upon any one, is, to have a hold upon him; or to have something hank, hankydyd, hanged, or hung upon him." To hank, in the Bible, seems to be the same word, k softened into ch: "They shall roar, and hanteke vp the pray, [lay hold of] and no man shall recover it or get it from them." See HAUNCH.

HANKER, v. -ING. Met.—To hang about, stay, or remain, hanging or loitering as in suspense; to loiter or linger, as unwilling to quit; to long after or for, to keep or continue in a state of longing.

Sk. says, Hank, in Lincolnshire, is used for an inclination or propensity of mind, from the v. To hang, qd. to hang or hanker after.

HAP, v. Ray: To happe,—to cover for warmth, from heap, I suppose, to heap clothes on me.—Robinson. More's Utopia.

Happing,—a coarse covering, a rug for a bed.

Hapharlat,—a coarse covering made of divers shreds.—Baret's Alvearis. Sk. doubts whether the word be—nostræ linguæ civis. Hapharlot, a covering for a servant, is a very old word.—Brockett.

Hop (Sk.), a very common word in Lincolnshire, from A. S. Heoptan, cumulare; qd. stragulis cumulare.

HAP, v. s. Any thing, something, that —LESS. comes or falls into our hold or possession. —LY. session, any thing caught; chance, —P-EN. accident, luck.

—Y. Happy,—app. to those, to whom, —ILY. or into whose hold or possession, —INESS. good comes or falls; lucky, or —IOUS. having or causing good luck, successful, fortunate, or having or causing good success or good fortune; prosperous.

Happy, (in Prologue to Hen. VIII.)—is equivalent to L. Felix, i. e. propitious, favourable; qd. causing happiness. In Cymbeline, happy,—happily endowed; accomplished.

Happily, as Haply, was used without reference to good or bad fortune; accidentally:—perhaps.—**Chaucer*.

Ger. Happen, contingere, accidere bene vel male succedere,—Wach., who remarks that the Eng. preserve the word. Ger. Happen, avide arripere; Ger. & D. Happeren, prendere, apprehendere, to seize or take in the hand. Fr. Happer, to catch from L. Capere.—Men. All probably from Go. & A. S. Hab-an, to have or hold; and con, to take or catch hold; and thus, Hap will signify, any thing had; and (as luck also does) any thing caught. See HABNAB, and HARP. Be-Over-Mis-Under-Up.

To harangue,—To speak aloud, in a loud, sounding voice.

It. Aringo, arringo; Fr. Harangue; Fr. & Haranguer. Sk. thinks it may be from Harang, because assemblies of auditors were held in rings or circles. "The word (Tooke) is merely the pure and regular past p. Aring, of A. S. Aring-an, to sound, or make a great sound: (as Hrino is also used.) And Caesen, says, 'Harangue est un discours prononcé avec contentement de voix.'" And see Men. on the Fr. & R. m. and Jun. in v. Rank.

HARASS, v. s. To lay waste, to plunder; —ER. and as Fr. Harier,—to tire, or toil —ING. out, to weary or wear out; to vex, to disquiet.

Fr. Harasser. M. Lancelot (says Men.) derives from Gr. Apasceiv, pulsare. Sk., perhaps from A. S. Hergian; Ger. Herg-en; Sw. Herris; Fr. Harier; to harry, (qv.)

HARBINGER, s. App. gen. to—A forerunner; that which comes before, and, by consequence, announces the approach of something else.

L. Prodromus, (an event-coursier, or forerunner), qd. Ger. & D. Herberger, i. e. qui aliquid de futuro prospectit, one who looks out for a harbinger, or lodging for another.—Sk. See HERBER.

HARBOUR, v. s. Gen.—To secure or —AGE. protect; to receive or take under protection; to stay, remain, or abide, in security; to —LESS. shelter, to lodge; to afford or grant shelter or lodging.

—OUS. —Bale.

It. Al-bergo; Sp. -bodega; Fr. Her-berge; D. & Ger. -berg; Sw. -berga, -bergers; Low L. Her.

argium. (See HAANA.) Voss. derives from Har, or hair, exercitus, an army, and berg-en, custodie, servare, continere; i. e. A. S. Heorg-an, berg-en, to defend, to secure, to fortify. "Here-bergs is (Sonn.) statio, mansio, a station or standing where the army rested in their march," i. e. in security, protected; and herebyrgan, to harbour, to abide, to lodge, to quarter.

HARD, v. ad. co. "Hard, as app. to material substances, (says Locke,) is opposed to soft, that being gen. called hard by us, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that, on the contrary, soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon any easy and unpainful touch. Hard-ness consists in a firm cohesion MENT of the parts of matter making up masses of a sensible bulk, so that the whole does not easily change its figure." (On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 4. s. 4.) Hence its numerous cons. applications, as opposing or resisting the motion of its own parts; gen. as opposing or resisting, bearing, suffering or enduring; and thus,—

1. Difficult, or that can or may not (easily) be done, so. be compressed, separated, penetrated, bent, broken;—as, steel is hardest. Met. impenetrable, insensible, stupid.

2. Difficult, or that cannot (easily) be done or performed by labour or skill; be understood, be learned;—as, Greek is hardest to come by; a hard task, a hard road or way,—difficult, laborious, toilsome.

3. Difficult to be borne or suffered:—as a hard saying, a hard season, a hard case,—harsh, rough, rigorous, severe, unjust; hard beer, harsh, rough; a hard trot, harsh, violent.

4. Difficult to be moved, or acted upon:—as a hard man, a hard heart,—a man not easily acted upon, or moved by kind or good feelings; and therefore, unkind, harsh, severe, austere, grinding, oppressive.

Hard is sometimes used as equivalent to hardy, or rather hardily; as, He died hard, i. e. resolutely, obdurately, or, sometimes, with difficulty.

Hard by,—joined hard to, i. e. close to.

To strive hard,—i. e. laboriously, vehemently.

To harden,—to confirm, to fortify, to strengthen.

Hardy, ad.,—enduring, or able to endure; firm, stout, strong, resolute, bold, daring, confident, assured: hence Hardily,—assuredly, confidently, or, (as Tyw.,) certainly.

To hard,—i. e. to harden.

Go. Harus; A. S. Heard; D. Hard; Ger. Hart; Sw. Haard; Dan. Haard; from A. S. Heard-ian, shard-ian, shyrdan, durare, indurare, durescere, indurescere. Over-Un.

HARE, v. To hare one (Sk.) is, to terrify, to throw into a consternation, to strike with terror. "The poor creature was hared by the council."—Clarendon. "To hare and rate them is not to teach them."—Locke.

From Fr. Harier, to harass; and this from A. S. Hery-ian, to harry, (qv.)

HARE, s. An animal.

-BRAIN. Hare-brained, agreeably to the -BRAIN-ED, adage, "As mad as a March -EDLY. hare;" Sk. derives it from the v. To hare.

Hare-lip, labia fissa,—a lip split or divided into two parts, like that of the hare.

A. S. & Sw. Hara; D. Haas, hase; Ger. Hase; Dan. Hare. Jun. suggests A. S. Hær, the hair, referring to the declaration of Pliny, that the hare is the hairiest creature of all other. Wach.—A. S. Hær, canus, hoary. Ibre, from Ger. Har-en, clamare, to cry, quod hiberno tempore acutissimè clamat; from the shrillness of its cries during winter. Qy. the v. To hare, (qv.) and the name given to the animal because,—or from its terrors when,—harried, or pursued by harriers.

HARE-BELL, s. The Eng. Hyacinth, (Sk.) so called, I believe, because its concave and pendulous flowers appear in shape to resemble a bell.

HARK, v. To hear, to listen, to take or receive at the ear. See HEARKEN.

HARLEQUIN, s. v. A comedian, because he much frequented the house of M. de Harlai in the reign of Hen. III. of France, is said to have first received this name.—See Men.

HARLOT, v. s. ad. A hireling, a hired -RY. servant or attendant, a low or base -IZE, v. person, male or female; now confined to females who prostitute their bodies for hire.

Harlotries, Tytw. interprets, ribaldries, sc. such as hirelings or low persons practise or delight in; and Wiclif renders the L. Scurrilitas, Harlotrie.—<sup>2</sup>Warner.

Quasi whorelet vel horelet, i. e. meretricula.—Sk. And Tooke believes that harlot is merely horelet, the dim. of hore,—the common application of the word was to males, merely as persons receiving wages or hire. Hore, or, as now written, whore, is the past p. of hyran, to hire. See WHORE, and VARLET.

HARM, v. s. To hurt, to mischief, to injure, to wrong; to cause loss or damage.

-FULLY. A. S. Yrmian, German, hearman, lædere, nocere; our modern s. Harm was in A. S. Yrmth, or fermth, i. e. -LESS-LY. whatsoever harmeth or *hurte*th; the third pers. sing. of the v.—See TOOKE. Un-

HARMONY, s. The fit or apt union or -IC. connexion of parts; in concordant proportion; in agreement or correspondence; in musical proportion or concord.

-IOUS. Fr. Harmonie; It. & Sp. Armonia; L. Harmonia; Gr. Ἀρμονία. Musica ita dicitur concentus; ac propriè ita vocatur apta omnis commissura ac -IZE, v. -ER. compages, ab ἀρμόζω, quod ab ἀρμόζω, uti hoc ab ἀπὸ, aplo.—Voss. Dis-En-In-Un-

HARNESS, v. t. Gen.—To dress or furnish, to arm: also to equip with harness, or the furniture used for draught horses.

By 7 Richard II. c. 13, "Launce-gaies armors and other harnies whatsoever are prohibited upon paine of forfeiture," &c.

Fr. Harnois; It. Ar-nies; Sp. -nis; Ger. Harnisch; D. -nas; Sw. -nist; Low L. Harnasche, which Hiecke thinks means armour for the head or skull, from the Go. Guarnel, the skull, (Gram. Franco. Theot. p. 92.) Wach.,—that it is either the A. S. Iren, or Welsh Hairn, both signifying iron, the metal of which harness or armour is made: and supposes the word to have had its origin in the times when the Gauls and Germans began to cover the body with iron. Un-

HAROW,* v. Fr. Haraud, or Haro, or Harol,—to cry out upon, or make hue-and-cry after.—**Chaucer. Spenser.*

Tyrw. who refers to Du Cange, (in v. Herocp.) and Hickes (Gr. Fr. Theot. p. 86) rather believes it to have been derived from har, altus, and op, clamor, two Islandic words, which were probably once common to all the Scandinavian nations. (And see Todd's Spenser, vol. III. p. 413, Note. Also Cot.)

HARP, v. s. A harp,—a stringed instrument of music.

-ING. To harp,—to play upon the -IST. harp.

-sichord. Met. to strike upon the same string, to touch repeatedly upon the same subject, to rest or dwell upon it, to touch or affect.

A. S. s. Hearpe, carpa; A. S. v. Hearpian; Ger. s. Harpfe; D. Dan. & Fr. Harpe; It. Arpa; Sw. Sp. & Low L. Harpa.

HARPOON, s. Now app. to—A javelin
-P-ING-IRON. of iron, with a sharp triangular
-OONER. point, barbed like an arrow.

L. Harpago; Fr. -on; Gr. ἁρπαγή, ἀπο τοῦ ἁρπαζειν, quia quicquid prehenderet, raperet. The invention of the harpagon, harpoom, or grapple, is ascribed by Pliny to Pericles.

HARPY, s. App. met. to a rapacious or ravenous plunderer and devourer; an insatiate extortioner.

Gr. 'Αρπυίας; L. Harpies, so called from their rapaciousness; from the Gr. 'Αρπαζειν, rapere.

HARQUEBUSS. -IER. See HACKBUT, and ARQUEBUSE.

HARR, v. To stand out of harre (Gower),— out of place (see HERE); out of order, (see Jamieson, in v. Har.)

HARRAGED,* pt. Perhaps intended for harassed, or harried.—*Fuller.

HARRIDAN, s. One harried,—and thus toiled or worn out.

Cot. says,—“ Haridelle, a poor tit, or lean, ill-favoured jade.” From the v. Harrier, to harry.

HARROW, v. z. As the v. To harry, i. e. -ER. To waste or lay waste, to spoil, to -ING. plunder; to disquiet, to disturb, to toil out, weary, or wear out; and, cons., to overpower, to subdue; to vex, to disturb, to break or tear to pieces.

Sk.—"By him that harowed hell" (i. e. Christ); from A. S. Hergian, vastare, (to herry,) verbatim.

per eum qui vastavit (i. e. devicit inferos). And Lye observes that Harrow, in Chaucer, is the same as Harry; and hence, (he adds,) perhaps, the same was transferred to the tool or instrument with which land is broken into smaller parts. Mr. Stevens says,—“To harrow is to conquer, to subdue. The word is of Saxon origin.”

HARRY, v. To lay waste, to plunder; and as Fr. Harier,—to tire or toil out, to weary or wear out; to vex, to disquiet.

A. S. Hergian, (I. e. her-ig-an); Ger. Har-en; Sw. -as; Fr. Harier. Ihre interprets—bello aequem infestare, deriving it from her, an army. The A. S. Hergian (see Sommer) is "vastare, spoliare, diripere, depredari; to waste, or lay waste, to spoil, to plunder, to harry." See Herry in Jamieson; HARE, HARASS, HURRY.

HARSH, ad. Troublesome or distressing;
-LY. rigorous, rough, grating, austere,
-NESS. morose.

Dan. & Sw. Harsk. Anciently written Harrysk and not improbably from the v. to herry, to vex, to molest, to trouble.

HARSLET, HASLET, s. Fr. Hastilles,—the inwards of a beast; as an hog's-hastlet, calf's gather, sheep's pluck. &c.—Col.

Sk. is inclined to derive Fr. Hastilles (It seems strangely to doubt the existence of the word) from Fr. Haste, a spit; because these hastines were usually fastened together, and in the state dressed or cooked upon a spit. And see Hatille in Men.

HART, J. HART'S-HORN. An animal.

Hartshorn,—"They [the horns of the stag] abound in ammonia, which is the basis of the spirit of hartshorn; and the remains (after the salts are extracted) being calcined, become a valuable astringent in fluxes, which is known by the name of burnt hartshorn."—Pennant.

A. S. Heort; Ger. Hirsch; D. Hart; Dan. & Sw. Hjort. Jun. derives from Heort, cor; and thence it app. to the animal from the largeness and timorousness of its heart. Wach. from Gr. Keras horned, from the size of its horns; and thus from A. S. Heorod, a herd, because they feed or pasture in herds.

HARVEST, v. s. Harvest, according to the etym. will first be used to signify Ripe corn; and be then app. to the season for the ripening and reaping of corn; to the gathering of any produce, of any thing produced or gained; to the produce or gain itself.

Harvest is much used pref

A. S. Harvest; Wash. from Go. Ar. vestis, and A. S. For capers. T. H. (in Sk.) vestis Hertha, whom the ancient Germans worshipped for vestis; and vestis, q. vestis see Turn. vestis, vestis, see dies festi. Sk. himself is inclined to vestis and vestis, q. vestis see vestis vestis vestis. The A. S. Har-ian, canescere, to grow or become hoary; and vestis, fructificare, to bear and produce fruit, (expressing by their composition, the whitening, and, consequently, the ripening of the face of the earth,) seem to present a plain and satisfactory etym.

HARUSPICES. See ARUSPEL.

HASH, v. s. To hack or chop, to cut in pieces; to cook or dress meat so cut.

A hash, met.—app. to things out of dress and dressed up anew. See TO HACK, and GALL.

HASK, s. The Glossarist to Spenser says, "A hask, is a wicker ped (basket) wherein they use to carry fish." Mr. Todd, in his note upon the passage, cites an instance of the usage of the word from Davison's Poema. Dr. Jamieson thinks it may be from the Sw. Hwass, a rush.—Spenser.

HASP, v. s. A hold or fastener (for a door, and for other purposes).

A. S. Haspe, a lock, a haspe. Hapsian, to lock, to hasp.—Sam. Ger. Haspe; Sw. Haspe; Low L. Haspe, which Spel. calls—retinaculum quod post ostium annectit. Sk. and Jun.—from the Gr. ἄσπερ, astepera. Wach.—from Ger. v. Hasen, (Go. Hasen; A. S. Habben), tenere, to hold or keep; more immediately from Ger. Happen. See HAP.

HASSOCK, s. App. to—A support for the feet, made of straw, or rather of rushes.

Serenius suggests Sw. Hwassa, juncea, a rush, and hack, a sack. But Sw. Hwassa, is A. S. Hwæt, acutus (see To WHET); and the whole plant appears to have been called Hassoc (see Harrison's Description of England), and may have been so called from the sharpness of its edges.—Fulcrum pedum stramineum, says Skinner.

HASTE, v. s. To move or act speedily or—ER. s. swiftly; to accelerate, to add to, to—ENR. increase the speed or swiftness, —V. the velocity; to quicken.

—MY. Hasty, met.—having the feelings—NESS. or passions quickly excited; pas—SION. sionate, precipitate, rash.

Hastings,—Fr. Hastiveau, hastivel, "an hasting apple or pear, a soon-ripe apple;" more commonly app. to peas, as green—hastings.

D. Hastien; Ger. Hast-en; Sw. -s; Dan. & Fr. -er. The A. S. s. is written Hstian, stian, "accelerate, hastenare, contendere; to hasten, to make speed, to speed or make haste to go, to strive, to endeavor earnestly."—Sam. The Ger. Dut. Sw. and Fr. appear to be the same word, with the omission of f and addition of the aspirate, and the change of s into a. En- Over- Un-

HAT, s. Something raised or heaved, sc.—TER. upon the head; a cover for the head.

—VED. Wach. from Ger. Hüten, tegere. Ihre from A. S. Hytan, to hide. Sk. says, A. S. Hat; Ger. Hut; D. Hood; Sw. Hatt; Dan. Hat; from Ger. Hüten; D. Hooden; to guard, to protect; because it protects from wind, sun, and rain. Hooded, or Hood's, the past p. of Heave, (A. S. Heafan) has, in Tooke's opinion, formed Hood, Hat, and Hut. And thus Hat will be the past tense, as past p. of the same v. as Head itself is: and hume, as Head does, something, any thing heaved or minded, as the head upon the shoulders, the hat upon the head.

HATCH, v. s. —ER. To quicken (sc. into life) by incubation: to foster; to cherish; to brood over; to give birth to.

Mina.—from Ger. Hacken, to cut or hack to pieces; become hinde, when they exclude their eggs, hack and break the shells with their beaks. Jun. says, To hack chickens, est excludere pullos, because the hen breaks the shell, (sc. to set the chick at liberty.) Sk. and Wach.—from Ger. Hacken, haccicare, incubare; and this from A. S. Hap, even, with the addition of the aspirate. Egg and Hatch may both be from A. S. Hap-ian, to sharpen, to quicken; to foster, to cherish. Un-

HATCH, s. v. Com. app. to—The fastened half or part of a door, the other part being thrown open: the door (which shuts down) in the deck of a ship, communicating from deck to deck, or deck to hold.

To be under hatches, (met.)—to be put down low, under cover.

A. S. Hacca, possessus, a bar or bolt of a door; whence Hatch, as buttery hatch; because usually barred or bolted. Belgic, Hack, (Scm.) from D. Hacken, apprehendere, tenere; to hold fast. The hatches of a ship, (Mina.) so called, "because they fall to like the hatch of a door."

HATCH, s. v. —ING. To cut or carve, to grave. Fr. Hâcher, to hack, or cut. Un-

HATCHEL, v. —LING. Also written Hetchel and Hitchell. See HACKELL.

HATCHET, s. That which (a tool which) hacks, cuts, or chops.

Fr. Hache, hachette; Ger. Hatsche. Brunne has the old word Hacks, from A. S. Haccan, to hack or cut. See To HACK.

HATCHMENT, s. A corruption of Atchievement, or Achievement, (qv.) App. to—

Any sign, ensign, or monument, of achievements performed; and com. to the coat of arms suspended in the front of a deceased person's house.

HATE, v. s. App. as the Fr. Hair,—"To —FUL. loathe, detest, abhor, spight, —FULLY. malice, repine at, bear ill-will —FULNESS. unto."—Cot.

—LESS. Go. Hat-jan; A. S. -on, -ian; D. Hasten; Ger. Hagen; Sw. Hata; Dan. Hader; which some etym.

derive from L. Od-ire. The A. S. Hat-ian, is to heat and to hate; and Jun. says, "from Hat, (hot), calidus, (whence I think Hat-ian formed,) the A. S. have taken their Hate, odium, rancor, malitia, and also Hathcoort, iracundia, and Hathcoorings, iracundia, exaudescencia." By the same metaphor, are the words incense, inflame, &c. app. to the human passions. Be-

HAUBERK. See HABERGEON.

HAVE, v. To hold or keep; to possess or —ER. obtain; to enjoy the tenure or pos—ING. session; to take or receive it; to —LESS. attain or procure the possession; to seek or require.

Have after him, at him, with him; are elliptical expressions, equivalent to—I will have, or, Let us have or keep after him; i. e. follow, pursue. I will have, or, Let us have, —a blow, a hit, an aim, a trial at him or it. I will have, or, Let us have, or keep (in company) with him; attend him.

Has, contraction of hav-es.

Hath, contraction of hav-eth.

Had, contraction of hav-ed.

Han, contraction of hav-en. Not uncommon in Wiclif, Chaucer, Gower, &c.

*Gower.

Go. Haben; A. S. Habben, haben; Ger. Haben; D. Habben; Sw. Hafven; Dan. Haver, to have, or, as anciently written, to hab; Fr. Avoir; It. Avere; Sp. Haber. All (say the etymologists) from L. Hab-ere; Tooke, —that the L. is from Go. See HAPT, HAVEN, HAVICOUR, HAF. Be-

HAVEN, s. That which holds or contains, -ER. * sc. ships; a port, a harbour.

-ET.† *Carew. †Hollinshed. †Holland.

-LESS.† Dan. Havn; D. Ha-ven; Ger. -fen; Fr. -vre; A.S. Haf-en, from Hæbban, to have or hold, to contain: quod (Jun.) ingentem navium numerum capit ac tenet. Tooke, —Hoven, haven, past p. of Have.

HAYER-SACK, s. Fr. Havre-sac, a bag of strong coarse linen, used mostly to carry provisions on a march.

HAUGHT, * ad. Written anciently Haut -v. sin and Hautain. High; lofty; -I-LY. high-minded, proud, disdainful.

-NESS. *Udal. Spenser. Shak.

Fr. Hautain, hautain; It. Alti-ero; Sp. -vo; from Fr. Haut, haut; It. & Sp. Alto; and these from L. Altus, high.

HAVIOUR, s. i. e. Behaviour, (qv.) manner of having, holding, or keeping; conduct; cons. good conduct, good manners. It is now only used by imitators of antiquity.

HAUL, v. i. e. To hale, (qv.) or pull.

Haul appears to have been used as a s. in some editions of Thomson, (Autumn, v. 547.) Over-

HAUNCE, s. Udal seems to apply this word to—the raised or upright post of the door: “They sprynkeled the thrasholde and haunces of the dore.” See HANCE, and ENHANCE.

HAUNCH, s. App. to—That part by which the lower limbs are hanked or hanged upon the body or trunk. Used, as in Shak. (met.) as—the rear.

Fr. Hanche; It. & Sp. Anca; D. Hanche. Jun. says,—from Gr. Ἀγκυρ, which signifies any flexure or bend of the limb; and Men.—ἄγκυρ for ἄγκυρ. Tooke,—that it is the past p. of Hang-an to hang; meaning, simply, hanged.

HAUNT, v. s. To pursue, to follow after, -ER. to keep in the steps of or in company -ING. with; to keep in or frequent the same place, by habit or custom; and thus to habituate, to accustom, to practise.

Haunt, s. (Chaucer,)—practice, practical skill: “Of cloth making she hadde swiche an haunt.”

Fr. Hanter. Sk.: from A. S. Hent-an, to pursue, to hunt. Jun.: immediately from Eng. v. to hunt. Un-

HAVOC, v. s. To destroy, to desolate, to waste or lay waste.

Sk. and Jun.—from “that cruel and rapacious bird,” the hawk, (qv.) in A. S. called Hafoc. The words may have a common origin.

HAUT-BOY, s. The natural treble (in Music) to the bassoon, as the names imply, —haut bois, high wood; bas son, low sound.

Fr. Hautbois, an obobois or oboboy.—Cok. Sk.; Hobois, a musical instrument, from Fr. Hautbois, qd. ignis altus, vel altum sonantia; and Salmastus is to the same effect. See Men.

HAUT-GOUT, s. A high or strong (gust) taste or savour, accompanied by an odour ascending from the palate to the nose.

A word (Sk.) lately bestowed upon us, from Fr. Un haut gust; sapor altus, i. e. vehement.

HAW, s. -THORN. A tree; the fruit of it. A haw, (A. S. Haga,) is also—a place hedged round, or inclosed, (so also a Hay, qv.) and is app. by Chaucer to—a farm-yard, a church-yard. See Haugh in Jamieson.

A. S. Hagan; the fruit or berry of the haw-thorn tree, (A. S. Hæg-thorn;) so called, says Som. from its usually growing in hedges, or its use in the making of hedges. From A. S. Hæg-ian, sepire, to hedge, or inclose with a hedge.

HAW-HAW, s. Said to be a reduplication of haw: a hedge or fence, though none is visible. Walpole gives the following account of the origin of the word:—“The capital stroke, the leading step to all that followed, was (I believe the first thought was Bridgman’s) the destruction of walls for boundaries, and the invention of fossés; an attempt then deemed so astonishing, that the common people called them Ha! Ha! to express their surprise at finding a sudden and unperceived check to their walk.” But see Ho.

HAWK, s. v. To hawk,—to hold, or seize -ER. hold, (as the hawk does;) to hunt -ING. with the hawk.

A. S. Haf-oc; D. Havick; Ger. Habich; Dan. Høg. It seems (Wach.) to have its name from Having or Holding, ut Accipiens dicitur Accipiendo; and thus to be from A. S. Holding, Ger. Hab-en, to have or hold. Voss. (in v. Accipiter.) derives Ger. Habich, from Ger. Happen, (itself probably from Hab-en), arripere, apprehendere, to seize, to seize hold. See Har.

HAWK, v. -ER. As hawkers carry their wares from place to place, and cry their sale, to hawk is, cons.—To carry about, from place to place; to expose to sale, to public view.

To hawk is used by Butler.

Hawkers (Sk.) are so called, because, like hounds wandering about, they hunt for gain or prey. The Ger. Hoker, Wach. calls propolis, a retailer, and derives it from Ger. Auchen, A. S. Eccan, augere, to increase, because he sells for more than the first traders, or vendors.

HAWK, v. HAWING. To force up or draw any thing noisily from the throat.

Hawk, (Sk.) from Ger. Hauchen, spirare, whistle he and Wach. agree la, vox & sono hct.

HAWSE. See HALSE.

HAY, s. That which hedgeth, incloses, or surroundeth.

A net, by which rabbits or other animals were inclosed, and thus caught, was also called a hay. See Mis.

Fr. Haye; D. Haeghe; A. S. Hæg, (y softened into g,) a hedge or haw, (qv.) Fr. Hayer; A. S. Hæg-ian; Ger. Haeghen, sepire, to inclose, to surround.

HAY, s. Grass hew-en or cut.

-ING. Haying,—cutting grass, making -WARD. hay, sc. fit for store or use.

Go. Haut; A. S. Hæg, hig; D. Houwe, hew; Ger. Hew; Sw. Hoe. Cassaubon: from Gr. Hay, gramen. Jun. says, hare, and a great number of followers,—from D. Houwen; Ger. Hauen, sepire, to cut. Quid enim est fenum, nisi gramen, sepitum? —Wach. A. S. Heowian, to hew, or cut.

HAY, s. To dance the hay, (Sk.) from the Fr. Hay, a hedge, (or hay.) in orbem ad figuram sepis choreas ducere; to dance in a circuit to the form or figure of a hedge or hay. (See HETIDIOYES.) The Fr. have a dance which they call Olivettes, because performed after the gathering of the olives; the Hay may take its name from a similar custom upon getting up the hay-harvest.

Mr. Douce observes on Shak. that the Hay was a dance borrowed from the Fr.; and that it is classed among Brawls in the Orchesographie of Thomas Arbeau.

HAZARD, s. s. To hazard (as com. app.)

-AR. is—To put or place at risk, sc. at -RA. risk of danger or loss; to risk, to
-ORA. expose to chance; to venture
-RY. rashly; to game.

Fr. Hazards; It. Azardo, zara; Sp. Azar; Low L. Azardum. Men. traces from L. Tessera, qd. Tessera, teara, zara, azara, azzardo. Un-

HAZE, s. s. To thicken, to become cloudy

-Z. or gloomy; sc. threatening rain;
-NESS. to misle, to drizzle.

Ray says: It hazes.—It misles, or rains, small m. Sk.: hazy weather,—aer nebulosus et caliginosus, a cloudy and gloomy atmosphere; and suggests the Ger. Hausen, to hale; from the disagreeableness of such weather. It is not improbably from the A. S. Has-tan, to be hoarse, (the r has not been intruded either into Ger. D. or Sw.) haze being app. to the thickness of the voice, and haze to the thickness of the atmosphere. To haze, then, will mean—as above.

HAZEL, s. -LY. Hazel, Hazelly, (app. to colour—c. g. hazelly mould, hazelly loam,) the colour of the hazel-nut, that is—brown, of a light brown.

A. S. Hæst, hæst-nut; D. Has-eler; Ger. -el; Dan. & Sw. -sel. Wach. with less truth than inquiry, in the opinion of Ihre, asserts—that Hæst is met. the calyx of the nut, from A. S. Hæst, a hat; and that, from the calyx, the fruit and the tree receive their name. The A. S. Hæst, he seems to consider as a derivative (or dim.) of Hæt, a hat, (qv.)

HE, pro. Go. Ha; A. S. He; Ger. Hee; D. Hg; Sw. Han; Dan. Hand. As the pro. It. (qv.) so He is, by our old writers, app. to the fem. and neut. as well as to the mas., and to the pl. as well as to the sing. He is no doubt from a similar, if not from the same source with It. or Hit, (or Het, for so was the word anciently written;) and had, as It had, one uniform meaning, warranting the usages to which it has been app. Tooke has shown, It, The, and That to have such uniform meanings; and from the principle he has established, a necessary consequence is, that the other pros. had one also. The and That he contends to be parts of the same word, the A. S. The-an, to the, to get, to take, to assume; the first being the imp., the second the past p. of that v. It, or Hit, or Het, he considers to be the past p. of the A. S. Hæt-an, nominare; and to mean nominatum, the said; a meaning perfectly corresponding with every use of the word It in our language. A conjecture, at least, may be admitted, that He was formed from some part of the same word, as the application and usage of He and It were precisely the same; and the difference between them now is no more than what arises from their being restricted grammatically,—He, to words mas., and It to words neut. Tyrw. has noticed some of the (to modern ears) peculiar usages of He, in all its cases, for It. But see WHO.

R. Gloucester:—“He (i. e. England) stands as an isle.” “He send to wyte (to know) whether he (they) wished peace.”

R. Brunne:—“Hoo (i. e. the queen) with poison alew her.”

Chaucer:—“Else long may he (i. e. labour) not long endure.”

HEAD, v. s. That part (of the body, or -ER. any thing else) which is heav'd,

-FUL, s. raised, or lifted up, above the rest.

-LESS. It was anciently written Heved,

-LONG. and (in P. Ploughman) Hevd.

-Y. It is used emph.—as being the

-INESS. chief or principal part,—for the -SHIP. whole body or person; also, for the contents of the head; sc. the brains, the powers of the mind, the thoughts; cons.—

The chief or principal person or thing, the leader, guider, director, commander;

the leading, guiding, directing, or commanding place or station; the highest place, the first place, forepart, front, height.

To head is,—

To lead, guide, direct, or command; to make head, to keep head forward, to front or face, (to affront or confront,) to advance.

To gather head,—

To gather means to make head; force or power to front, or face, or advance. To give head,—

To give up the restraint upon the head; to give liberty to advance at speed. To head is also—

To behead, i. e. to take off, cut off, strike off, the head.

To head up,—to put on the head, sc. of a cask or vessel.

Head-land,—a cape; land raised.

Headlong, (anciently also written Head- ling.)—head forwards, sc. without care or caution, precipitate; heedless.

Head-strong, cons.—resolute, self-willed, obstinate.

Heady,—heedless, giddy, precipitate;

rash, violent;—acting upon the head, causing giddiness, dizziness, stupor. And see

GIDDY.

HEART, v. s. Heart, the s. is app. to—-EN, v. The seat or source of life: the
-ENER.* seat or source of the passions,
-LESS. feelings, thoughts, affections;
-LESSNESS. to these themselves; to the -EDNESS. being in whom they exist; the -Y. seat or source of good and ill;
-ILY. to the vital part.—vitality, life,
-INESS. spirit, courage, strength; to
-IST.* the central, or chief, or principle part.

To heart, or hearten, is—to encourage,
to animate, to invigorate; to give or add life, spirit, courage, strength.

Hearted,—seated, deeply fixed, stored, treasured in the heart.

Heart is much used pref.—* Beau. & F.

Go. Hæirte; A. S. Heorta; Ger. Hers; D. Hert; Sw. Hier-ta; Dan. -te. R. Stiernhelmus (ms.

account of the perpetual motion and agitation of the heart. Wach. adds, that he finds no such root apud Saxones et Francos. (See Wach. in vv. Hers, and Hores, agere.) Jun. tells us—some think that Heart is derived from herd, i. e.
hard, durus, because we owe the duration of life to the continued motion of the heart. Wach. re-

HEARTH, s. The place or spot upon which the fire was kindled; now, under and immediately before the grate or stove in which the fire is kindled.

A. S. Heorthe, heorthe gæning.—Hertha, or Herth-us, i. e. Terra, Earth, was worshipped as a goddess by our northern ancestors, (see Tacitus, De Mori- bus Ger.) and in honour of her, her name was given not only to the place on which the family fire was kindled, but to the whole house. The Roman Lar was used in a similar manner. See Jun. and Wach. in vv. Heorthe, and Herthe; and also Spel. in v. Heorþengung.

HEGEMONICAL,* ad. Leading, guiding, directing.—**Glanvill*.

Gr. ἡγεμονικός, from ἡγεμῶν, a leader, from ἡγεσθαι, to lead.

HEIFER, s. The name given to—A female calf, from the completion of its first year, till it has itself borne a calf.

A. S. Heah-fore, far, juvenca, bucula, vitula. Of uncertain etym. Written by Sk. Jun. and Mina. Haifer; and Sk. derives from heah, high, and fore, gressus, a step; utpote quæ altum graditur, i. e. superbe incedit toto tam corpore et cornibus adulta. Jun. from the same,—heah, and fore, a corruption of fordre, qd. heah-fordre, summæ pastam.

HEIGH-HO, int. Usually in relief of some uneasiness.

HEIGHT, s. Formerly also written Height -EN, v. and Heyth; by Milton, Height. -ENING. To heighten,—to heave or lift up, to raise, to elevate, to extol, to exalt, to promote. See HIGH.

Go. Haukitha; A. S. Hitha. Tooke asserts it to be the third pers. sing. Heafeth, of the v. Heaf-an, extollere, to heave or raise. Our other terms of admeasurement, length, breadth, width, depth, still retain the final h, probably from the difficulty of pronouncing the words without it.

HEINOUS, or HAINOUS, ad. Hateful,

HELTER-SKELTER, av. All in confusion, or tumult.

Sk. prefers D. Heel, wholly,—ter, to,—and schel- teren, to scatter. Grose says, that helter or hilly
(in the North) is frame, order, condition. Hence Helter-skelter, a corruption of helter, to hang, and skelter, order; i. e. hang order, or in defence order. In good helter, (he adds,)—in good order, condition. Keller is thought by T. H. (in Sk.)
to be culture.

HELVE,* s. The handle.

**Bp. Hall.* Dampier.

A. S. Half; Ger. Heise, manubrium. Sk. Heald-an, to hold. Still common in Suffolk. See MOOD.

HEM, v. s. To hem is—to bring together to close down and fasten together; com-(as the Ger. Hemmen,)—to confine, to surround, to inclose. The hem (sc. of a garment) is—

The edge folded over, or doubled down and sewed down. Gen.—the edge of border.

A. S. Hem. Spel. derives Hem, domus, (from from Gr. ἡμῶν, facies; and adds, inde ovm ve- timenti etiam hodie, the Hem, appellamus. Idem derives from the same Gr. word. Sk.—From He- ire. It has, probably, the same origin with He-
i. e. home, in A. S. Heam-ian, coire, to come or go together, to bring together.

HEM, v. s. To utter the sound—hem.
D. Hemmen. Stimpfem edere vocem.—Kluge.
A word (Sk.) formed from the sound.

HEMICYCLE, s. A half circle.
Gr. ἡμικύκλος; from ἡμισυ, half, and κύκλος, circle.

HEMI-SPHERE, s. Half of a sphere
-IC. or globe; (in Geometry) when
-ICAL. such a sphere is divided by a plane passing through its centre.

Fr. Hémisphère; It. Emis-pero, fero; Sp.
-phero; L. Hemisphærium; Gr. ἡμισφαῖον; hem- isphero, half, and σφαῖρα, a sphere or globe.

HEMI-STICH, s. -AL. Half of a verse.
Fr. Hémistiche; It. Emistichio; L. Hemi- stichium; Gr. ἡμιστίχιον; from ἡμισυ, half, and στιχος, a verse.

HEM-LOCK, s. A plant.
A. S. Hem-loc, hymlic, ciencia. Jun. Sk. and Mins. say nothing about the origin. It has not obtained in the cognate languages.

HEP

HEMORRHAGE, s. -y. Sanguinis eruptio, a breaking or bursting forth of the blood.

Fr. Hémorrhagie; Gr. Αἱμορρία, from αἷμα, the blood, and ῥεῖν-ειν, to break.

HEMORRHOIDS, s. -HOIDAL. Also written Emoroids, (qv.)

Sanguinis fluxus, a flowing of the blood.

Fr. Hémorrhoids; It. Emorroidi; L. Hæmorrhoides; Gr. Αἱμορροῖς; from αἷμα, the blood, and ῥεῖν, to flow.

HEMP, s. A plant.

-EM. A. S. Hæmep, canabis; Ger. Hanf; D. -Y. Hemp; Sw. Hampa; Dan. Hamp; which the etymologists agree to be from Gr. Καμβίς; L. Canabis; whence Fr. Chanvre; Sp. Cannamusa; It. ps.

HEN, s. Now app. to the female birds.

A. S. Hæn, a hen; hæn, hæna, a cock; Dan. Hin; D. Henne, hænne, a hen; hæn, a cock; Ger. Henne, a hen; hæn, a cock; Sw. Hænna, a hen; hæn, a cock. I have observed,—that he has seen the styma, deserving of notice; the one, that hæn (a cock) is from L. Can-ere, or Gr. Καίνειν, styma; as it is peculiar to that bird to warn men of their duty by their noisy crowing: the other, that hæn is from the pr. hæn, he, and hæn, from hæn, hæ, (κατ' ἐξουσίαν.) Jun. supplies two more, Gr. ἄνα, the vocative of ἀνὰ, a king; or ana, by apocope, for ἀναστα, surge, arise.

HENCE, adv. v. Very variously written—

-FOETH. Hæn, Henne, Hennes, Hennen.

-FORWARD. App. to the time or place from which motion, remoteness, or distance is made or measured; to that from which anything moves or begins its motion, to the source, origin, cause; from here, from this, sc. place or time; source, origin, or cause.

Sidney makes a v. of hence.

A. S. Hæn-an, -on; D. Hæn, hennen; Ger. Hin; Sw. L. Hine, say Sk. and Mins. See THESE.

HENCH-MAN, s. -BOY. Gen.—An attendant, a follower.

Sk.—from Hine, a servant, and man, qd. hine-man, or hine-man. Spel.—from Ger. Hengst, a war-horse. Dra. Percy and Blackstone say, "Henchman, q. henschman, one that goes behind mother. Pedasequus," sc. stands or follows at his hensch. And Stevens remarks that this stym may receive some support from the 2d Part of Shak.'s Hen. IV., where hensch is used as equivalent to rear. See the note on the Mids. N. Dr.

HEND, or HENT, v. v. To seize, to occupy, to hold, to take, to take hold.

Chaucer to Fairefax.

Sk.—Hent, hentien, to catch, qd. to hand, (qv.) man prebendere, to seize with the hand. A. S. Hend-an, or hent-an, to catch, to seize; in which sense, says Lye, Chaucer uses hentien; and henters ye rapistors. From Hend-an is the Lat. Hend-an, used only in composition; Pre-hendere, Appre-hendere. sc. Over-Pre-hend, HINT.

HENDECA-SYLLABLE, s.

Gr. ἑνδεκα, eleven, and σὺλλαβή, a syllable.

HENDY, ad. Sk.—Hend, hende: feat, fine, gentle, qd. handy or handsome. (See HARD.) Unhende is also found.—"Chaucer.

HEPATIC, ad. Of or pertaining to the liver.

Gr. ἥπατις, from ἥπαρ, liver, and ἥπατος, the liver; Fr. Hépatique.

HER

HEPTA-GON, s. -AL. A figure with seven angles, and cons. seven sides.

ἑπτά, seven, and γωνία, an angle.

HEPT-ARCHY, s. "The Saxons pursued their invasion with such an uninterrupted course of fortune and victories, that they subdued the whole body of the province, and established it in seven several kingdoms, which were, by the writers of those times, styled the heptarchy of the Saxons."—Temple.

Gr. ἑπτά, seven, and ἀρχή, a principality.

HER, pr. -SELF. Now restricted grammatically to the accusative case of She.

A. S. Heora, here, her; written in old Eng. Hir, hirs, here, hurs, and used plurally (i. e. where we now use their) as well as singularly. The A. S. Heora, of which here, her, are contractions, may be compounded of he, (itself used with no distinction of number or gender,) and ora, or er. See HIRE, and ORD.

HERALD, s. v. ad. A crier, proclaimer, -RY. publisher, messenger.

-IC. Ger. Her-old; D. aut; Fr. autt, aut; -ICAL. Sp. aldo; Sw. Harold; It. Araldo. About this name of Herald, divers (says Verstegan) have been diversely conceited. For which conceits may be consulted Verstegan himself, (c. 10.) Men. Spel. Voss. (de Vititiis) and Wach.—Jun. and Wach. seem the most reasonable; viz. from Ger. Haren, to cry, to proclaim, (the same word, probably with A. S. Herg-an, herian, to hery, qv.) The Fr. have the v. Hérauder, which Cot. explains, to blaze; publicly to denounce, manifest, or commend. Shak. uses the v. to herald, to act as herald to.

HERB, s. Herb, lit.—That which feeds or

-ACEOUS. nourishes (sc. animals, called graminivorous); pasture (for them.)

-AGE. -AGED.

HERCULEAN, ad. Possessing qualities similar to those of Hercules;—great bodily strength.

HERD, v. s. -ESS. A herd is app. to—a number of sheep or kine guarded or kept; to a number of sheep or kine collected or congregated together for the purpose of being so guarded; gen.—to a number of line; to a number of persons collected or congregated; also—to the person guarding or keeping.

To herd,—to collect, to assemble, to gather, to congregate together, as herds do.

Go. Haird-a; A. S. Heorde; Ger. Herde; Dan. Hiorde; (Sw. Heord, grex, thru derives from herda, custodire, and so also herde, pastor.)

"Herd (Tooke) is the past p. of A. S. hyrd-an, custodire; and is app. both to that which is guarded or kept, and to him by whom it is guarded or kept. We use it both for gras and pastor."

HERE, av. Here is used as equivalent to —This place, to this place, in this place.

Here is much used pref.—as Here-after, fore, -before, -before, -of, -in, -to, -unto. "Here-approach," "here-remain," (Shak.) approach, remain—here.

HERESY, s. Heresy is an opinion taken

-IARCH. in opposition, or a dogma op-

-IARCHY. posed to, the principles of the

-TIC. Christian Church; of the Estab-

-TIC-AL. blished Church; of established

-ALLY. doctrines in general.—"Bp. Hall.

-ATE,* v. Fr. Hér-ésie; Sp. -esia; It. Eresia; L. Heresis; Gr. Alpein, from Alp-av, capere, to take. "The word heresy is Gr. and signifies a taking of any thing, particularly the taking of an opinion. After the study of philosophy began in Greece, and the philosophers disagreeing amongst themselves, had started many questions, not only about things natural, but also moral and civil;

because every man took what opinion he pleased, each several opinion was called a heresy; which signified no more than a private opinion, without reference to truth or falsehood."—Hobbs.

HERE-TOCH, s. "Among the Saxons

the L. name of dukes, duces, is very frequent, and signified, as among the Romans,

the commanders or leaders of their armies, whom in their own language they called Heretoga; and in the laws of Henry I. (as translated by Lambard,) we find them called Heretochii."—Blackstone.

Low L. Heretochius; A. S. Heretoga, from here,

L. Hermaphroditus; Gr. Ἑρμαφρόδιτος, from Ἑρμης, Mercurius, and Ἀφροδίτη, Venus. Bruns coins the v.; and B. Jonson the general term—hermaphroditis.

HERMETIC, ad. Chemistry was called

-AL. the Hermetic art, under the suppo-

-ALLY. sition that it owed its origin, or its improvement, to Hermes Trismegistus.

A glass is said to be hermetically sealed, when it is so closely stopped, that not any exhalation can issue from it.

HERMIT, or HEREMITE, s. Also written

-ISM. peculiar meaning (propria natio) of

-LOGY.* which posita est in,—vi et impetu, quo aliquid aliorum movetur, et ab aliveatur alteri: to this meaning, he affirms, all the various applications of the s. may be traced: not from which he forms certain words, designating power, virtue, eminence, excellence, superiority;

and among these,—Heros, Juno; L. Her, i. e. domina;

Heros, Jupiter; L. Herus, i. e. dominus;

(A. S. Herro; D. Heer) heros, the final syllable pronounced long, is ἦρως; and heros, extinct of præstantiam, denotes a more illustrious race of men, or one intermediate between gods and men.

It is probable that all the above words have one common origin. See EN, and TO HERT, and letter R.

HERON, or HERN, s. A bird.

HERONSHAW, or Fr. Héron. The Italians (Mén.)

HERONSHAWES. call this bird heron, avon, aphron, aphron, and aphron.

HERON-ER. phron; and the Sp. heron.

-BY. J. Scal. derives heron from heron.

L. Aerius, aerial; and L. Ardea, from Ardea heron, to go into the air. The Gr. name of this bird is Ἐρδαιος; and Mén. forms Fr. Héron (after his manner) from this Gr. name, and It. & Sp. from

L. Ardea. His editor prefers Ger. Her. high, lofty. Hernus (says Sk.) ardus avis, still found in Lincolnshire, from Heron and sea, for peruere, because this rapacious bird *peruere*s other birds as well as fish, and Tyrw. calls them young Herons. Chaucer writes Heronsseas;—And Heroner,—a hawk, made to file only at the heron.

HERRING, s. -BUSS. A fish. "This mighty army (of fish) begins to put itself in motion in the spring; we distinguish this vast body by that name, for the word Herring is derived from the Ger. Har, an army, to express their numbers."—Pennant.

-Y. Fr. Hexagone; Sp. -o; It. Esagono; L. Hexagonos; Gr. ἑξαγωνος, from ἕξ, six, and γωνία, an angle.

HEXA-METER, s. ad. A measure, or a verse measuring or consisting of six feet. Fr. & Sp. Hexametre; It. Esametro; Gr. ἑξαμετρος, from ἕξ, six, and μετρος, a measure.

HEX-ANGULAR, s. Having six angles.

HEX-APOD, s. Having six feet.

Gr. ἑξαπόδιον, from ἕξ, six, and πόδιον, feet.

HEX-ASTIC, s. Having, or consisting of, six verses.

Gr. ἑξαστιχον, from ἕξ, six, and στιχον, a verse.

HEXT, s. ad. High or hegh, heghet, heghst, hext. In the same manner, (adds Tyrw.) Next is formed from Negh.—Chaucer.

HEY-DAY, int. -DEQUIES. An int. (Sk) of wonder or admiration, qd. High-day. O festum diem, i. e. laetum et felicem: an etym. much at variance with the common usage of the word, though High-day is not an unusual term. Thus, in Beau. & F.—"Look to your wives, your young wives, your high-day wives."—The Mad Lover.

The Glossarist to Spenser calls Heydequies "A country dance or round. The conceit is, that the Graces and Nymphs do daunce unto the Muses and Pan his mimicke all night by moonlight: to signify the pleasantness of the soyl." The reading of Dr. Percy (Hey-day guise) seems to point to the only plausible etym.

HIATION, s. -RUS. An opening, a gaping.

L. Hiare; Gr. Xa-eiv, to open, to gape. In-

HIBERNAL, s. -ATION. Wintry; of or pertaining to winter.

when it ceases to be so, they [the priests] would as naturally invent another alphabetic character for their sacred use: while from that appropriation was called Hiero-grammatical.”—Warburton.

Gr. hierogrammatist, hierographia, from iepor, sacred or holy, and γραφειν, to write.

HIERO-PHANT, s. “The chief person that attended at the initiation was called hierophant, i. e. a revealer of holy things. Hierophantes is said to have been a type of the great Creator of all things.”—Potter Antiquities.

Gr. hierophantes, from iepor, sacred or holy, and φανειν, to declare, to reveal or make manifest.

HIERO-URGY,* s. A sacred or holy work.—Waterland.

Gr. hierourgia, from iepor, sacred or holy, and εργον, a work.

HIGGLE, v. Haggle, or higgle, may be, —ER, s. To rake together, to collect, to accu-

—ING. mulate, sc. by small means or delings, by small gains or savings; and, con-to make repeated offers or repeated refus-

(in bargaining) with a view to increase gains; or (as Cot. expresses it) to pal-long in the buying or selling of a commodity.

The Fr. Harceler (see HAGGLE) is derived (Men.) from Ger. Harke, a rake, which is derived from A. S. Raccian, kraccian, to rake or scoop together, to collect, to accumulate.

HIGH, v. To hasten. See HIE.

HIGH, ad. av. Raised, lofty, lifted up.

—LY. elevated, exalted; met. ex-

—NESS. nent, illustrious; lofty, proud.

HIGHTH, or —raised as the sea; tempe-

HIGHT. tuous, raging, violent;—raised or removed from view or perception; abstruse, recondite:—high prices, or high prices, dear.

It is opp. not only to low, but to little small, petty, mean.

High is much used—pref.

Go. Hawk; A. S. Hoak; D. Ho, hoo, hoop; Ger. Hoch; Sw. Hoeg; Dan. Høj. Dure quotes from Uphilas, Hauke, whence he adds, Haf—to elevare. Tooke derives from A. S. Hof-an, (to Go. Hafan.) elevare, extollere, to heave; (to HEIGHT;) to raise up or aloft, to lift up; to vate, to extol, to exalt. And High, the ed. (as

HIGHT,* av. On hight,—in a high voice aloud; Fr. En haut.—Tyrw.

*Chaucer. Spenser.

HIGHT, or HETE, ad. HOTE. Named called, said, declared; sc. to be done; in order, charge, commission, promise; and thus, ordered, commanded, charged, committed, promised. It is used without the common verbs, To be, is, was. Hete, in

R. Brunne, is used substantively.

Go. Hait-an; A. S. Hait-an, hat-an; D. Haiten;

Ger. Heissen; nominare, nuncupare, vocare, dicere, jubere. See ВЪИТИ, ВЫИТИ, and И.

HILARITY, s. Gladness, mirth, gaiety.

L. Hilaritas; Gr. ἡλαριος, from hlaen, prop-tiare, placare; propitium, et latus reddere; to propitious, to render or cause to be propitious, or favourable, pleased or gladdened with. Ex-

H I N

HILD, v. i. e. Giveth, says Sk. "from A.S. Gold-an, i. e. to yield."
*Wiclif. Chaucer.

HILDING, s. ad. Means—A croucher, a cowerer.

Is either (Tooke) the past p. of the v. Hyld-an, inclinare, curvare, to bend down, to crouch, or to cover; and then it should be written Hilden;) or it is the p. p. Hylding, (Hyld-and) of the same verb.

HILL, v. s. To hill, is,—to cover: and
-ty. hill, the s.—

-th. "Any heap of earth, or stone, &c.

-ock. by which the plain or level surface

-y. of the earth is covered." Cons.—

-ness. high, raised, elevated, ground or land.—Hilled, in R. Brunne,—high.

A. S. Hill; D. Hille, hil; Ger. Hugel, from A. S. Hil-an, to cover; in old Eng. to heil, to heal, or to hil.—Tooke. lhre (in v. Berg) derives from het-s, tegere, to cover. (See To HALL.) Up-

HILT, s. "The hilt of a sword is the held part, the part which is held."

A. S. Helt; D. Hilte, hilt; perhaps, says Sk. he held. And Tooke.—"Hilt is held, helt, hilt."

HIM, pro. -self. Now restricted grammatically to the accusative case of the pro. he, (qv.)

Gr. Him, inc; A. S. Him (he-im); D. Hem; Ger. Im; Dan. Him. As He, (qv.) so Him is used without regard to distinction of gender or number; in R. of Gloucester and R. Brunne (as Beane has noted) it is equivalent to them, her, it, he, himself, and themselves. See THEM, and letter M.

MIND, s. An animal.

A. S. & Ger. Hinde; D. Hinde; Dan. & Sw. Hind; which Wach. thinks might be formed from the Gr. Υἷναι, capra, a she-goat. Sk. from L. Hinnus.

HIND, or HINE, s. App. to—a servant, a husbandman, a peasant.

A. S. Hine, servus, famulus, a servant; also—familiaris of the same family.—Som., who refers to Hine, i. e. familiaris, persons of the same family; which is formed from Hine, domus, smitha, a house, a household, or family; and this again from Hine, formare, fabricare, to form, to fabricate, qd. a house, a place formed or built: a hine, a household servant.

HIND, ad. Opposed to front, or fore:—
-er. back, posterior.

-ermost. A. S. Hind-an; Ger. & D. -en, from

-most. A. S. Hynan, retro, post.—Sk. See HINDER, v. Be-

HINDER, v. To put or keep back or de-awce. hind; to let, to stop, or stay; to
-er. obstruct, to impede; to prevent advance or progress; to prevent.

A. S. Hyn-an, hindrian, impedit, obatare; D. Hind-eren; Ger. -ern; Sw. -ra; Dan. -rer; which the etymologists agree is formed from Hind, post, retro, back, backwards. Un-

HINGE, v. s. "Hinge, that upon which the door is hang, heng, hyng, or hyng; the s. being thus differently pronounced and written."—Tooke.

To hinge, i. e. to hang, is found in our old writers; to hinge, in Shak., to turn or bend as a hinge; to hinge, met. to hang, to depend, to turn. "Thys mater hynges in argument."—Fabyan.

H I P

D. Hinge, henge; Cardo,—from v. to hang, because the door hange upon it.—Sk. Un-

HINT, s. v. Upon the s.—Hint, i. e. something taken, (or to be taken), as an intimation, an insinuation, a suggestion, the v. to hint, met. has been founded:—

To intimate, to insinuate, to suggest; to allude or refer slightly to.

Hint in G. Douglas (Lye) is the Hent of Chaucer; and Hent (qv.) he derives from Hend-an, capere, to take. And Tooke.—Hint, something taken; the past tense and past p. of Hent-an, capere, to take hold of. See FAIR, HAWD.

HIP, s. -FISH. The first syllable of hypochondriacal, (qv.)

HIP, v. s. -HAPE. Hip, s.—The joint; of thigh to body.

To hip,—to touch or otherwise affect the hip, to lame it.

Hip-hape,—perhaps a covering for the hip. See HAF, to cover.

Johnson explains "To catch upon the hip," (Shak. M. V.) as a phrase taken from the practice of wrestlers. Others derive it from hunting; the animal seized upon the hip by a hound is soon disabled.

Go. Hups; A. S. Hype; D. Heupe; Ger. Huffte. Jun. thinks, perhaps, from Hype, accervus, a heap, because in no other part of the body, major est ossorum, nodorum musculorumque coacervatio. Stiernhielmus (in Wach.) from Heb-an, (A. S. Hraf-an.) levare, sustinere, because the hip sustains the whole body.

HIP, or HEP, s. App. to—the fruit or berry of the rose.

A. S. Hiope, the briar or hep-tree.—Som.

HIPPO-CAMP, s. Campe is any large fish bending its tail in a winding motion, as the dolphin, the whale; also the sea-horse.

Gr. ἵπποκαμπος, from ἵππος, a horse, and καμπή, campe, a worm, from καμπτεῖν, to bend.

HIPPO-CENTAUR, s. "Claudius Cæsar writeth, that in Thessalie there was borne an Hippocentaur, i. e. halfe a man, and halfe a horse."—Holland. Plinie.

Gr. ἵπποκενταυρος, from ἵππος, a horse, and κενταυρος, a centaur.

HIPPO-CRAS, s. Wine made according to the prescription of Hippocrates.

Vinum hippocraticum. See Menage in vv. Hippocras, Hypocras, Ipcras, for different opinions.

HIPPO-DAME. See HIPPOTAMUS.

HIPPO-DROME, s. A race-course for horses; also for chariots.

Gr. ἵπποδρομος, ἵππος, a horse, and δρομος, a course.

Hippodrome.—Melmoth. Pliny—(i. e. Hypodrome).—A covered place to walk in. Gr. ὑποδρομος, (hwo, under, and δρομος, a course,) a course or walk under, so. shelter or cover.

HIPPO-GRIFF, s. "Fr. Hypogriphe,—a monster, half horse, half griffon."—Cot.

Gr. ἵππος, a horse, and γρύψ; It. Ippogrifa; Sp. Hipogrifo. See GRIFIN.

HIPPO-POTAMUS, s. -DAME. "Hippopotames, sea-horses, which the poet (Spenser) should rather have written Hippotames."—Todd.

Fr. Hippopotame; L. Hippopotamus; Gr. ἵππος, a horse, and ποταμός, the sea.

HIRE, v. s. To give or pay, or promise -LESS, or agree to give or pay, a -LING, s. ad. price, or wages, or rent, for -ER, the use or service of any person or thing; to let, to give or grant such use or service for a price or wages or rent.

A. S. Hyr-an, hyr-lan; D. Hue-ren; Dan. Hyrer, conduce, and also locare. Un-

HIRSUTE, ad. -NESS. Hairy or rough with hair, shaggy; met. rough, rugged.

L. Hirtus, et Hirutus;—equivalent, says Voss, to—pilis horridus; horrid with hair, and, therefore, derived by some—ab horrore. He himself thinks it comes from the sound, quem edunt setis horrentia. Perhaps A. S. Xre-lan is the root. See GORSE.

HIS, pro. Go. Is; A. S. His, hys. His (he-es, he-is) also (see HE, and HIM) was used without regard to distinction of number or gender; as her, its, their. (See THIS.) It is now restricted grammatically to the genitive case of He, (qv.)

HISPID,* ad. Bristly, shaggy.—*More.

L. Hispidus, which, as Hirsute, (qv.) Voss. thinks comes from the sound,—quem edunt setis horrentia.

HISS, v. s. -ING. Hissing is used to express contempt, dislike, condemnation, disapproval. And—as in Jeremiah—app. to the object hissed; "I will make this city desolate and an hissing."

A. S. His-ean, a-his-ean; D. Hischen; Ger. Zischen, sibilare. All formed from the sound. Out.

HIST, int. Apparently formed from the L. nota silentii 'St'. (See HUSH.) "And the mute silence hist along."—Milton. "Davus. Hist! hold awhile: [hem, 'st, mane.]"—Cotman. Terence.

HISTORY, s. Knowledge; sc. of things

-IAN. done, of deeds or facts; also
-IC. the tale or narration of them;
-ICAL. the relation, the record of
-ICALLY. them.—**Sir T. Elyot*. †Ho-
-IOGRAPHER. linshed. †Stirling. †Evelyn.
-IAL.* Fr. Histoire; It. Sp. & L. Histo-
-ICIAN.† Gr. ἱστορία, from ἵστωρ,
-IFY,† v. science, knowing, or having -IZE,† v. knowledge; from ἵστωρ, to know.

HISTRIONIC, ad. Voss. prefers the -ICAL. account of Livy. "Heerevpon our -ISM. owne cuntries actors and artificiall professors of this feate were called Histriones, of Hister, a Tuscan word, which signiflieth a player or dauncer."—Holland. "He who was of greatest reputation, and had carried the name longest in all theatres, for his rare gift and dexterity that way, was called Hister; of whose name all other afterward were termed Histriones."—Id.

HIT; v. s. -TING. To touch or reach the mark or object aimed at: to strike, to smite.

To hit or strike together; take the same aim, act in union, agree.

Sk. & Mina.—from L. ictus. Jun.—from Dan. Hitte, tamer's projicer, to throw out rashly; lyk. —from Sw. Hitta, which Serenius interprets scire, perstringere, to find, to reach or touch. R. of Gloucester writes Anhytte; and it is not improbably from A. S. Yttian, yttian, to out, to draw out; and, cons.—to touch, &c. Un-

HITCH, s. v. To raise or hoist, and, cons. to fix upon a hook; to catch or fasten.

Sk. says, a nautical term; to catch or seize, and fix or affix any thing by a rope or hook, perhaps from Fr. Ficher, to fix. Not improbably of the same origin as Hook, (qv.)

HITHE, s. App. to,—The place where vessels flow or float, and thus, a port or haven.

A. S. Hyth, portus, a haven or port.—Sam. It is, perhaps, from A. S. Ythion, to flow or float.

HITHER, ad. av. To this place; to the

-MOST. place nearest; (met.) to this point

-TO. to this subject; to this effect,

-WARD. this end, this period, of time.

-WARDS. The av. is used when the speaker means to express motion to the place where he himself is, or supposes himself to be.

Hither, ad.—Near.

Go. Hid-re; A. S. -er; Ger. Hierher, hier; Sw. Hid; Dan. Hid. See THITHER.

HIVE, s. v. A place framed, fabricated

-LESS. built; (e. g. for bees.) Also

-ER. to the family of bees themselves; to any swarm, or numerous assembly or company. See BEES.

A. S. Hýfe, perhaps (Sk.) from Five, a family, house; both from A. S. Fiscan, formare, fabricare, to frame or fashion, to fabricate.

HIZZ,* v. i. e. To hiss, (qv.)

**Shak. Cowley*.

HO, int. Like L. Hoi, heu, cho, seems to HOA. be a mere cry or call, to arrest of

Hon. tention, and the written word formed from the sound. It is app. as a variant that the person called to—is seen; that the thing doing—is done sufficiently; and, cons. a notice to desist, cease, stay, stop.

As in Lord Berners (Froissart) it is used as a s. equivalent in signification to—Stay, stay, cessation (hold): "For when they mete there is a hard fight without sparyng, there is no ho bytwene them as longe as speares, swordes, axes, or daggers wyl endure, but lay on eche vpon other." In Ritson (Erle of Tolous) as a v.: "Sye, rede, be Seynt John, of warre that ye ho."

And hence, perhaps, Hau-hau, (qv.)

Archdeacon Nares remarks, that Ho, ho is an established dramatic exclamation given to the devil whenever he makes his appearance upon the stage.

HOAMING. "It is a hoaming sea."—

Dryden. See HUM.

HOB

HOAR, ad. s. s. To whiten, to be or become grey; and, cons. mouldy, musty, fennowed, or vinewed.

-HAR. A.S. Har-fan, caneescere, to wax grey or hoary, it. mucicere, to grow musty, mouldy, or hoary.—Som.

HOARD, s. v. A hoard, that which is ex. guarded or kept, sc. as a store or -tho. treasure.

To hoard; cons. to lay up, to store or treasure up.

A.S. "Hordan, thesaurizare, to hoard, treasure, store, lay or hide up;" (Som.) and this from A.S. Hyr-dan, custodire, to guard or keep. See HARD.
Up-Up

HOAR-HOUND, s. A plant. So called (Mina) because it is hoary, and of service against the bites of mad dogs or hounds.

A.S. Harahune, harhune.

HOARSE, ad. Harah, rough, of sound, -ly. of voice.

-HARS. A.S. Hars; D. Hars, harsak; Ger. Harsch, har; Sw. Hars; Dan. Hars. The Eng. word, (Wach), which alone retains r in the middle of it, seems to lead to Hraic, Arveich, formed from the L. Harsus. Sk. thinks the words all formed from the sound; asperitate enim sua rascodinem expiunt. Not improbably the same word as harsh, diff. written and app.

HOAX. See HOCUS-FOCUS.

HOB, s. Hob is, perhaps, (see HOBBLE.)

-HAIL. from A.S. Hoppa, to hop; app. -HAILED. to any irregular, uneven, and, thus, awkward, clumsy gait or motion; and then to—

An awkward, clumsy, clownish fellow.

Hob-nail,—perhaps, cob-nail,—or otherwise, a nail for a horse-shoe. See HOBBY.
Serenus refers to Ger. Hube, hufe, (Low L. Huka), fundus rusticus; whence Wach. deduces Hube, colonus; and Hube, or Hufe, he derives from A.S. Hwona, formare, fabricare. See HIVE.

HOBBLE, s. s. To move with a hopping, uneven, unsteady, irregular gait or step; to move or walk awkwardly, lamely; with pain and difficulty; to be, or cause to be, in difficulty, in perplexity; to perplex. And Hobble, the s. (met.)—

A difficulty, perplexity, or embarrassment.

A.S. Hoppa, potan; Ger. Hupfen; D. Hipfen, huppen, kuppelen, Aubbeien; Sw. Hoppa, subillire, to hop; and of this Hobble is a dim.

HOBBY, s. App. to a horse from its pace: -HOMER.—an easy, ambling pace, neither HOMER. trot nor gallop; in which the feet are carried unevenly and not straight out.

Hobby-horse,—a horse which any one takes pleasure, from the easiness of its pace, in continually riding on; and thus, a favourite horse; and (met.) a favourite object or pursuit.

Sterne coins the ad. and av. Hobby-horricol and Hobby-horrically, and seems, if not to have introduced, at least to have rendered popular this met. usage.

Hobblers, (Low L. Hobbellarti), soldiers so called, because they rode on hobbies.

HOE

Fr. Hobin; It. Ubino. Sk. derives from Dan. Hoppa, a mare. Serenus thinks that Hobby, and Dan. and Isl. Hoppa, have the same origin as Hobble, (qv.) via. A.S. Hoppa.

HOBBY, s. A kind of hawk.

Fr. Hobercaus or hobreaus, of uncertain etym. See Men.

HOB-GOBLIN. See GOBLIN.

Sk. says qd. Robgobline, from Robin Goodfellow, or from Oberon, terrostrum Demonum Rex, King of the Fairies. Jun. thinks Hobgoblin—proprie dictus empusae, (see EMPUSE), because they limped upon one foot rather than walked: deriving Hob (it must be presumed) from A.S. Hoppa, subillire.

HOB-NOB, i. e. Hab-nab, (qv.)

HOCK, or Hox, v. Dampier writes it HOCKS, v. Hocks. To cut or maim the -ER, s. hough, (qv.)

A.S. Hoh, the hough of a beast.

HOCUS-POCUS, s. "In all probability those common juggling words of hocus pocus, are nothing else but a corruption of hoc est corpus, by way of ridiculous imitation of the priests of the Church of Rome in their trick of Transubstantiation."—Tillotson.

"There were two personages feared in the North, whom we may mention here, as words from their names have become familiar to ourselves. One was Ochus Bochus, a magician and demon, the other was Necurus, a malign deity, who frequented the waters. It is probable (Mr. Turner adds) that we here see the origin of Hocus-pocus and Old Nick." (Hist. of Anglo-Saxons, Appendix to b. II. c. 3.) Unless, however, some usage of these words previous to the period assigned for their origin by Tillotson, can be produced, this coincidence of sound and application, however singular, must still be considered as accidental. And see Brand, Pop. Antiq. II. 416; Gray's Hudibras, pt. III. c. 3, Note on v. 712; where the conjecture of Tillotson is adopted. Pegge's account attributes the corruption of hoc est corpus into Hocus-pocus, to the ignorance of the Catholic priests themselves. Ihre thinks they may be words formed—temere et sine sensu. Malone considers the modern slang Hocus as derived from Hocus, and Archdeacon Nares agrees with him.

HOD, s. That which is heaved or raised; app. to a raised three-sided tub or trough, used by bricklayers for carrying mortar.

Perhaps Hoved, how'd, hod; past p. of Heaf-an, to heave.

HODDY-DOD, s. Examples sufficiently -DODDY. ancient, and various, have

-PEKE. not occurred to warrant even

-FOULE. a conjecture as to the origi-

HODMAN-DOD. nal meaning of these words.

Holland renders Cochlea—Hoddy-dods, or shell-snails, and these Bacon calls—Hodman-dods. In these words the hod may be hood, referring to the shell that covers them.

In various cases, it is plainly used as a term of contempt.

HODGE-PODGE. See HOTCH-POT.

HODIERN, ad. Of this day.

L. Hodia, i. e. hodie; hodiernus;

HOE, s. v. Evelyn writes the word Haugh.

To cut; to cut up, (sc. the surface, or any thing growing on the surface, of the ground.)

Fr. Houer; D. Houwen; Ger. Hauen; A.S. Hewu-ian; to hew, (qv.)

HOL

HOE. See HOCH.

HO-FUL,* ad. Prudent, careful, considerate.—Stapleton. Fortress of the Faith.

A.S. Ho-full, hoh-full, hog-full, prudent, considerate, careful, from A.S. Hog-on; D. Huoghen, to be careful or considerate. *Om. -LY.**

HOG, s. A hog (says Sk.) is a sheep two —GEREL. years old, or in the second year —GISH. of its age, perhaps from A.S. Hog-gishly. an, curare, observare; because at —LING, s. that time they need the greatest care. The same reason will more especially apply to the young of swine; if to the young only of swine the name were ever restricted.

HOGH,* or HOE, s. A high place.

"Spenser. Drayton.
Perhaps from A.S. Heah; D. Hoogh; Ger. Hooh; high.

HOGSHEAD, s. A measure of quantity; a vessel containing such measure.

D. Ockshood, oghshood, hockshoot; Dan. Ox-hood. Mins. in his first edition, asserts Ocks to be the name of a certain measure in Brabant, and of Ocks, this measure, and Howden, to hold, he composed Ockshood, qd. a vessel holding that measure. He had also remarked, that some thought Hogshead to be so called—a forma, from its form or make. In his second edition he has omitted all attempt at etym.

HOID, s. -EN, s. ad. App. as in Cot. to—
A rude, unfashioned, home-bred fellow; and to a romping, awkward, clownish, rustic girl.

Sk. says, agrestis rusticus, clownish, rustic, from Ger. Heyde, a heath, or country place, qd. an inhabitant of a country place. It was app. to males, though now restricted to females. Cot. renders Grue, "a sot, ass, goose-cap, hoydon." Bejaune,—"a rude, unfashioned, home-bred hoydon." Mr. Gifford, on B. Jonson, remarks that, from a passage in Tale of a Tub, "You mean to make a hoiden or a hare of me;" and several others which he had met with of a similar kind, he was induced to think that Hoiden was the ancient term for leveret; and that assuredly it was the name of some animal remarkable for the vivacity of its motions. Perhaps the same word as Hoid.

HOISE, or HOIST, v. Written Hause by Sir T. More. (See HALSE.) To raise or set up or aloft, to elevate, to heave or lift up.

Fr. Hausser; Sw. Hysa; Sc. Heis, which Riddiman, in his Glossary to Douglas, derives from Fr. Haut; or, perhaps, from A.S. Heaksian, ("a word," says Jamieson, "which I cannot find in any Lexicon.")

HOIT, or HOYT, v. To raise, to elevate, —ING. to elate; to be in high spirits; —-Y-TOITY. to throw or leap up or about, as in high spirits. We still use the expression, "He is in hoity-toity spirits."

Cot. says, in v. Mousache, "This would make him raise his hope or thoughts to a very high pitch;" and in v. Hausser, (to hoise,) he gives as an equivalent expression, "That would set him on the hoight," i. e. height.

HOLD, s. v. Formerly also written Halte. —ER. (See HALT, and To OWL.) Lit. and —ING. met.—To have or keep.

To hold, (subaud. in the hand,)—to gripe, to grasp, to catch, to seize, to clutch.

To hold or keep, (subaud. in motion,)—to continue, to pursue, to proceed, to persist.

HOL

To hold or keep, (subaud. from motion,)—to stop, to stay, to refrain or restrain, to desist; to have or keep fast, or fixed, or firm—to retain, to confine.

To hold within,—to contain.

To hold or keep from,—to detain.

To hold or keep up,—to maintain, to sustain, to support.

To hold or keep (in mind,)—to observe, to regard; to attend; to remember.

HOLD, s. "The hold of a ship, in which things are covered, or the covered part of a ship."—Tooke.

Sk. says, Sic dicitur contabulatio navis infans ubi penus navis conditur; either from the to hold, because it holds or contains the stores, &c. or, qd. the hole of a ship, the inmost cavity of the ship. Tooke,—the past p. of hal-as, to cover.

HOLE, s. -Y. See WHOLE.

HOLE, s. v. Some place covered over.

To the objection, "Cannot I drill a hole in the centre of this shilling? And then where will be the covering?" Tooke answers: "After you have so drilled it, break it diametrically; and then where will be the hole? Of the two pieces each will have a notch in it, but no hole will remain." To this may be added, that if each piece be set upright, with the notched side downwards, there will be a hole in each, formed by the perforated piece and the surface upon which it stands.

The v. formed upon the s.—To make, to enter, a hole.

A. S. Hole, hale, hol; Ger. D. & Sw. Hol; Dan. Hul; from A. S. Hollan, aholan, olare, excavare, fodere, to hollow, to excavate.—Sk. In the opinion of some, from Hal-as, tegere, to cover.—Lps. The Ibre thinks the Sw. might be formed from Ger. Huljan, (A. S. Helan.) to cover. Of this G. & A. S. v. Tooke considers it to be the past p. hol, mean—as above. See To HELL.

HOLEFUL,* ad. Perhaps holocene or wholesome.—Fabyan.

HOLIDAM. See HALIDAM.

HOLLA, v. s. To make or utter a loud

—LOW. (low-ed) noise, to shout aloud;

—LOWING. to call or cry aloud.

Probably from A. S. Ahlou-an, to low or bellow. See HALLOO.

HOLLAND, s. A linen, so called because orig. made in Holland. The chief manufacture of it is now in Ireland.

Hollands,—the spirit Geneva, or G. (qv.) made in Holland.

HOLLOW, v. s. ad. To excavate, to dig —LY. out the solid contents; and thus

—NESS. Hollow, the ad. in. (met.)—Unsubstantial, faithless.

A hollow sound,—as if issuing or proceeding from a hollow place.

A. S. Hol-lan, aholan, excavare, perfringere, to dig, to make hollow; Ger. & D. Hol-an; Sw. Holka; Dan. Haul.

HOLLY, s. The holly, or holm-tree.—HOLM. Som.

HOLM-TREE. A. S. Holegn, aquifolium, rusca sylvestris. Fr. Houx, is derived by Men. from Gr. ὄψις, sharp; L. Aquifolium. (By Voss.) from acutifolium; and for the same reason, viz. the sharpness, the prickliness of the leaves. Sk. suggests that the name hol-tree was app. from hol or hol, and eye, the edge, all edge, or sharpness.

Holm, app. both to the aquifolium and the sloe, Sk. thinks may be from A. S. Holm, (Dan. Holme,) a river island, because these trees flourish in moist and watery places. It is not improbably corrupted from helen, holm, and, by change of n into m, holm.

HOLLY-HOCK, or -OAK, s. The great mallow.

Rec, or hoo-lanf, is in A. S. the mallow; and Sk. thinks that holly is holty, i. e. large or great.

HOLCAUST, s. Cot. calls it—"A sacrifice killed and layed whole on the altar;" used met.

Fr. Holocautus; Sp. -o; It. Olocauto; L. Holocautum; Gr. Ὀλοκαυστον, because the whole was burned, from ολος, whole, and καυστος, burned, from καω, to burn.

HOLOUR, s. "And if that she be faire... Thou sayst that every holour wol hire have."—Chaucer.

Typ. says, Sax. a whore-monger. Sk. adds, hol, hol-whore, one who keeps a whore. Jun. from hol, a hole or cave, because such persons frequented such places for meeting.

HOLSTER, s. App. to—A case for pistols; to cover, to protect them.

Dan. Hjstler; Ger. Pistol-enkaster; Sw. hölster. A. S. Hroolstra, is a hiding-place; probably from hol-en, to cover, to hide. And hro derives Sw. Holster from hölja, to cover, to hide.

HOLT, s. "A rising ground or knoll covered with trees."—Tooke

Holt, Sk. says, denotes a grove, or a multitude of trees set or planted close or thick together. And Tooke asserts it to be the past p. of A. S. v. Hol-an, to cover. Seren, also refers to Sw. v. Hölja, to cover.

HOLY, ad. Holy is,—Sacred, sanctified, -LY, or hallowed, consecrated, devoted -INESS, to religion; free from sin, from spot or blemish, as a person or thing consecrated; pure, pious, religious.

Holi-day,—A. S. Halig-dag,—a day of rest.

A. S. Halig, halga; D. Heiligh; Ger. Heilig; Dan. Helig; Sw. Hai, from A. S. Halgian, halian, halan; ge-haligan, ge-hallian, gehalan, sanare, salvare, salvum facere, and, cons. sancire, sanctificare, consecrare; to heal, to save or make whole or safe, and, cons. to sanctify, to consecrate. See HEAL.—Up.

HOMAGE, v. s. "The vassal or tenant -ABLE, upon investiture did usually homage to his lord; openly and humbly kneeling, being ungirt, uncovered, and holding up his hands both together between those of the lord, who sat before him; and there professing, that 'he did become his man, from that day forth, of life, and limb, and earthly honour:' and then he received a kiss from his lord. Which ceremony was designated homagium, or manhood, by the feudists, from the stated form of words,—devenio vester homo."—Blackstone.

Fr. Homage; It. Omaggio; Sp. Omenaje; Low L. Homagium; Actus, vel ministerium hominis, from Fr. Homme, L. Homo, a man, serving-man, vassal. See Spek in v., and Aoz, term.

HOME, s. ad. A place of coming, assembling, dwelling together; the

-LESS, place where any one dwells or

-LY, inhabits; habitation, or resi-

-LING, s. ad. dence, or abode; and the av.

-LINESS, (met.) close upon, in contact

-WARD, with the dwelling or abode, sc. of our feelings or affections; our own hearts, our interests or concerns, our pursuits or aims.

Homely,—pertaining to home; domestic, private;—having the plainness and simplicity of home. And thus,—plain, simple, unadorned, unassuming.

Homeliness,—management or economy of home; plainness, simplicity; the familiar intercourse of home; familiarity.

Home is much used pref.

Home-speaking,—plain; direct to the purpose; reaching the object aimed at.

Home-spun,—(met.) plain, unpolished;

coarse, rude.

A. S. Hæm; Ger. Heim; D. Heym; Dan. Hjem;

Sw. Hem, from A. S. Hæm-an; Ger. Heimen, coire, cohabitare, to come together, to dwell together.

Wach. calls Ger. Heim, communis locus habitandi, a common place of dwelling, or a common dwelling-place. See HAM.

HOMICIDE, s. -AL. A slayer or a slaying, a destroyer or a destroying, of man.

Fr. Homicide; It. Omicida; Sp. Homocida; L.

Homici-dæ-tum, a manslaughter;—the

Eng. s. is app. to the agent and the act; from homo, a man, and caedere, to kill or slay.

HOMILY, s. A discourse or sermon to -IST, the people, upon sacred subjects.

-ETICAL. Homiletical,—"Such [virtues] as do more immediately concern the regulating of our conversations, or the right demeanour of ourselves considered as members of society; the due managing of the common affairs of life, according to the relations wherein we stand towards those whom we are to deal with: these are commonly called homiletical virtues."—Wilkins.

Fr. Homilie; It. Omelia; Sp. & L. Homilia;

Gr. Ὁμιλία, concio, sermo; sermo, sc. ad populum;

sermo, sc. de sacris.

HOMOGENE, s. ad. Being of the same -AL, kind or sort; having the same na-

-EUS, ture.—"B. Jonson. 'Bacon. 'H.

-y.† More. Boyle.

-EITY.† Fr. Homo-gène; Sp. genae; It. Omo-geneo;

Gr. Ὁμογενεῖς, ejusdem generis, of the same kind or sort, from ὁμος, the same, and γενεῖς, from γενεσθαι, to be or become, to be born.

HOMOLOGOUS, ad. Having the same opinion; agreeing, consenting.

Fr. Homologue; Gr. Ὁμολογος, from ὁμος, alike, the same, and λογος.

HOMONYMY, s. -OUS. App. to things having a similar or the same name, and thus, cons. equivocal, ambiguous.

C C

Fr. Homonymie; Gr. ὁμωνυμία, having the same name; from ὁμός, alike, the same, and ὄνομα, a name.

HOMO-TONOUS, ad. Employed by Cowper to denote—words of the same sound; words that rhyme.

Gr. ὁμοτονός; of the same tone.

HONE, s. A stone upon which edged tools are whetted.

Sk. has no doubt that Hæn, a stone, as well as Hænan, lapidary, was formerly in use; and Tooke, that Hone (petrified wood) is the past p. of Hænan, lapidescere, to become stone.

*HONE, v. To hone after a thing,—to seek any thing anxiously.—Burton.

Jun.—a word, familiar in Devonshire; from A. S. Hongian, hogian, to be anxious; to sigh or groan after.

HONEST, v. ad. To honest (in B. Jonson, -LY, and Wotton) is to honour, to confer honour or dignity; and the s. -ATION.* honesty is in old writers used as equivalent to—Honour, credit, reputation. In Chaucer, decency, good manners. And honest, to—Honourable, creditable, reputable. More usually,

Acting according or agreeably to promise or engagement or obligation, expressed or implied; faithful, trusty, or trustworthy, upright, virtuous; fair and open in dealings; open, frank.

On the usage in English, varying from the L. and Fr., Temple says, "Goodness is that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise, before their passions or their interest; and is properly the object of trust: in our language, it goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man: and honesty in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem to those who possess them."—W. Mountague.

Fr. Honesté; Sp. -o; It. Onesto; from L. Honestus, which Voss. thinks may be from the Gr. Oves, ovnis, juvo, prosum, or by the change of a long vowel into a short, from evos, merz, pretium, qui in honore est, is in pretio esse dicitur; Scheidius considers oves to have meant, primitively, tollo; and thus, honos, vel honor, dicitur id quod tollit ex humili loco in altum, extollitque homines; that which raises from a low to a high station, and exalts or elevates mankind. HONEY, s. v. -LESS. Honey (the produce of the bee) is used as a general term (lit. and met.) for—Sweetness. Also, as a term of fondness or affection.

A. S. Hunigh; D. & Ger. Hon-ig; Sw. -ung; Dan. -ning. In Mark i. 9, the Gothic version reads mitth; L. Mel; Gr. Μελι. Jun. derives—ab hymetto; Wach.—ab ovovoxev, vinum fundere, to pour forth wine. Ihre asserts, that it is wholly uncertain whence we have the word. Sk. believes it to have the same origin as Hive, (qv.) A. S. Hise, familia, qd. hismig, that is, victus familiaris seu domesticus; because stored for the food of families, or hives of bees.

HONOUR, v. s. To Honour,—to confer or -ABLE. bestow fame, credit, reputation; to raise, to elevate to

-ABLY. rank or dignity; to dignify;

-AR. rank or dignity; to dignify;

-ARY. to hold in reverence or veneration; to revere or venerate.

-ER. Honour, the s. is used as equivalent to—

-ING. Honour, the s. is used as equivalent to—

-LESS. Fame, reputation, glory; rank or dignity; nobleness; reverence or veneration.

-ANCE.* Fame, reputation, glory; rank or dignity; nobleness; reverence or veneration.

"What is this honour, other than a kind of history, or fame following actions of virtue, actions accompanied with difficulty or danger, and undertaken for the publick good."—Raleigh.

"The law of honour is a system of rules constructed by people of fashion, and calculated to facilitate their intercourse with one another, and for no other purpose."—Palry. *South.

Fr. Hon-neur; Sp. -or; It. Onore; L. Hænan.

See HONEST.

HOOD, v. s. A hood, is—a raised covering -LESS. —for the head; for the eyes (of a -WINK, v. hawk).

To hoodwink,—to cover the eyes with a hood; to cover the eyes; to blink or blind; and, cons., to deceive, to delude, to lead astray.

A. S. Hod; D. Hood; Ger. Hut; Dan. Hætt; which Sk. derives from the D. Hueten; Ger. Hueten, tegere, protegere, to cover, to protect.

(See HAT.) Hoved, hov'd, hood, past p. of have.

—Tooke. Un-

HOOD, ter. App. gen. to—the state, condition, degree, order, rank or quality, kind or sort.

Warton says, thy headless hood is for "thy headlessness;" hood is a termination denoting rank, as manhood, &c.

Sk.,—D. Hoyd; Ger. Hoyd; A. S. Hod, hade, conditio, as in knighthood, manhood, maidenhood, &c.

To the same purpose, Somner, Verstegan, &c. Wach., in his Germania, s. 6, writes upon the various applications of the Ger. Heit, which, he remarks, was a word (vocula) before it was—particula post-positive.

There seems no reason to suppose that this post-positive particle is any other word than ante, also written hade or head, something raised, as priesthood, knighthood, raised to be, or to the state or rank of, a priest, (heweder of holy church) of a knight; manhood, maidenhood or head, hood, raised to be or become to the state, rank, or condition,—of a man, from a youth or lad,—of a maiden, from a girl,—of a child, from an infant; and subsequently as above.

HOOF, or HOFF, s. -ED. The raised or heaved or hoven part of the foot.

A. S. Hof; D. Hof; Ger. Huf; Sw. Hof; Dan. Hov; which Jun. and others derive from the Gr. ὄνυξ. Tooke,—from Hove, the past p. of A. S. Heaf-an, to heave or raise; and "In the Byrd of Mankynde, written Hove. The house of an ant, the house of a horse, a calf's house."

HOOK, v. s. -ED. A hook,—Any thing crooked, bent, or curved so as to catch or hold; also to cut or reap with; a catch or snare.

To hook,—to catch or hold, to hale or draw with a hook, or, as with a hook; to catch or ensnare.

A. S. Hoce; D. Haeck, horeck; Ger. Hak; Sw. Hake; Dan. Hage; perhaps (Sk.) from L. Uern; not improbably from A.S. Hog-an, complicit, to hug; the D. have the v. Haech-en, unco figure, inuicare, aduncare, fibulare.—Kilian. Un-

HOOP, v. s. A hoop is that which keeps -ed together, confines, or surrounds, sc. -ing. the staves of a cask or barrel: app. gen. to any thing circular; formed with a resemblance to the hoop of a barrel.

To hoop,—to confine, bind, surround with a hoop; also, gen. to confine.

A.S. Hop: D. Hoep, hoepel. Jun.—by change of s into the aspirate, hoop is formed from coop, (qv.) to keep, keep in, or confine. In—(En-) Un-

HOOP, or WHOOP, v. s. -ing. To call with a loud voice to those who are at a distance. Huntsmen, especially, are said to hoop and hallow, when they fill the woods and valleys with their shouts, to cheer the dogs, to rouse the game, or to give a warning to their comrades.

Fr. Hopper; Jun., in his Goth. Gloss. (v. Wop-pen, clamare,) exp. as above. Sk. thinks the Ho & Eng. are formed from the sound. See Hoer, and WHOOP.

HOOT, v. s. -ing. As the Fr. —“To shout, exclaim, cry out, make hue and cry.” Scot. also gives, “Hou, hou, hou, hootings or whoopings; voices wherewith swine are scared, or infamous old women disgraced.” Fr. Hoer; formed (Sk. and Lye) from the sound.

HOOVE. See HOVE.

HOP, v. s. A plant.

D. Hoppe; Ger. Hopfen; Fr. Houblon; from hopen, salire, (Kilian.) quod saliat, sive ascendat arbor; because it mounts or ascends trees. Sk. is derivative for L. Lupulus; and Men. in v. Houblon.

HOP, v. s. “To hop, skip, leap, or dance, to leap or skip for joy.”—Som.

HOPE, v. s. “To hope (says Mr. Tyrw.) in CHASTITY. signifies exactly the same as to dance, though with us it has acquired a ludicrous sense; and the term. stire, or ster, was used to denote a female, like trix in Latin.” “A male hopper, or dancer, was called an hoppetere.”

D. Hup-pen, pelen; Ger. -fen; Sw. Hop-pa; per. “A.S. Hoppian, salire, saltare, saltum.”—Som.

HOPE, v. s. To look out or after, to expect, (sc. with open, out--FULLY. stretched eyes;) to expect, sub. FULLNESS. with desire, with anticipation of,

-LESS. with trust or confidence in, -LESSLY. some good.

HOPE, v. s. “Hope is that pleasure in the mind, which every one finds in himself upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him.”—Locke.

A.S. Hop-ian; D. Hopen; Ger. Hofen; Dan. hopen; in A.S. also written Oplan, without the aspirate, and is probably from Open-ian, ypnon; D. Oopen; Ger. Oopen, aperire; Dan. Aaben, aperire, to open, to expand, sub. the eyes; and, sc. to expect, to look out or after, to stare after, sc. with eagerness, with desire, with anticipation of some good. In Dan. Aaben is open, and hopen is hope. In like manner to gape, (qv.) (A.S. Goppian) has been explained, to open, sub.

the mouth, as young birds, eagerly for food; and thus, to crave, to desire or covet eagerly, &c. In Chaucer, “Our maniple I hope he wol be ded.” Shak., “I cannot hope, Caesar and Anthony shall well greet together.” And Ford, “How prosper you in love? Ros. As still I hoped.—My lord, you are undone.” To hope, is merely to look for, to expect. And Mr. Tyrw. says, it signifies the mere expectation of a future event, whether good or evil, as Ελπιω, Gr. and Spero, L. often do. Ritson (Yvonne and Gawain) says,—suppose, fear, am afraid. Un-

HOPPER, s. The wooden trough in a mill, in which the corn is placed in order to be ground: the use of which is well described by Arbuthnot. “Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill; their maw is the hopper, which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach, where it is ground by two strong muscles, in which action they are assisted by small stones, which they swallow for the purpose.”

Jun.—from Hopp, subaltare, because it is always in motion. Called by the French Trémie, or trémuge d'un moulin.

HORAL, ad. -ARY. Pertaining to an hour; lasting or continuing for an hour.

L. Hora; Gr. Ὥρα, tempus, for opa; and this from ὀπορ, terminus; opa signifying a definite, fixed, or established point or period of time. See Hous.

HORDE, s. A collection or multitude of people.

This word is said to have been introduced from Tartary, but appears to be merely a cons. usage of Hoard, to store up, to accumulate, to collect.

HORE, -DOM. See WHORE.

HORIZON, s. The line which bounds or -T-AL. terminates, sc. the sight, the view.

-ALLY. It. Orizzonte; Sp. Horizonte; Fr. & L. Horizon; Gr. Ὠρίζων, from ὀρίζω, definire, terminare, to define, bound, terminate, or limit.

HORN, v. s. The horn of an animal—that

-ER. which riseth, projecteth, is pro-

-Y. minent or eminent, sc. from its

-IFTY, v. head.

-LESS. A horn, to blow or sound, to drink

-LET. out of, because first made of the

-ING. horn of an animal.

-ISH.† Horn,—the matter or substance of which horns consist. Also app. to—

Any thing shaped like a horn.

To horn, met.—to plant or bestow horns.

Hornify, in Beau. & F. coined for the occasion.—Shak. Gregory. †Sandsy.

Go. Horn; A.S. Ger. Sw. & Dan. Horn;

D. Horen, horn; usually derived from the L.

Cornu, (Co-orn-u.) But Wach. says that—fastigium vel summitas cuiuscunque rei, the top or summit, from Her, (A.S. Heah.) high, is the true meaning of the word, and the source of all its usages. Dis- Un-

HORN-BEAM, s. A plant.

Perhaps (Sk.) so called—a corned durite, from its horny hardness.

HORNET, s. An insect. Because (Sk.)

it bears or carries horns in its head.

App. met. to those who sting like hornets.

A.S. Hyrrnet.

HORO-LOGE, s. -LOGY. That which tells the hour; a dial, clock, watch, timepiece.

Fr. Horologe; It. Orologio; L. Horologium; Gr. ὁρολογιον, from ὥρα, an hour, and λογ-ειν, to tell.

HORO-METRY, s. The measurement of hours.—Brown.

Gr. ὥρα, an hour, and μετρεῖν, to measure.

HORO-SCOPE, s. App. as the—Fr. -ER. "Horoscope, the horoscope, or as-y. cendant of a nativity; a diligent observation of the just time wherein one was born."—Colt.

Gr. ὁροσκοπεῖν, from ὥρα, an hour, and σκοπεῖν, videre, observe, to see, to observe.

HOROWE, ad. Foul.—Chaucer.

Lye says, sordidus, squalidus, from Hor, mucor. See HOAA.

HORRENT, ad. Horrent,—rising out,

-IBLE. standing out, pointing out, sub.

-IBLY. as bristles.

-IBENESS. Horrible, cons. terrible,—as an

-ID. animal having its hair or

-IDLY. bristles risen or erect with

-IDNESS. rage; dreadful, frightful, fear-

-IFIC. ful, shocking.

-OUR. Horrid,—rough or rugged; and, cons. dreadful, frightful.

Horror,—app. to the sensation of the hair rising, the flesh shuddering; cons.—dread, terrour, affright, loathing, detestation; to that which causes such sensations; i. e. horribleness or horridness. "All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and upon their flight, the parts are (in some degree) destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror."—Bacon. **Milton*.

Fr. & Sp. Horrible; Fr. -ide; Sp. -ido; It. Orribile, -do; L. Horribilis, horridus, from horre, to rise, to stand on end, as hair, bristles, &c.; Latinum horreo, notonem eandem (says Scheidius) propriam habet, quæ in cognatis orior, exorior, admodum manifesta est, et Belgarum verbis, Opulæm, oprixen, reddi potest; and he derives from Gr. Ooeiv, excitare, to rouse, or to raise. Ab- Chaucer,—Horrible, Fr.

HORSE, v. s. An animal. To horse, (ac-
-LY. for a flogging) is perhaps,—to hoise
-Y. or hoist.

Horse is much used pref.; frequently to denote,—large, gross, coarse, strong.

A. S. Hors. Belgis olim (Som.) ors, horso, or hors; hoddle vero, r per metathesin transposito ros. Ger. Ross; Sw. Oers, hors. In Dan. Hest; and Fr. Rosse; It. Rossa; Sp. Rosin; a horse of an inferior kind. Som. considers A. S. Hors to mean cornipes, that which hath a hard or hors hoof. Wach. derives Ross, from Ger. e. Reiten, veht. (A. S. Rid-an, rit-an, to ride.) And hors, he thinks, may be the same word as ross (per metathesin ors), or so called from its industry and speed. That hors in A. S. had such signification, he infers from the compound horstic, which Som. interprets—gnaviter, diligenter,—diligently, earnestly. The animal may not improbably be so called (Horse) from its obedience and tractableness: A. S. Hyre-lan, to obey.—See Tooke, 8vo. ed. Un-

HORTATION, s. Encouragement, ad-
-IVE. monition, advice, persuasion.

-ORY. L. Hort-or, -atus. The ancient Romans

(Voss.) wrote it Hort-or; and Hortior, he conceives to be from Gr. Optiv-er, faciliere, to incite, to encourage, or from op-sui, essetare.

HORTI-CULTURE, s. The tillage of -TURAL. gardens; or of such plants

-TURALIST. as are usually grown or cul-
-IST. tivated in gardens.

HORTENSIAL, * Dodsley writes Horticultural;

Horticulturalist.

Hortus siccus,—(lit.) a dry garden; a collection of dried plants.

*† Evelyn. † Boyle.

L. Hortus, a garden, and Cultura, from Colere, cultum, to till.

HORT-YARD, s. Now written Orchard, (qv.) And app. to—A yard or garden for fruit trees.—Holland. North.

A. S. Origeard, orcegard, orceard, orceyrd. Of these, Jun. thinks Origeard the most ancient, and that it is formed from Worceard, that is, Wyrigeard, or a yard, or place prepared for worts or herbs.

HOSANNA, s. The word hosanna is contracted of ἁ γένηται, Sacer ὅς, Save, I beseech thee. A form of acclamation, which the Jews were wont to use in their feasts of tabernacles.—Hammond. Gr. ὁσαννα.

HOSE, s. The breeches, the stockings.

-IER. Pipes of engines or other vessels, to
-IERY. convey the water or other liquid, are called hose.

A. S. & D. Hosa; Dan. Hose; Ger. Hoos; which Wach. derives from Ger. Hut-en, (i. e. A. S. Hytan, to hide,) to cover; app. to various parts of the clothes or raiment, because covering different parts of the body: the breech, thighs, legs, feet.

HOSPITABLE, ad. Hospitable,—re-

-ABLY. ceiving and entertaining stran-

-ABLENESS. gers; liberal, kind, to strangers.

-AL, ad. s. to visitors.

-ALITY. Hospital,—a place for the re-

Fr. Hospitable; It. Ospitale, -edale, or ospizio; Sp. Hospedable; L. Hospitalis, from Hospes, which Voss. thinks he can discover in Hestia, (it changed into p.) (See Host, and HOSTILE.) Hospes was app. to a stranger, received and entertained in the house. In- Un-

HOST, s. v. One who receives and enter-

-ESS. tains a stranger, guest, visitor; an

-LESS. innkeeper, landlord of an inn.

-EL. To host,—to dwell or abide, as a

-ELER. stranger, guest, or visitor; to re-

-ELRY. ceive and entertain one.

-RY. Fr. Hoste, or ôte; It. Oste; Sp. Hosped, from L. Hospes. (See HOSPITABLE.) Used writs—Hospice and hospetes, i. e. host and habitor.

HOST, s. App. to.—The enemy, assem--AGE. bled; assembled in battle array, in
-ING. battalions; then gen. to battalions, an army, any large assemblage, or collected body.

Fr. Hoste; It. Oste; Sp. Huete; Low L. Hosta, which Wach. labours to show is from Host, equus;

Sw. Host; Dan. Hoste; Isl. Host; app. orig. to horse-soldiers, then, gen. to an army of horse and foot:—Equitatus and exercitus, equitatio and expeditio—were, he observes, used by the writers of the middle ages as synonymous. For the various feudal applications of the Low L. Hostis, see Du Cange. Sk. says, that Host is,—aliquidum de-lexo sensu, from the L. Hostis. See HOSTILE.

HOST, s. -IE. A sacrifice; a sacrifice of the Mass in the ceremonies of the Church of Rome.

Fr. Hostie; Sp. & L. -a; It. Ostia. Servius and Isidorus approve the etym. of Ovid:—Hostibus a victu hostia nomen habet. Festus—from ancient hostire, sive ferire, to strike.

HOSTAGE, s. -ER. Any person or thing delivered to another person to be kept in pledge or security for the performance of certain stipulations or conditions.

Fr. Hostage; It. Ostaggio; Low L. Hostagius. The etym. are various. From Hospes, qd. hospitium; or from Obtes, qd. obstridagium; or from Hostia, quia obides ab hostibus exiguntur. (See M. Foss. de Vitulis, lib. III. c. 14.) The usages of Obstridagium by Entropius and Ammanian, quoted by Foss. give some plausibility to his decision, that Fr. Hostage, or ostage, is, Kara στυχωνν, as obstridag.

HOSTILE, ad. Inimical, unfriendly; like, -ILITY. or of or pertaining to, a foe or -ILLEMENT. an enemy; adverse.

Fr. Hostile; It. Ostile; Sp. Hostil; L. Hostilis, from L. Hostis, a stranger, a foreigner; and as Fr. Foris, from L. Foris, and Gr. Ερμαος, externus, from Ερμα, externum, so, from this same Ostium, Hostis, and Voss derive Hostis, a foreigner, one (hostis) out of doors; and, cons. an enemy. Un-

HOST, ad. -LY. Opposed to—Cold. (Met.) Fervent, ardent, inflamed; fiery, violent, vehement; animated to excess, (subaud.) with desire; and, thus, lustful.

Dan. Host; A.S. Host, hat; the past p. of Hæst, calefacere. See To HEAT.

HOTCH-POT, or HODGE-PODGE, s. A mixture of various things shaken together in the same pot.—Tyrw. Perhaps Hash'd or hatch't.

Fr. Hotch-pot; D. Hutsopot. Kilian says, "so called, a concutendo, from Hutsen, or Hutselen, to shake, (Eng. Hustle,) because the meats cut to pieces and boiled in their own liquor, are shaken and tossed and turned about by the cook."

HOVE, s. To heave, or be heaved or raised aloft, sc. suspended; to be or remain in suspense; to remain, to stay, to abide. So used by Chaucer, Gower, Grafton, Spenser.

Also, To heave, rise, or swell. "Those excrescences be like unto bladders puffed up and hoveed with wind. . . The earth also swellth and hoveeth as it were with a leaven."—Holland.

Howe is past tense and past p. of the v. To heave, and upon is the s. To hove is formed.

NOVEL, s. v. A small raised building. T. H. (in Sk.) derives from A. S. Hove, a house. T. H. considers it to be the dim. of Hove, (whence also probably the Hove of T. H.) the past p. of Hove.

HOVER, v. s. To raise or rise aloft, to -LY. stay or remain aloft or over, (subaud. -LY. in flight; fluttering;) to be or remain in suspense; to keep or move near or about, sc. as if to pounce upon—like a bird of prey.

Hoverly,—superficially, without resting or staying.—Udal.

Sk. thinks may be either from A. S. Heafian, to heave, to raise, to elevate; or from the v. To cover. There is little doubt that hover (without the aspirate—Over, qv.) is from the past tense hove, of the v. To heave.

HOUGH, v. s. To hough or hock the ham-strings, is—to cut, to hew the ham-strings; and the hough, or hack, the part cut or howed; gen.—to cut, hew, or hoe. (See HOE.) "Thou shalt hough they horses."—Bible, 1551. "He bare off the blows as well as he could, untill they hought him, that he fell to the ground."—North, Plutarch.

A. S. Hoh, poples, the ham of one's leg behind the knee; it, Sufrago, the hough of a beast.—Som.

HOUGH, v. i. e. to hawk or haw, (qv.)

HOUND, v. s. To hunt, to pursue or cause to pursue; to set, to rush, to dash on, in chase of, in attack upon, the game, the prey.

Go. Hunds; A. S. & Dan. Hund; D. Hond; Ger. & Sw. Hund. From A. S. Huntian, hent-an, to pursue, to search after. Wach. objects that the name was app. gen. to all dogs, not merely to hunting dogs; and would derive the v. from the s. Sk. doubts.

HOURLY, ad. -LY. A determinate portion of time; certain fixed or determinate portions of time, into which the day is divided; into which the surface of a dial or timepiece is divided.

Hours,—as used by Bale and Spenser, (see Heures in Cot. and Horæ Canonice in Du Cange,) prayers or devotions at stated hours; also a book of prayers or devotions.

Fr. Heures; It. Sp. & L. Hora. See HORAL.

HOUSE, v. s. Any thing framed or built; -HOLD, s. sc. for covering, shelter, or protection, dwelling or abiding, for -ING. a place of residence; also app. to—the family so dwelling, or who have so dwelt; to persons assembling under one roof; to the mode or manner of living.

To house,—to build, raise or erect a house; to cover, shelter, or protect; to dwell, abide, or reside; to cause to shelter, or take shelter, to drive to shelter.

House-wife,—see HUS-WIFE.

Sw. & A. S. Hus; D. Huys; Ger. Haus; Dan. Hus. Wach. decides for Ger. Hutten, tegere, (i. e. A. S. Hid-an, to hide,) to conceal, to cover. From A. S. Hiwan, formare, fabricare, was formed A. S. Hise, a house, and Hwisece, familia, a family or household; and it is not improbable, that Hus, a house, had the same origin. Out- Un

HOUSE, s. v. -ING. The s. app. to—The coverings of a horse.

HUC

HOUSEL, * v. s. -ING. To administer the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

*Common in old writers.

A. S. Husel, the Eucharist or Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, perhaps from Hostia. Huslian, to administer or give the communion, to housele.—Som. Jun. derives from Go. Husel, a victim, a sacrifice, (s. abjecto.) Sk. prefers Hostiola to Som.'s Hostia. Un—

HOW, av. App. to—The form or fashion
-BE-IT. in which; extended to, the man-

-SO. state or condition,—the degree,
-SO-EVER. quality, quantity, number.

-D'YE. A. S. Hw; D. Hoe; Ger. Wie; perhaps from A. S. Hwou, hise, hiseu, from Hisean, hiowan, to form or frame; and thus, meaning the form or fashion, the hse. See WHO.

HOWL, v. s. -ING. The s. app. part. to—The sound, or noise, or cry, of certain animals, esp. the dog and wolf.

The v.—To utter the cry or noise of, or similar to, that of, a dog or wolf; of a wild beast; cons.—of distress, discontent, lamentation or bewailing.

The A. S. Giellan; D. Huglen; Ger. Heulen; like L. Ululare; Fr. Hurler; It. Ululare, urlare; Sp. Aular; to howl, to yell. Be—

HOWLET, or OWLET, s. The dim. of Owl, (qv.) so called, (Jun.) a feral querulous vocis gemitu.

HOWVE, * s. i. e. His hood;—hood and cap being equally coverings for the head: to set a man's howve, is the same as to set his cap.—Tyrw. A similar explanation is given by Tooke, who forms Howes from Hoved, how'd, the past p. of the v. To heave.

HOX. See HOCK.

HOY, s. -MAN. Pegge (Anecdotes of the English Language) suggests that "the little trading vessel, termed a hoy, may have received its name from stopping at different small places in its voyage, to take in goods or passengers, when called to or hailed from the shore." See HO.

Fr. Hous; Men.—the same word as D. Hulcks; Eng. Hulk, (qv.)

HUBBUB, s. (Also written Whoobub.) Probably formed from the repetition of Hoop or Whoop; qd. Hoop-hoop, hoob-hoob, hubbub. See HOOR.

HUCK, * v. "After much base hucking,
-STER, v. s. and rising by little and little,
-STERER. one while hafting and wran--STERAGE. gling, &c."—Holland, Liv.
-ING.† Hales. †Holland.

Jun. from D. Hoecker, a retailer, a victualler; manifestly from Hoeck or Haech, a hook, because they endeavour to hook or draw in strangers.—Huck is sometimes considered as connected with Fr. Harceler. It is most probably from the same root as Haucker, (qv.) and also Auction. See TO HAWK, and TO HIGGLE.

HUG

HUCKLE, s. The hip-bone or joint of the hip.

The Huckle-bone, coxa, coxendix, the hip, or joint of the hip; perhaps (Sk.) from the D. Hock-en; Ger. Hocken, desidero, to sit down, (in So. Huka.) And Wach. thinks that these may be from Hock, a hook or corner. Perhaps,—Hug-la. See HUG.

HUD, * pt. i. e. Hooded, covered as with hoods.—North.

HUDDLE, v. s. To hide or cover up in a heap, a confused heap; to put or throw together in confusion, in haste or a hurry; to put or throw on in confusion.
Perhaps a dim. of Hud or Hood.

HUE, s. -ED. (Formerly written Hew.) The complexion or countenance; the colour.

Probably the same word as Hew, (qv.) to hew or fashion, extended in its application as the A. S. Hwe, effigies, color; from the form, frame, or figure, the feature, to—the general appearance or representation.

HUE, v. -ER. Fr. Huer, to hoot, about, exclaim, cry out, make hue and cry.—Col.

HUFF, v. s. To heave or raise; to swell; -ER. to inflate, to puff out; to bluster.
-ING. "The said wind within the earth, able to huff up the ground, was not of power sufficient to breake forth and make issue."—Holland, Plinie.

Huff, the s. Sk. thinks, may be from A. S. Heof-an, elevatus, i. e. heaved, raised. And Teah considers it to be formed from Hose, (qv.)

HUG, v. s. To embrace or surround; to -ING. embrace or clasp, closely, affection-
-GLE. ately, fondly; to fondle, to treat or indulge with fondness; with the fondness of self-approbation or applause.

"My soule hogys or lofys God."—MS. Bennet, in Lewis.

Sk. inollines to A. S. Hog-ian, sapire, to hedge, qd. brachia, tanquam sepe, collum circumdare; to surround or embrace the neck with the arms, as if with a hedge.

HUGE, ad. Large, bulky; great to ex-
-LY. cess; immoderate.

-NESS. **Skellon*. Byrom. †Phaer.

-OUS.* Roquesfort has "Ahuque, ahouye; emmen, grand; ingens; en Angl. Huge." Jun. says that Huge may be from Eng. Hip, or D. Hoeg; these words having in each language respectively the force of augmenting in comparison. More probably Go. Aus-an; Ger. Auchen, to ch, to enlarge.

HUGGER-MUGGER, s. The meaning may be—Confusedly and dirtily, and, therefore, thrown out of sight; cons. concealedly, covertly, secretly, privily.

This is the common way of writing this word from Udal to the present time. Sir T. More is said to have written it Hoker-moker; others write Hucker-mucker, and Ascham, Hudder-mother. (See MUCKER.) No probable etym. has yet been given. The Sc. (see Jamieson) have Hudge-mudge, hugrie-mugrie, and to hugger-mugger. Hugrie-mugrie, Dr. Jamieson interprets, "in a confused state, disorderly;" and similar to this is the usage of Eng. in vulgar speech at the present time. The reading of Ascham (though single) suggests the conjecture, that these words, however written, are formed from hood or head, and mud; qd. hud-mud, the time. huddle-muddle, hudder-mudder, hugger-mugger.

HUISHER, s. Fr. Huissier, an usher, (qv.)

HUKE, s. A hood or mantle.

**Stelton. Bacon.*

Low L. Hues; Fr. Hague, which Cot. calls "a Dutch mantle, or Dutch woman's mantle;" to the same purport is Sk., who derives the Eng. and Fr. from D. Huycke. And Kilian, dicitur Huycke, qd. hoider, & hoiden i. A. tuendo, sicut toga à tegendo. From Men. and Du Cange it appears not to have been confined to women.

HULFERE, s. A tree that retains the beauty or fairness of its leaves for the whole year. The holly.

**Chaucer. Holland.*

Sk. suggests, either from Eng. Hold, and A. S. Her, long, far or long, a plant that lasts long; or hold fair.

HULK, s. The hull or hold of a ship; a ship or vessel of large hull or hold; and, then, a ship of bulk or burden. Any thing bulky or burdensome.

The hulks, — vessels of large hulls, or holds, for the confinement of convicts.

Sv. Holk; D. Hulcke; Fr. Henz and hulque, hulque or oulique; It. & Low L. Hulca; L. Holca; Sk. Olan, noctis operaria, from hla-civ, trahere, to draw — Men. But Ikre and Seren derive from Sv. Holka, or hulka, to hollow, to excavate; the former observes, that the first vessels of the Bothian nations were large trunks of trees hollowed out; holka (Ikre) from hol, caverna, and ka, from Go. Huljan, (hul-te-an.) tegere, to cover; thus tracing it to the same source as hul, (qv.)

HULK, v. App. cons.—to hollow out, to disembowel, to eviscerate. (See HULK, ante.) "I could hulk your grace, and hang you up cross-leg'd."—Beau. & F.

HULL, v. s. The hull, of a nut, &c.—that by which the nut is covered. Hull of a ship,—that part which is covered in the water.

To hull—"A ship is said to hull, when she is dismasted, and only her hull, or hulk, is left at the direction and mercy of the waves."—Stevens. Cons.—to float or swim, as carried or driven by wind or water.

To hull, is also to take out of, or take off, the hull or covering; as, to hull peas.

Hull, s. is the past p. of A. S. v. Hel-an, tegere, (to cover; Go. Hul-jan, Ger. -len.) And upon this past p. the e is formed. See Tooke; and see Henz, and To HULL.

HULSTRED, ad. Hidden. — Tyrw. Probably of the same origin as hull, (qv.)

**Chaucer.*

A. S. Hoolstra, latetra, a lurking or hiding place.

HUM, v. s. To hum is app. to the noise of bees, and to any similar sound—

-Hum, v. that of waters;—a hoaming sea,

-Hum-er. In Dryden, seems to be—a humming, hoom-ing sea; equivalent to a booming sea. Modern editions read—foaming.

To hum, was formerly at public places a mode of expressing approbation or applause; and being hence extended to flattery, to cajolery,—to hum is, cons.—

To cajole; to trick or delude by flattery, soothing, or coaxing. Hence also humbug. See Bug.

D. Hommelen; Ger. Hummen. Formed from the sound. See HOAMING.

HUMAN, ad. Manly; having the nature

-ANE. or qualities of man; having

-ANELY. the feelings proper to or be-

-ANLY. coming man; feeling for man;

-ANIST. compassionate, benevolent;

-ANITY. kind; having kindness of

HUMMING, s. Hum, (Gifford,) I have always understood to be an infusion of spirits in ale or beer. (Note on B. Jonson.)

It may have been so called from the buzzing, humming noise, which brisk liquors will make when poured or drawn.

HUMMOCK, s. A word common among our voyagers, and by which they appear to mean—A mound, or hillock.

HUMOUR, s. v. The healthy or unhealthy -OURIST, or temperament or disposition of the body was supposed to depend upon four principal humours; and the word was early -OUSLY. app. (met.) to the temper- -OUSNESS. -SOME. -SOMELY. -ORAL.* it appears to have been further extended in an extravagant degree to the whims or peculiarities of the temper or disposition. See the Induction to Every Man out of his Humour; also, Every Man in his Humour, Act iii. And see Nares.

Humour, is—lit. moisture. Humourous, in Shak. (the humorous night) and B. Jonson (the humorous ayre), (and also in Chapman and Drayton, quoted by Steevens in his note on Shak.), as we now use humid; also, as humoursome.

Humour is app. emph. to a diseased state in the quantity or quality of humours in the body. Met.—the temperament, temper, or disposition of mind, general or particular; the peculiar whim, caprice, or fancy.

"We have more originals, and more that appear what they are; we have more humour, because every man follows his own, and takes a pleasure, perhaps a pride, to shew it."—Sir W. Temple. **Wiseman.*

HUMP, s. App. to—A lump or bump -ED. planted or fixed upon the back. -BACK, s. See HUNCH.

Perhaps from the A. S. Impan, inserere, implantare, to implant, to ingraft; but no very ancient examples of the word have occurred, nor is it to be found in our old lexicographers.

HUNCH, v. s. -BACKED. To hunch appears to mean, — to press, squeeze, or push against.

A hunch, a bunch,—a lump or bump occasioned by pressure; a bump or thump.

A hunch of bread,—a piece of bread.—Grasse. A good big slice, or lump, of bread or meat.—Moor.

Hunch-back'd, (Sk.) gibbous, from Ger. Hocker, gibbus; D. Hucken, in terram desidere, to sit down upon the ground; huck-schouderen, hume-ros contrabere; to contract the shoulders. To hunch, he derives from the Ger. Huscher, a blow of the fist.

HUNDRED, s. ad. Ten times ten, the -OR. fingers of the hand ten times -TH. repeated.

-FOLD. D. Hondred; Ger. Hund-ert; Sw. hundra. "It is in the highest degree probable (says Tooke) that all numeration was orig. performed by the fingers, the actual resort of the ignorant; for the number of the fingers is still the utmost extent of numeration. The hands doubled, closed, shut in—include and conclude all number; and might therefore well be denominated ten or ten," (i.e. closed, from the A. S. v. Tyn-an, to inclose. See TEV.) And Wach. conjectures that Go. and A. S. Hund, is no other word than hand, manus, in many dialects written hand; and that in numeration it was orig. used to signify ten; he further observes that our forefathers numerated not only units, but decades, by the fingers, and that hence And became app. to decies decem, or ten times ten: i.e. it may be added, to the number denoted by the fingers of the hand ten times closed. In the A. S. notation, it is evident, And was not always app. to 100; for instance, 70 was expressed by And seofontig, which, if we connect the interpretations of Tooke and Wach., would be the hand, or fingers of the hand, seven times closed; 80, And eahatig, or the hand eight times closed; and in this manner they proceeded to 120, And twelftig, or the hand twelve times closed. The term. eri, red, rude, rade, Wach. supposes to be rat, numerus, from Ger. Rat-en, (in A. S. Rad-an) to count, to calculate; and thus, Andert wif is, qd. numerus centenarius; or rather, consistently with his own etym., the number denoted by the hand, or fingers of the hand ten times counted. Jun. traces and explains And, and the A. S. manner of using it, diff. A. S. Tyn, or 10, is in Go. Taihus, and 100, or 10 times 10, taihusai-hund, or taihusai-hund; and he supposes that the cause of this reduplication not being observed, the terminating syllable And became separately written, thus—taihusai hund, or taihusai hund; and that the Anglo-Saxons, misled by this corrupt manner of writing, pref. And, veluti ex super-vacuo, to their higher cardinal numbers, and even denominated 100, And seontig, i.e. And ten times. According to this interpretation, the superfluous And became in time alone retained, and the significant (seontig) discarded.

HUNGER, v. s. (Anciently Honger.) Is -LY, ad. av. in Eng. (gen.)—

-GRY. To seek for or covet, to seek -GRI-LY. anxiously after, to desire ca- -OUSNESS.* gerly; (particularly) to desire, or feel a desire, to eat; to feel the pain arising from want of food.

"Hunger is only a warning of the vessels being in such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment."—Arbutnot.

* Udal.

Go. Huggryen; A. S. Hun-grian; Ger. hun-; Sw. gra; Dan. grer; D. Hongerem, which, luse thinks, meant desiderare, to desire, to seek for, or covet, and subseq. esurire, to desire to eat, to seek for or covet food.

HUNKS, s. One who pursues or hunts after; avariciously, miserly, sordidly; and, thus, a miserly sordid fellow.

"Hunks, a mere hunks, sordidus, deprensus. No one (Lye adds) can doubt, that it has descended from the Islandic Hunskur, sordidus." Drant writes Hunts, which is probably intended for the same word, and if so, it is from hent-an, (hunt-ian, hunt-ic-an), persequi, to pursue, to follow; and will mean—as above explained.

HUNT, v. s. To search or seek after, to -ER. pursue, to follow, to chase; to
 -ING. cause to follow or chase.
 -LESS. Hunt, the s. is not only app. to -MAN. the pursuit or chase, but to that -MANSHIP. which, to him who, pursues or takes or is taken.

To hunt counter, retro vestigia legere, (Coles, quoted by Nares.)—B. Jonson.

To hunt at force, i. e. with dogs, and not with bow and arrow, or gun.—B. Jonson.

To hunt change, to take a fresh scent and follow another chase.—Gifford and Walley on B. Jonson.

The hunt's-up, i. e. the hunt is up; the hour to rise for the hunt; a song to awake; a morning song.

A. S. Hunt-ian, venari, from hent-an, perquirere, persequi, persequi, assequi, to make diligent search, to prosecute, to pursue, to attain.—Som.

HUR, v. "R is the dog's letter, and hurth in the sound."—B. Jonson.

HURDLE, s. -ED. App. to—A kind of fence wrought or wreathed of osiers or small sticks.

Used also for the conveyance of criminals. "He was layde vpon an hardyll, thus drawn to Tyborne."—Fabian.

D. Harde; Ger. Hurd; from hirt-en, servare, custodire, to keep or guard.—Wack. A dim. of Hyrd, the past p. of A. S. Hyrd-an, to guard or keep.—Tooke.

HURDS, s. "A. S. Heord-as, stupae, har-hards, the refuse of flax or hemp; that which is beaten out from either in the dressing."—Som. D. Heerde, herde. Fibra har.—Kilian. *Holland.

HURL, v. s. Or Whirl, (qv.)

-ER. To throw or cast, to dash; to throw -ING. or cast with force or violence; to
 -RAY. roll or rush along.

Hurl, the s.—revolution; cons.—stir, tumult, or commotion.

D. Wer-velen; Ger. ben; A. S. Warian, gymsen, circumire, convertere se; to go around, to turn itself round, to move, to throw with a revolving or rotatory motion. See HURGLE.

HURLY, s. A great stir or commotion;
 -BURLY. a boisterous tumult or con-
 -BURLIED. fusion.

Much has been written upon these words. (See the commentators on Shak's Hen. IV. pt. 2, and Chamber's Gloss. to Lindsay.) Hurly, Sk. thinks, may be from To whirl: it is probably no other than hurl, in its cons. usage of stir, commotion, tumult; and hurly, (qv.) big and boisterous. The editor of Men. considers Fr. Hurlubrelu, to be derived from the sound. He interprets it, brusquement, inconsiderément; rashly, inconsiderately.

HURRICANE, s. -CANO. "Hurricanes are violent storms, raging chiefly among the Caribbee islands; though by relation, Jamaica has of late been much annoyed by them. They are expected in July, August, or September."—Dampier.

Sp. Hurricane; Fr. Ouvagan. A word which the Fr. etymologists suppose to have been picked up by the voyagers to the West Indies;—signifying, in the language of the islanders, the four winds blowing at the same time, the one against the other.

HURRY, v. s. To move along, drive
 -IER. along; hastily, quickly, with-
 -SKURRY. out stop or stay. And hurry, the s.—

Haste, or hasty motion, commotion, tumult.

Hurry -skurry,—to hurry about separately, different ways, distractedly, or rather scouringly, i. e. rapidly, hastily. Skurry, from A. S. Scyr-an, to cut, to separate. See SCUR.

Sw. Hurra; Ger. Horen, agere, agitare, circumagere, from A. S. Harg-ian. See HARRY, and HARASS.

HURST, s. Tooke says,—"is app. only to places ornamented by trees."

Hurst forms the term. of the names of many towns;—especially in Sussex.

**Drayton*.

Past p. of A. S. v. Hyrt-an, to adorn; (whence also hearse).—Tooke. Sk.—perhaps from A. S. Hyrtla, phaleræ. Spel. and Du Cange give Low L. Hursta; Sax. Hurst, silva; and Killan calls D. Horsch, horst, sylva humilis tantum frutices proferens.

HURT, v. s. To do or cause harm or
 -ER. injury, damage or loss; mischief,
 -FUL. pain; to harm, to injure, to en-
 -FULLY. damage, to pain or wound.

-ING. A. S. Hyrt, læsus, the past p. of the v. hyrt-ian; hyrted, hyrt'd, hyrt; injuriâ afficere; and upon this past p. the Eng. -LESSLY. v. is formed. Un-

HURTLE, v. s. -ING. To throw or cast, to dash; to throw or cast with force or violence; to whirl, or roll, or rush along, or about. "And where ever he taketh him he hurtlieth him down [allidit]. . . . thei hurtliden [impegerunt] the schip."—Wiclif.

Sk. believes from Hurt. Tyrw. says, to push. Steevens—"Hurtle is, I suppose, to dash, or move with violence; to move with impetuosity and tumult." See his notes on Shak.; and Todd's Spenser, vol. II. p. 119: where it is observed, that, from the folio edition of 1609, till the 4to. of 1751, all the editions of Spenser read hurien. There is little doubt that the words are of the same signification; hurle being a dim. of hurt.

HUSBAND, s. v. Husband is app. to—
 -ING. The master of the house or family;
 -LESS. of the farm or estate, the tiller or
 -LY. cultivator of it; to the man or -MAN. male espoused or married to the
 -RY. woman; to the males of animals.

Husbandry,—the tillage or cultivation; management or economy: careful, provident, or thrifty management; thrift, parsimony.

To husband,—to act as husband, (maritus;) to provide with a husband.

To act as husband or husbandman,—to till, to cultivate; to manage or economize; to use careful, provident, or thrifty management.

Dan. Hunsbonda. Sk. says, from A. S. Hus, a house, and band, qd. domus vinculum. Spel. in v. Husbandus, to the same effect. Jun. acknowledges this etym. to be sufficiently specious, but nevertheless thinks the word to be of Dan. origin. Jamieson is of opinion that the terminating syllable band, is not from A. S. Bindan, to bind; but from buand, buende, the past p. of bu-an, bu-an, habitare, colere, to dwell or inhabit, to cultivate or till. The A. S. Land-buend was—an inhabitant or dweller in the land, also a tiller of the land; and buende is itself interpreted, by Som. a husbandman, an inhabitant, a dweller; hus-band, then, as distinguished from land-buend, he (Dr. J.) supposes to have denoted, a person who inhabited a house, or was a constant resident in the country, keeping a family there; hence (he adds) it would come to signify the master of a family; and by an easy transition, a husband. Bond, in Sw. which Thre derives from A. S. Buend, is in its simple form app. to the father of a family, a husband, (maritus;) a tiller of the land, &c.—See Thre. Un-

HUSH, v. ad. To be still or quiet, in -MONEY. word or deed; to be silent; to HUSH-TRY.* still or quiet, to tranquillize or appease.—Udal.

Hush-money,—money paid for being hush or silent.

Hush, hush! hush! whist. Hush, says Jun. tao, eie, ne verbum quidem. St. See Hier, and Walst. Un-

HUSHER, s. Also written Huisher, and Usher (qv.)

HUSK, v. s. -y. Husk is,—the cover of the seed or fruit.

To husk,—to take out of the husk, or cover.

Husky, as app. to the voice, should, perhaps, be written Husty, from A. S. Hwost-an, tussire, to cough.

D. Hulse, hulche, huldsche, stillqua, calix.—Kilian. Sk.—from hulten, caput tegere, to cover the head; and this from A. S. Hol-an, to cover. (See HULL.) The Eng. Husk is perhaps from A. S. Hus, a house, with the common term ig or ic—husic, husk. De Un-

HUSTINGS, s. Is now chiefly used for a place raised, or erected, hoisted, for candidates at an election of representatives in parliament.

Fuller writes Hoistings.

Cowel—from Fr. Hauler, to hoist, to raise. Som. in his Gloss. ad Hlistor. Anglic. Scriptores, from A. S. Hghet, highest, and thing, judicium, judgment. Spel. who calls it the most ancient and high court of the celebrated city of London, from A. S. Hus, a house, and thing, causa, res, lis, judicium; q. domus causarum, vel ubi causae aguntur. The D. Dingh, and Ger. Ding, are used in the same signification. The most popular usage of the word seems to support the opinion of Cowel.

HUSWIFE, v. s. To huswife, to manage, -WIFELY. as a good hus-wife or house-wife -WIFERY. should; to manage with carefulness, economy, frugality, thrift.

Hussy,—a corruption of huswife. Used as an ill or familiar appellation.

D. Huy-wif; mater familias, qd. uxor domus.—Sk. See HUSBAND.

HUT, s. A place covered—or—a place raised; it is app. to—a small building for covering or protection.

Fr. Hute; D. & Ger. Hutle; Dan. Hgt; Sw. Hyde, tugurium, from Ger. Huten; Sw. Hyle, celare, protegere, to hide, (A. S. Hyd-an,) to cover or protect.—See Kilias, Wach, and Thre. Teuth. in opposition to these authorities, conceives hut to be formed from the past p. Hoved, of A. S. Hearf-an, to heave; thus, hoved or hov'd, heave or hood, hut.

HUTCH, v. s. To hutch,—to hoard, or lay up in store; as in a hutch or coffer.

Warton (on Milton's Comus) says,—“Hutch is an old word for coffer. Archbishop Chichele gave a borrowing chest to the University of Oxford, which was called Chichele's Hutch. Some perhaps may read hatch'd, for it was in her own loyns.”

Fr. Huche, a hutch or bin, a trough or tub; also a mill-hopper.—Cot. Sp. Hucha, Delphic calls a box with a slit to put money in. In A. S. Hic Hwacca; and Som. and Lye say that Chaucer writes Wiche, (qv.) but this the latter thinks to be called from the wood of which it was made, the wich or wich-elm.

HUZZ, s. HUZZA, v. s. To huzz, huzz, or hiss, are the same word diff. written. Is To huzz, the sibilant s is less audible; in hiss it is more so.

Huzz is the word shouted; to huzz is to shout the word huzz. Hurrah, (hoo-ra) is in similar usage.

Formed from the sound.—Sk. and Jun. The derivation of Huzz from Hungarian soldiers as called, or from hossannah, appear neither of them very probable.

HYACINTH, s. A plant, a flower.

-IAN. Hyacinthine,—of or pertaining to -INE. the hyacinth; formed of, having the colour of hyacinth.

Fr. Hyacinthe; It. Giacinto; Sp. Jacinto; L. Hyacinthus; Gr. Yakynthos.

HYÆNA, s. HYEN. “As touching Hyænes;—Many strange matters are reported of this beast, and above all other, that he will counterfet man's speech, and coming to the shepherd's cottages, will call one of them forth, whose name he hath learned, and when he hath him without, all to waste and teare him in peeces.”—Holland. Plin. Fr. Hyen-ne; Sp. -a; It. Iena; L. Hyæna; Gr. Yæna, porca, from be, ens.

HYALINE,* ad. Glassy, transparent as glass.—Milton.

Gr. Yalinos, vitreus, from balos, citrum, and this from be-iv, pluere; because citrum, or plum, has the colour of water.

HYBRID, ad. -ous. Generated or produced from animals or vegetables of different kinds; not genuine.

L. Hybrida, or ibrida; Gr. Ybrida, injurta, quod injuriam contumeliosam notat; (sc. adulterium.) Scal. (in Farronem) and Voss. prefer an ancient Tuscan word, ambri, signifying quæritus. See Fan. and Mart.

HYDRA, s. HYDRUS. A water serpent. App. to—Evils increasing from the attempt to suppress them; a numerous increase of evils; any multiform or multifarious evil or mischief.

"To dire Lernaean Hydra what art thou?
Her wounds were fruitful: from each sever'd head,
Each of her hundred necks two fiercer bred."
Sandys. Ovid.

Fr. Hydra; It. Idra; Sp. & L. Hydra, or
Hydrus, a water serpent, from the Gr. ὑδρῶν, water.

HYDRAULIC, a. ad. -AL. A pipe played by the motion of water.

A branch of mechanics that relates to the forces and motions of fluids.

Fr. Hydraulique; Gr. ὑδραυλική, from ὑδρῶν, water, and αἰολος, a pipe.

HYDRO-CELE, s. A watery swelling or tumour. "Hydrocele may be generally defined, a watery swelling of the scrotum."
—Wicman.

Gr. ὑδροκήλη, from ὑδρῶν, water, and κλήλη.

HYDRO-CEPHALUS, s. "Hydrocephalus is a watery swelling of the head."—
Wicman.

Gr. ὑδρῶν, water, and κεφαλή, the head.

HYDROGRAPHY, s. A delineation
-ED or description of the watery parts or
-ICAL portions of the globe.

Gr. ὑδρῶν, water, and γραφειν, to write, to delineate or describe.

HYDROMEL, s. "The mead called Hydromel, consisted in times past of rain water well purified, and hony."—Holland.
Plinie.

It. Idromele; Fr. & L. Hydromel; Gr. ὑδρομελι, from ὑδρῶν, water, and μελι, honey.

HYDROMETER. See HYGROMETER.

HYDRO-PHOBIA, s. -PHOBY. Fear or dread of water.

Fr. Hydrophobie; It. Idrofobia; Sp. & L. Hydrophobia; Gr. ὑδροφοβία, from ὑδρῶν, water, and φοβος, fear.

HYDROPSY, s. "Watery or hydrocal
-PSICAL tumours are the effects of an
-PSICALLY extravasated serum, which ac-
-PSIC cording to the place on which & lights doth denominate the disease."—
Wicman.

Fr. Hydrop-sie; Sp. -esia; It. Idropisie; L.
Hydrops; Gr. ὑδρῶν, from ὑδρῶν, water, and ψή,
aqueus, facies.

HYDRO-STATIC, s. That branch of -AL mechanics that relates to the equi-
-ALLY librium of fluids.

-IAN. Fr. Hydrostatique; Sp. -ica; Gr. ὑδρῶν, water, and στατικόν, from στανίζω, stare.

HYEMAL, ad. Of or pertaining to win-
-ATION ter; wintry.—Smart.

-ATE. Fr. & Sp. Hyemalis; It. Imale; L.
Hyemalis, from hyems, winter, Gr. ἄρο του χειματος, to rain. Hyemation is not uncommon in Brazil.

HYGIEINAL, ad. Fr. Hygénique,— health-preserving physica.—Cot. Boyle.

Hygiea,—the goddess of health. Gr. Ἑγεία.

HYGRO-METER, s. A measure of water, or the properties of water.

Sp. Hygrometro; Gr. ὑγρον, humidus, wet or moist, and μετρον, a measure.

HYGRO-SCOPE, s. An instrument to determine the degrees of the moisture, or dryness of the air.—Boyle.

Gr. ὑγρον, humidus, moist, and σκοπεω, observare, to observe, or remark.

HYLO-ZOISM, s. "Hylozoism makes -IST. all body, as such, and therefore

-IC. every smallest atom of it, to have

-ICAL. life essentially belonging to it."—
Cudworth.

Gr. ὑλη, matter, and ζωή, life.

HYMEN, s. A nuptial hymn or song.

-EAL, ad. s. See HYMN.

-EAN. Fr. Hymen-ée; Sp. -eo; It. Imene;
L. Hymen, hymenæus; Gr. ἕμην, ἡμεναίος, hymnus nuptialis.

HYMN, v. s. Gen. app. to—A sacred or

-IC. divine song; a song of praise,

-ING. adoration, or thanksgiving.

-OLOGY. To hymn,—to sing such sacred or divine songs of praise, &c.—Mede.

Fr. Hymn-ee; Sp. -o; It. Inno; L. Hymnus; Gr.
ἕμνος, απο του ὕδαν, which Hesychius interprets
ᾄδαν, ᾄδ-ειν, to sing or say.

HYPER, pr. In comp.—Over, above; upon; beyond, exceeding.

Gr. pr. ὑπερ; L. Super.

HYPER, s. Prior seems to mean—a critic or criticism upon a critic or criticism.

"Critics I read on other men, and hypers upon them again." See HYPERCRITIC.

HYPER-ASPIST, s. One who throws

**Chillingworth.*

Gr. ὑπερασπιστής, from ὑπερ, over or above, and ασπεις, a shield.

HYPER-BATON, s. "An hyperbaton is a transposing of words or thoughts out of their natural and grammatical order, and it is a figure stamped with the truest image of a most forcible passion."—Smith.
Longinus.

L. Hyperbaton; from Gr. ὑπερβαίν-ειν, trans-gredi, to transgress. In Latin this figure of speech is also called transgressio: (quæ verborum perturbat ordinem. Ad Heren. lib. iv. c. 33.)

HYPER-BOLE, s. "Hyperbole, or ex-

-IC. aggeration, consists in magnify-

-ICAL. ing an object beyond its natural

-ICALLY. bounds. In all languages, hyper-

-ISM. bolical expressions very fre-

-IST. quently occur; as swift as the -IZE, v. wind; as white as the snow."

—Blair.

Hyperbola is also the name of a figure in conic sections.

Fr. & Sp. Hyperbola; It. Iperbola; L. Hyperbola; Gr. ὑπερβολή, from ὑπερβαλλω, superfluous, to cast or throw over. Cicero uses the equivalent name, veritatis superfluitio atque trajectio. De Or.
lib. iii. c. 53.

HYPER-BOREAN, ad. Northerly; in the remotest North.

L. Hyperboreus; Gr. ὑπερβορεος, as if, super Boream, beyond Boreas, or the North.

or beyond; sc. the bounds of reason.

Gr. ὑπερ, above, and κριτικός, critical.

HYPER-DULIA, s. Service above or beyond; sc. what is usually paid. -ICAL. Cot. calls the Fr. "Hyperdulie,"—the highest worship, worship that belongs only to God."

Gr. ὕπερ, above, δουλεία, service.

HYPER-THETICAL, ad. Superlative.

Gr. ὑπερθετικος, from ὑπερθεσις, supra-positio.

HYPHEN, s. Words apposed, or standing in apposition, and which in speech we distinguish by joining the terms close in pronunciation, are annexed in writing by the interposition of the mark—called the hyphen: and "this mark (says Tooke) though not a letter or a word, because not the sign of a sound, is, itself, what a word should be, the sign of an idea, with this difference, that it is conveyed to the eye only, and not to the ear." And in forming terms by this kind of composition, "our language (says B. Jonson) is above all other very hardy and happy:—joining together, after a most eloquent manner, sundry words of every kind of speech."

Wallis also speaks of certain of this important class of terms, and applies to the pref. s. (in the absence of one more appropriate,) the title of Adjectivum respectivum, and adds that it is nothing else, than the s. itself, placed adjectively—ipsa vox substantiva adjectivè posita—and he specifies—sea-fish, sea-voyage, man-slaughter, gold-ring, &c. as examples of this kind of ad.

It will be necessary to be a little more copious in illustrating the force of this mark—, the hyphen.

1. In some cases, it supplies the want of an ad. term.: as,—sea-fish, piscis marinus: in others it supersedes the use of an ad. or participial term.: as,—a gold-ring, i. e. a golden ring; a draw-bridge, i. e. a drawing bridge, or bridge that draws.

2. In others, the term. of the genitive, es; or prepositions,—of, for, by, in, &c. e. g. moon-light,—moon's light, or light of the moon: self-love, self-devotion,—love or devotion of self: gold-beater,—a beater of gold: glass-window,—window (made) of glass: glass-blower,—a blower of glass: glass-furnace,—a furnace for making glass: glass-man,—a man for selling, or who sells or deals in glass: counting-house, eating-house,—a house of or for counting or eating: blood-guilty, or thirsty,—guilty, or thirsty of blood: blood-stained,—stained by or with blood: town-made,—made in town: home-brewed,—brewed at home: fire-proof, water-proof,—proof against fire or water: foot-ball-player,—player at ball with the foot.

3. In others, it supplies the adverbial term.: high-born, high-bred, low-bred,—highly born, highly or lowly bred.

4. In other instances the interpretation of its force is more circumlocutory: as—blood-red,—having the redness of blood, or red as or like blood: flint-hearted,—having a heart of flint; or like, or as hard and impenetrable as, flint. These may more properly be denominated elliptical phrases than even composite words.

Some of our elder writers carried their ingenuity in this composition or connexion to an extreme; none more so than Chapman: he was imitated not always happily by Cowper. They are, however, the last resort of a translator, to represent the full force of certain Greek compounds; but in modern writings, there is no limit to extravagance. The — is frequently used unnecessarily.

"If I say, a gold-ring, a brass-tube, a silk-string: here are the ss. adjectivè posita, yet names of things, and denoting substances. If again I say, a golden ring, a brazen tube, a silken string: do gold and brass and silk cease to be the names of things, and cease to denote substances; because, instead of coupling them with ring, tube, string, by a hyphen, thus —, I couple them to the same words by adding the term en to each of them?"—Tooke.

Gr. ὑφ' ἐν, i. e. ὑφ' ἐν; sub unum.

HYPO-CAUST, s. A fire placed under, or below; used in Roman baths; and now in various buildings.

Fr. Hypo-causte; L. Hypo-causta, or caulus;

Gr. ὑπο-καυστις, or καυστρον, from τρο-σεν ignem subdere, to place a fire under.

HYPO-CHONDRE, s. "The flanks or -DRY. soft parts under the short

-DRIAC, s. ad. ribs."

-DRIACAL. Fr. Hypo-chondres; Sp. costas; It. Ipocondria; Gr. ὑποχονδριος, qui sub costis gine est: from τρο, under, and χονδριος, the cartilage. See HIP.

HYPO-CRISY, s. Simulation; dissimulation; the feigning or fiction of -CRITE. virtues not possessed; the con-

-CRIT-IC. cealment, cloaking, or suppression of real vices.—"Joy.

-ISH.* Fr. Hypocrisis; Sp. isa; It. Ipostasia; L. Hypocrisis; Gr. ὑποκρισις, from τρο-σεν subdere, in its consequential usage, simulare, to feign or pretend what is false: to conceal or suppress what is true.

HYPO-STASIS, s. App. to "the personal union of the divine and human natures in the person of our -ALLY. blessed Saviour."—Tilletus.

"Where as in that union the rest is an ineffable mystery, the two natures in Christ to have one subsistence called & termed an hypostasis."—Bp. Gardner.

Fr. Hypostase; It. Ipostasi; L. Hypostasis; Gr. ὑποστασις, (from τρο, sub, and στασις, stare: sistere, sub,) subsistentia; subsistence.

HYPO-TENUSE, s. -AL. Usually app. to the side of a right-angled triangle subtending or opposite to the right angle.

Gr. ὑποτενωση, that which subends or stretches below; from τρο-σεν subdere, to stretch below.

HYPO-THECATE, **v.* -ιον.* To place or put under (obligation or bond); to pledge, to pawn.—*Sir W. Jones.

L. Hypotheca; Gr. ὑποθήκη, suppositio, hypothesis, supponere, (hypo, under, and τίθεσθαι, to place.)

HYPOTHESIS, s. That which is put -um, **v.* or placed under, subjected to, sc. -τη. question, inquiry; a supposition; -ICAL, that which is supposed.

-ALLY. *Warburton.

HYSSOP, s. A plant.

Fr. Hyssop-e; Sp. -o; It. Isopo; L. Hyssopus; Gr. ὕσσωπος; Heb. Ezob.

HYSTERIC, s. Hysterics, or hysterical -ICA, fits, are properly fits arising from -ICAL disorders in the womb; but is app. with more latitude to other fits of women.

Fr. Hystérique; "Affection hystérique. The suffocation of the matrix."—Col. It. Isterico; Gr. ὕστερος, ad uterum pertinens; τα ὑστερὰ καθ'η, παθήσεις (sc. suffocationes) uteri seu culcae.

HYSTERON PROTERON, s. A figure in rhetoric, used for the purpose of inversion.

Gr. ὕστερον-ἔρον, posterius, the latter; πρῶτον-ἔρον, the former: the last first; or according to the proverbial phrase,—to set the cart before the horse.

I.

THE vowel I is framed by an emission of the breath betwixt the tongue and the concave of the palate, the upper superficies of the tongue being put into a more convex posture, (see E.) and thrust up near the palate. It is called by B. Jonson a letter of a double power. In the one, as a vowel, in the other power it is another letter, and would ask to enjoy another character; for where it leads the sounding vowel, and beginneth the syllable, it is ever a consonant; as in jump, conjure. And before diphthongs; as jay, juice. (See B. Jonson and Wilkins.) The latter considers; to be a compound of d and zh. I, and also y, are pref. to words in old Eng.: as i-do, y-do, i-go, or y-go. They are the remains of A. S. Ge, (qv.)

Aye is constantly written I in elder authors.

I, (the pra.) Go. & D. Ik; A. S. Ic; Ger. Ich; Sw. Jag; Dan. Jeg; Fr. Je; It. Io; Sp. Yo; L. Ego; Gr. Eγω. And in old Eng. Ich or ig, now pronounced I: miro inter se concentu (says Wach.) et fortè arcand quâdam vi et ratione naturæ. This arcana vis et ratio might probably be discovered if the common origin and meaning of a word, so variously written, and so uniformly app., could be ascertained. The success of Tooke with the pros. it and that, and the art. the, give reason to expect that he might have made this discovery. Lennep says, that Gr. Eγ-ω, is εγω; meaning—qui egit, unde eximie transit ad primam personam agentem denotandam. Of εγ-ω, (diff. pron. and probably written εγ-ω, εγ-ω, εγ-ω), the verbal part is εγ, εγ, &c.; the term ω is the pers. pro. εγ-ω, or, as Dr. Gregory Sharpe says, the first person of the present indicative is formed by adding ω from εγω or εω, I am, to the root; but still the ω is to be accounted for before εγ-ω could receive from usage its character of a pers. pro. A conjecture must be hazarded.—As the old Eng. Ich or ig has left the modern I, a similar corruption (merely dropping the guttural γ) may, from εγ, εγ, or ογ, have given ω. Repetition is, and always has been, a constant resource to give emphasis; and εγ-εγ, εγ-εγ, ογ-ογ, i. e. the v. εγ repeated, may have been intended, by the force or emphasis of repetition, to fix the act expressed by this v. εγ upon the speaker, and by the corruption of a rapid pronunciation, the repeated syllable, or second εγ, εγ, ογ, may have sunk into the mere vocal sound ω: εγ-ω thus formed from εγ-εγ, or εγ-ογ, would be appended to the v. εγ, and constitute the first person εγ-εγω; which would become successively εγ-ω, εγ-ω.

The L. Aug-eo is considered by Lennep to have sprung from Gr. Αγ-ω; that they had the same source is very probable, and that such source was Go. Auk-an (A. S. Eak-an, to eke, qv.) is not improbable.—See Wach. Proleg. sec. 6.

I is used by the person speaking for or instead of the name (nomen or noun) by which he is called, to fix the action of the v., expressed or understood, upon the person so speaking; and is, in grammar, denominated the first pers. pro.

So the ich: so may I the: so may I prosper.—Chaucer.

IAMBIC, ad. s. -ιξε, **v.* A metrical foot, consisting of a short preceding a long syllable. "Two rests, a short and long, th' iambic frame."—B. Jonson. Horace. "Iambic was the measure in which they used to iambize, [i. e. to satirize,] each other."—Twining. Aristotle. "Twining."

Fr. Iambique; It. Giambico; Gr. ιαμβικός, from ιαμπος.

IBIS, s. A bird so called in Gr. and L. "Of stiff legs and a long bill, which profit much the country of Lybia in killing serpents, and therefore worshipped among the Egyptians."—Mins. See CLYSTER.

IBLE, ter. See BLE.

IC, ter. Ac, ic, are immediately from the Gr. ik-os, ix-os, themselves from ισχυς, strength; but the root is Go. Auc-an; A.S. Eac-an; Eng. To Eke; Gr. Αγ-ειν; L. Ag-ere, aug-ere, to augment, to increase, to strengthen. Thus, Cardiac, that can or may hearten: Analytic, that can or may analyse. See AGE, (ter.) Io, Ing, Ish, IX, Y, and letter C.

ICE, s. v. Water or other liquid congealed. -y. To break the ice,—(met.) to remove -ICLE. the first obstacle, make the first -ING. opening.

A.S. Is, isa, iss; ices gicel, icicle, glacialis stiria; gicelig, glacialis; D. Eys, eyes, iis; Ger. Eise; Sw. Is. Perhaps (Wach.) a plain surface, frozen or congealed, from isor, equalis, or isovus, aquare. Alti, (adds lhre), aliundé.

ICH-NEUMON, s. Mus Indicus, or Indian mouse. Also the name of an insect.

Gr. Ιχνευμων, from ιχνη-ειν, vestigare, to watch, quia vestigat crocodillos. Or, because it roots or searches with its snout for its food.—Foss.

ICHNO-GRAPHY, s. -CAL. By Ichnography we are to understand the very first design and ordinance of a work or edifice, together with every partition and opening drawn by rule and compass upon the area or floor, by artists, often called the geometrical plan or plat-forme, as in our reddition of the parallel. The Gr. would name it Ιχνοῦς γραφή, vestigii descriptio, or rather vestigium operis, the superficial efformation of the future work, which our ground-plot does fully interpret.—Euclyn.

Fr. Ichnographia; Sp. sfa; It. Icnografia; L. Ichnographia; Gr. Ιχνογραφία, from ιχνη, vestigium, and γραφή, scriptura, descriptio, a description or delineation.

ICHOR, *s. -OSE.** A serous humour, such as was attributed to the gods by Homer instead of blood.—Arbuthnot.

Gr. Ιχωρ, sanies, vel sanguis nondum preparatus, sive crudus.—Lennep.

ICH-THYOLOGY, s. A discourse on the knowledge of fishes.

Gr. Ιχθυολογ-ειν, de piscibus disserere, to treat or discourse of fishes, from ιχθυς, a fish, and λογ-ειν, to discourse.

ICONO-CLAST, s. -IC. An image-breaker.

Fr. Iconoclaste; from Gr. Εικων, an image, and κλαστης, a breaker, from κλα-ειν, frangere, to break.

ICONOGRAPHY, s. A description of images.

Gr. Εικονογραφία, from εικων, an image, and γραφ-ειν, to write or describe.

ICONOMACAL,* ad. Adverse or hostile or inimical to images.—Brown.

Gr. Εικονομαχος, from εικων, an image, and μαχη, pugna.

ICTERICAL,* ad. Sick of, troubled with, the yellow jaundice.—Cot. **Ep. Taylor.*

Fr. Ictère, -ique; L. Ictericus; Gr. Ικτηρικός, from ικτερις, venire, obvenire, qd. subito adveniens vel occupans scilicet morbus.—Lennep.

IDEA, s. "Idea is a bodiless substance, -AL. which of itself hath no subsistence, but giveth figure and form -ALIST. unto shapeless matters, and be -ALLY. commeth the very cause that -OLOGY. bringeth them into show and cri -ATE, v. dence. Socrates and Plato suppose, that these ideas be substances separate and distinct from matter, howbeit, subsisting in the thoughts and imaginations of God; that is to say, of mind and understanding. Aristotle admitteth verily these forms and ideas, howbeit, not separate from matter, as being the patterns of all that which God hath made. The Stoics, such as were the scholars of Zeno, have delivered, that our thoughts and conceits were the idea."—Holland. Plutarch.

"For ideas, in my sense of the word, are, 'Whatsoever is the object of the understanding, when a man thinks; or, whatsoever it is the mind can be employ'd about in thinking.'—b. i. c. 1. And again, I have these words, 'Whatsoever is the immediate object of perception, thought or understanding, that I call idea.'—b. ii. c. 2."—Locke.

"What the ancient philosophers call species, sensible and intelligible, and phantasmas, in later times, and especially since the time of Des Cartes, came to be called by the common name of ideas."—Reid.

Fr. Idée; It. Sp. & L. Idea; Gr. Ιδεα, from ιδ-ειν, videre, to see. Formae quas ideas vocant; nostri, si qui hinc forte tractant, species appellant.—Cicero.

IDENTITY, s. Cot. calls it—the being -IC. almost the very same. And -ICAL. Locke—The identity of the -ICALLY. same man consists in nothing -IFY, v. but a participation of the same -IFICATION. continu'd life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter in succession vitally united to the same organis'd body.

Identify,—to be or cause to be, to show or prove to be, the same.

Fr. Identifier; It. -à; Sp. -ar; Low L. Identifier; from id-em, the same.

IDES, s. A day, in the Roman calendar, about the middle of the month, or the full moon.

Fr. Id-es; It. -i; Sp. -os; L. Idus. Voss. adapti from Macrobius the Anc. Tusc. Idusare, i. e. dividere, to divide; and Idusare, (Beerman.) est div. into two, sc. parts or portions, the ides being so called because they divide the month in duas veli partes.

IDIOM, s. May be exp.—A peculiar propriety of speech in a particular -ATICAL. language, or a propriety of speech IDIOSM. peculiar to a particular language:

not reduced within the general rules of the grammar of that language.

Fr. Idio-ma, idome; It. & Sp. -ma, -ismo; L. Idioms; Gr. Idioma, from idios, proper or peculiar.

IDIO-PATHY, s. "Idiopathic, ιδιωπαθεια, is one's proper peculiar πάθος, (passion or affection,) mine or thine, being affected thus or so upon this or that occasion."—H. More.

Gr. ιδιωπαθεια; L. Idiopathes; from idios, proper or peculiar; and παθος, passion or affection.

IDIO-SYNCRASY, s. -CRATIC.† A peculiar commixture or temperament, sc. of mind.—Glanvill. Brown. †Warburton.

Gr. idios, proprius, and συγκρασις, from συν, and κρασις, mixture.

IDIOT, s. A private person, opposed to —IC. one who had obtained public distinction or eminence; extended to —ICAL the rude, unlearned, (as in Wiclif, —ISM "Idiotis, either men out of the —CT, or feith—If any unfaithful man or —MOCT. idiot,") ignorant; then, further, to the simple, foolish; those destitute of the ordinary powers of mind. "An idiot, or natural fool, is one that hath had no understanding from his nativity; and therefore is by law presumed never likely to attain any."—Blackstone.

Fr. Idiot; It. Sp. & L. Idiota; Gr. ἰδιωτης, from idios, proper, peculiar, private.

IDLE, ad. v. An idle man,—one who wastes —NESS. or trifles away, sc. his time; ren—-I-ER. ders it vain, fruitless, or useless; —-SM. one who is inactive, lazy, sluggish, —-NESS.† slothful, unemployed.

—-IV.! Any thing idle,—vain, fruitless, useless; trifling or trivial, unimportant; unproductive; barren, sterile.

Idle time,—time unemployed, disengaged from active pursuits.

To do any thing idly,—to do it vainly, fruitlessly, triflingly, carelessly.

To idle,—to render void, vain or fruitless; to spoil, to consume, to waste.

**Gower. †Spenser. †Whitlock*.

D. Idel; A.S. Idel, aydlige, which latter Som. refers to Aidlian, irritum facere; and Aidliod, the past p. he interprets irritus, void, of no effect; also Vocens, otiosus, vacant, idle. Hence he also says, an edde egg; and Tooke is persuaded that edde and idle are the past p. of A.S. v. Aidlian, agrotare, exinanire, irritum facere, corrumpere; D. Idelern (Kilian.) inanire, exinanire, vacuare, struere:—to ail, to be or become empty or vacant, to render void, vain or fruitless, to spoil. See ADLE, AIR, ILL. Un—

IDOL, s. An image, species or representation; emph.—an image worshipped, adored; any person or thing, adored, loved to excess.

—ATRE. An idol or image is also opposed to a reality; thus Lord Bacon speaks of idols or false appearances; of which he discourses at large in the fourth book of the fifth chapter De Augmentis Scientiarum.

—ATRIE.† "Idolatrie is Greeke, and the —ISM. —IST. —ITE. —ITABLE. —ITION. —IPOTENT. —IVOMOUS.

"Idolatrie is Greeke, and the —ISM. —IST. —ITE. —ITABLE. —ITION. —IPOTENT. —IVOMOUS.

English is image-service; and an idolater is also Greke, and the English an image-servant."—Tyndall.

**Daniel. †Bp. Hooper. †Milton. †Bale*. Fr. Idole; It. & Sp. -o; L. Idolum; Gr. ἰδωλον, from ειδος, an image.

IDONEOUS, ad. Cons.—suited or adapted to, fit.

L. Idoneus, perhaps from Gr. ιδιος, proper, peculiar.

IF, co. Give, grant, concede, allow; suppose; or this or that being given, granted, &c. Sk. says,—"If in agro Linc. Gif;"—ab A. S. Gif, ai: Hoc a verbo gif-an, dare, qd. dato:" and this Lye quotes with approbation; and it is also adopted by the editor of G. Douglas. Ray,—"Gin, gif, in the Old Sax. is Gif; from whence the word If is made—per aphæresin literæ g. Gif, from the v. Gif-an, dare; and is as much as —dato." In Go. Gib-an, (ge-ib-an;) Gib, (ge-ib;) be it, be it so.

Tooke,—"If is merely the imperative of the Go. & A. S. v. Gif-an. And in these languages, as well as in the Eng. formerly, this supposed conjunction was pronounced and written, as the common imperative, purely Gif." "G. Douglas almost always used Gif: once or twice he has used If." "Chaucer commonly uses If; sometimes Yeue, yef, yf."

R. of Gloucester writes Gef. R. Brunne, If. B. Jonson writes, "My largesse hath lotted her to be your brother's mistress; gif shée can be reclaim'd: gif not, his prey." Tooke gives the following resolution:—"She can be reclaimed; give that, my largesse hath lotted her to be your brother's mistress. She cannot be reclaimed; give that, my largesse hath lotted her to be your brother's prey."

Another example is:—"How will the weather dispose of you to-morrow?—If fair (i.e. give fair weather) it will send me abroad; if foul (i.e. give foul weather) it will keep me at home." Or making the datum (or thing given) a sentence. Thus,—if it is fair, &c. if it is foul, &c. the resolution will be—It is fair weather; give that: it will, &c.; It is foul weather; give that: it will, &c.

IG, term. The old ad. term. softened into Y, (qv.) from A. S. Ice-an, to eke, to add, to join, as Bloodig,—bloody, and used to denote an addition or adjunction. See IC.

IM-PREPARATION,* s. Unreadiness; want of preparation, or of previously making or getting ready or fit.—Bp. Hall.

IM-PRESCRIPTIBLE,* ad. "Fr. Imprescriptible, without the compass of prescription, which by no length of time can be aliened or lost"—Cot. *Paley.

IM-PRESS, v. s. To press into; to mart,
 -IBLE. or infix; to mark or fix deeply,
 -IBILITY. lastingly.

-ION. An impress or impress on a shield "is a device in picture
 -IVE. with his motto, or word, borne
 -IVENESS. by noble and learned personages,
 -OR. to notify some particular conceit
 -URE. of their own."—Camden.

Impression is app. to the effect produced by pressure; by yielding or giving way to pressure; to forcible or weighty influence, or efficiency; destroying the fixed or settled state of the object acted upon:—the idea or thought impressed or *infix*ed.

Impressive,—that can or may impress; forceful; also— that can or may be impressed; susceptible of impressions.

Fr. & Sp. Imprim-er; It. -tra; L. Im-primere, -pressum, to press into. To impress seamen. Sk. says,—to press or impress, i. e. milites cogere, to force or compel soldiers; from the v. To press, premere, cogere. T. H. (he adds) derives (fovente Minera) from Fr. Press, paratus, tenir press, paratos, impromptu habere, apprestor, apparare, instruere, to prepare, to provide. And Mins. says,—press money is so called of the Fr. word Press, i. e. readie, for that it bindeth all those that have received it to be ready at all times appointed. The act of 2 Rich. II. c. 4, for the punishment of fugitive sailors, who may have been arrested and retained for the king's service, and thereof have received their wages pertaining, may seem to countenance the opinion of Mins. See EXPRESS.

IM-PROFICIENCE,* s. -cy.† (Also Un-) Want of progress or advancement; want of improvement.—**Bacon*. †Boyle.

IM-PROFITABLE. Also anciently, and now usually written, Unprofitable, (qv.)

IM-PROLIFICATE,* v. (In, aug.) To be or cause to be prolific; or fruitful.

**Brown*.

IM-PROPER, ad. (Also anciently written -ERLY. Un-) Unbecoming, unsuitable, -RIETY. unadapted to, unfit, erroneous.
Fr. Improp-er; It. -to; L. Improprius, not belonging to, unbecoming.

IM-PROPTIOUS,* ad. (See Un-) Unkind; unfavourable.—**Wotton*.

IM-PROPORTION, s. (See Un-) The -ABLE. s.—Want of proportion, of due di- -ATE. vision into parts or shares.

IM-PROPRIATE, v. (In, aug.) To -ION. assign, or allot, or assume to a -OR. peculiar or particular purpose, person or thing.

Sk. notices that appropriation (of an ecclesiastical benefice) and impropriation are distinguished; the latter term being used of those in the possession of laymen by the gift of the king, the former of those annexed to some ecclesiastical corporation.

One of Milton's antagonists appears to have used improper as a v. See ARRA-PRIATE.

IM-PROSPEROUS, ad. (See Un-) -OUGLY. Improsperity, — Lucklessness, -OUSNESS. unhappiness.—**Jortin*. -ITY.*

IM-PROVE,* v. To censure; to impose, to blame, to reprove.

**Tyndall*. Fryth. Bp. Gardner.

Fr. Improver; L. Im-probare, (in, priv. and probare, to prove, A. S. Profan, prob-are, examinare, judicare), to disprove, disapprove, reprove.
Un-

IM-PROVE, v. Cons.—To meliorate, to -MENT. better, to correct, to amend. -ER. to enhance, to increase.

-ABLE. Approve and improve, approvement and improvement, are used in our old law as respectively equivalent. By statute of Merton (see in Rastall) the greatmen of England, leaving sufficient pasture, are allowed to make the profit or approvement of the residue, and the lords of waste woods, &c. or make improvement of them; the tenants having sufficient pasture to their hold. Hence Sk. derives the s. from L. In-, and probare, qd. probare seu bonum fieri vel feri, to make or become useful or good. But im-prover, or a prover, probator, is in law also one, who being indicted of treason or felony, and arraigned for the same, doth confess the fact before plea pleaded, and appeals or accuses others his accomplices in the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon. Such approvement, Blackstone adds, can only be in capital offences. And it is not at all probable that these words differ in any thing except their application: in the latter sense, to approve is simply to prove or make proof of. (See IMPROVE, anle.) In the former, to improve or trial of, to make experiment upon. Un-

IM-PROVIDE, v. (See Un-) Not to -ENT. foresee, not to forecast, and cons. -ENTLY. not to prepare.

-ENCE. Improvident, (or imprudent), and -VISION. foreseeing or forecasting; careless, regardless of the future; incautious, heedless.

Fr. Im-provoven; It. -provvido; Sp. -provido; L. Improvvidus.

IM-PRUDENT, ad. (Un-) Not foreseeing -ENTLY. or forecasting; careless, (of consequences,) regardless, incautions, heedless; indiscreet, injudicious.

IM-UNCTION.* See EMUNCTION.

**Holland.*

IN, pr. Tooke observes upon this word:—“In the Goth. and A. S., Inna means,—uterus, viscera, venter, interior pars corporis. (Inna, inne is also, in a secondary sense, used for Cave, cell, cavern.) And there are some etymological reasons which make it not improbable that Out derives from a word orig. meaning—skin. I am inclined to believe that In and Out come orig. from two ss. meaning those parts of the body.” This presumes that our ancestors had a name for these parts of the body before they had one for any other things, bearing the same relation to each other. See On. In is not included by name in the Diagram of Wilkins for the explication of what he calls the local prs.; but he seems to consider it as equivalent in usage, when expressing motion,—to the compound Into, and, when expressing rest,—to the compound Within. The former he represents upon the edge of a globe in motion of ingress; the latter near the centre, in a state of rest.

In is sometimes written by old writers, as,—On or upon. As in Chaucer, (The Monkes Tale),—“And in an hill how wretchedley he deid. . . . He starfe full wretchedly in a mountaine.”

Go. Ger. D. Sw. It. & L. In; A. S. In, On; Dan. I; Fr. & Sp. En; Gr. Ev. See INW.

IN, pref. 1. We have In, also written En; called by Wach. an av. loci interioris; and adding its own signification to the word to which it is pref. Thus used, it may be considered as opposed to e or ex,—as, to in-clude, to ex-clude; in-close, in-clusive, ex-clusive; in-hale, ex-hale; in-gress, egress: and in all such cases, it would lead to consistency, if we wrote in; yet we see en-close, though never en-clusive.

2. We have In, also very com. written En (or Em); called by Wach. an av. intensiois sensum reddens,—augmenting the force of the word to which it is pref. Thus used, it may be considered as opposed to de or dis, (and also to un),—as, to en-able, to dis-able; to en-courage, to dis-courage; to en-crease, to de-crease: and with this mere augmentative force, we might write en; increase, however, is perhaps more common. Our use of prefs. is, however, too vague and indiscriminate to render entire uniformity attainable; and pref. 1, and 2, also frequently approximate so closely, as to render distinction scarcely possible. The usages are carefully exhibited in this Dictionary.

Where no explanation is given to the word written In, see it written En.

3. We have also In, neg. or priv. also written Un, (qv.) (and in A. S. On.) This is never written En. It is changed into—Il, Im, Ir, to combine more easily in pronunciation with words beginning with those letters; and in a few instances, into Ig; as Ignoble, Illegal, &c.

For the etym. and sometimes explanation, see the simple word.

dictated or prescribed form of words; to prescribe or appoint, a place where or time when; and gen. to prescribe, declare, or pronounce; to charge or accuse.

"The name and use of the Indictions, which serve to ascertain the chronology of the middle ages, was derived from the regular practice of the Roman Tribunes. The emperor subscribed with his own hand, and in purple ink, the solemn edict or indiction, which was fixed up in the principal city of each diocese, during two months previous to the first day of September. And by a very easy connection of ideas, the word in- indiction was transferred to the measure of tribute which it prescribed, and to the annual term which it allowed for payment."

-LY. child or son of a king; to a prince.

-RY. (Infanta.)

Infant, ad.—childish, young, immature.

Infantry,—Sk. thinks, is manifestly from the L. Infans, used as we use Boy, not only—pro puero sed et pro famulo; and he observes that foot-soldiers were formerly, equitum famuli et quasi pedissequi. Wach.
would trace it to the A. S. Fet, the foot, (Inserto, s.) Fete-here Som. interprets—
"a band of footmen, an host or army of footmen, the infantry."

Infanted, in Fletcher, ("And yet but newly he was infanted,")—incarnated as an infant: in Milton, childishly produced—
"This worthy motto, no bishop, no king, is of the same batch, and infanted out of the same fears."

Fr. Enfant; It. & Sp. Infante; L. In-fans, (in,

ING, term. of our present participle, and also of nouns substantive, but each having its own distinct etymological origin.

The p. p. was formerly written ande or and, ende or end, i. e. an-ed or en-ed, and or end. An is the term. of the infinitive; Luf, (or lov), luf-an, (or lov-en.) Ed, adjoined or adjoined, constitutes our old simple v. ad. Lov-an-ed, lov-en-ed; lov-ande, or lov-ende: its successor, lov-ing, is comp. of the same infinitive Lov-an, with the additional ig; thus an-ig, en-ig, in-ig; and these become in-ge, ing; yn-ge, yn-g.

Ing, the term. of ss. is in A. S. & Ger. Ung, and is used in all Northern dialects but Go. Wach. states its principal use to be in forming ss., quæ actionem, aut passionem rei significant: as Thanc-ung, gratiarum actio; Francis et Alamannis, Auch-ung, augmentatio; Ger. Saml-ung, collectio; and innumerable others, à verbis oriunda. These ss. are not app. to the person, and the term. is equivalent to that in ion, with some occasional distinction in usage, as the acting of a comedian, the action of an orator: the former applies to the whole manner, in which a part is done or performed; the latter to the gesture. And it may be proper to remark, that this s. term. ing is always intended, when subderivatives, so ending, are found in the Dictionary; as Indent-ing, Indict-ing.

IN-VALUED,* ad. (Also Un-) Invalued,
-ABLE. —Much valued, highly prized,
-ABLY. esteemed highly, or to be of
-ABLENESS. great worth.

Invaluable.—That may or should be much valued, or (in, priv.; also written un.) that cannot be valued; i. e. of too much worth to have a value or price set upon it; inestimable.—**Drayton.*

We have our Eng. word Value, through the Fr. Valoir, value; It. Valere, valore; from the L. Valere, (see INVALID); and the Old Eng. Invalere, from invalere, (in used emph.) Upon this v. the ad. invaluable may have been formed; or it may be compounded of in, priv. and valuable.

IN-VARIABLE, ad. (Also Un-) Un-
-ABLY. alterable, unchangeable, im-
-ABLENESS. mutable; that cannot be altered
-ABILITY. or changed. Actively,—that
-ED. does not alter or change; steady or steadfast; constant.

Fr. & Sp. Invariable; It. -bile.

IN-VEIGH, v. (Sometimes En-) To
-ER. invade, to attack or as-

-VECT-IVE, ad. s. language, with adverse
-IVELY. censures, with railing, reviling, upbraiding, or reproach; to rail, revile, upbraid, or reproach.

Fr. Invest-iver, -ive; Sp. -icar, -ica; It. Investito; L. In-vehere, investum, to carry against, to bear against.

IN-VEIGLE, v. (Sometimes En-) In-
-ER. veigle (according to Jun. and Sk.)
-MENT. will mean,—to blind the eyes;
 met. the mind; and, thus, to mislead, to seduce, to delude, to allure, to entice.
 Equivalent to the vulgar Eng. expression,
 "To throw dust in the eyes." Otherwise—

To beguile, to draw astray, to mislead, &c.
Serenius derives from the Ger. Wiegeln; Sw. Upwiegita; a frequentative of the M. Go. Wag-tan, excitare, to excite, to move. Ihre, on the contrary, thinks the Sw. word may be from the Eng. It may be, and probably is, formed upon the A.S. Wiglan, to beguile.—But Jun. and Sk. believe that Investigle is from the Fr. Aveugle, (ab oculo,) blind; aveugler, to blind, hoodwink, deprive of eyes or sight.

IN-VEIL,* v. To cover with a veil; gen-to cover, to conceal.—**Daniel. Browns.*

Ger. Haus-blase; Sw. Hus-blase, Ichthyophylla; composed of Haus, the name of a large fish, (the Sturgeon,) found in the Danube, and blase, a bladder.

ISLE, s. Land surrounded by water, the -AND. sea. See INSULAR.

-ANDER. Fr. Isle-e; Sp. -a; It. Isola; L. Insula, quasi in saio, as if in the sea, surrounded by it.—Foss. Wach. says, -Ey-land; land surrounded by water, (A. S. Es; Ger. Ey.) En-In-

ISM, term. See IZE.

ISO-CHRONAL,* ad. App. to motions made—in equal times.—**Berkeley.*
Gr. isos, equal, and chronos, time.

ISOLATED,* ad. i. e. Insulated; from the Fr. Isolé. Standing alone, unconnected with, separate from.—**Stewart.*

ISO-SCELES, ad. App. to triangles,—Having equal sides.
Gr. isos, equal, and σκελος, a leg.

ISSUE, v. s. To go out, to pass out, to -ABLE come out, to proceed; to send -LESS forth or emit; to spring from, to -ING flow from.

Fr. Issir; It. Uscire; from the L. Ex-ire, to go. Men. traces it thus,—Eaire, iscire, (whence the old Fr. Issir), uscire, the issue, exitus, eventus.

IST, term. See IZE.

ISTHMUS, s. So called, on account of the likeness it bears to the neck, "because it is narrow and long, like a neck, between two seas."—Mins.

Fr. Isthme-e; Gr. -o; It. Istmo; L. Isthmus; Gr. ισθμος.

IT, pro. -SELF. D. Het; Dan. Det; the past p. of the Go. Hait-an; A. S. Hæt-an, nominare, and the meaning, viz. nominatum, i. e. the said, perfectly (Tooke) corresponds with every use of the word it in our language. It was app. by our old writers to the mas. and fem. as well as to the neut. and to the pl. as well as sing. (See Hz.) Mr. Tyrw. has noticed the usage of this word instead of He and She. "It am I Absolon. . . It am I, fader. . . Peter, it am I, quod she."—Chaucer. "And swere that it am not I."—Gower. Dr. Jamieson thinks it an objection to this etym. that the Go. Ita, (it) cannot be viewed as the pt. of the Go. Hait-an, because the aspirate is not retained. "Can we (he asks) reasonably view Ita as the pt. of Hait-an? Why is the aspirate thrown away?" The obvious answer seems to be, that Ita was orig. written Hita, (see Lye, in v.) as H was written Hit; and that by usage the aspirate was ultimately thrown away in both languages.

ITALIANATE, v. Fr. Italianiser—to Italianize it; to speak Italian, play the Italian, do like an Italian.—Cot.

ITCH, v. s. To itch, met.—to have a sensation, which we desire to remove.
-Y. Met.—an irritating sensation, sc. of coveting or desiring.

Ger. Jucken; D. Iocken, seucken, prurire, to itch; the Ger. Jucken, fricare, to rub or scratch, is probably the origin of Ger. Juck, that which we rub or scratch, the Itch. The A. S. Hicga, g-hicg-an, perscrutari, may be the root of all.

ITEM, v. s. To item,—to note down, (as a particular thing or circumstance.)

This word has been introduced into the modern European languages, from the L. Item, also, et, also;—and from the custom of premising this word (in the enumeration of individual things in a session) it is app. to every fresh article or particular thing; thus,—Item, a nose; Item, a chin.

ITERATE, v. To go over again, to -ATION. (any thing) over again; to repeat.

-ATELY. to renew.—**Brown.* †Shak.

*-ABLE.** Fr. Itér-er; Sp. -or; It. & L. Iterare.

-ANCE.† which properly denotes the repetition to repeat the journey.—Foss. Re-

ITINERANT, ad. s. -ARY, ad. s. Going or passing from one place to another; journeying, travelling.

Fr. Itinér-aire; It. & Sp. -ario; L. Itinerarius, from Iter, and this from Ita;—whither they were going they called Iter, from Ita.—Far. l. 4. Ita from Ita, to go.

IVE, term. L. Iuus, softened (Scal.) by the insertion of the Æolic digamma, from the Gr. Ikos, (see Is.) The Gr. Iphi, L. Iphi, strength, power, presents a more immediate origin. Act-ive,—who has the power of acting, who can or may act. Mot-ive,—that can or may move.

IVORY, s. ad. The tooth of the elephant; "Ivory-black, the perfectest that has been hitherto employed, may be made of ivory, without addition, only by burning it awhile in a close pot."—Boyle.

Fr. Ivore; It. Aorio; L. Ebur, from heaviness, elephant, so called from Gr. Baros, heavy, sc. gravitatem, on account of its great weight.

IVY, s. -IED. The Ivy (Hedychia) was called Euan by the Indians; and Cassiodorus supposes that this word was app. by them to signify the plant, from the cry of the Bacchanals decked with ivy, the plant most grateful to Bacchus. Others derive from Gr. Iphi, strongly, firmly; from the graviditas with which it adheres, or because it clings to the strongest trees.

A. S. Ifig; Ger. Ephes.

IZE, ISM, IST. Terminations borrowed from Greek ov; e. g. Βαπτισ-ew, itself formed upon the first future of βαπτ-ew, to dip;—thus, βαπτει-ew, βαπτισθ or βαπτισθ-ew, to dip ceremonially. And ov, so formed were intended, perhaps, to express the future effect, or the continuance, of an action commenced in present time, and the term is so far emphatic; but this purpose is scarcely to be traced through preserved images. See Leanep, de Analogia, c. 4. 14.

To civilize,—to bring to a civil state (progressively).

To particularize,—to continue to state particulars.

This term seems also to denote—to continue a custom, to do as others usually do; as to hellenize, to atticize, to do as the Greeks, or as the Athenians do; and thus it implies imitation: whence the term. Ist is not unfrequently app. as a dim.; thus, Grammaticist,—an imitator of the grammarian. A grammaticaster is inferior still. Ist is commonly used as the person who:—as Catechist, Dogmatist,—he who catechises, dogmatises. Catechism,—that which the catechist teaches. Dogmatism,—that which the dogmatist practises; the habit, the manner of a dogmatist.

J.

J. See letter L.

JABBER, v. To gabble, or to talk quickly, -er rapidly, noisily, and, thence, senselessly, lessly, thoughtlessly; with a confused indistinct utterance: to make a confused noise, similar to that of indistinct utterance. See GAB, and JAPE.

JACENT,* ad. Lying.—**Wotton*.

Fr. Jacent; L. Jacens, from jacere, to lie down. Ad. Circum-Inter-Sub.

JACINTH, s. i. e. The hyacinth, a gem.

Fr. Jacinthe.

JACK, s. Mr. Tyrw. in his note upon v. 14,816 of Chaucer, says,—“I know not how it has happened, that in the principal modern languages, John, or its equivalent, is a name of contempt, or at least of slight. So the Italians use Gianni, from whence Zeni (but see ZANY); the Spaniards, Juan, as Bobo Juan, or foolish John; the French Jean, with various additions; and in English, when we call a man a John, we do not mean it as a title of honour. Chaucer (in v. 3706,) uses Jacke fool, as the Spaniards do Bobo Juan; and I suppose Jack has the same etymology.”

Pennant, also, in his Zoology, (iii 342,) remarks,—“It is very singular that most nations give the name of their favourite dish to the facetious attendant on every mountebank. Thus the Dutch call him Pieble Herring, the Italians Macaroni, the French Jean Potage, the Germans Hans Wurst, i. e. Jack Sausage, and we dignify him with the title of Jack Pudding.” Thomson, in his Etymona, suggests an odd connexion between Jack with a pudding or a sausage, and the Phallic emblems exhibited during the Saturnalia.

A Jack-o'-lent appears to have been some puppet which was thrown at in Lent like Shrove-tide cocks.—Steevens.

Jack-an-apes, and Jack-monkey need no explanation. Ritson, from Jack Napes; a person, says Archdeacon Nares, never heard of. “The priest playeth out the rest vnder silence with signes and profers, with noddying, beckyng, and mowying, as it were Jack-an-apes.”—Tyndall. “He plays jack monkey at the altar.”—Bale.

Jack-sauce,—a saucy Jack or fellow.

Jack-guardant,—a term equivalent to one still in use, a Jack-in-office; i. e. one who is proud of his petty office.—Steevens.

Jack of the clock,—Fr. Jacquet. A Jack of the clock-house, or the little man that strikes the quarters in a clock.—Cot. Still (1829) preserved at St. Dunstan's, Fleet-street. Now (1836) gone.

JACK, s. A kitchen jack, and jack, lignum bifurcatum, are accounted for by Sk. as by Watts. “Footboys, who had frequently the common name of Jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their master's boots; but when instruments were invented for both these services, they were both called jacks.”—Watts.

JACK, s. The coat of mail is itself called -er. a jack, as well as the vesture thrown -BOOTS. over it.

A jacket, (tunica brevior,—Sk.) a short coat.

Jack-boots,—large boots to cover or protect the legs.

Jun. says, “Jack, jacket, or kassock, Gallicum pallium. Fr. Jaques, casaque; It. Giacco, casacco, casachino; Sp. Jaca, casaca; D. Jacke, kajacke, kasacke.” He adopts from Voss. the Gr. Kaor; L. Casa, app. gen. to that which, anything which, covers; and that Jacke is corrupted from Kajacke. (See Voss. de Vit. lib. iii. c. 3.) Sk. suggests L. Sagum, which (see Du Cange in v.) was “a military vest thrown over the armour,” peculiar to the Gauls, as Varro, Diodorus Siculus, and others testify. Wash. (hoc non obstante) prefers Gr. leryn, tegmen, a covering. (See Cassock.) Jack seems always to denote something added, and may be from A. S. Eac-an, ic-an, Ge-tan, addere, aug-ere.

JACK, s. "A jack of leather to drink in, because it somewhat resembles a iack, or coat of mail, or leather."—Mins.

JACK, s. A fish. Also a name given to the small bowl at which the others are cast in the game of bowling. In nautical language, to a small Union flag, generally hoisted on the bowsprit.

Perhaps (Sk.) from Jaculum, (as Pike and Pickrell from a pika or spear,) because like a javelin, either in shape or motion.

JACK-DAW, s. A kind of chough; and jack may here be a mere corruption of chough—choug, chuck, juck, or jack.

JACOBIN, s. These words in their -ICAL. present application, are entirely -ISM. modern; and take their origin from -IZE. v. the circumstance of a faction of Fr. revolutionists holding their meetings in a monastery of the Jacobin or Dominican friars.

The Dominicans were so called (Jacobin) because their first establishment in Paris was in a hospital of St. James, (Matt. Paris, ad ann. 1198.)—Burke.

JACOBITE, s. -ISM. One of the faction who adhered to James II. and his family.

JACOBUS, s. A coin so called from the king (James) in whose reign it was struck.

JACTATION,* s. JACULATION.† A throwing, tossing, or casting.

**Sir W. Temple.* †Milton.

L. Jactatio, jaculatio, from jacare, jaculare, and these from jacere, to throw, to cast.

JADE, v. s. To jade,—to do, or cause to -ERY. do, to treat, as a jade. To tire, to -ISH. weary, to fatigue, to wear out with fatigue or labour; to suffer, to subject to, hard, harass, or harassing employments or occupations; to harass, to dispirit, to depress. And,—

A jade,—a wearied—horse or other animal—worn out, dispirited: and, thus, resisting labour; and hence app. to horses, or other animals, that refuse or are unwilling to work; are restive, of mischievous tempers, play mischievous tricks. App. sportively, or ironically, to young women.

Sk. thinks he should trifle if he derived Jade from A. S. Eode, ivit; qd. Egwas qui jam ire desit. The interpretation may be wrong; the etym. perhaps is right. In the North, Jade is pron. or called Yad, yoad; and the A. S. Eode, the past tense and past p. of Gan, to go, gives in old Eng. Yede, or yode, i. e. Goed, gone. (See Yad in Jamieson.) A jade then may be one, that has gade, gode, goed, or gone; and is, consequently, wearied, tired with going. Be—

JAGG, v. s. To cut out, so as to leave -Y. projections, like the teeth of a -EDNESS. saw.

Perhaps from A. S. Saga, a saw; D. Saeghen; Ger. Sagen, disclandere.

JAIL, s. -ER. A prison; a place of imprisonment or confinement. See Gao.

JAKES, s. A. S. "Cac-hus, latrina, a privy or jakes, a house of office."—Sam. May it not be an added or adjoined house, an appurtenance, from Ge-ac-an, to add!

JAM, v. To level; to press down close; to press or squeeze close or fast.

Jam is used as a s. in works on Cookery, for a conserve of fruits, reduced to a paste by jamming or pressure.

To jam, (says Grose,) is to render firm by treading, as cattle do land they are foddered on.

Perhaps from A. S. Ge-cma-tan, to make even, to level. Emm-land in A. S. is planities.

JAMB, s. "Fr. Jambe,—the leg or shank, (extending from the knee to the ankle;) also (in Architecture) a corbel or pier, and the jamb or side post of a door, &c."—Cot. See GAMBAULD. Sp. Jambes.

JAMBEAUX, or GIAMBEUX, s. Boots or armour for the legs, (Fr. Jambes.) See GAMBAULD.

JANE, s. "A coin of (Janus) Genes. It is put for any small coin."—Tyrr.

JANE-OF-APES,* s. The female counterpart of Jack-an-apes, (qv.)

**Massinger*.

JANGLE, v. s. To make a dissonant

-ER. noise, to sound discordantly, to

-ING. talk or chatter idly; to paste

-ERESS.* much, fast, noisily; to wrangle,

-ERY.† to dispute or quarrel.

**Chaucer.* †Gower.

Fr. Jangl-er, erie, -eur. Perhaps of the same origin as gingle, or jingle; and app. to the noise, clattering dissonance of the voices of persons wrangling, or chattering idly. Inter-

JANITOR, s. A door-keeper.

From L. Janua, a door or gate.

JANIZARY, s. -IAN. "A greater strain of true and deep politics, than the institution of that famous order of Janizaries (of Amurath I.) will hardly be observed in any constitution. This consisted in the arbitrary choice of such christian children throughout their dominions, as were esteemed most fit for the emperor's pected service; and the choice was made by the shows or promises of the greatest growth or strength of body, vigour of constitution, and boldness of courage."—Sir W. Temple. "Let them be called janizaries (jung cheri, or new soldiers)."—Gibbon.

JANUARY, s. "The first [month] which is called January, was called after the name of Janus."—North. Plutarch.

L. Januarius.

JAPAN, v. s. To japan,—to varnish, to

-ESE. polish, as Japan-goods are var-

-NER. nished and polished.

So called from Japan, in the eastern part of Asia.

JAV

JAPE, v. s. Jape, s.—a trick, a jest. Jape, -er. s.—to jest; to cheat, to laugh at. -er. Japer, s.—a common jester or buffoon.—Tyrol.

The Fr. Japper is—to bark or bay like a dog, to yawl, to bawl.—Cot.

Jape (Jun.) is an insulting or outrageous vaunting and triumphing over them that are under our subjection. Islandis (he adds) Geip, est factatio; and this, Hickes thinks, is the same with A. S. Gip, jactantia; the v. is Gip-an, or Gylp-an, “to brag, to boast, to glory, to crake, to vaunt; also, to cry out, to geipe.”—Som. Jun. collects a number of passages to show the usages of the word; some of which express strongly the acknowledged resemblance between japeries and the tricks of an ape. Sk. derives from Fr. Gaber. See GAB, GIBBER, GIBB, JABBER; all of which seem to bear an affinity to Jape. Be—

JAR, v. s. -RING. To cause or utter a harsh, discordant sound, as from the shake or vibration of a somewhat solid substance struck, or moved; to vibrate harshly; to reverberate harshly. Met.—

To disagree; to be or cause to be at variance; to contest, to conflict, to dispute, to quarrel.

Sk. prefers Fr. Guerrroyer, which, among other things, signifies riser, to quarrel. Jun. thinks, that Jarre, litigiosè concertare, seems to come from A. S. Borra, gera, -ira; the v. is Borrian, (also Yr-ian), which Som. interprets to be angry, or yerra, and the pt. Borra, angry, yerry. (See JAGGER.) The word was, probably, app. to some discordant, dissonant noise.

JAR, v. s. A jar,—an earthen vessel; jarred fruit—fruit packed in such earthen vessel.

Fr. Jar-s; Sp. -ro, -ra; It. Giarro; ampulla, vitruvius. Men. derives from Gr. Yalov, vitruvius; thus-lytus, gylatus, glais, glarra. A jar is an earthen vessel; perhaps from ger-ed, earthen, or earthen, the past p. of A. S. Ger-ian, to ear, (qv.)

JARGON, v. s. -ING. To jargon, (as a bird,) in Gower, seems to be,—to utter inarticulate sounds.—Con. Am. b. 5.

Jargon, a language which either himself (the speaker) or his hearers understand not.—Cot. Unintelligible babble or talk; confused, incoherent chatter.

Fr. Jarg-onner, -on; It. Gerg-o, -one; Sp. Jargona, gerigona; all of which (says Lye.) together with the v. To jar, (qv.) seem to approach very nearly to A. S. Girran, garrive, (Ge-err-ian), to babble, prate, or chatter. Men. derives from Barbaricus, and his editor from Gracum. Sk.—from It. Chierico, lingua chiericorum, i. e. lingua claustrum, i. e. the L.—to the vulgar an unknown tongue, though obliged to hear prayers in it.

JASMINE, or JESSAMINE, s. A plant,—so called, because the bees delight in the flowers of it.—Mins.

Fr. Jasmin, or Jessemin; It. Gelsomino; Sp. Jasmin. Gr. Iasmon, ιασμινον μύρον, a kind of fragrant made from the flowers of the White Violet, (lov.) Martin says, that an apary or place for breeding bees was also called Jasme.

JASP, s. -ER. A precious stone.

Fr. Jasp-s; It. -Ido; L. Jaspis; Gr. Iaswis; Heb. Jaschpel.

JAVEL, s. To jarble, to wet, to bedew; as by walking in long grass after dew or rain.—Brookst. Jarbled, daggled.—Grose, North.—See Jewel, in Jamieson.

JEE

**Skelton*. Sir T. More. Spenser.

JAVELIN, s. A weapon of size between -INIER, the pike and the partisan.—-OTTIER. Cot. **Holland*.

Fr. Javeline, -ot; It. Giavelotto; Sp. Javalema, (which latter Delpino calls a boarpear, and Sk. thinks may be from Sp. Javal, a wild boar.) Spel. has gaveloc, baculi vel telli genus: Kilian, -gavelota. Fland. i. Javeline, tragula; and Benson, gafelucas, hastilla. Gaffak was a kind of dart (Jacull genus) among the ancient Suio-Goths; gaffas, also, in A. S. is fures, forks. Notwithstanding these resemblances javeline may be (as Mins. says) q. jaculus, from jaculari, to throw.

JAUNCE, v. In common usage,—to JAUNT, v. s. make short, flighty excursions; -Y. to flit to and fro; to move airily, -INESS. lightly, giddily about. And -ES. Janty, or Jaunty,—flirty or flustering; airy, light; moving lightly, airily. Sk.—strenuè ambulare, from Fr. Jancer, which, after Cot., he interprets,—to stir an horse in the stable till he swart (sweat) with all; or, Cot. adds, as our To Jaunt; (an old word.)

JAUNDICE, s. -ED. The yellowes (Mins.) which is an overflowing of the gall over the whole body.

Fr. Jaulotee, from jaune, yellow.

JAW, s. The jaw is the chaw, that which -ED. chaweth or cheweth.

-Y. To hold the jaw,—to keep the jaws still, the mouth shut; to hold the tongue; and hence To jaw, is—to talk much, (to jabber, qv.) volubly; more than enough, offensively. But see Jamieson, in v. Jaw.

Chaw, (qv.) from A. S. Cow-an, -ian, mandere, mandicare.

JAY, s. The bird so called.

Fr. Jay, geay, gay, gaton; D. Ka, kaa, kawn,—from the sound which it utters.—Sk. and Mins.

JEALOUS, ad. Emulous, invidious, suspicious; looking, observing, watching with envy, with suspicion; suspiciously watchful or vigilant, apprehensive, wary, careful or cautious. “Jealousy is a painful apprehension of rivalry in cases that are peculiarly interesting to us.”—Cogan.

Jealousy, (It. Gelosia; Fr. Jalousie), “a lattice window, or grate to look through,” (Cot.)—is in current speech.

Fr. Jalous; It. & Sp. Gelosio; L. Zelot-ypus, zelus. Zelus, (Voas.) from Xe-av, fervere, to warm, to glow; because it is properly that warmth or fervour of mind, which is distinguished in emulation or rivalry: It is then extended to—invidious, suspicious, rivalry; to the suspicion of rivalry; to envy at the rivalry of another, at the good success of another. See ZEAL. Un—

JEER, v. s. To jeer, (agreeably to the -ER. etym. of Jun.) is—

-ING. To speak provokingly, tauntingly, -INGLY. scoffingly; to utter provoking, taunting jests; to taunt, to scoff, to mock, or make a mock of. See SCORN.

Sk.—probably from Ger. Scheeren; cons. vex are dictis et factis contumeliosis; lit. scindere, seare, (A. S. Sceyr-an, to shear,) to cut, to divide; the met. (Wach. has no doubt) derived—à tonsard et vegetatione servili ad contumeliam liberi hominis. Jun. says, —to sear or geer, and geery, are A. S. Borra, from corrian, or corolan, ge-croian, geyrilan, irritate, to provoke.

JEJUNE, ad. Empty, and therefore
-LY. hungry; empty, void, vacant, des-
-NESS. titute, poor, barren.—Bentley.
-ITY.* L. Jejunus, which Martin. derives from Gr. Kexo-ai, evacuare, to empty; for he is jejune, whose belly is empty of food.

JELLY, s. Any thing concreted or coagulated into a viscous substance, (as if con-gealed.) See GELLY.

JENNET. See GENETT.

JENNETING, s. Said to be a corruption of Juncting; the name proper to certain apples, because they ripen in June.

JEOPARD, v. To risk, to be or place in
-Y. a state of uncertainty, to hazard,
-OUS. to endanger, to emperil.
-OUSLY. Written Jupartie by Chaucer, and
-IZE, s.* Jubardy by Sir T. More.
-LESS.* Chaucer. † Udal.

Sk. says,—Jeopardy, periculum, qd. Fr. Jay perdu, lit. I have lost; or as T. H. prefers, Jeu perdu, a lost game. Jun. suspects it to be a word originating among gamblers, risking every thing upon the hazard of a die, and at every chance of the table exclaiming, Jeu perdu! Tyrw. rather believes it to be a corruption of jeu parti. A jeu parti is properly a game in which the chances are exactly even: hence it signifies any thing uncertain or hazardous. Jeu parti is in Low L. Jocus partitus; so said, when the power is given to any one of choosing one of two things proposed to him.—Du Cange.

JERK, v. s. To hit or strike, to throw, to -ER. take away, with a quick, short mo-
-ING. tion or action; with a sudden, smart blow.

Sk. thinks—à sono dictum; Jun. (who writes it Yerk) thinks it has a strong affinity with Irksome. Lye doubts whether from A. S. v. Ge-racc-an, corrigere, animadvertere; to correct or punish.—Som. May it not be from Jar, v. with augmenting suffix, ic (eks),—jaric, jark, perk? See JAN.

JERKIN, s. A short, close coat.
Sk.—from A. S. Cyrtekin, tunica, a dim. of Cyrtel, a tunic. See KIRTLE.

JESS, s. “Jesses are short straps of leather tied about the foot of a hawk, by which she is held on the fist.”—Hanmer.
Fr. Gels; It. Gelli; Low L. Jacti; so called—quia cum eis jactantur falcones et emittuntur ad prædam.—See MEN.

JESSAMINE. See JASMINE.

JEST, s. v. To jest,—to play or perform, -ER. merry or laughable tricks; to utter
-ING. laughable sayings; to do or say
-INGLY. things invented or feigned, for gamesome purposes, with mirthful or playful intention.

In our old dramatic writers, To jest, is—to play or act a part in a Mask.

Sk. prefers L. Gesticulari; and Jun., who decides for Gestus, observes that Italians say, Gestare, Gesteigiare, and Gesticolare, for Gesticulari, which the Eng. expound,—to mock a man by gesturing, or by moving his countenance, hand, or other parts of the body ridiculously, and to the prejudice of him whom he intendeth to mock at.

JESUIT, s. “A priest of the society of
-ESS. Jesus. An order of religious men
-ICAL. established by Loyola, a Spanish
-ICALLY. soldier. They pretend to fol-
-ISM. low exactly the footsteps of our
-ED.* blessed Saviour, whose name they have usurpt. At first they gained to themselves the people’s esteem by their tolerable carriage: but now they are generally hated and feared, because of their devilish maxims, their bold enterprises, and secret intrigues.”
—Cot. **Milton*.

A Jesuit is, in English usage, an intriguer; a crafty, subtle designer or plotter.
Fr. Jésuite; Sp. -s; It. Gesuita.

JET, s. -TY. A fossil, (wood coal.) “The geat, which otherwise we call gagates, carrieth the name of a towne and river both in Lycia, called Gages.”—Holland. Phin.
Fr. Jact, gagate; L. Gagates; Gr. Γαγάτης.

JET, v. To throw out or project, to shoot
-TEE. body; to throw out or shake, (sc. the -TEAU. body in walking;) to strut along.
-TING. Jet, or Jetteau, or Jette-d’eau,—a water-spout.

The jet of an argument,—see GIST.

Fr. Jetter; L. Jacere, to throw; hence a jetty, any thing thrown out or projecting.—Sk. See TO JUT.

JETSAM. See FLOTSAM.

JEWEL, s. Used as a general name for -LER. precious stones, or any ornament
-LERY. in which they may be set or placed.
Fr. Joy-as; Sp. -a, -el; It. Gio-ja, gioiello; L. Juw-el; Ger. -el. Wach. from Gr. κερασμα, aliquid repositum, any thing laid up, stored, or precious or valuable; and he thinks Low L. Joculka, qd. Jogalia, is a manifest imitation of the Ger. Salmasius (see MEN.) says,—the ancient Latins called every thing Joculum, from whence one could receive pleasure.

JEWISE, s. Judgment, punishment.
Either of L. Judicium, or Fr. Justice.—Tyrw.

JEW’S-HARP, s. -TRUMP. Perhaps a
Jeu-trompe, a Jew-harpe,—a play-trump, a play harp. Jaw-harp.

JEZEBEL, s. “A jezebel (so called by the neighbourhood from displaying her pernicious charms at her window) appeared constantly dress’d at her sash, and had a thousand little tricks and fooleries to attract the eyes of all the idle young fellows in the neighbourhood.”—Spectator.

JIB, v. “In changing tacks, they have only occasion to shift or jib round sail.”—Cook.

JIB-CRACK,* s. Perhaps Gim-crack, (qv).—**Beau. & F.*

JIBE,* Also written Gibe, (qv.)
**Holland*.

JIBLET, s. i. e. Giblet, (qv.)

JIG, s. s. Jig, in F. Beaumont, app. to a -GRT, v. piece of low humour, a farce:—-GRT. "A jigge shall be clapt at."
-MAKER. Jigging fools, in Shak. (Julius -CÆSAR, Caesar,)—silly poets; jig denoting a metrical composition, as well as a dance.

Jiggumbob,—another name (says Butler) for trinkets, or jimcracks.

See Gio, (conjectured to be from A. S. Gag-gan, to go.)

JIG-A-JOG, av. From Jog, qd. Jog-jog, or cheek-a-jog. Cheek-by-jowl is sometimes written Jig-by-jowl. See Jog.

JILL, s. (See GILL.) Supposed by Ray to be a nick-name for Julia or Juliana. Jill-firt,—a flirting jill.

JILT, s. s. App. to—A woman who beguiles, or by her wiles allures, a man to love her; and then again beguiles or deceives him.

Jilt derives from the Isl. Gilla, amoribus circumvenire; which in Sw. is Gylla, to deceive, and in Eng. Guile, or Wile, (qv.) Jilt is, probably, Guilt, (g pronounced soft.)

JINGLE. As often written Gingle, (qv.)

JIVES. Also written Gives, (qv.)

JOB, v. s. -BER. To job,—lit. to strike, ("to peck and job with their beaks;"—Holland. "Pecking and jobbing at the fruit;"—North) a usage still common in vulgar speech.

A job of work,—a stroke of work; a portion of work struck off and done with; and To job will further be,—

To do such stroke of work. And a job will further be, (by force of customary application,)—

A stroke or piece of mean dirty work. To job, and a jobber, have the same application.

Serenius derives from Ger. Hieb, ictus, a blow, a stroke, from Ger. Hawwen; A. S. Heaw-ian, to hew. Jog and Shog appear the same word differently written: and Chop and Job may differ only in the change of c into j, and p into its cognate b. To chop is to strike off a chip; to strike off. And thus, in either case, To job may be explained as above.

JOBBER-NOWL, s. A jobbernowl is a thick, hard head or knoll, a block or logger-head; a knoll or head that will bear knocking, beating, or striking.

Jobber may be from Job. Sk. composes the word of the D. Jobbe, stupid, sluggish. Grose writes Jabber-knowl,—a prating blockhead.

JOCKEY, v. s. -SHIP. Supposed to be from Jock, or Jack, used gen. as a name for a boy or lad,—especially one who rides at races. As jockeys became celebrated for their cleverness in outwitting their rivals, To jockey was used as equivalent to,—

To outwit, to overreach, to manœuvre, to trick.

JOCUND, ad. Delighted, pleased, mirthful. -LY. ful or merry, gay, jovial.

-NESS. It. Giocondo; Sp. Jocundo; L. Jocundus, jucundus, from Jocus, and this from Juvar, i. e. oblectare;—or Jucundus, immediately from Jutum, past p. of Juware, to delight.—Voss.

JOG, v. s. To shake or shock; to hit by -GING. a shake, (sc. of the arm, &c.); to -GLE, v. move by a shake, by successive shakes, or shocks; to move, to go on or proceed at the slow pace of a shaking trot; to move slowly.

D. & Ger. Shocken; Sw. Skaka; A. S. Seac-an, to shake, or shock, or shog, or jog.

JOIN, v. To unite, to combine, to couple, -DER. to connect, to associate, to coalesce, to confederate, to concur, to cohere; to come in close contact.

JOINT, v. s. ad. To joint, is (sometimes) used as equivalent to, To disjoint, or separate the joint.

-URE, v. s. Jointure, (in Law,)—a joint estate.

JUNCTION. -URE. Juncture, met.—an union, a combination of important, critical circumstances at the same moment.

Fr. Joindre; It. Giungere; Sp. Junlar; L. Jung-ere, to put, place, or bring together. Jungo, à jupo, n inserto; and jugo, à γρ-ειν.—See Voss. and also Scheidius in Lenæp. In A. S. Geoc, is Jugum, a yoke; and it is (Tooke) the past tense and past p. of the A. S. v. Ge-ic-an, (A. S. ic-an, Eng. Eke,) addere, adjicere, aug-ere, jung-ere; to add (sc. one thing to another,) to increase, (sc. one thing by the addition of another,) to join; and Jung, in Jung-ere, may be composed of Ge-on, to or ig, eked into one; equivalent to Ge-an-ede, adunatus. Ad-Con-Dis-En-In-Re-Se-Sub-Un-

JOIST, s. The beams, secondary beams, e. g. of a flooring, of a roof.

Either (Sk.) from Fr. Joindre, to join, or from Fr. Ajuster, to adjust, to adapt, to fit; because they are fitted together in the joints.

JOKE, v. s. To say or do any thing -ER. mirthfully or merrily, playfully, sportively, jestingly, waggishly.

JOCOSE. It. Giocoso, -lare; Sp. Jocoso; L. Jocus, from Juvar, i. e. oblectare, to delight. See JOCUND and JUGLE.

-ULAR. -ULAR-Y. -ITY. -LY.

JOLE. See JOUL.

JOLE,* or JOLL, v. i. e. To jolt, (qv.)

**Beau. & F. North*.

JOLLY, ad. v. Cons.—Happy, joyous, -ILY. mirthful; full of mirth and gladness; cheerful; full of, fond of -INESS. -ITY. good cheer; and, as a further consequence,—well fed, growing

-Y-HEAD,† fat. -IMENT,‡ *G. Fletcher. †Gower. ‡Spenser. Fr. Joli; It. Giulivo, which Men. derives from Jocus; thus, Jocus, joculus, jocivitus, jocivitas, giulivo. Sk. and Jun. from Jovial, (qv.)

JOLLY-BOAT. See YAWL.

JOLT, v. s. To shake or shock; com. app. to—the action of a carriage on a rugged road.

Jolt-head,—perhaps from Jowl, (qv.) and head.

Perhaps, by the omission of the guttural g, from Joggie, the dim. of Jog, (qv.) Joggi-ed, jolt-ed, jolt'd, jolt. Re-

JORDEN, s. An utensil for the chamber, &c.

Not, (says Sk. who writes it Jurden), as at first blush it might seem, from the river Jordan, qd. urinae alveus; but from the A. S. Gor, filth, and den, cubile, a couch; and, in a secondary sense, —any receptacle. Tyrw. (upon Chaucer) observes, this word is in Walsingham:—dum oile, quas jordanus vocamus, ad ejur; (i. e. a pretended astrologer's,) collum colligantur. Holinshed calls them two Jorden-pots.

JORUM, s. Mr. Brocket says, "Jorum,—a pot or jug. Chaucer has Jordane, and Shak., Jorden." See JORDEN, above.

JOSSA, int. Jossa seems (Tyrw.) to be partly formed from the Fr. Ca; come hither. *Chaucer.

JOSTLE. See JUSTLE.

JOT, s. A point, an iota.

From the name of the Gr. letter i. The word probably was introduced into the Go. and A. S. with the version of the Gospels. In Matt. v. 18, the Go. version renders iota, jota; the A. S., prica, a prick; i. e. a prick or dot.

JOVIAL, ad. Pertaining to Jove; cons.

-IALLY. —fortunate or felicitous, happy,

-IALIST. joyous, mirthful; full of mirth

-IALNESS. and gladness; fond of good

-IALLY. cheer.—*Beau. & F.

-Y. Sk. says, "Jovialis, sc. sub Jove imito, ut nuntantur Astrologi, sydere natus. L. Jovialis, ad *Jove*m pertinens. Veneria et Jovialis stella, i. e. planeta Veneris et Jovis. "Fr. Jovial, sanguine, born under the planet Jupiter."

JOURNAL, ad. s. A diurnal, (qv.); a

-IST. day-book or diary; a register kept

-ISE, v. of daily occurrences; of circum-

-ARY. stances or transactions under the day they occurred; gen.—a register.

Journal, ad.—diurnal or daily.

*Warburton.

Fr. Journal; It. Giornale; Sp. Jornal; L. Diurnum, the book in which the proceedings of each day in the Roman Senate were entered; from Dies, a day. Fr. Jour; It. Giorno. Ad- Re- So-journ.

JOURNEY, v. s. -ING. In Chaucer, (Knight's Tale),—a day's travel, or the distance of a day's travel; (Rom. of R.)—a day's work. It is now app. to—

A travel, or passing from place to place (by land), without restriction of time.

A journey-man, (Fr. Journalier), formerly,—one who worked by the day. Journey-work,—daily-work.

Fr. Journee; It. Giornata; Sp. Jornada. "A day or whole day, also a day of battle, or the battle itself; also, a day's work or labour; a day's journey or travel."—Cot. See JOURNAL. Ad- Re-journ.

JOUST. See JUST.

JOWL, or JOULE, s. Also written Choule, (qv.); and, by Howell, Geoules.

It is app. as Sk. remarks, not only to the head, but the oesophagus, or gullet.

Jowler,—the name of a dog, magno capite præditus.—Sk.

Fr. Gueule: It. & Sp. Gola; L. Gula, the gullet or throat. Howell writes evidently, "if derived through the Fr. from the L.; but we have in A. & Coole, the jaw, i. e. chaw. "Geoules, the jowl," (Lye)—perhaps the chawels or choules.

JOY, v. s. To joy, is—To enjoy; to have,

-FUL. possess, use with gladness, with

-FULLY. pleasure or delight; to take

-FULNESS. delight or pleasure in; also, to

-LESS. cause delight or pleasure, to

-LESSNESS. please, to gladden, to delight

-OUS. Spenser. †W. Browne.

JUBILEE, s. Cot. calls it—A year of

-ANT. releasing, liberty, rejoicing. It

-ATION. is app. gen. to—

Any time or period of joy, or gladness, or festivity.

Jubilant, and Jubilatio, from the L. Jubilans, and Jubilatio,—shouting or calling aloud; (see Jubilare, in Voss.) but app. as if from Jubilee,—shouting, calling aloud, singing, as in triumph.

Fr. Jubiler; Sp. -eo; It. Giubileo; Low L. Jubilans; from the Heb. יובל, which (Josephus says) means liberty.—Antiq. iii. 12.

JUCUNDITY, s. Pleasantness, delightfulness.—*Brown.

L. Jucunditas. See JOCUND.

JUDAIZE, v. "To judaize it,—play the

-ISM. Jew, live after the manner of the

-IZER. Jews."—Cot.

-IC-AL. Fr. Judaizer,—from Judah.

-ALLY.

JUDASLY, av. i. e. As treacherously,

Judas betrayed Christ.—*Tyndall.

JUDGE, v. s. Formerly written Jug.

-MENT. Jugement, by Wiclif, Chaucer.

-ER. Gower.

-SHIP. To deem or doom; to have, hold, or give sentence or opinion; to sentence, to decide, to determine, to discern, to distinguish.

"For wit lying most in the assembling of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures, and agreeable visions in the fancy; judgment, on the contrary, lies quite on the other side, in selecting carefully ideas one from another, wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude, and by affinity to take one thing for another."—Locke.

"When we give our assent to a mathematical axiom; or when, after perusing the demonstration of a theorem, we assent to the conclusion; or, in general, when we pronounce concerning the truth or falsity of any proposition, or the probability or improbability of any event, the power by which we are enabled to perceive what is true or false, probable or improbable, is called by logicians the faculty of judgment."—Severat.

Fr. Juger; It. Giudicare; Sp. Juzgar; L. Judicare, quod jus dicatur. Judex, quod jus dicat secundum potestatem, id est, quibusdam verbis dicere solent. —Far. l. 5. Ad. Mis. Pre. Re. Un.

JUDICABLE, ad. Judicable,—that can -ATIVE or may be judged. See JUDGE.
-ATORY, ad. s. Judicial,—of or pertaining to -ATURE a judge, or to that over which -IAL, s. ad. a judge has power or authority.
-LALLY.
-LARY. Judicious,—able to judge; -IOUS skilful, prudent, sagacious in judgment; forming a sound judgment; discerning, discriminating clearly.

These words are immediately from L. Judicium, -ialis, -arius; Fr. -iel, -taire, -teux; It. Giudiciale, -iale, -ario, -ioso; Sp. Judicial, -icioso. Di. Pre-judicate. Extra-judicial, Indicium.

JUG, s. s. -INGO. The note uttered by the nightingale. Most probably formed from the sound.

JUG, s. A vessel so named, because, perhaps, it contained the double of some smaller measure.

In A. S. Cæc, is a basin, pitcher, or other like vessel.—Som. And from Cæc, Sk. is inclined to derive the Eng. Jug. Jun. from A. S. Juc-tan, to juc; to join, to add.

JUGGLE, v. s. To guile, to cheat, to -ER impose upon, to deceive, to delude; -INGO to practise delusion; to give a false colour or appearance to; and, as the Sp. Jugar de manos, to play with the hand, to play tricks with the hand.

Jogelour,—(in the "old Boke" from Le-lund written Jocular.)—a character, as Warton observes, often confounded or made the same with the Minstrell, is in Low L. Joculator, or Jogulator; i. e. minus, scurra, (Du Cange), a mimic or buffoon; and is supposed to be derived from the L. Jocus. But there does not appear any sufficient reason for separating the minus from the artist in legerdemain, or assigning a different origin to their names. "Minstrales and eke jogelours that well to sing did her praise. . . . As jogelours plaient at this festes globe."—Chaucer.

Fr. Jongler; It. Giocolare; Sp. Jugar de manos; Ger. Gaucheien, Jückien; D. Guicheien, and gocheien; most probably from the A. S. Ge-wigian, to guile, to beguile. (See GUILE.) Som. interprets Wigien,—to juggle, to use sorcery, to cast a mist before; and Ge-wigian, deceit, juggling. Jun. she thinks Jugler may be referred to Wiglen, which Som. too interprets—a juggler.

JUGULAR, ad. s. The two throat or neck veins. Fr. Veines jugulaires.

JUICE, s. The moisture or liquor contained in plants, fruits; in vegetable and animal substances.

-LESS. Fr. Jus; It. Sugo; Sp. Xugo, jugo, from L. Succus, from Sug-ere, to suck; that which we suck.

Latin Jus. broth &c

JULEP, s. Cot. and Holland (with little difference of arrangement) call it—

A drink made either of distilled waters and syrups mixed together, or of a decoction sweetened with honey or sugar, or else mingled with syrups, and ministered com. as a preparative to open the passage of the inward parts, and to fit the humours for a purgation. Milton applies it to—

A pleasant, and, at the same time, exhilarating drink.

Fr. Julep; It. Giol-eppo, -ebbo; Sp. Julepe; Bar. L. Julepus, i. e. water sweetened and thickened with much sugar.—Sk.

JULY, s. "Cæsar, the Dictator, was borne at Rome upon the fourth day before the Ides of Quintilis, which month, after his death, was by virtue of the Law Antonia called for that cause, Julie."—Holland.

July-flower,—see GILLIFLOWER.

JUMBLE, v. s. -INGO. Chaucer writes Jombre,—"Ne iombre eke no discordant thing yfere;" and Sir T. More, Jumper; the one equivalent to Jumble, the other, to Jump, (qv.)

Cons.—To toss, throw or shake up together—in a (confused) heap; to mingle or confound together.

Probably from Fr. Combler, (L. Cumulare), to heap up, to throw up in a heap or mass; or rather a dim. of Jump.

JUMP, v. s. ad. A jump is performed by -ER, v. s. first depressing the haunches, -INGLY and bending the knees and ankle-bones, and then springing upwards by the reaction of the bended joints.

To jump, met.—to come or go at a jump, i. e. suddenly, hastily, without seeing the ground to alight upon, at a risk or venture; and thus, cons., to risk, to venture.

To jump together,—to concur, to coincide; to fall in with. "Let vs see how his diffinition of the church and hys heresies, will imper and agree together."—Sir T. More.

D. & Ger. Gumpfen, saltare, exillire; and in Sw. Gump, nates, clunes; Gumpa, cursitare, nates jactando. Sk. suggests Gup, (without the m), from go-up.

JUNCATE, or JUNKET, v. s. -KETING. To go a-juncating, in some parts of England, is still merely to go and partake of a juncate. The word is extended to any delicacy or feasting; to a festive entertainment. And To junket,—

To feast, or treat with a feast.

It. Giuncata; Fr. Jonchée; milk or cream cheese, so called because carried intra viminea juncæa. (It. Giunco; Fr. Jonec, a rush.)—Men.

*Uvarogean 80
"Jump with that of Saturn"*

Quia in junculis calathis circumfertur.—Sk. Cot. calls it a green cheese, or fresh cheese made of milk without any rennet, and served in a frill of green rushes. The It. Felciola, is also a name given to a kind of cheese served in the leaves of the fern, (felce.)

JUNE, s. The month so called.

Fr. Juin; It. Giugno; Sp. Junio; L. Junius. Voss. produces three etyma., giving the preference to no one of the three; first, (from Var.) Junioribus; secondly, Junone; and thirdly, Jun-gendo.

JUNIOR, s. ad. Younger.

L. Junior, contracted from juenior, the comparative of Juvenis, young.

JUNIPER, s. The tree so called; "because as his first berries be ripe, it bringeth forth younger and junior berries to them."

—Mins.

Fr. Genévre; It. Ginebro; Sp. Enebro; L. Juniperus, from junior, and parere, to bring forth.—Voss.

JUNK, s. A large ship of burden, of common use in the Indies.

Sp. Junco; It. Giunco. Unless, (Sk.) which is very probable, the word be of Indian origin, I should derive it, with Mins., either from L. Juncus, because this ship resembles a rush, (longa caudâ juncum æmulatur), or—à jungendo.

JUNK, s. App. to—A piece of some length and thickness.

The word is com. used by shipwrights to express remnants of cables cut into small pieces, which, after having been untwisted, are app. to various uses—for mats, calking ships, &c.

Perhaps from the preceding Junk.

JUNTO, or JUNCTO, s. A band or knot of people; a combination or confederacy.

Sp. Junto, from L. Junctus, joined.

JUR,* v. s. i. e. To jar, (qv.)

To strike harshly against.—**Holland.*

JURATE,* s. Any one sworn, sc. to give evidence, to administer justice, &c.

**Sir T. Elyot. Berners.*

L. Jura-re, -sum, to swear.

JURIDICAL, ad. Of or pertaining to

-IDICALLY. the administration of the

-ISDICTION. law; to courts of law or

-ISDICTIVE. justice.

-ISPRUDENCE. Jurisdiction, Fr.—authority

-ISPRUDENT. or power to administer jus-

-IST. tice, and execute the laws.

Jurisprudence, Fr.—the skill or knowledge of laws.

Fr. Jurid-que; It. & Sp. -eo; L. Juridicus, -ialis; Jus, juris, and dicere, to declare the law, to administer justice.

JUROR, s. Juror.—one who swears.

JURY. Jury, (Fr. Juriée),—the collective

-MAN. body of jurors.

A juror, or jury,—summoned to try,—is either common or special. A grand juror, or jury, is summoned to inquire. When a jury is summoned to try the verdict of a jury, the former is then also called grand; the latter, petit or petty.

From Jurare, to swear. Ab- Ad- Con- Per-jure.

JUST, ad. av. Commanded, ac. by the -ICE. laws of God; by the laws of

-ICER. human authorities acting in

-ICIARY. conformity to those of God,

-IFY, v. as manifested in the nature

-IFIABLE. of man. And, cons.—our the law which they make by composition for multitudes and politique societies of men to be guided by; the law which belongeth unto each nation; the law that concerneth

the fellowship of all; and lastly, the law which God himselfe hath supernaturally revealed." It is equivalent, in common speech, to—

Equitable, honest, righteous, upright, fair, virtuous, incorrupt.

Any thing may be said to be just, which is conformable to or consistent with established enactment or usage; proportionate or adapted to usual standard; and there-

K E G

JUVENILE, ad. -ILITY. Young, youthful.

Fr. Juven-ile; Sp. -il; It. Giovante; L. Juvenilis, which Voss. derives from juvare; aptus ad juvandum. Re-juvenescence.

JUXTA-POSITED, pt. -ION. Put or placed near to; set, situated, or stationed, near to.

K.

K is a letter (or literal character) which (as B. Jonson observes) the Latins never acknowledged; in the word Kalends they borrowed it. We sound it as the Gr. K; and as a necessary letter it may precede and follow all vowels with us; it goes before no consonants but n, (as in knave, knell, knot, &c.) and l, with the quiet e, after it, (as in mickle, pickle, &c.) See C.

KALE, s. Kail, written by Milton Keal, known by the common name of Cole, or Colewort. See JAMIESON.

A. S. Cayl, cayl-wort; D. Kool; Ger. Kol; Dan. Kaal; Fr. Chou; It. Coli; Sp. Col; L. Caulis; Gr. Kashev.

KALENDS, s. KALENDAR, v. s. Also written Calends and Calendar, (qv.)

The first days of each month.

Gower uses Kalende for the first day of the season; Chaucer gen. the first day, the commencement or beginning. "But now of hope the kalendes begin."—Troilus. "Octobre, welche bringeth the kalende of winter."—Con. A.

KAM, ad. Ruddiman has "Camy, crooked." And see KIM-KAM, and CAMOUR.—Shak.

KANTELED. See CANTEL.—Grafton.

KARVEL. See CARVEL.—Beau. & F.

KAW, s. More commonly written Caw, (qv.) Vox a sono ficta.

KECK, v. To cough, as if sick or about to vomit; to heave the stomach, -KEK.† to cast or throw up (from the stomach).—Bacon. Milton. †Holland.

D. Kuecher; Ger. Keuchen; to cough. All named from the sound, (sc. of a heaving stomach).—See Wash. and Sh.; and see TO KICK.

KEDGE, s. An anchor used by a small Dutch vessel, called a kedge,—kaghe; perhaps from the A. S. Cægg-ian. See KEG.

KEECH, s. "A keech (says Mr. Steevens) is the fat of an ox rolled up by the butcher into a round lump," or rather cake, which is, perhaps, the same word, (by the same change as in Brake and Breech.)

463

In Hen. VIII. the word is app. to Wolsey, (with singular propriety—Steevens), because he was the son of a butcher.

KEEL, s. The bottom of a ship: the -AGE. timber that extends at the bottom -SON. from stem to stern. The vessels employed in collieries are still named keels; the men who work them, keelers or keelmen.

Keelage is the duty imposed on and paid by a ship coming into port.

Kelsine, (written Kelson, or Keelson;) Chapman so renders the Gr. ἱεροδοκν, which some think was a case wherein the mast was repositied;—others, nothing but a piece of wood against which it was reared.

D. Kiel; Ger. Keil and keel; Sw. Koel; Dan. Kiol; A. S. Cool, cale; Fr. Quille; Sp. Quilla. Som. says—a ship, a small bark or other vessel. The keel or bottom of a ship. Gr. Κοίλη; L. Celos. All from their hollowness, (κοίλος.) The word is clearly Northern, but see Wach. Men. and Sh.

KEEN, ad. Keen, app. to the mind, is, -LY. Cunning; i. e. knowing, very know-NESS. ing, quick, sharp at knowing, seeing, perceiving, or understanding. Gen.—

Sharp, acute, quick, piercing, penetrating, biting, or bitter.

The A. S. Cene is explained by Som.—"warlike, stout, courageous, valiant, bold, fierce, keen." It is from A. S. Cennan, to ken.

KEEP, v. s. To have or hold in pos--ER. session; to contain, to confine, -ERSHIP. or shut up; to detain, to stop or -ING. stay; to retain, to maintain, to sustain or support.

To observe, to regard, to attend to, to heed; to preserve, to protect, to guard.

The s. is app. to the chief strong-hold of an ancient castle—as the keep of Windsor.

A. S. Cep-an, kep-an; (Ce-hab-an?) D. Kepen, for which our etymologists (needlessly) refer to the Gr. K.βερν, a bag. It is used as equivalent to some derivatives from L. Tenere, and Servare, and has applications consequential from them. Un-

KEG, s. That in which fish or liquors are shut up and confined.—Tooke. See KEDGE.

Drayton seems to apply it to lumps or pieces (short and thick, perhaps like a keg, the vessel): "The sturgeon cut to hegga."

KER

<sup>1</sup> From A. S. Cagg-gian, to shut up or confine.
Dan. Kegge.

KEIGHT,* i. e. Caught.—Spenser.

KELE,* v. To cool or chill; met. to allay, to appease, to damp, to calm, to moderate, to assuage, to temper. "While greasie Jone doth keele the pot."—Shak.

**Chaucer. Gower. Milton.*

A. S. Kel-an, to cool or kele; Ger. Kul-en; D. Kuilt-en; Sw. Kol-a.

KELL, s. KELD, i. e. Cawl. In Drayton, keld-feet is equivalent to web-feet.

KELP, s. A plant; the ashes of the plant. May not Gilp, Kilp, or Kelp, be that which is thrown or cast upon the shore by the sea? From A. S. Gilp-an, to boast, to talk idly, jactare; in its literal sense, to throw or cast up.

KELTER,* s. Sk. says: He is not yet in Kelter, nondum est in procinctu, nondum est paratus; he is not yet in readiness, he is not yet prepared; without doubt from the Dan. Op-killer, kilten, to gird on, to gird. (And see Serenius and Jamieson.) Mr. Brocket says,—

Frame, order, condition.—**Barrow*.

KEMB, v. i. e. Comb, (qv.) Chaucer uses it, gen. as equivalent to deck'd. Un-

KEMELIN,* s. Sax. a tub.—Tyrw. Kimmel, or kemlin, a powdering tub.—Grose. See also Sk.—**Chaucer*.

KEN, or KON, v. The primary meaning KENNING, or of Ken is (probably) to see.

KONNING. To see, to view, to survey; to know, to perceive, to discern, to distinguish; to cause to know; to learn, to teach.

Kenning, or konning; i. e. cunning; knowledge, perception, discernment.

Go. Kunnan; A. S. Cennan; Sw. Kanna; D. & Ger. Kennen; Dan. Kiender. Ihre says,—to experience by the senses, to feel; sensibus experiri, sentire: it is spoken of all the senses, imprimis, of the smell, as the Fr. Sentir. Wach. says, first,—scire, posse, (to know, to understand,) sive intellectu, sive usu et experientia; secondly,—posse, valere, to be able; a sense or signification, he remarks, transferred from knowledge to power. See CAN. Un-

KENNEL, s. App. to—the gutters in streets to carry off the water.

Fr. Chenal,—a channel (qv.) or gutter.

KENNEL, v. s. App. to—the place where dogs are kept; and to the pack or collection of dogs kept there.

Jun. says, Cennel, or kennel,—Canile, latibulum vel tugurium caninum. Fr. Chenil, chenin; It. Canile, which is from canis, as agnia, boatie, &c. (from agn, bovis), a place for lambs, a place for oxen. Un-

KERCHIEF, s. Lit.—A cover for the —EFT. head; a veil for the head, and an —ER.* article of dress similar to such veil, —ERED.† but used for other purposes; and hence the compounds, Hand-kerchief, Neck-kerchief. In Dryden,—The wearer of a kerchief.

KEX

Kercher is a slovenly or corrupt pronunciation of Kerchief.

**North. *G. Fletcher.*

Fr. Couvre-chef, a kerchief.—Col. Written by R. Brunne, Kovercheff; by Chaucer, Covercheffe. (See COVER.) Jun. says, "Corchief,—a cover for the head; it seems formed of Couvre-chef."

KERN, s. -ISH. App. gen. to—Clowns, boors, clownish peasantry.

Sk.—"Unless the word be (as it is very probable) of Irish origin, I should derive it from the A. S. Cyrran; D. Keeren; Ger. Kehren; to turn; (see CHURN;) since they, the most nimble of all men, turn and twist their limbs this way and that with the utmost facility."

KERN, v. That which is surrounded or —EL. inclosed, sc. in a shell or other —ELLY. envelope; that which has resemblances in form or in taste, or in other qualities, to those of the kernels of fruit, sc. certain concretions in the flesh.

To kern,—to granulate, to form into corns or grains, or small kernels.

From the A. S. Cirnel, glandula; D. Karne, kerne; Ger. Kern; Dan. Kiærne; Fr. Cerneau, perhaps, (Sk.) from Cerne, a circle or round. The Fr. Cerner, to round, compass, wheel about, is from the A. S. Cyrran, vertere, convertere, to turn, to turn round.

KERSE, s. A. S. Cerse, or carse, water-cresses. "He raught not a kern."—Chaucer. He cared not a rush, (says Tyrw.) i. e. He cared not a creis. Kers, by transposition of letter r, is now written Cress. In this old expression, "He raught (or cared) not a kerse,"—Kerse has been changed in common speech into Curse.

KERSEY, s. A kind of cloth.

D. Karsaye, kerseye, karserye; Fr. Craieße, carize; Sp. Carisea; either carise, and say, (a stuff), or from the Island of Jersey, (Gersay), formerly, perhaps, famous for this kind of cloth. —Sk.

KERVE, v. i. e. Carve, (qv.) So written —ER. by Chaucer, Gower, Chapman, &c. —ING. A kerf, (Holland)—a cut, an incision.

KEST,* i. e. Cast, (qv.)

**Turbevile. Spenser.*

KESTRELL, s. Also written Kastrel and Castrel. This species of hawk is also called stannel or wind-hoer.

Fr. Quercelle, corcerelle, perhaps, says Sk. from Circulus, because it expands its wings in the form of a fan; or from the shape of its tail.

KETCH,* i. e. Catch.—**Beau. & F.*

KETCH, s. A small ship of burden, perhaps from the Fr. Caisse, a chest or tub; or from the It. Caicchio, of the same meaning.

KETTLE, s. -DRUM. A concave or hollow vessel, a measure of liquids.

A. S. Cett, ceitil; D. & Sw. Ketel; Ger. Kessel, Dan. Kedel. Martin.—from Kotteln, vasculum concavum, mensura liquidorum.

KEX, s. Hemlock was so called. Also,—a dry, a hollow stem. Fr. Ciguë; L. Cicuta.

*Keith—name of a Scotch family
Keith says derived from Catti
"german tribe mentioned by Caesar."
Keith name as Chatti*

KEY, s. That by which doors, &c. are confined and fastened. And (usually written Quay)—That by which water is confined and shut out.

But as the key which locks or shuts will also unlock or open, key is app. (met.) to—

That which opens, discloses or discovers, makes known, makes clear, or explains.

Key-stone of an arch,—the central stone.

A. S. Cæg, cage, clavis. A key (or quay) for ships: D. Kaeye; Ger. Kay; Fr. Quay; from A. S. Cæg-gian, to shut up, to confine.—Tooke.

KIBE, s. A chap or opening (in the con-
-ED. tinuity of the skin).—Skelton.

-Y.* Sk. derives from the Ger. Kirben, (the r being dropped euphonis gratia,) to carve or cut. A. S. Ceorf-an. It is more probably the same word as Chap or gap, an opening.

KICK, s. v. Anciently Kike. To throw
-ER. out, (sc. the foot;) to strike, to hit,
-ING. with the foot; (met.) to throw off, or back with the spirit of a kicking horse.

Sk. says,—from Ger. Kauchen, calcare, deculcare, inculcare; and Ger. from the L. Calcare. A. S. Ge- or Ce-ic-an, extendere, and cons. emittere. To keek (see ante) and to kick are probably the same word, the one app. to the throwing or heaving of the stomach, the other to that of the foot. And see Cover.

KICKSHAWS, s. -SHOSE. Met.—Any trifling trumpery thing.

From Fr. Quelques-chooses, for so, adds Sk., we call various dainties, messes, and sauces, in preparing which the French cooks bear the palm from all others.

KID, s. -LING. The young of the goat, and of some other animals.

D. Caghe, seghæ, iseghe; Sw. Kid. The A. S. word is Tic-æn, tigen, and Som. gives Eng. Tegge. Ihre thinks Kid has the same origin as L. Hædus. Sk. suggests Ger. Kind, infans, (eliso, n.) kid being the infant of the goat.

KID, s. -EL. Sk. says,—That kid, in Lincolnshire, is the usual name for a bundle of small wood: and kidel, Low L. Kidellus, is machina piscatoria—to intercept salmon and other fish in rivers.—Du Cange. Kidel is a common word in old statutes respecting havens and rivers. The root is probably the v. To kit or cut. Kit, a vessel, may be from the same source.

KIDNAP, v. To rob or steal children,
-P-ER. to nab or nab (qv.) children or
-ING. others.

"Kidnapping,—the forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child, from their own country, and sending them into another, was capital by the Jewish law."—Blackstone. D. Kinder-rauber.

KIDNEY, s. A gland, which secretes the urine; also, a kind of bean, from its shape.

Johnson, in his note upon the M. Wives, "Think of that, a man of my kidney," says,—"Kidney in this phrase now signifies kind or qualities; but Falstaff means,—A man whose kidneys are as fat as mine."

In Beau. & F. it is app. to the inwards; "I've anger'd him to the kidneys," i. e. most deeply.

In the Tatler, "A youth who officiates as the kidney of the coffee-house," (met.) an inward, (qv.) or intimate; cons. (perhaps,) a favourite servant or attendant.

Sk. thinks maybe from A. S. Cyrene, genus, and, in a secondary sense, genitalia, and nigh, (A. S. Neah), being so called from their nearness to those parts, or from Cennan, signere, quia (sc.) renes multum generationi conferre vulgo credebantur. Serenius, from Quid, venter, and nigh, quod ventri est proximum.

KILDERKIN, s. The eighth part of a hogshead, filioles vasis majoris, (Sk.) because it bears the same proportion to a whole cask, as a child (D. Kind) bears to the grown man, (Jun.)
D. Kin-deken, -naken.

KILL, v. To subdue, to beat down, to -ER. destroy; to take away, or deprive
-ING. of life; to deaden, to put to death,
-INGLY. to slay, (to quell.)

Chapman writes kill-man, (i. e. homicide,) and Dryden, man-killer.

A. S. Cwell-an, to quell, subigere, domare; in D. Kellen is to throttle, to strangle. Un-

KILL, or KILN, s. App. to—A place for burning, (lime,) drying by heat, (malt,) &c.

A. S. Cylene, a hill, or kilne; Cyleneis, made like a hill, furnace, or oven. Pyrenyille, a fire-kiln. In Su-Go. Quille, Wes-Go. Yille, is to kindle. Mins. derives from the L. Calis, line; Sp. Calera; It. Fornace di calcina; L. Fornax calcaria; Ger. & D. Kalk-ofen. But the process to which malt is subjected, seems to warrant the conjecture that this is the same word as the preceding, viz. to kill or quell, sc. the vegetation or germination of the malt, i. e. of the wetted or moistened grain: wetted or moistened until it vegetates or germinates.

KIM-KAM,* ad. -BO. Kimkam, i. e. kam-kam,—all awry, all askew. See KAM.

Kimbo,—crooked.—Holland.

KIN, ad. s. Born, sc. of the same parents, immediate or remote; of the same

KIND, ad. s. same ancestors; descended or produced from the same stock

-ED. or race; cognate, related, or

-LE, v. having the relationship of the -LESS. same blood; related by con-

-LING. sanguinity or affinity, by blood

-LY, ad. av. or intermarriage; having the

-LINESS, s. same or similar natural qua-

-NESS. lities.

-RED, ad. s. lities.

-SHIP.† Kind, ad.—native or natural;

KINS-FOLK. suited to, adapted to, proper

-MAN. for, beneficial to, the nature or

-WOMAN. kind, congenial; having natu-ral (sc.) feelings;—feelings pertaining or belonging to, becoming or convenient to, their common nature or kind; feeling for each other, compassionate or sympathetic, benevolent. Humane, from human, has the same cons. application: and Kind, s.—

Nature; natural disposition or affection;

generic qualities, race, sort.

Kindle,—to bring forth kind.

Kind-less, (Shak.)—unkind, unnatural.

"Kindred is defined,—the connexion or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor."—Blackstone. **Holland*. †Gower.

Go. Kun; A.S. Cynne, from the A.S. Cennan, a-cenn-an, parere, to bear, to produce, to beget. Cyn (in A.S.) is also. cons. fit, proper, convenient. Un-

KIN, ter. A diminutive,—as, Man-kin, or man-kin; of the kin or kind of man; a little man.

KINDLE, v. To light a fire, to fire or -ER. raise a fire, to cause to burn; to ig- -ING. nite; (met.) to heat, to inflame, to excite, to rouse.

Sk.—perhaps from Ger. Zünden, accendere, excitare ignem, facere ut ardeat. Ihre—from Su-Go. Kind-a, of the same meaning. (See CANDLE.) En- In- Re-

KINE, s. Contracted from Cowen, the plural of Cow, (qv.)

KING, s. v. "Cuning," says Verstegan, -DOM. "is as much in signification -HOOD. as one especially valiant, and -LESS. this being the title of the chiefs -LING. of all, expreseth him the most -LY, ad. av. apparent in courage or valour. -SHIP. And certain it is that the kings -DOMED." of most nations were in the beginning elected and chosen by the people to reign over them, in regard of the greatness of their courage, valour, and strength, as being therefore best able to defend and govern them." "That which we call in one syllable king in Eng., the old Englishmen and the Saxons, from whom our tongue is derived, to this day call in two syllables, cynning, which whether it cometh of cen or ken, which betokeneth to know and understand, or can, which betokeneth to be able, or to have power, I cannot tell."—Smith. In R. of Gloucester it is app. to a female sovereign; by Bacon to male and female united. "Ferdinando and Isabella, kings of Spaine." To king,—

To cause to be, to make a king, to invest with royal authority; to rule, to reign, as a king.—**Shak*.

D. Kon-igh; Ger. -ig; Sw. -ung; D. -ge; A.S. Cyng, cynig, cynning, from A.S. Cennan; Ger. Kon-nen, scire, and, thence, posse. De- Re- Un-

KING-CUP, s. King's-cob, (Sk.) ranunculus, from A.S. Cyng, king, and cop, the head or top, so called from the golden colour of their heads or flowers.

KING-FISHER, s. The halcyon; taking the first portion of its name from the royal splendour of its plumage, and the second from its usual food.

KIRK, s. The Scotch and the inhabitants -MAN. of the north of England so call -MESS. the church; the hard k approaches more nearly to the Gr. Kupian.

KIRKED, **pt.* Turning upwards, (Sk.) from the A.S. Cerr-an, to turn.—**Chaucer*.

KIRTLE, s. It is not, as Som. asserts, a woman's gown only; it is app. to an article of dress for men, and not merely to a gown, but to various articles, all, perhaps, distinguished by their being girded.—See the Notes on Shak. 2 Pt. Hen. IV.

A. S. Cyrtel. A woman's gown or kirtle.—Som. "I believe," says Sk. "from the v. To gird, because the gown or tunic used formerly to be girded," or fastened round the waist with a girdle.

KISS, v. s. Various written in old au- -ER. thors, Kiss, Kuss, Coss.

-ING. To kiss is,—to touch gently, and with a slight action of the lips; gen. to touch gently, mildly, blandly.

A. S. Cyssa-an; D. & Ger. Kussen; Sw. Kysa-a; Dan. -er; in Go. Kucjan, osculari; Gr. Kwac. Be- Un-

KIT, v. i. e. To cut, (qv.)—Chaucer.

Kit, s.—contracted from Cittern, or Guitar.

KIT, s. v. Ray says,—a kit is a milking-pail like a churn, with two ears and a cover, from D. Kitte. Mr. Brocket says,—it is now app. to a small pail of any sort. Also to a vessel in which pickled salmon is sent to London. See KID, KIDEL.

KITCHEN, s. A place, room, or apart- -ED. ment of a house for cooking, dressing -RY.* or preparing animal or vegetable substances for food.

† A kitchen-garden,—a garden in which plants or vegetables used in the kitchen are grown.—**Holland*.

Fr. Cuisine; It. Cucina; Sp. Cocina; D. Kochen; Ger. Kuchen. All from L. Coquina, from Coquere, to cook.

KITE, s. -ISH. A bird of prey.

A. S. Cyta. Sk. thinks from the L. Captare, quia semper prædam capiat, et rapto vivitur; but it is not at all probable that our ancestors should translate the habits of the bird into Latin, and thence impose a name; the bird was known to them earlier than that language. Kite, the plaything so called from its soaring aloft—like a kite.

KITH, v. s. **Kid*.† The v.—To shew, to make known. The s.—Kindred.

**Gower*. Broune. †Chaucer. Brunne.

A. S. Cythe; notitia, familiaritas, cognatio,—notice, knowledge, familiarity, acquaintance, kindred, alliance. (Som.); from the v. Cythen, to shew, to make known. Hearne says. "Kid signifies shew. John Skelton uses it for Shew'd, in his image of Ypocresy, saying, 'The truth cannot be hid, for it is plain kid.'"

KITTEN, v. s. -LING. The dim. of Cat, (qv.); app. also to the young of some other animals.

D. Kalt-chen; Sw. -unge; Ger. Katzelein.

KIVE, **s.* Said in Kelly's Scottish Proverbs (see Jamieson) to be the mashing-fat. **Fuller*.

KNACK, v. s. -ING. To knack or knock with the fingers. As this knack of the fingers required considerable dexterity, the word probably became app. to a dexterous, ready, or adroit manner of doing any thing; also to any thing cleverly, nicely made; or any thing knock'd or hit off nicely.

Knick-knack, i. e. knack-knack.

KN A

Dan. Knækk-er, knægg-er, to knack with one's fingers. Ger. Mit den Fingern knacken, digitis crepitare, to make a noise with the fingers; formed from the sound.—Sk. From A. S. Cnuc-tan, to knack.—Wach. From the v. To knock.—Mins.

KNAG, s. -GED. App. to any thing projecting or sticking out like teeth or tusks.

The knags that stick out of a hart's horn near the forehead.—Sk. The knags or projecting knots in wood; a pin or peg to hang any thing upon.

Dan. Knag. Perhaps from A. S. Gnag-an; D. Knag-hen; Ger. Nagen; Sw. Gnaga; rodere, arrodere, corrodere, to gnaw or know.

KNAP, v. -FISH. To break any thing with a snapping noise; to strike so as to make such noise.

Knappish, i. e. snappish, (qv).—Grafton.

D. Knappen, crepitare, to make a noise; Sw. Knappa, resonare, ferire, to sound, to hit or strike.

KNAP. See KNOB.

KNAPSACK, s. Perhaps orig. app. to—A sack or bag for broken victuals; (frustulos, Lye;) then more gen. for provisions and other articles.

Fr. Canapes; D. Knapsack; vistoria pera, (Kilian,) a sack for provisions on a journey, or a march. Also written, as by South. Snapsack, (qv.); Sw. Snapsack, a bag for clothes. Ihre, from Knop, or Snap, (qv.).

KNARR, or KNURR,* s. Also written To KNARRY,† or gnar, (qv.) Dryden writes KNURRY.* Knare.

A harsh or hard knot in a tree; any thing hard or rugged; a difficulty.

**Holland.* †Chaucer.

A. S. Gnyrr-an; D. Knerren, knarren; Ger. Knarr-en; Sw. -a, knorra, stridere, to crash or creak.

KNAVE, s. Knave is now, and has long been, app. not to one who hath —ISH. neither goods nor good qualities, —ISH-LY. but to one who may or may not —NESS. have goods, but has many bad qualities; e. g. roguery, trickery, deceit, dishonesty, mischief; and, cons. a knave is—

A rogue, a trickster, a deceiving, dishonest, mischievous fellow:—also used, playfully, as rogue likewise is.

A. S. Cnafa, cnafa; D. Knape; Ger. Knab, a boy. (Sk.) and, secondly, a servant. Knave, (Tooke,) A. S. Cnafa, was probably Nafath, i. e. Ne-nafath, Genafath; qui nihil habet; the third pers. sing. of Nabban, i. e. Ne-nabban. So Ge-naf, ge-naf, Naf, nafga, are in the A. S. Mendicus, epeus. In the same manner Nequam is held by the Latin etymologists to mean Ne quicquam, i. e. one who hath nothing, neither goods nor good qualities. For nequam, servum, non malum, sed inutilem significat. Or, according to Festus, "Qui ne tantum quidem est, quam quod habetur minimi." "But he that nought hath, ne coveteth to have, is riche, although ye hold him but a knave."

Chaucer.

It may have been app. to the mere destitution, nakedness, the helplessness of childhood; as Infans, from the speechlessness. Helvigius derives from Gr. Nyctos, infans; (ve, neg. and eros, sermo.)—See Wach.

KNAW. Commonly written Gnaw.

KNI

KNEAD, v. To beat, to press, sc. meal wetted, into a mass or lump of dough; app. met. to work up into one mass or substance.

A. S. Cnead-an, nidd-an, ge-niddian; D. Knead-en; Ger. Knet-lan, -en; Sw. Knada; depere, subigere, to beat down; to drive, press, force together. Un-

KNEE, s. v. The knee is—The joint that

KNEEL, v. bends between the leg and thigh.

—ER. To kneel is—to rest upon that

—ING. joint when bent.

Knees-timber,—crooked or angular, like the bended knee.

Go. Knú; A. S. Cneow; D. Knú; Ger. Kniew; Sw. & Dan. Knæ. Tooke conjectures Knee to be the past tense of the Go. Knawagan, Knawgan, and A. S. Knig-on, incurvare, inclinare, to bow, to bend, to incline. Serenius refers to the same Go. v.; adding, that the Icelandic Hneia, hne, is a very ancient word. Jun. Sk. and others, derive from the Gr. ῥοῦν. To kneel,—D. Kniet-en; Ger. Knieten; Dan. Knæ-er.

KNELL, v. s. KNOLL, v. To beat or strike (a bell at a funeral). Knoll, cons. to resound. "Your fame knolls in the ear o' th' world."—Beau. & F.

A. S. Cnyllan, pulsare, campanam pulsare, to beat or strike (a bell). Un-

KNIFE, s. A sharp tool or instrument for various purposes.

A. S. Cnif; Anc. D. Knif; Ger. Knif; Sw. Knif; Dan. Knif; Fr. Caniif, ganif, a pen-knife. Caniotte, ganiette, a little pen-knife. Some derive from Gr. ῥιφος; Jun. from κνίφειν, to scrape; Wach. from κνα-ειν, also to scrape. The Ger. Kniffen, is to nip.

KNIGHT, s. v. One attached, connected —HOOD. with, bound to; sc. learning, the —LESS. service of lady or lord, or any —LY. superior. Wiclif writes, "Thanne —LINSS. knighthis of the justise token Jhesus in the moot halle and gaderiden to him al the company of knighthes."

A. S. Cnyht, cnicht-hade; D. & Ger. Knecht; Sw. Knecht. Som. says,—"Cniht, a boy, a little boy or child, a young youth or stripling; also a servant, a household servant, a servitor, a man-servant. Indeed, the word properly interpreted, besides that of a boy or youth, signifies no more than a servant; witness that use of it yet remaining in our knights of the shire; which although no knights by dignity or place, as indeed few of them either are or need to be; yet are so called: but why? under favour, in regard of that service which is required and performed of them in parliament for their several counties, whose servant for the time they are. We now, casting off the old signification of the word, ordinarily understand by it eques auratus, or as we vulgarly term it, miles. But in that sense I never find it used by the English-Saxons: after whose supplanting by the Normans, it succeeded in the place of their Theng-en, or Thane." In A. S. we find Cniht-cild, a boy, which discountenances the idea of Som. that boy was the original meaning of the word. In Matt. x. 24, 25, Learning-cniht, (a learning knight,) is, a disciple, discipulus. And Spel. asserts the more common usage of the word to be minister. Verstegan also observes, "This title of right worshipfull dignity was heretofore by our ancestors written Cniht, and both in the high and low Germany by the name of Knight, (which a little they vary in the orthography,) is understood a servant: and I finde that Learning-cniht was in our ancient language a disciple; and in the Netherlands a Lear-knight is the same that an apprentice is in Fr. that is to say, a learner. It may seem strange (he adds) how our name of Knight, being with us of such esteem of worship, should in the etym. thereof appear no more than it doth. To resolve which difficulty I can judge no other, having no proof or pregnant reason otherwise to induce me, but that the name of Knight must have begun to be a name of honour among our ancestors, in such as were admitted for their merits to be knights to the king, that is, to be his own servants, or in some sort his officers or retainers, and to ride with him," (On Decayed Intelligence, c. 10.)—See Wach. Tooke derives it from Cnytt, the past. p. of Cnytt-an, to knit, nectere, alligare, attacher, and thus signifying un attaché. Un-

KNIT, v. s. To tie, or fasten, by an involution of the material; by infolding or inwrapping it; gen.—-TLE, s. to connect or unite, to draw together, v. s. to contract.
-LESS. A knot, met. of persons, — a number of persons connected.
-TINESS. united, collected, or gathered together. Any thing complicate, intricate, or entangled.

A knot in wood, in which the fibres are tightly complicated, and thence rendered hard.

Knot,—in Chaucer, (Squire's Tale,) in the sense of Naud, Fr.—for the chief point or head of the matter.—Tyrw.

Knotless,—without difficulty or hindrance.—Falconer.

A. S. Cnyttan, cnotta; D. Knoopen, knoop; Ger. Knuten, knot; Sw. Knyta, knut; Dan. Knyter, knude. And hence (Tooke) the L. Nod-us. See KNIGHT. Be- Un-

KNITCHES, s. -ets. Any thing knit, connected, bound or tied together.

"Gadere ye togidre the taris & bynde hem togidre in knycches."—Wiclif. "The twelve knitches of rods were born by the lictora." . . . "Made up in knitchets or handfuls."—Holland.

KNOB, KNAP, or KNOP, s. The same KNOBLED. words diff. written and app. KNOPPED. The top; any rise or eminence, KNobby. projection, or protuberance; the top of a hill; the bud of a flower; the button of a garment; the head of a stick, of a sore, &c.

A. S. Cnap; D. Knoop, knoble; Ger. Knopf; Sw. & Dan. Knop, the top, the summit.

KNOCK, v. s. To beat or strike, to give a blow; to hit, to smite.

-ING. A. S. Cnuc-ian; Ger. Knocken; Sw. Knacka, pulsare, ferire, to beat or strike.

KNOLL, or KNOWL, s. Ray calls it—a little round hill; the top or cop of a hill or mountain.

A. S. Cnolle; D. Knolle; Ger. Knoll; Sw. Knula, a head or top.

KNOW, v. To know, (met.)—to see, to

-ABLE, ad. s. feel, to be sensible of, to perceive, to conceive, to understand, to be well informed of,

-ER.

-ING.

-INGLY.

or instructed in, learned or -LEDGE, v. s. well taught, to be well assured of.

Knowing,—possessing or having knowledge, science, skill, intelligence; skilful, intelligent.

To knowledge, (we now use acknowledge,) —to own, to confess, to admit, that we know; gen. to own, confess, or admit.

"Knowledge then seems to me to be nothing but the perception of the connexion and agreement, or disagreement and repugnancy, of any of our ideas. In this alone it consists. Where this perception is, there is knowledge; and where it is not, there, though we may fancy, guess, or believe, yet we always come short of knowledge. For when we know that white is not black, what do we else but perceive that these two ideas do not agree?"—Locke.

Know, from A. S. Cnaw-an, ge cnawon, cennas; Go. Kunnan; Ger. & D. Kennen; Sw. Känna, scire, noscere. Know-ledge, (cnaw-an, and leegan, to lay, to put or place,) was formerly written knowlech and knowlege; and acknowledge, acknowledgement were also written without the d. Be- Inter- Re- Un-

KNUCKLE, s. -ED. It seems to countenance Tooke's etym. that the word is com. app. to the knee-joint of a calf;—a knuckle of veal;—also the bending joints of the fingers.

D. Kneukel; Ger. Knochei; Sw. Knoga; Dan. Knokke. Knuckle, (Tooke,) in A. S. Cnuci, (perhaps formerly knugel), the dim. of knag, which may have been the regular past tense of knig-an, to bow, to bend. (See KNES.) Sk. derives from knock, the projecting joints of the hand with which we knock.

L.

L is called by B. Jonson a letter half-vowelish, which, though the Italians (especially the Florentines) abhor, we keep entire with the Latins, and so pronounce. It is not used (says Wilkins) by the Brasileans, nor the men of Japan: others style it the sweetest of all letters. It melteth (B. Jonson adds) in the sounding, and is therefore called a liquid, the tongue striking the root of the palate gently; Wilkins,—the top of the tongue striking against the foremost part of the palate. It unites very easily with C and G in pronunciation, as in Clinch, Gloom, (qqv.) It is doubled, where the vowel sounds hard upon it; with no necessity: unless a syllable follow which may require the continuance of its sound; as in kil-ling, fil-ling, will-ling. As a literal root, L presents itself in Go. La-g-yan, to lay; hul-jan, to heal or make whole; Gr. Olos, whole, all; al-theu, L. Al-ere.

LAB, v. Cons.—To pour forth from the lips—whatever occurs to us; to tell all that we think or know; to prate or talk,—thoughtlessly, carelessly, without reserve or discrimination.

"I am no lab," i. e. no be-lab or blab; D. Lab-bora. See BLAB.

LABEL, s. v. Any thing falling or depending, suspended or appended; a name, title, or description, appended, or (as now used) otherwise affixed.

Fr. "Lambour, a shread, rag, or small piece of stuff. Labels hanging down on garlands or crowns & labendo, of falling down."—Mins. Sk. prefers Ger. Lepp. See LAP.

LABIAL, ad. s. That may be, that are, (formed by, spoken by,) the lips.

L. Labium; Fr. Lèvre; It. Labbro, labio, the lip.

LABILE,* ad. -ITY.—*Cheyne.

L. Labi, to fall or fail. See LAPSE.

LABOUR, v. s. To work hard; to work—ER. with difficulty or diligence; to bear up against or support, or sustain with diligence, with difficulty, with pain; to exert, to persist, pursue, or prosecute with care or diligence, pain or difficulty; to do any thing—BOUR-LESS. with exertion or effort.
—SOME. with exertion or effort.
—OUS.* Laborant is not uncommon in—OUSLY.† Boyle.

Wyatt. †Sir T. Elyot. Spenser.

Fr. La-bou-er; It. porare; Sp. borear; L. Laborare, (of uncertain etym.) Scheidius thinks from λαβ-ειν, whence λαβον, used as the 2d Aor. of λαμβαν-ειν, to take, to seize. Dixerunt (he adds) λαμβαν-ειν οργον, arripere opus: unde notio operis, s. laboris. Be. E. Over. Out. Un. Under.

LABURNUM, s. "A tree proper unto the Alpes, not commonly knowne: the wood thereof is hard and white: it beareth a blossome of a cubite long, but bees will not settle upon it."—Holland. Plinie.

LABYRINTH, s. -IAN. A place formed to take or hold, confine, or keep within; difficult to pass through or escape from; formed with many windings or turnings, or intricate, involved, or perplexed ways or paths: as app. gen.—intricacy, perplexity.

Fr. La-byrinthe; It. & Sp. -erinto; L. Labyrinthus; Gr. λαβυρινθος; locus viarum ambagibus ad capiendum aptus, from λαβ-ειν, to take.

LACE, v. s. Also, in old authors, written Las.

A lace,—any thing which catcheth or holdeth, tieth, bindeth, or fasteneth; app. to cords, or strings, or threads, plain or interwoven, of various materials; also to the substance formed by such interweaving.

Laced, as laced coffee, i. e. coffee interlaced, intermingled, or intermixed, with some other ingredient.

Fr. Lac-er, -et, from L. Laqueus.—Sk. L. Laqueus, and It. Laccio, as well as Eng. Latch, and lace, are the past tense and past p. of A. S. Læccan, læc-gan, læcc-ean, prehendere, apprehendere, to catch, to hold.—Tooke. Be. En. In-Inter-Un-

LACERATE, v. To rend or tear asunder;—-ATION. to sever—with the parts torn, -ATIVE. (and not cut evenly.)

-ABLE. Fr. Lacér-er; Sp. -er; It. & L. Lacerare, from Gr. Λα-ειν, which not only denotes sonare, crepare, but also cum crepitu rumpi, ut fit in illo, quæ lacerantur.—Foss. Di-

LACHE, s. -ESSE. A defect or failure, a want, sc. of strength, of activity, care, diligence; and thus, cons. slackness or sluggishness, remissness, negligence.

Mins. derives from Fr. Lascher, or Lasche, slack, loose, slow, remis. (See LASE.) Sk.—from L. Lasus. Lache, in Chaucer, (says Jun.) is explained—eluggish, dull, heavy, lasy; and he suspects that lache was the original way of writing lasy. (See LASY.) D. Laecken, Eng. Lache, is deficere, deesse; the s. Laecke, defectus; and lache may be the same word, he softened into che; meaning—as above.

LACHRYMAL, ad. That can or may—-ARY. shed tears, that can or may—-ATORY. weep.

Fr. La-chrymal; It. -grimal; Sp. -crymoo; L. Lacrima; Gr. δακρυμα, δ into λ, a tear.

LACK, v. s. -ER. To lessen or diminish, to weaken, to fail or be deficient, to be faulty; to want or be wanting.

To diminish, cons. to degrade, to find fault with, to blame.

Shak. uses the compounds lack-beard, -brain, -linen, -lustre.

D. Laacken, minuere, diminuire, attenuare, extenuare, detertere; deſicere, deſecare.—Kilian.

LACKER, v. s. or LACK, s. To lay on, to cover with laquer or lacque, i. e. with a preparation of lac.

"The lack of Tonquin is a sort of gummy juice, which drains out of the bodies or limbs of trees. The cabinets, desks, or any sort of frames to be lackered, are made of fir or pine tree."—Dampier. It. Lacca.

LACKEY, v. s. A runner, a running follower or attendant, a runner of errands, a footboy; gen.—a follower or attendant.

Fr. Lac-quoy; It. -ago. Jun. who proposes the v. To lacke, qd. one who lacks, is poor or indigent, and therefore servile) interprets Go. Laikan, saltare, exultare. Wach.—Ger. Lack-en, the same; and also currere, and laket, cursor. Ihre.—Sw. Lacks, currere, and Lack-ere, cursor, a runner. Hence also Eng. Lag; and thence a lacquoy, one who uses his legs, (a legger.)

LACONIC, ad. Holland, —To laconize, to -ICAL. imitate the Lacademonians, either -ICALLY. in short and pithy speech, or in -ICISM. hard life.—Plutarch. Explanation -ISM. of Terms. Fr. "Laconizer, to live -IZE, v. strictly or sparingly, to speak briefly or pithily."

LACTAGE, s. Lacteal,—milky, bearing

-ARY. or producing milk, or a liquid

-EAL, s. ad. resembling milk.

-EAN. Lactael vessels or absorbents,

-EOUS. which convey to the circulating

-ESCENT. organs the due supply of mate-

-ESCECE. rials for the growth and support

-IFEROUS. of the system.

L. Lac, αρο του γαλακτος, the first syllable being cut off;—γαλα, (lac), says Lennep, appears to have its name from its bright whiteness, and to have sprung from (the obsolete primitive) γα-α, ab explicandis notione translationum ad eam nitendi, splendendi; transferred from the notion of explaining or making plain and clear, to that of brightening, of shining. The radical letters, l, c (α), are found in Gr. γαλακτος, L. Lac, and in A. S. Meole; and they are also found in A. S. Etic-ian, Gr. ΕΛΚ-ειν, to draw, to suck. Ab-lactation.

LAD, s. -KIN. One who, on account of his tender years, is under a leader, guide, or director: a male child, a boy; gen.—a youth; or one acting in the services usually performed by youth. See LASS.

Jun. from A. S. Lad-an, ducere, to lead or guide; because children are led or educated to many virtues. Sk. and Lye prefer A. S. Leode, people; also, as the latter asserts, signifying juvenis; but leode means a companion, follower, or attendant, and may itself be from lad-an, to lead.

LADDER, s. A machine formed of steps, supported at each end by upright side-pieces.

A. S. Hlædre; D. Ladder; Ger. Leiter; from A. S. Læd-an; D. Leed-en; Ger. Leiten, to lead, qd. ductor, scala etiam ad altiora loca ducimur, (Sk.): quod scandentem ducant et dirigant.—Kilian. Wach. resorts to the Celtic Klettern, to mount or climb.

LADDE, v. -ING. To lay or put on, to impose, a weight or burden; to put in, to take in, that which is to be borne or carried; the cargo.

A. S. Lad-as; D. & Ger. Laden; Sw. Ladda. See To LOAD. Over-Un-

LADDE, v. LADLE. The application is—To dip (sc. some vessel or implement) into water or other liquid, and throw out the contents or quantity received.

A. S. Hlad-an, to draw out. A. S. Hlædis. Camden says—that lade is a passage of water, and that aqueductus in the old Gloss. is translated water-lade. Hence it appears that hladan, to draw out, is merely a cons. usage of lad-an, to lead, guide, or conduct; and that water-lade is a conduit for water; that by which water may be conducted or drawn off.

LADY, s. A woman of raised degree, of -IED. elevated or high or superior rank -IFY, v. or station or authority.

-ILY. Tooke has written more elaborately than usual upon the origin of this word, and he traces it to A. S. Hlaf, the past p. of hlif-an, to raise. He supposes hlaf, first, by receiving the common participial term. ed, to become hlaf-ed, then, by contraction hlæf, and further by the addition of the common ad. term. ig, hlæf-ig, or by omitting the initial h, laf, lafed, lafd, lafd-ig, the ig being as usual softened to y. By the mere suppression of the f, lafd-y becomes lady; meaning one lifted, raised or elevated, sc. to the rank of her husband or lord. (See Lord.) Serenius finds the word written Lafd-a in Go., and Jamieson Lafd-a in Icelandic; and, as in R. Gloucester, it is written Leudy.—See Jamieson, in v. Laird.

LAG, v. s. ad. To move slowly or slug-

-G-ARD. gishly, to tarry or remain be-

-ER. hind, to come or follow slowly after; to come in late or latterly, at the latter end, after others.

Sk. thinks Lag is q. lang, (the α omitted,) from A. S. Lang, long; as we say, he stays long, he's long a coming. Min. derives from Lug, truncus, and it is not improbable that it may have the same origin, viz. Go. Lug-yan, A. S. Leeg-an, to lay or lie; and, cons., to remain at rest, inactive, sluggish.

LAINER,* s. (Fr.) Straps or thongs.—

Tyrw. Sk. writes it Lamers, thongs; and suggests L. Lamina.—**Chaucer*.

LAIR, or LARE, s. The place where any one (deer or other animal) lays or is laid. App. to the land or pasture in which they lie.

Sk. writes it Leer,—clearly enough, he says, from Ger. Lager, cubile, and this from liegen, to lay. It is immediately from lay, or lai, lager or lair.

LAIT, s. "To bring to the lure whom she doth lait."—Chaucer.

From L. Allactare, or Ger. Lad-en, D. Læd-en, invitare.—Sk.

LAITY. See LAY.

LAKE, s. Tyrw. remarks,—it is difficult to say what sort of cloth is meant. Laacken, Belg. signifies both linen and woollen cloth.—Kilian. Fine cloth and lawn.—Sk. Som. has Lack, chlamys, a kind of garment.

LAKE, s. "By a lacca of vegetables the Italians mean a kind of extract fit for painting, like that rich lacca in Eng., com.

called lake, which is employed by painters as a glorious red."—Boyle.

Fr. "Lacque, sanguine, rosee or rubie colour. The true lacca is an Armenian gum, used in the dyeing of crimson, and afterwards (grown artificial) employed by painters."—Cot. And see LACKER.

Fr. Lacque; It. & Low L. Lacca.—See Men and Martin. A word, says the former, of Ar. origin.

LAKE, s. App. to—A large expanse of water within land, or having no immediate connexion with the sea. "And the lake [lacus] was trodun withoute the citee."—Apocalips.

Fr. Lac; It. & Sp. Lago; L. Lacus, which Voss. thinks may be from Gr. Λακκ, hiatus terra; and that it means, terra fissā recipiens aquam; and hence app. to other recipients of liquid substances; and Gr. Λακκος, Jovea, (proprie Assura.) Scheid. Lake, in Wiclif, is in the common version wine-press.

LAKENS, s. The dim. of our lady, i. e. ladykin.—Steevens.

LAMB, v. s. -KIN. App. to—The young offspring of the sheep; met.—to any one having the meekness, innocence of a lamb. The old plural was Lamb-ren.

Go. A. S. D. Ger. & Sw. Lamb; Dan. Lam, ovis, and also agnus. Jun.—from the initial letters of Gr. Λαμνος, predixio l. This etym. says Wach. Stiernhielm despises, but suggests no other. Ihre remarks.—Apud Armaricos lamina notat saltare, which does not ill suit this kind of animal. Mina.—from Lamb-ere, to lick.

LAMBENT, ad. -BATIVE, ad. s. Licking, touching lightly—as with the tongue; moving about or around, as if licking, or touching lightly.

L. Lambens, p. p. of lambere, to lick. Lambere, from Gr. Λαμν-ειν, which means (Voss.) to lick or lap, or to drink by licking or lapping, and itself seems to be formed from the sound.

LAME, v. ad. To weaken or debilitate, to -LY. want, to injure, or deprive of, the -NESS. natural power or strength; to maim, -ISH. to cripple.

A. S. Ger. Sw. & Dan. Lam; D. Lam, laem; D. Lamen; Ger. Lamen, debilitate, to weaken.

LAMELAR, ad. Consisting of thin -ELLATED. plates, flakes, or scales. -INATED. L. Lamella, dim. of lamina, a thin plate.

* LAMENT, v. s. To feel grief or sorrow, -ABLE. to bewail, to deplore, to bemoan; -ABLY. to declare or make known grief or -ATION. sorrow. -EDLY. Fr. Lament-er; It. -are; Sp. -a; L. Lamentari; perhaps from Gr. λαλεμω, causum lugubre. Un-

LAMM,* v. To beat, to bruise with blows. Beas. & F.

Sk.—perhaps from Ger. Lahmen; D. Lamen, to lame; and interprets it—cadere, ictibus perno-lere. See SLAM.

LAMMAS, s. A. S. Hlaf-masse. The calends or first day of August, qd. loaf-mass, perhaps because on that day an offering was made of bread made of new corn; the first fruits of harvest.—See Som. and Sk., and Hammond's Works, vol. i. p. 660.

LAMP, s. A light; any thing possessing -ED. or communicating light, (lit. -ING, ad. and met.)

-LESS. Fr. Lamp-e; It. -a, -ada; Sp. -ara; L. Lampas; Gr. λαμπα, from λαμπεω, to shine.

LAMPOON, v. s. -ER. Satire or abuse of persons, their peculiarities or failings.

Cot. has Lamponnier, a fond or idle companion; probably from old Fr. Lamper, potare, to drink, (Lacombe;) and from the ribaldry, slander, and satire in which drinking companions indulge themselves, the word may have derived its application.

LAMPREY, s. A fish.

Fr. Lamp-roye; It. -reda; Sp. -rea; L. Lampetra; à petra dicta, nempe à lambendis petris.

LANCE, v. s. or LAUNCE, v. A lance, gen.

-LY. —any thing thrown forth or forward; -ER. and lance, the v., or lanch, (qv.)

-ET. To throw; and (from the form and purpose of a lance) cons., to pierce or penetrate; to cut with a lancer or lancet, or small lance, or sharp-pointed instrument.

Lance, in ba-lance, and used uncompounded by Spenser, may be the same word, app. cons.; poise, equipoise. "Fortune all in equal lance, doth away."

Fr. Lan-cer, -ce; It. -ciare, -cia; Sp. -zar, -za; D. -cie, lancee; Ger. Lanze; Sw. Lants; L. Lancea. The etymologists have written much about this word, and agree in ascribing it to a Celtic origin.—See Voss. de Vitell. b. i. c. 3, his Etymologicon in v. Men. Wach. and Ihre. Wach. and Lye think the root preserved in the Armoric Lancep, jaculari, vibrare, to throw, to brandish. It is probably from A. S. Lang-ian, or Lang-an, to long or lengthen, to prolong, to project. See LANCE. Out-

LANCH, or LAUNCH, v. To throw, to send forth, to emit, to dart, to push forth, to push on, to rush forth: also, (as in Spenser and Dryden) to pierce as with a lance, or lancet. "My brest was launched with lovely dart."—Spenser. "The launching knife requires his hands."—Dryden. See LANCE.

LAND, v. s. As a substance, it is opposed -ING. to water: also app. to the in-

-LESS. habitants of the land, of the country, or region.

-LADY. Landlady and Landlord are app.

-LORDY.* to the mistress and master of the house, more esp. of a public one; to the owner.

Landskip, (D. Landschap; A. S. "Land-scipe,")—a country, a region, a quarter, a coast; whence our land-skip, qd. land-shape.—Som.

D. Laen; and Lye says, the A. S. have Lana. It may be Hiand, lane, thin, and therefore narrow.

LANGUAGE, v. s. -LESS. That which the tongue utters, or speaks; speech, oral or written; app. to the general character or style of speaking or writing; to the people or nation speaking or writing.

Well or ill language: well or ill skilled in language or speech: well spoken.

Fr. Language; It. Linguaggio; Sp. Len-gua, guada; L. Lingua, q. lingua, from ling-ere, to lick, cum lingua unicum sit lingue instrumentum.

LANGUISH, s. v. To be faint or weak,

-GUISHER. ill at ease or diseased; to

-GUISHING. faint, to fade, to droop, to

-GUISHINGLY. pine; to be or become fee-

-GUISHMENT. ble, inert, listless, delicate

-GUID. or tender; to enfeeble, to

-GUIDLY. entender.

-GUIDNESS. *Hydr. †Spenser. ‡Chaucer.

-GUOR. Fr. & Sp. Len-guir; It. guire;

-GUISHNESS.* L. Langues; perhaps (Voss.)

-GUOROUS,† v. from Gr. Λαγρῆν, quod est pt-

-GURE.‡ guor, otiar, tricar, ut languen- tes solent; to be slow, to idle or trifle; as the languid or faint usually do. Go. Lap-

LANIFICE, s. Any thing made of wool, (lana.)

It. lanificio; L. lanificium. Di-lanulate.

LANK, ad. s. -ED. Long, or lengthened, sc. to excess; and thus, slender, spare, meagre.

Sk. proposes Ger. Getenck, agilis, from Lencken, flectere, to bend or turn (nimby). Probably A. S. Lenca, i. e. long; and, therefore, lean or spare. See FLANK.

LANTERN, s. That in which a light is placed, sc. to hold and preserve it: app. gen. and met. to—

A light; any thing that lights or illuminates.

The louvre or lantern "is (says Steevens) in ancient records called lanternium, and is a spacious round or octagonal turret full of windows, by means of which cathedrals, and sometimes halls, are illuminated."—Note on Romeo & Juliet, Act v. sc. 3.

Fr. Lantern-e; It. & Sp. -a; L. Laterna, from Latere, quia in ea latet ignis.—Foss. Jun. adds,—a vento tutus.

LAP, s. v. To fold or turn over, to infold,

-PET. to involve, to inwrap.

-PER. To fold or turn (the tongue) over,

-FUL. and cons., to lick up.

-PING. It is usual to consider lap, to fold, and -LING. lap, to lick, as two words; and for the first to refer to A. S. Læppe, which Som. interprets,—a small piece of any thing, the coast, or hem of a garment; D. & Ger. Lappen, consuere, arcire: and for the second, to A. S. Lappian; D. & Ger. -pen; Dan. Læber; Fr. Lapper, lambere, to lick. But the word in all its applications, seems to be one and the same, with one and the same meaning, affording a sufficient cause for the various applications, viz. to fold or turn over; as a dog in licking with his tongue; as an edge, or border, or hem of cloth or other material: the clothes over the knees, thighs, or breast. To lap, thus, may be explained as above. En- Un-

LAPWING, s. A bird.

A. S. Lepwinc, hleapwince; formed (Sk.) of Hleap-en, to leap, and wince, a wing, because it (the bird) so quickly moves, expands, and claps its wings together. By Mins. because it laps and claps the wings so often. Fr. Fanneau.

LARBOARD, s. Vox nautica, (Sk.) so the left side of a ship is called, perhaps, qd. lever board, from the L. Lævus, and board. Lar may be a contraction of læver, and that side of the ship so called because it lævers or lies obliquely to the starboard.

LARCENY, s. "Larciny, or theft, by contraction for latrocinium, latrocinium, is distinguished by the law into two sorts."—Blackstone. Fr. Lar-cin, -recin; L. Latrocinium.

LARD, s. v. Lard is app. to—Hog's flesh,

-ER. bacon; to the fat of it.

-ERER. To lard,—to fatten, to cover with

-ERY. fat, to grease; to mix or stuff, or lay bacon or the fat of bacon into other meats; gen. to intermix, to interlay. See

INTERLARD.

Larder,—a store-room for lard; gen. for any provided meats.

The larder, (larderarius), or superintendent of provisions, is recorded by Spel. (Gloss.)

Fr. Lard; It. & Sp. -o; L. Lardum, which Macrobius conceives to be contracted from Largus aridum; Voss. prefers Gr. Λαρων, sweet; whence Λαριων, bene curatum, pingue, well cured, fat. En- Inter- Un-

LARK, s. A bird.

A. S. Læfers; D. Lerke, lowerke; Ger. Lerch; Sw. Larkis; Dan. Lærke. Wach. thinks the word comp. of Cel. Laf, the voice, and orka, to be strong, and thus to signify, cantu polens, powerful in song. Voss. (de Vlt. b. i. c. 2, and Etym.

in v. Galerita.) forms it from the Anc. Gal. Alauda; in Mod. Fr. Alouette; D. Lewrik, from Alaurik. The word Alauda was unknown to the Romans until Cæsar gave that name to a legion "enrolled from the countries beyond the Alps."—Suet. in Vell. c. 24. The Lark was called Cassita, or Galerita, (sc. avis), from the crest or tuft on its head. See also Mén. in v. Alouette.

LARUM, s. A noisy sound; as if summoning to arms; also app. to a machine or instrument, framed to make a noise at certain hours.

From It. All' arme, To arms, Al arme, larum, larum. See ALARM.

LARYNX, s. A cartilage forming the protuberance in the anterior part of the neck, vulgarly named the Pomum Adami, Adam's apple.

Fr. Larynx, larenax; Gr. λαρυγίς, gula, guttur.

LASCIVIOUS, ad. Drawing, attracting, -IOUSLY. alluring, or enticing, (to luxury, -IOUSNESS. wantonness, or lust;) luxurious, -IENT.* wanton, lustful. Otherwise, -IENCY.† Lewd, lustful, wanton.

*H. More. †Hallywell.

Fr. Lascif; It. & Sp. -ivo; L. Lascivus. Voss. (Etym. in v.) suggests various etyms. without giving a preference. Isaac Voss. an additional one, the L. Laedere, to draw, to attract, to allure, or entice. Or perhaps from the same source as the Fr. Lasche, loose. See LASH.

LASH, s. v. -ING. Tooke,—"Lash (Fr. Lasche) of a whip, i. e. that part of it which is let loose, let go, cast out, thrown out: the past p. of Fr. Lascher."

To let loose, to throw out, to cast out; to strike with a lash, or any thing thrown out; with any thing long and flexible; also to tie, bend, or fasten together with a lash; met. to strike, (sc. with censure or satire,) to aim a stroke or blow at.

Fr. Lascher; It. -ciare; Ger. -sen; A.S. Les-an, to loose. Over-

LASS, s. From Lasse is derived, and formerly was in use, Ladde, now contracted into Lass.—Hickea, (in Lye.)

LASSITUDE, s. Exhaustion of strength or spirits; weariness or fatigue proceeding from exhaustion; gen.—weariness or fatigue. Sir T. Elyot calls it a "worde made of Latyne, hauynge none apte Englyshe worde therefore."

Fr. Lassitude, -eté; Sp. -itud; L. Lassitudo, from Lasus, contraction of Lacilus, from Lacere, to draw. "Itaque vacæ lassæ dicuntur cum diu nimis laciantur."—Voss.

LAST, s. Is app. to—The pattern or form of a foot; the mould or shape on which shoes are made.

A.S. Laste. Formula lignea sutoria. Ger. Last, from obsolete Leissen, imitari, to imitate.—Wack. From Go. Leistya, sequi, to follow, (insistere vestigia, Sereulius.)

LAST, -LY. See LATE.

LAST, v. To stay, remain, or continue -ING. last; to continue, to endure; to -ING-LY. wear for a long time.

-NESS. A.S. Last-an; D. Leesten, durare, 463

perdurare, from Last, postremus, qui enim disiissimè omnium perdurat, ille postremus omnium desinit, postremus omnium manet.—Sk. Out-

LAST, s. -AGE. Last is with us (Sk.) a kind of weight, from A.S. Hlastan, be-hlastan, onerare; to load, or impose a burthen; Ger. Last, a load or weight; whence (he adds) our Lastage, a toll or tribute upon ships of burthen. Lastage is also app. to the ballast, (qv.) and to the load itself. By 21 Rich. II. c. 18, "All manner of ships accustomed to come to the said port (s. of Caleis) out of the country of England shall bring with them all their lastage of good stones convenient for stuffing the said beakens."—Rastal, p. 47. By 31 Edw. I. a weight is declared to be fourteen stone, two weights of wool to make a sacke, and twelve sacks a last. A last of herrings to contain ten thousand, &c.—Id. p. 524. And see Spel. in v. Last.

D. & Ger. Last; Sw. & Dan. Laste.

LATCH, s. v. -ET. The s. is app. to—That which catches, and holds fast, sc. a door.

The v.—To lay hold of, to seize, to catch.

A.S. Læce-an, pre-handere. See LACE. Un-

LATCH, v. Latch'd, or letch'd, lick'd over, lecher, to lick, Fr.—Hammer. "Hast thou yet latcht the Athenian's eyes?"—Shak.

LATE, ad. av. Late, ad.—let or letted, -LY. hindered, kept back or behind, re- -NESS. tardated, delayed: it is referred to -WARD. time back or past, not long before, -FUL.* as the late reign, not that preceded -ED.† ing it; the late king, not any pre- -ERED.‡ ceding him; and is thus extended LATTER. to any person or thing, lately in -MORE. being.

LATENT, ad. -ENCY. Lying hidden or concealed; secret, remote from view.

Fr. Latent; It. -ente; L. Latens, p. p. of Latere; Gr. Λανθάνω, to be hidden or concealed; (A.S. Latian.)

LATERAL, ad. Of or pertaining to the -LY. side; belonging to, proceeding from, -ITY. the side.

Fr. Latéral; It. -ale; L. Latéralis, from Latus, lateralis, the side,—a latendo (Voss.) quia lateat, condaturque sub axillis; because it lies and is concealed under the arm-pits; or from Latus, (see LATITUDE.) broad; qd. humani corporis extremitates in latum extensæ. See Juv. in v. Side. Col-

LATH, s. A thin, slender slip of wood -ING. (for tiling, plastering, &c.)

-Y. A S. Latt-a; Ger. & Fr. -e; Low L. Lata. Francis (Wach.) lid-on est secare, separare, to cut, to separate. It may be from A. S. Lithe, in a consequential application; thin, slender.

LATHE, s. (a Turner's), perhaps from Lith-ian. See LITHE.

LATHE, s. -REEVE. An assembly or convention: also app. to a barn or granary, sc. a place where corn or grain, is brought together, laid up, or stored.

In Law L. Læsum; A. S. Lætha, læth, which Spel. derives from A. S. Lath-ian, ge-lath-ian, congregate, to assemble together. Sk. thinks from Lade, because laden with the produce of harvest.

LATHER, v. s. -ING. Jun. says, to smear with the foam of soapy water. The words are common in speech, but not in writing: the horse was in a lather; i. e. a foaming sweat; the barber lathered his chin.

Gelethred is rendered by Som. mollius, made soft, lither or tender, from Ge-lith-ian, (see LITHE), emollire, to soften. Lye thinks it (Ge-lethred) may be interpreted lathered or in a lather.

LATIN, v. To Latin, (as used by Wilson)

-ISM. —to interlard the discourse with

-IST. Latin words or phrases.

-ITY. Latinism,—an idiom or phrase-

-IZE, v. ology peculiar to the Latin tongue.

-LY. "Such fellows will so Latine their tongues."—Wilson.

LATIROSTROUS,* ad. i. e. broad-beaked, flat-billed.—Brown.

From Latus, broad, and rostrum, the beak.

LATITANT,* ad. -ANCY.† Lying or lurking, hidden or concealed.

-INARIANISM.* met. without restriction or confinement, or limitation; looseness, laxity.—Dr. Parr.

Fr. Latitudo; It. latidine; Sp. tud; L. Latitudo, from latus, broad; Gr. πλατος, (the initial π cut off.) Di-late.

LATRANT, ad. Barking; clamorous, noisy.

L. Latrans, p. p. of Latrare, to bark; quod est voce indicant, quæ noctu latent, latrans appellatus, (Var. lib. vi.) Vos. prefers ab sono. Ob-latration.

LATREUTICAL,* ad. Ministerial.

*Bp. Hall.

Gr. λατρευειν, servire, ministrare, to serve, to minister.

LATTEN, or LATOUN, s. A metal:—Archdeacon Nares contends that it is brass, not tin; and so the Manuel Lexique renders Laiton, métal composé de cuivre rouge et de calamine. B. Jonson renders orichalcum (Hor. Ars Poet. 202.) by latten.

Fr. Laiton, leton; It. Ottone, latta; Sp. Alaton, laton; D. Laitoon; Ger. Zellon; of unknown etym. Hickee (Gram. Franco-Theologica, p. 96) says, *Ferrum stanno obductum. Omnia à Cimbrico lætium, aurichalcum, quasi gladius, à nitore splendido. And Serenius adds, from Gla, splendere, to shine. See TIN.*

LATTICE, s. v. (Also written Lettesse.)

Fr. Clere-voyes,—Lattices, or secret holes to spie out at; cross-barred (of wood or iron) through which one may see and not be seen.—Col. See JEALOUSY.

Lettsie-caps; Fr. Lassis,—in chequer or net-work.

Jun. says, Cancelli ferrei; qd. latt-ien; impediens ferrumentum; iron bars that lat or hinder an entrance into places secured by them. Sk. (among other conjectures,)—from D. Latte, a lath; and thus meaning lathes-work, or work of laths. Fr. Latus. Gifford observes that lattices of various colours, or chequers, as they were sometimes called, formed (and still form) a very common ale-house sign, (B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, Act iii. sc. i. Note.)

LAUD, v. s. To celebrate,—the deeds, the

-ABLE. great or good qualities, the

-ABLY. merits of any person or

-ATIVE, s. thing; to praise, to com-

-ATORY, ad. s. mend.

Fr. Loe; It. Laude; Sp. Laud; L. Laus, which Tooke considers to be A. S. Hlōs, past p. of Hlōan, celebrare, to celebrate. See LOS. Col. In-

LAVE, v. To wash or wet, to bathe, to -ATION. cleanse or purify with water.

-ATORY. *Udal.

-ER. Fr. Lav-er; Sp. -ar; It. & L. Lavare, to wash; Gr. λοειν, seu λοειν, ex quo λοωειν, contractum; to wet or wash. Trans-

LAVE, v. (lade.) To draw out.—Lye. And Tyrw., "Laved, past p. Fr.—drawn, spoken of water taken out of a well."

LAVEER, v. To go in an oblique course, to sail obliquely, to catch the wind at sea in oblique directions.—Sk. See TO VEER.

D. Laveren, laveren.

LAVENDER, s. A plant. ☞

Fr. Lavand-e; It. -a: Sp. -ula; Low L. Lavandula, or lavendula, a word unknown to Pliny and other ancient writers, but Latin in its origin. (sc. lavare, to wash,) for it is so called because it is much sought for in bathing and washing. (Foss. de Vit. lib. iii. c. 18.)

LAUGH, v. s. (Variously written by old

-ABLE. authors: Lyghe, Lauh, Leygh.)

-ER. To laugh at,—to deride, to ridicule;

-ING. cule; to treat with merriment,

-INGLY. with derision, contempt, or scorn.

-TER. To laugh, met.—to be, or appear, cheerful, pleasant, benevolent, favourable, propitious, beneficent, fertile.

Go. Hlak-gan; A. S. Ellikan, Althkan; D. Lachen; Ger. Lachen; Sw. Lee; Dan. Leer. Gen. supposed to be formed from the sound. Out-Un-

LAVISH, v. ad. To lave, (Lye,) is—to

-ER. draw out or exhaust; and hence

-LY. lavish appears to be formed. Sir

-MENT. T. More writes—Lav-es, "In al-NESS. other thing so light and lavies [are they] of their tongue." And Brende,—La- vesnes, "The kinges there punish with loss of life the lavuesnes of ye tounge."

To throw out or away profusely, wastefully, prodigally; to waste, to squander, to dissipate, to disperse, wastefully, or profusely. Un-

LAUNDER, v. LAVENDER, or LAUNDER, s.
-ERER. To launder, is—to lave, to wash.
-ERESS. From Lav-are, to wash. Fr. Lavandiera; It. dafa; Sp. -dera, a laundress or washerwoman; and so Tyrw. interprets—Lavender in Chaucer; the word in Dante is Mereatrice; Sp. Lavadero, a launder, or washerman.

LAUREATE, v. s. ad. To adorn, to -ION. deck, to crown with laurel.

LAUREL, s. "T. Warton.

-LED. It. Laure-ato; Sp. -ar, -ado, from L. Laurus, a bay; the modern laurel is a very different plant. Un-

LAW, s. Any thing laid down, sc. as a rule of action; a rule imposed, -FULLY. fixed or established, decreed or determined; a statute or decree, an edict. "That which doth assign unto each thing the kind, that which doth moderate the force and power, that which doth appoint the forme and measure of working, the same we term a law."—-LIKE.* Hooker.—"Gascogne.

S. Lakman, a lawyer; anciently written Law-er and law-ier, and the i then changed into y. (Hickes, Gram. Anglo-Sax. p. 14.) In Bale it is written each way, (Image, pt. ii. c. 12.) So Sawer, or sawyer. "Law (says Tooke) was anciently written Laygh, lagh, lage, and ley; as in-laygh, ut-lage, hundred-lagh, &c. It is merely the past tense and past p. Lag, or lay, of Go. and A. S. y. Leggan, laggan, ponere, and it means (something or any thing, chose, chose, aliquid.) laid down, as a rule of conduct." Wach. had already said,—"All from Leg-en, ponere, statuere, constituere, (in the judgment of Stiernhielmus:) for what is law, but something laid down or imposed either by God or nature, or of a people binding themselves, or of a prince governing a people?"—Tooke adds,—The L. Lex (i. e. lego) is no other than our past p. Lag. Wach.—If we think the Latin word (sc. lex) flowed from the same fountain, we shall wander far—nec a sensu vocis, nec a ratione temporis; since Scythian words are far more ancient than the Latin, and increased the Latin language with many additions. LAWND, or LAUND, s. App. gen. to—LAWN. Plain land; lands untilled, extending between planted lands or woods.

"Fr. Lande. A land, or land; a wild untilled, shrubby, or bushy plain."—Cot. It. & Sp. Landa. Camden calls it—"a plaine among trees."—Ren. 118.

LAX, ad. LAX, or LASK, s. Lax, the ad.—-ATION. Loose, slack, untied, unfas-

-ATIVE, ad. s. tened, unconstrained, unrestricted, dissolute.

-NESS. Fr. Laxatif, (lacher, to loose;) It. Lassativo; Sp. Lazativo; L. Laxativus, from lax-are, to loose. The lax, or laska, (as Holland writes it,) Minshew terms,—laxitas intestinorum. Cot. explains—laxité, laxitiveness. Pro-Re-

LAY, s. Tyrw. says, "We should rather define the lay to be a species of serious narrative poetry, of a moderate length, in a simple style and light metre."

Tyrw. is inclined to believe, "that Isl. Lied, Ger. Lied, A. S. Leoth, and Fr. Lai, are all to be deduced from the same Go. original." Wach. leads us to this original: he derives the Ger. Lied from the v. "Lausen, canere, sonare; D. Luiden; Sw. Linda;" which are themselves from the A. S. Hlyd-an, to make a (loud) noise, to low or bellow, A. S. Hlowan, from which is also formed Hleoth-rian, canere. And Leoth (the initial A omitted) is said by Som. to be not only "a verse, a song, a song of rejoicing, an ode or psalm, but a shout or noise; (though he restricts it (improperly) to the shout or noise) which mariners make when they do any thing together, or when the matter doth call or encourage them." Mariners still retain the same custom, and the noise they make confirms the etymology, viz. Hlow-eth, lowth, the third person of the v. Hlowan, and whence Leoth, a low or lay. See GLEE.

LAY, ad. App. to—the common people,

LAIC, ad. s. the vulgar, from their ignorance,

-ICAL. so easily misled; and subseq. by

-ITY. the arrogance of the clergy, to all

LAYMAN. not of their order. See LEWD.

Fr. Lai, lay; It. Laico; Sp. Lego; D. Leeck; Ger. Ley. By the Anglo-Saxons, (Jun.) laweda man was formerly called laicus, profanus; whence has remained to this day the word Low; and Tooke affirms that Low is the past p. and Lay the past tense, and therefore past p. of A. S. v. Law-an, prodero, to delude, to mislead; and means, "misled, led astray, deluded, imposed upon, betrayed into error."

LAY, v. s. To put or place; lit. and met.;

-ER. lit. when a state of rest is intended.

-ING. Used with prepositions it is equi-

-STALL. valent to the L. v. Ponere, to put or place, and its compounds; thus,—

To lay or put down; to deposit; to lay or put upon; to impose; to lay or put out, or before, to expose; to lay or put together; to compose; to lay, put, or place near to; (in apposition;) to put or place in their proper places, to dispose; to put or place up, in store, at rest; to repose.

It has very numerous consequential applications, which may be inferred from the context of the sentence in which they occur.

A layman employed by painters, may be that upon which drapery is laid.

LAZE,* v. Lazy, ad. — Inactive, inert, -y. slow, slothful, sluggish, indolent. -I-LY. To laze,—to be or remain inactive. -NESS. or slothful; to live or spend the time slothfully or sluggishly.

*Middleton. Whately (1834). South.

D. Loesigh, remissus, piger, segnīs, (Killan); probably from the v. Loesen; A. S. Lee-as, dimittēre, remittere, to dismiss, to remit or relax, Ger. Lassen, remittere animum ā labore; to remit or relax the mind from labour, and cons. to remain inactive or inert.

LEA, s. Plain or pasture land. Also EXLEASE. tended to the plain surface of water. -ow. "They meete together on the wat'ry lea."—Spenser.

A. S. Leag, ley. Som. calls it, Terra inculta, lay-land, land that lieth untilld. Gower uses the expression—"The leaze which is plaine." Verstegan takes Leyh, ley, or lea, "to signify ground that lieth unmanured, and wildly overgrown." And Sk. says, that a lay or lea of land may perhaps be from A. S. Leo-gan, ponere, to lay, because in the year we allow it to remain untilld, we lay dung upon it. Beau. & F. and Dryden write it Lay. There is, however, in A. S. the v. Læwo-ian, pacere, pabulari, to feed, to foster, or pasture cattle, as is usual on commons; and the s. Læwe, pacuum, feeding ground or pasture, a leese or common. Wiclif uses both v. and s. And see Lewris in Jamieson.

LEAD, s. v. A metal.

-EN. A. S. Lead; D. Loot; Ger. Lot. Wach. -Y. derives from Loosen, solvere, to dissolve; or Lassen, fundere, liquefacere, to melt. Sk.—from Læd-an, ducere, because of all the baser metals it is (as he thought) the most ductile.

LEAD, v. s. To go before as guide or -ER. conductor; to show the way or in-ING. duce to follow; to conduce or con-MAN. duct; to induce, attract or persuade, to regulate the course; to draw on; to cause to follow or pursue.

Lead, with prs. is used as equivalent to the comps. of L. Ducere; e. g. to abduce, to adduce, &c.

A. S. Læd-an; D. Leyd-en, leed-en; Ger. Leyten; Sw. Led-a; Dan. Leder, ducere. Mis-UP-

LEAF, v. s. Leaf, s. is app. to various -LESS. things, flat and thin; as the leaf -Y. of a tree, of a book, of a table, of LEAV-ED. a door; to a substance beaten flat -Y. and thin, as leaf-gold, leaf-silver.

Go. Lauf; A. S. Leafs; D. Loof; Ger. Laub; Sw. Loof; Dan. Lov. Wach. derives from obsolete Ger. Laub-en, tegere, to cover; whence also Laub, a covered place. Jun. from Gr. φυλλον. Inter-

LEAGUE, s. v. -ER. A bond or obligation, sc. to perform certain covenants; a covenant, a combination, a confederacy.

Fr. Ligue; It. Lega; Sp. & Low L. Liga, a bond, a confederation,—ā ligando.—Voss, de Vit. lib. iii. c. 20. See LIXEN. Be- Col- In-

LEAGUE, s. A measure of length, different in different countries.

Fr. Lieue; It. Lega; Sp. Legua; L. Leuca. The most ancient instance of the L. word, which Voss had met with, is in Ammianus. "The true reading of the word is uncertain. Spel writes it Leuca, leuga, leuica, and lega; the etym. is unknown; perhaps from the same source as Lauguer, infra.—See Voss, de Vit. lib. ii. c. 11, and lib. iii. c. 12. Also Spel. in v. Leuca, and Men. in v. Lieue.

LEAGUER, v. s. A camp; where an army or body of soldiers lay or are laid.

A town leaguer'd,—a town before which an army or host is laid, (sc. to assault or attack it.)

Ger. Lagen; D. Laeg-hen; A. S. Lic-gan, to lay; Ger. Lager; D. Legher; (Sw. Laeger, from Ligga, quatenus commemorari notat.—Ihre.) See BELLAGUER. In-

LEAK, v. s. ad. To gape or open; and, -AGE. cons. to admit or emit, sc. any fluid; -Y. to admit or let in, to emit or let, or drop out; to be unable to contain or retain.

Ger. Lecken, lecken, hiare; D. Leck, rima, a chink; leck schip, navis rimosa. Dan. Lekker.

LEAM, or LIAM, s. A hunter's word.—Sk. The cord or string with which dogs are lead is so called from Fr. Lien, a band. See LIME.

LEAN, v. -ING. To press against in an oblique direction; to incline, to recline, to repose; to be out of an upright position; to incline or bend towards, or have an inclination for.

A. S. Hlean-an, hlyan-ian; Ger. & D. Leonen; Sw. Laena, recumbere, incitare, innitē; Dan. Læner, to lie or lay on. Up-

LEAN, ad. Thin, meager, poor; having -NESS. no flesh or fleshy substance; no -Y.* wholesome or nutritious substance, or quality.—**Spenser*.

A. S. Hlean-ian, hlyan-ian, macerare, marcescere; to be or become or cause to be thin or meager.

LEAP, v. s. To move at springs or -ER. bounds, as distinguished from the -ING. step in walking or running; to jump, to spring, to bound. "Or whether they move per frontem et quadratum, as Scaliger terms it, upon a square base, the legs of both sides moving together, as frogs and salient animals, which is properly called leaping."—Brown.

Leap-year, (see BISSEXTILE.) qd. annus saltans, because it leaps over, i. e. exceeds others by one day.—Sk.

D. Loop-en; Ger. Laufen; Sw. Loopa, currere, to run; Go. Hlaup-an; A. S. Hleap-an, saltare, saltare, to leap or skip.—Som. See LOPE. Over- Out-

LEAP,* or LEPE, s. LEPEFUL.* A. S. Leap, calathus, a basket, hamper or pannier of osiers.—Som. **Wiclif*.

LEAR. See LEER.

LEARN, v. It admits of a conjecture -ER. that To learn may mean, to gather -ING. or take up; (take or teach, qv. -ED-LY. and see БЕТЕЧЕ.) -ISH.* To learn, is (by modern usage) only—To take to ourselves, sc. the knowledge of any thing; formerly also, to take it to another, to deliver, impart, or communicate it; to teach.

To take, accept, or receive (knowledge); to acquire or obtain, gain or procure it.

A. S. Learen; Ger. Leren; D. Lernen; Sw. Lärna; Dan. Lærre; Old Eng. To lere (qv.); A. S. Leornian; Ger. Lernen, to learn. The Go. is Leisyan; Ger. have Lesen, as well as Leren, and Lernen; Go. Lis-an, and A. S. Lis-an, and Lesan; legere, colligere; to glean, to collect, to collect; Eng. To lease, (sc. corn.) See LEASE, LEASER. Mfr. Over- Out- Un-

LEASE, v. -ER. To gather or pick up, to collect, to glean, sc. that which is loose or scattered.

Sk. says, "To less corn, from D. & Ger. Les-an, colligere, legere, carpere, to collect, to gather." Go. & A. S. Lis-an, ler-an. See To LEARN. RE-

LEASE, v. s. The s. is app. to—A deed LESSOR.

or instrument by which any lands or tenements are let, or LEASEHOLD. demised, or the occupation of -HOLDER. them granted to another. App. -MONGER. met. to any time or term granted; as, "a lease of life, my life's lease."

Lessor, lessee, &c. are common legal terms.

A. S. Les-an, demittere, to demise; Fr. Laisser, to loose, sc. from our own possession; to let away or apart, so into the occupation of another, "to farm let." See LEAS, LET.

LEASH, v. s. To leash dogs together—is to tie or fasten them together with a leash, or lash. See LASH.

Leash, s. is app. to the number (3) usually leashed together.

Fr. Lease; It. Lassa. "A leash to hold a dog, &c. in; a bridle, or false rein to hold a horse by; any such long string."—Col.

LEASIE, ad. Found only in Ascham, and seems to be used by him as equivalent to Vague; and may be intended as a derivative (with Leasing, qv.) from A. S. Lease, mendax, fallax; fallacious.

LEASING, s. -MONGERS. Lying rumour, false report; lying, falsehood.

A. S. Leas, leas; falsus, mendax, lying, false. Leasunge,—a lye, a falsehood. Sk. thinks Leasing to have the same origin as Loosenger, (qv.) and Loosenger is derived by Jun. from Loos or loos, laus. (See Loa.) The A. S. v. Hiye-an, which Som. interprets—celebrare, illustrare, gives the s. Htis-a, fama, relatio, rumor, fame, report, rumour. Whence A. S. Leas, leas-wage; and Eng. Leasing.

LEATHER, s. The hide with which the -ERN. skin, the flesh, or body of the animal -ERY. is covered: it is most usually app. to the hide when stripped from the animal and manufactured by the tanner.

Go. Hleithr, hleithr; A. S. Lothor; D. & Ger. Leder; Sw. & Dan. Leder. Wach. suggests A. S. Hlid-an, tegere, to cover; pellis, qua cutis tegitur. Over-

LEAVE, v. s. Live, love, leave, (see LEVE, -ER, and BELIEVE), seems to be the -ING. same word: the radical meaning, -LEAS.* to stay or remain.

To live,—to stay, to dwell, to remain, to abide; to cause to dwell or abide; to let, suffer, permit, concede, or allow, (any thing) to stay, abide or remain; to desist from moving, to forbear to move; and hence,—to desist, to recede, to relinquish, to resign; and hence, further,—to quit, to retire, to forsake, to depart from. (See LEFT.) And the s. gen.—

Permission, concession, sufferance. Also —Departure: and futher;—certain formalities on or previous to departure.

*Chaucer.

A. S. Leaf-an—leaf-an, linquere, relinquere;—Leaf-an, lyf-an, linquere, vivere; also permittere, concedere. Ger. Leib-en, vivere, linquere; facere ut maneat, manere, superesse, reliqui. Sw. Lef-sa, vivere, linquere. Dan. Løener. So these words are explained; but without any attempt to account for usages so different. Be-

LEAVE. See LEVY.

LEAVEN, v. s. To raise, to lighten, (sc. -ING. by the intermixture of another in-ous. gredient that may cause fermentation; met. to intermix with a substance of less purity; to savour or season, stain, tinge, or imbue.

Fr. Levain; It. Lievito; Sp. Levadura; all from L. Levare, to raise, because it raises and lifts up the mass or lump, (of dough), and also renders it lighter. Wiclif renders fermentum, sour dough. Over- Un-

LECHER, s. v. A lecherous man or -Y. woman is a licorous man or wo-

-OUS. man; though the word (lechery)

-OUS-LY. is now confined to a particular -NESS. lust, or desire, sc. for sexual intercourse.

A lustful, lewd, or libidinous person.

From the v. To lick. Fr. Lecher, or lecher. Cot. says,—Lecheresse, a licorous or saucy woman, lecheur, a lecher; a licorous companion; lecherie, licorousness, and in v. Lie, to lecher it, or get a lick at it.

LECTUARY, i. e. Electuary, (qv.)

LECTURE, v. s. A lecture,—a reading;

-ER. a sermon or discourse read; sc.

-ERSHIP. to teach, to instruct; to improve.

-ING. To lecture,—to read or speak a -TURN. sermon or discourse; to teach,

-ION. to instruct orally; to teach, to

-IONARY. censure, to reprove.

Lectorne,—a place for reading, a reading-desk.—Stow.

Fr. Lecture, leçon; It. Lettura, lezione; Sp. Lectura, lection, from L. Lectum, past p. of Legere, to gather; cons. to read, quia, qui id facit, litteras vocesque colligit, ut oratio fiat. Dt- Un- E- Se-

LEDEN, s. Used gen. to denote—The language, or the peculiar language.

A. S. Læd-en, leden. Tyrw. adopts the opinion of Sk. that Leden is a corruption of Latin; and produces from Dante an instance of a similar usage of Latino. Lye supplies many instances of A. S. used as an ad. "Of bec leden on Englice wende, he rendered it from a Latin book into an English one;" and others in which Leden is opposed to English. There appears no reason to travel further for the origin of the word. See (however) Jamieson in v. Lend. Leden, it may be added, is app. to the Latin or Roman people, as well as to the language.—See Lye, and the Gloss. to G. Douglas.

LEDGE, s. That upon which we lay any thing; a narrow shelf; any thing prominent or projecting, in manner of such shelf, from the main surface; a ridge, a row.

From A. S. Lec-gan, ponere, to lay. A narrow board, upon which we are wont to lay small things.—Sk.

LEE, s. -WARD. Lee is a place secure from wind or weather; the lee side of a ship is the side under or not exposed to the wind; to be under the lee, is to be under the wind or shelter from it; the lee-shore, on the contrary, appears to be the shore on, or opposed to, the lee-side of the ship, as she sails along; and cons. exposed to the wind.

In D. De loef hebben, to sail before the wind; Loeven, to ply to windward, (to luff;) Loef, the weatherage. The D. & Eng. Luff, lee, leeward, Tooke considers to be from the same root; the A. S. Lylft; the air or the clouds; the wind. See BLEZE, LOOR, and LOVE.

LEECH, v. s. To leech,—to cure, to heal; to practise the art of healing, the medicinal art.—Chaucer.

A. S. Læce, medicus, sanguisuga, from læc-nian, læc-nian, curare, mederi, sanari, to cure, to heal; Dan. Læger. D. Læche, hirudo, a horse leech, is derived by Killian from læchen, to lack or want; because it occasions a lack of blood, or from Laesus, because found in lakes or standing waters. Læce, medicus, and Læce, sanguisuga, are the same word, and app. for the same reason, to the animal, because it heals by withdrawing unwholesome blood.

LEEK, s. A herb.

A. S. Lec, leac; D. Look; Ger. Lauch; Sw. Look; Dan. Log; A. S. "Læc. Allium, porrum, a leek, a general name of a certain kind of herbs."—Som. The etym. is unknown.

LEER, v. s. -ING. To leer may be—to look with the eye or eyelid, somewhat downcast, or lowering; as if to attract or invite attention or favour; and, thus, to assume or put on an alluring look; to allure, to attract, by the looks.

Lere, in Chaucer, is explained by Tyrr. to intend—the skin. In Holland, it is app. to the general colour, complexion, or appearance.

A. S. Hleora, hleor, maxilla, mandibula, the cheek, the jaw; hl. facies, frons, vultus, the face, the countenance.—Som. Hence (Lye) our Leer, lour; lowr, or lowre, from D. Loeren, Ger. Laur-en, retortis et hinc oculis intueri, to look upon with eyes thrown back or askance.—Sk. But see LOVE.

LEER, ad. A leer drunkard,—a loose dissolute, a dissolute, profligate drunkard. "The horse runs lere," i. e. loose, away. A leer stomach may be, cons., an empty stomach; because loose, slack, not well filled out.—See Gifford on Jonson, (The New Inn,) and Nares, in v.

A. S. Ge-lar; Ger. Lar, vacans, iners, which Wach. derives from lieren, perdere, omittare, and this by a common change of s into r, from hes-en, to lose.

LEES, s. That which lies or settles at the bottom; the sediment.

Fr. Lie, from A. S. Lic-gan, to lay or lie, that which lies, sc. at the bottom.

LEESE. See LOSE.

LEET, s. An assembly, a convention.

Spel. rejects A. S. Leth, from lath-ian, ge-lath-ian, congregare, qd. the assembly or assize, because equally applicable to any other court,—which seems scarcely a sufficient reason; priority of appropriation might decide the distinction. He further suggests let, para, parvus, or lath, censura, arbitrium.—See his Gloss. in v. Leta, and see LATH.

LEFE. See LIEF.

LEFT, ad. The left hand is that which is leaved, leav'd, left; which we are taught to leave out of use when one hand only is employed.—Tooke.

D. Luftte hand, lichte hand, sinistra.

LEG, s. -GED. Any thing placed, sc. as a support to stand upon.

To make a leg,—a common expression, intending—to bow with the leg drawn or thrown backwards.

Sk.—from D. Legh; Dan. Leg, humilis, infra positus, low, placed below. Jan.—from A. S. Under-lee-gan, supponere, suffulcire, to support or sustain; and it is probably from A. S. Lec-gan, ponere.

LEGACY, s. -TEE. "A legacy is a bequest, or gift of goods and chattels by testament; and the person to whom it was given is stiled the legatee."—Blackstone.

Legacy—Stow uses as a derivative from Legate, (qv.)

Fr. Légat; It. -ato; Sp. -acia; L. Legatum, from legare, i. e. quasi lege quadam in testamento statuendo ac decernendo."—Foss.

LEGAL, ad. Lawful; agreeable or according to law.

LEGEND, s. v. App. to—A narrative or

-ARY, ad. s. relation, a record or register,

LEGIBLE. any thing told; from the abuse in the lives of saints, any fictitious or incredible story. Also specially used in Numismatics for the inscription placed on the edge of a coin or medal; it differs from an inscription, which occupies the place of a head or device on the face of the coin.

Legible, (L. Legibilis, not of classical authority; Fr. & Sp. Lég-ible; It. -gibile), —that can or may be read. "Legend,

LENTISCK, s. A tree.

Fr. Lentisque; L. Lenticus, quod ipse lenticosus (becomes clammy), arbor, dum resinam fundit.—Voss.

LEONINE, ad. i. e. Lion-like.

LEOPARD, s. Formerly (sometimes) written Libbard.

An animal.

Fr. Léopard; It. & Sp. Leopardo, leo-pardo; L. of Lower Ages, Leopardus. Pliny speaks of leones, quos pardi generaverunt, (lib. viii. c. 16.)

LEPER, s. Leprosy.—"The leprosy of -ous, the Arabians is nothing else --PR-OSITY, but an universal cancer of the --OSY, whole body, black, and indeed --OUS, a most miserable disease."—-OUSLY. Wiseman. App. met.

Leper (usually the person diseased) is—in Wiclif—the disease itself.

Fr. Lèpre; It. Lebbra; Sp. Lepra; Gr. Λεπρα, from λεπρος, or λεπρις, a scale. Be-

LEPID,* ad. Having a polished wit or humour, a graceful or agreeable pleasantry or facetiousness; pleasant, facetious.

*Barrow.

L. Lepidus, from lepos, app. (met.) to a polished wit or humour; from Gr. Λεπρις, a scale.

LERE, v. s. Common in old writers. --ING. i. e. To learn, (qv.)

LORE, s. To learn or teach; to instruct. --ING. And Lore,—learning; teaching, --ESMAN. doctrine, instruction.

LERE. See LEER.

LESS, v. ad. or LESSEN, v. Also anciently --ER. written Less and Liss.

--NESS. To dismiss or put away, ec. part; LEST, or and cons.—To diminish, to de--LEAST. crease, to reduce.

As now used,—To less or lessen, is to diminish, to decrease; to cause to be smaller or more minute; to lower, to de--grade, to impair, to weaken.

"He lest," (Gower,) he lost. "He least," (Bale,) he dismissed, he put away, he relinquished. "Lessed (or liused, qv.) of his care;" "of his wound glessed;" i. e. loosened, freed, relieved from. "In an hour he lest all."—Gower. "[He—Becket] least well his accustomed embracing."—Bale.

Less, ad.—equivalent to L. Minor, inferior, smaller, more minute. It is still used, compared, sc. lesser.

Lest, or least,—smallest, minutest; than which not any thing is smaller or more minute.

See To LOSE and To LEASE. A. S. Leos-an, loos-an, lys-an, alysan, (see ELSE.) solvere, dimittere, remittere, liberare; to loose, to dismiss or put away, to free or discharge.

Lest (Gower) and least (Bale's Votaries) are used as the regular past tense, contracted from les-ed or leas-ed, of A. S. v. Leas-an; and whether used as ad. or co. are considered by Tooke to be the same past tense or past p. and, with the art. that, (either expressed or understood,) mean no more than—hæc dimisso or quo dimisso. He produces two instances of the improper use of them, there being nothing expressed or understood in either sentence, quo dimisso, something else would follow.

Less.—Our ancestors the A. S., instead of eighteen, nineteen, said, An les twenty, twa les twenty; i. e. twenty dismiss (or take away) (he should perhaps rather have said withhold) one, two, &c. We also say, He demanded twenty, I gave him two less, i. e. I gave him twenty, dismiss two: and in every use of less or least, the signification of dismissing, separating, or taking away, (again add, of withholding), is conveyed. Les, then, he pronounces to be the imperative of the same A. S. v. Leas-an, and to signify—dimittite, or hæc dimisso, dismiss this, or this being dismissed. It is sometimes used for unless, (qv.) In confirmation, he remarks, that Gr. ἐάν, L. Nisi, (as sit.) It. Se non, Sp. Si no, Fr. Si non, all mean,—be it not.

Though Tooke may be right in his etym. (and indeed he appears to have fully established that he is so,) his mode of interpretation will not immediately suit in all cases,—as that cannot be with propriety said to be dismissed, separated, or taken away, which was never united to, or possessed by, that from which it shall be so said to

Very young myself marked one called length month

be dismissed, &c.: the word with-held may supply the deficiency; or a cons. usage must be introduced, e. g.—

Goldsmith was less in size than Johnson. As he never was equal, it was not by the privation, loss, or taking away of bulk once possessed that he became less or minor, it was by the absence or negation of that, which had been with-held in his formation; or, by a cons. usage, (from instances where a minority or inferiority had been produced by an act of taking away, &c. to instances where that minority or inferiority existed without such act,) less became employed to denote immediately an inferiority or minority, whether resulting from privation or negation. The like may be said of the ad. least. Un-

LESS, term. The imperative les, (see LESS, ante.) placed at the end of sc., and coalescing with them, has given us such ads. as hopeless, restless, deathless, motionless, &c., i. e. dismiss hope, rest, death, motion, &c. Our language has received a great accession lately of words in this term., and will allow of more: and also of the additional adverbial term. ly, and the nominal, ness.

LESSON, v. a. A reading, a sermon or discourse read, sc. to teach, to instruct, to improve; to reprove. And the v.—

To teach, to improve, to reprove.

Fr. Lec-on; Sp. lon; It. Lettione; L. Lectio, from legere, to read. See LECTURE. Un-

LET, v. a. To hinder, keep back or re-ER. hind; to impede, to obstruct, to -ING. withhold.

See LATE. Go. Lat-gan; A. S. Lāt-tan, lat-tan; Ger. & D. Letzen, tardare, morare, impede, to retard, to delay, to hinder, keep back or behind, and perhaps cons. to leave behind. It is still a common word in legal conveyances. Un-

LET, v. To leave, to relinquish, to resign, to yield or give up, to concede, to desist. To give or grant, (sc. the possession or occupation;) to give or grant, to allow, to permit, to authorize, to give permission or authority.

Go. Lat-an; A. S. Lāt-an; D. -en; Sw. -a; Dan. Lader; linguere, sistere, permittere; pati; to leave, to give leave, to permit or suffer. (It is in Ger. lassen; Fr. Laisser; It. Lasciare; and perhaps the same word as Let-on, to leave, qv.) Lāt-an, tardare, and Lāt-an, linguere, are probably the same word, though their present usages are so different. See TO LEAVE. For- In-Out-

LET, term. Lye remarks, that A. S. Lyt-el, diminutionis gratia, ex more A. Saxonum præ-positum, as Lytel secer, agellus; lytel boc, libellus; and the same lyt-post-positum, may have furnished our dim. term. —let. Our poets are continually adding to the number.

L. Lethum, death. Mr. Steevens says that lethe, death, is used by many of the old translators of novels: he produces the instance of lethal, from Cupid's Whirligig. Nares has another from the Palace of Pleasure.

LETHARGY, s. v. A sluggish, drowsy

-IC.

forgetfulness, or state of forget-

-IC-ALLY. fulness; drowsiness or sleepiness

-ALNESS. to an excess.

-NESS.

Fr. Léthargie, -targie; It. -thorgia, -targo; Sp. -thargia; L. Lethargia, -us; Gr. Ληθ-αργος, from ληθην, forgetfulness, and αργος, sluggish, slothful.

LETHE, s. Lethe,—The river of Oblivion.

-EAN. Lethean,—Forgetful; causing for--IED. getfulness, oblivion.

Gr. Ληθη, forgetfulness.

LETTER, s. v. -LESS. App. to—the different characters or forms which constitute the alphabet of any language;

To a writing addressed from one to another; an epistle.

To the sense or meaning of the words, (combinations of letters), without any met. or cons. application.

Letters, (collectively,) — literature or learning.

The v. To letter,—to grave, inscribe, or mark with letters.

Fr. Let-tre; It. -tera; Sp. -ra; L. Littera, of which Voss. has not decided the etym. Perhaps from litum, past p. of linere, to smear; as one of the earliest modes of writing was by graving the characters upon tablets smeared over or covered with wax.—Pliny, b. xlii. c. 11. Al- Il- Ob-Un-

LETTUCE, s. A plant, so called "for the plentie that it yeeldeth of a milkie white juice."—Holland. Plinie.

Fr. Laictus; It. Lattuga; Sp. Lactuga; L. Lactuca, from Lac, milk.

LEVACION, s. -TOR. Levation, i. e. elevation.

Levator,—an instrument to raise bones sunk or depressed. Sub-

LEVANT, ad. s. The East; a wind

-ER. coming from the East; the Eastern

-INE. part of the Mediterranean. See LEVER.

Fr. Lev-ant; It. & Sp. -ante; the East Country —from levant, raising or rising, (orient.) pl. of lever, to raise or rise; because there the sun raises or elevates himself. (A. S. Elif-tan.)

LEVE. See LIEF.

LEEVEE, s. App. to—an assembly of visitors at or soon after the time of rising; a large assemblage of visitors to people of rank or power.

Fr. from Lever, to raise or rise; the rising or time of rising. "I got to the sea-coast time enough to be at the sun's levee."—Gray.

LEVEL, v. s. ad. To even, to plane, to

-L-Y. flatten, to bring to a smooth, equal,

-ER. or uniform surface, without aspe-

-NESS. rities or roughness, without inclination or leaning; to equalize; to square with; to place in, to bring to, the same line, sc. as another object, an object aimed at; and hence,—To aim at, to endeavour to hit.

A. S. Læf, laef; Fr. Lio-el; It. -ello; L. Libella, dim. of libra, from librare, to even. Un-

LEVEN, * s. -ING.† Light, or lightning.

*Chaucer. Spenser. †Surrey.

From A. S. Hluf-ian, rutilare.—Ruddiman and Lye. But Hluf-ian, is to lift, (and thence Lift, the air, the sky,) eminere, conspicuus esse, and thence splendescere, to raise aloft, to be conspicuous; and cons. bright or brilliant. And see Jamieson.

LEVER, s. That which raises or elevates. "The lever :—the first invention of it is usually ascribed to Neptune, and represented by his trident, which in the Greek are both called by one name, and are not very unlike in form, being both of them somewhat broader at one end than in the other parts."—Wilkins.

Fr. Lever, from the v. lever; L. Levare, to raise or lift up.

LEVERET, s. A young hare.

Fr. Lievret, lievreteau, dim. of Libre; It. Lepre, -ette; Sp. Liebre, -ecilla; L. Lepus, a hare.

LEVESEL, s. Levesel may be opposed to Groundsel, (qv.) or Ground-post; or mean some kind of sell or syll, (perhaps raised, Fr. Lever, to raise,) as distinct from that fixed in the ground.

Sk. writes it Levesell, or Lessel, umbraculum, from Fr. Lats, trees or bushes, with the addition of the dim. term. -ell. Tyrw. (in his note) says it is plainly derived from Sax. Læfe, folium, and sell, sedes; and it signifies—a leafy seat, an arbour. In his Gloss. he declares himself by no means satisfied with his own explanation.

LEVET, s. A rousing, animating blast.

Butler (Hubdras) probably intended to form this word from Fr. Lever, to raise, to rouse, and cons. to animate.

LEVIATHAN, s. The word is Heb.; the Septuagint renders it Ἀπακων, a dragon, and κνγρος, a whale.

LEVIGATE, v. ad. To smoothen, to polish; to bring or reduce to a state of smoothness.

L. Levigare, from levis, (pro glabro politoque,) smooth and polished; Gr. Aeov.—Voss.

LEVITICAL, ad. -ALLY. Of or pertaining to the Levites, or tribe of Levi; to the priesthood, which, among the Jews, belonged to that tribe.

LEVITY, s. -ATION.* Lightness; (met.) fickleness, changeableness; instability or unsteadiness, inconstancy; frivolity, opposed both lit. and met. to gravity.—*Palsy.

It. Lev-ita; Sp. -edad; L. Levitas, from levis, light, which Voss. thinks is from Gr. Aevis, cortex, qui levissimus. See LEVY. (A. S. Hluf-ian.)

LEVY, v. s. To raise, to lift up, to lift off, -IABLE. (to bear off, to carry away,) to -ING. collect or gather.

To levy an army, is a common expression; to levy a siege (Holinshed) is not so, though correct.

Spenser writes—leaved.

Fr. Lev-er; It. -are; Sp. -ar; L. Levare, to raise. See LEVITY. Al. E. In. Re. Sub.

LEVYING. See LEAVING.

LEW, ad. Low, v. Warm, tepid.

Gower uses the v. To low; ("He that hie hertes loweth with fyrie dartes;") and both v. and s. are common in Scotch. See Jamieson.

A. S. Hliw, hleow, from the v. Hleowan, tepere, fovere, to warm. See LUKEWARM.

LEWD, ad. Lewd means—misled, led -LY. astray, deluded, imposed upon, be- -NESS. trayed into error, and thus is almost -STER.* equivalent to wicked, i. e. beguiled. In its modern application it is confined to those who are betrayed or misled by one particular passion; sc. lust or lechery.

Deluded, ignorant, illiterate; wicked, lustful, lecherous.—*Shak.

Sk.'s first suggestion is the A. S. Be-law-an, prode, to betray or mislead; and Tooke confirms it to be the A. S. Læwed, the past p. of Læw-an, prode, tradere, to delude, to mislead. It was app. to the (lay) people in distinction from the clergy. (See LAY.) Som. says.—Læwede, læwed-man; Læcus, a laick, layman.

LEXICON, s. Gr. Λεξικον, a book in -COGRAPHER. which words (Λεξεις) should -COGRAPHY. be explained.

LIABLE, ad. That may be bound or -ABLENESS. obliged, compelled, subject, -ABILITY. subservient, or exposed to.

Sk.—Old Fr. Liabile, from Lier; L. Lig-ere, to bind; qd. ligabilis, obligabilis, that may be bound or obliged.

LIARD, ad. App. to a horse of a grey colour.

Low L. Liardus, the colour of a horse, gris pommé, nostris; Liardo, Itals.—Du Cange. And Men. forms it from Gr. Aeuvos, white.—See Lior, in Jamieson. The word may be from A. S. Leahtrian, vitare. A. S. Leahtr is app. to the (white) scurf or scales of the head.—Som.

LIB,* v. To cut, to cut out.

*Bp. Hall. Massinger.

D. Lubben, castrare, virilia exsecare.—Kilian. Perhaps from Ger. Leib-en, partiri, scindere, se-care, to cut.

LIBAMENT,* s. -TION. App. to—The pouring; and the liquid so poured.

*Holland.

Fr. Liba-tion; It. -zione; Sp. -cion; L. Liba-men, -tio, from Libare; Gr. Λιβ-ειν, to pour; to pour forth wine at sacrifices. De-Pre-

LIBBARD. See LEOPARD.

LIBBET, s. A cutting or piece cut; a slice, a slip, a strip.

Grose says, that in Kent a Libbet is a great cudgel, used to knock down fruit from the trees, and throw at cocks. Nares says it is a stick or staff. Probably from Lib, to cut.

LIBEL, s. v. As the Fr. Libelle,—A libel -L-ER. or defamatory book, &c.; also a -ING. writ, citation, process, containing -OUS. the substance of the suit; or (more properly) the original declaration upon any action; also a bill, certificate, request, or supplication in writing.

Fr. Libel-le; It. -lo; Sp. -o; L. Libellus, a little book, from Liber, a book. Be-

LIBERAL, ad. Liberal,—free; free by

-ALITY. birth, and cons. having the

-ALIZE, v. characteristics of a gentleman,

-ALLY. (qv.); gentle, generous.

-ATE, v. Free,—in giving or bestowing;

-ATION. and, cons.—bounteous, munificent.

-ATOR. Libertine,—a free man; one

-INE, ad. s. free, (from all restraint of -INAGE. moral or religious order or discipline,) immoral, irreligious.

-INISM. Liberty,—freedom; power or

-ISM. ability to act as we wish, to act unrestrainedly or unconfinedly.

Fr. & Sp. Liberal; It. -ale; L. Liberalis; Fr.

Liberté; It. -a; Sp. -ad; L. Libertas, from L.

Libet, free, and this, perhaps, from Libere, to do as it pleases us.—See Foss. (in v. Libet.) who is

LIBIDINOUS, ad. Lustful, lecherous.

-OUSLY. *R. Junius.

-IST. *Fr. Libidin-eux; It. & Sp. -oso; L.

Libidinosus, from Libido, and that from Libere; to do as it pleases us, or as we list or lust: app.

to the particular lust of sexual intercourse. Un-

LIBRARY, s. -IAN. A room, apartment, or store-house for books; also the collection of books, (Libri.)

Fr. Librairie; It. & Sp. -eria; L. Libraria.

Libet, the bark of a tree, is app. to books, because men used to write *on the rinds and barks of trees."—Pliny, lib. xiii. c. 11.

LIBRATION, s. A poising or balancing.

It. Libra-mento; Sp. -cion; L. Libratio, from

Librare, to poise, to balance.

LICENSE, v. s. To license,—to give a

-ER. right, an authority, a permis-

-TI-ATE, s. sion; to authorize, to permit.

-OUS. The s.—grant of a right; and,

-OUSLY. cons.—exemption from re-

LICH. See LIKE.

LICH, s. A dead body.

A. S. Lice; Sw. Lik; Go. Leika. Corpus, cada-ver, the body, the carcase; probably from Lic-gan, to lie, as Cadaver, from Cadere, to fall, (see LITCH.)

—See Lik, Lic-gan, in Jamieson.

LICIT, **ad.* Lawful. Fr. Licite; It. &

Sp. Licito. Illicit, (qv.) is in common use.

LICK, v. s. To touch with the tongue, to

-ERISH, or pass the tongue over; to strike

-LIQUORISH. up, to draw or take in with, the

-LICKEROUS. tongue; to lap, to lick up, (sc.

-LY. greedily, as dogs do,) to devour.

-NESS. Lickerish,—desiring, tempting, or inviting, to lick; to taste, to eat or drink; salacious, (lecherous.)

Go. Lai-gan; A. S. Liccan; Ger. Lecken; D.

Lecken, licken; Sw. Stika; Dan. Likker; Fr.

Licker, lecher; It. Leccare; Gr. Λεγειν; L. Lingere, to lay the tongue upon, to touch with the tongue, (lingua.) See LECHER, and DELIGHT. Over-Un-

LICK, v. s. To lick,—to strike, to beat; also, a lick, a licking—are common words in speech, though not in writing. (See Jamieson.) The s.—"He gave me a lick across the face."—Dryden.

Sw. Lägga is to lay, and also to strike, i. e. to lay on (blows): "To lay it into him" is a common expression. And this appears to be the same word as the preceding; and both founded upon the Go. Lag-gan; A. S. Lic-gan, or lec-gan, ponere, jacere.

LICORICE, or LICORIS, s. A plant.

Sk.—Glycyrrhiza,—Radix suavis; the sweet root, (γλυκύς, sweet, and ρίζα, a root); It. Liquoricia.

LICTOR, s. "Lictors, in Livy, are ministers or sergeants attending upon the magistrates of Rome; namely, Dictators, Consuls, Pretors."—Holland.

L. Lictor, from Lig-are, to bind.

LID, s. That by which any thing, (vessel, box, &c.) is covered.

A. S. Hlid, the past p. of Hlid-an, tegere, operire, to cover, (dropping the aspirate h.)—Tooke. See LOT, BLOT, GLAZE, CLOUD.

LIE, s. "The old Latin word lix (quoth M. Varro) is nothing else but the ashes of the hearth; and hereupon commeth lixivius cinis, i. lie ashes."—Holland. Plinius.

App. also to liquids impregnated with lie ashes, or salts of ashes, or other substances.

A. S. Leah, lag; Ger. Lauge; D. Loog; Sw. Lut; in Fr. Lessive, lexive, or lixive; It. Liscione, liacia; Sp. Leasia; L. Lixivium. See LIXIVIAL.

LIE, v. s. To do or say, deceitfully or LIAR falsely; to tell a falsehood; that LYING. which we do not think to be true.

"The proper notion of a lie is an endeavouring to deceive another by signifying that to him as true, which we ourselves think not to be so; in the ordinary way of communicating our thoughts."—Clarke.

Go. Liugn, mendacium; A. S. Leg-an, leagan; D. Liegen; Ger. Lügen, lug-en; Sw. Lug-a; Dan. Ligner; which Wach. thinks Casaubon is right in deriving from the Gr. Λεγειν, in malam partem accipio. It is perhaps no other than A. S. Leg-an, to lie, to lie in wait, in ambush, (in-di-ari), with intent treacherously to surprise; and thus, to delude or deceive, first by deed, and then, by word; and thus, cons. mentiri. LIE, v. LIEB. Anciently, and now provincially, To lig.

To lay, differs from To lie, only by grammatical usage: lay down, sc. that load, or lay that load down; lie down, sc. yourself, or lie (sub. yourself) down. We tell a man to lay down his load, to put or place it down; we tell a dog to lie down himself, to put or place himself down: the same distinction is observed in other words original; e. g. to rise or raise, to set or sit, (qv.)

To lie in, sc. bed, or child-bed.

See To LAY. Go. & A. S. Lig-an; Ger. -en; D. Ligg-en; Sw. -ta; Dan. -er, to lie. Out-

LIEF, ad. s. av. -SOME.* Anciently written Lefe, Leve.

One loved or beloved;—As lief, as lovingly, with as much good will, as willingly.—**Surrey.*

LIEGE, ad. s. The word is now app. as

-ANCE. if the liegance or bond were only—MAN. to attach the people to the prince; and in this usage, Liege is—

Sovereign, or supreme head or chief.

Fr. Liege; It. Ligto, from L. Lig-are, to bind. Liegance, in Low L. Liganie, the bond, (Spel. in v.) reciprocally connecting subject and chief, binding the one to protection and just government, the other to tribute and due subjection. The prince, or chief, is called ligius dominus, or liege lord; the subjects ligius populus, or homines ligti, liege people or liege men. In meaning, the words are equivalent to bound lord, and bound people; bound in the manner explained by Spel.—And see Blackstone, l. 367. Al-

LIEU, s. In lieu is—In the place or stead.

LIFT, v. s. To raise, to elevate, to heave,

-ER. to exalt, to put or place on high; to

-ING. take up, bear off, so. that which belongs to another; to carry off, to steal.

Shop-lifter,—one who lifts, takes up, carries away from a shop,—is still a common word.

Mr. Steevens produces an instance of this usage of lifting from Ben Jonson, and instances of lifter from other writers.—Note on Troilus and Cressida.

Lift, the s. (Ger. Luft; A. S. Lyft), app. to the air or sky, is of common occurrence in G. Douglas. (See Loft.) And see Tooke and Jamieson.

A. S. Hlif-an; Ger. Liften; Dan. Loftor, to raise, to elevate. The Go. Hlif-an was also, (tollere, auferre), furari. Un-Up mean refers; to be similar or like, to represent, a likeness, or resemblance, or similitude. See LIKE, infra. Be- Mis- Un-

LIKE, v. Likely,—a likely thing, a thing -ING. having the likeness or resemblance -LY. to truth, to reality,—having verisimilitude,—that probably has been, is, or may be. A likely person,—one that probably may suit or serve such and such a purpose; suitable, well-adapted, convenient; and thus,—agreeable, pleasing, well-looking.

To be or become similar, to assimilate, to adapt to, to be or become convenient or agreeable; and cons.—to please, to feel or cause pleasure; to approve, or regard with approbation.

Go. Leik-en, galeikan; A. S. Lic-ian, gotician; Sw. Lika, placere; the usage of the D. Lück-en, ghe-lücken, assimilate, adaequare, congruere, convenire, seems to confirm a suggestion of Sk. that to like, approve, may be from like, similia, sc. as lines lay-ed parallel, or other things lay-ed, in pairs, in sorts or suits, suited, adapted, assimilated; and thus, all may be from Go. Lag-an; A. S. Lec-gan, to lay. (And see LICK.) And our usage of the ad. Likely, gives additional force to it.

LILACH, s. A plant;—supposed to be so called, because the scent of its flowers resembles that of the lily, (lilaceum.) Fr. Lilas,—ilach.

LILLIPUTIAN, s. App. to—Any thing very small, pigmean;—from Swift's Voyage to Lilliput.

LILY, s. -IED. A plant; the flower. Lilied, or lillied,—covered with lilies. Lily-livered,—white-livered.—Shak. L. Lilium; Gr. Λιλον; Fr. Lis; It. Giglio; Sp. Lirio.

LIMB, s. v. The arms, legs, and thighs, -LESS. are limbs or members, or parts -MEALE. pertaining or belonging to the trunk or body; the head, for the same reason, (quod pertinet,) might likewise be so called. Also, the hem, edge, or border.

A. S. Lim; Dan. Lem; (Jun.) from Gr. Μελος, membrum. "In A. S. (Limb is) written Lim or Limp; b being written for p. It is the past p. of the A. S. v. Limp-ian, pertinere; and it means, quod pertinet, or quod pertinetur; what belongeth or hath belonged to something. Limb of the body, limb of the law, limb of an argument, &c." Limb, as the L. Limbus or Limbos, (which also Tocke derives from the A. S.) is app. to—the hem, edge, or border; including still the notion of holding to, or belonging to. See LIMBO.

LIMBECK, s. The vessel through which distilled liquors pass into the receiver. At-embick,—Bar. L. Alambic-us; Fr. -ic; It. Lambico; Sp. Alambique, from the Ar.

LIMBER, ad. Cons.—yielding easily; -NESS. and thus, limber or limp,—

LIMP, ad. Easily bent, flexible, pliant. A. S. Limp-an; Sw. Lemp-a, to pertain or belong; A. S. Limp-tic, pertaining, pertinent, seasonable, meet. Un-

LIMBO, s. App. to—Any place of confinement, of restraint.

The Limbus patrum, as it is called, is a place that the Schoolmen supposed to be in the neighbourhood (i. e. on the edge or border; see LIMA.) of hell, where the souls of the patriarchs were detained, and those good men who died before our Saviour's resurrection.—Newton.

LIME, v. s. To glue or fasten together, -ER. to cement; to conglutinate; to cover -Y. or rub over with lime, with a viscous matter, with cement; cons.—to catch, so birds; and thus,—to ensnare, to entangle, (D. Luymen.)

A. S. Lim-an, ge-liman, conglutinare, to glue or fasten together; Ger. Leim; Sw. Lim. Be-

LIME, s. -ER. A limmer, or leamer, is a dog of the chase, so called from the leam or leash in which he was held till he was let slip.—Caius, De Canibus Britannicis, cited by Steevens on Lear. Caius writes,—Levinarius seu lorarius, a leviner or lyemmer. See LEAM.

LIMED, ad. Polished. "It was lyke a limed glass."—Chaucer.

Fr. Limer, to file, to polish; L. Lima, a file.

LIMIT, v. s. To bound, to mark out or -ARY, ad. s. determine, describe or prescribe the bounds; to define, -EDLY. to confine.

-ER. A limitour,—a fryer licensed -LESS. to beg within fixed limits, (within his limitation,—Chaucer.) within a certain district. Tyndale writes—Limitarier.

Fr. Limiteur; It. -ore; Sp. -or; L. Limes, from limus, i. e. obliquus, transversus, (Voss.) a cross-road; and thence,—a landmark, a boundary. In-Un-

LIMMER, ad. s. Mr. Gifford says,—vile, worthless; lit.—a night-robber. Brocket, —a female of loose manners, or easy virtue. May be from Liman, conglutinare, or Luyman, insidiari. See Jamieson.

LIMN, v. Gen.—To paint or depicture, -ER. to draw, to delineate.

-ING. From Fr. Enluminer, which Cot. interprets,—to limn; and in v. Enluminer, he says,—We call one that coloureth or painteth on paper or parchment, an alluminer.—Mins. and Spec. "[Ascham] had a great faculty in writing Gr. L., and Eng. epistles, which were not only excellent for matter, but for the neatness of the handwriting, adorned with illumination, which we now call limning in the margin."—Wood. See To ILLUMINATE. Spenser writes—Limning.

LIMOUS,* ad. Muddy, boggy, miry.

**Brown*.

L. Limosus, from limus, mud; Fr. Limonneux.

LIMP. See LIMBER.

LIMP, v. s. To limp.—To move, to walk with the limbs—halt, held, withheld, stopt, in their action.

The old A. S. word is Lemp or Limp-healt, i. e. limb-halt or held; or halt, or held in the free use of the limbs; and thus each word became, used separately, to halt, and to limp, as of equivalent signification.

LIMPID, ad. As the Fr. Limpid,—"clear, bright, sheen, (shining,) glazie, (or glassy,) transparent."—Cot.

Fr. Limp-ide; It. -ido; Sp. -lo; L. Limpidus, which Voss. derives from Gr. Λαμπρ-ειν, to shine.

LIN,* v. To stop, to cease, to desist, to give over or leave off.

**Spenser. Holland. North.*

Linnae, the A. S. root of this word, seems to have merged into A. S. Blinna, or be-linna, ceasare, dealnere, to cease or stop, to desist. See BLIND, and BLUNT.

LIN, s. Lin is called by the annotator on Drayton,—a pool or watery moor; meres from whence rivers spring; and see POND. Som. calls it a British word, signifying a lake, pool, or standing water, such as that of the fens (of Lin-colnshire).

A. S. Hlyna, is a torrent, from Hlynn-an, strepere, to roar; but lin seems app. not to the noisy fall, (see the Gloss. to G. Douglas,) but to the still basin or pool above; where the water is held, reserved, linned or stop in its flood. See LIN, ante.

LINCH-PIN, s. The pin which fastens the axle of a wheel, qd. links, or link-pin, the linking pin.—Sk.

Dr. Jamieson refers to the Sw. Lunta. And here explains Lunta,—luntaticha, paxillus axis, obex rotæ prefixus, i. e. the bar or bolt set before a wheel.

LINCTURE, s. App. to—Medicinal preparations, that are to be licked up—by the tongue. L. Lingere, lickum, to lick up.

LIND, s. -EN, or LIME-TREE.

A. S. Lind; D. & Ger. Linde. The entire word (Wach.) is Lindenbaum; (Kilian,) "A tree so called, (Teutonick,) from the softness of its substance, and hence Ovid, tilia molles. Ger. Lind, mollis; and Lindern; D. Lindern, lenire." Sk. inclines to the etym. of Kilian.

LINE, v. -ING. Gen.—To cover, to clothe, the inside; to strengthen, secure, or protect by covering the inside; by putting or placing any thing within; gen.—to secure, strengthen, or protect.

Jun.—Lined gown; duplicata toga; perhaps because garments were formerly doubled and strengthened by the insertion of linen. Un-

LINE, s. Any thing extended, (a point -AGE produced,) any extension, in -AL length, as of string or thread; of -ALLY writing; of men; of defence, -AMENT before or round entrenchments; -AR any thing drawn out or pursued -ATION lengthwise or longitudinally; a -ATURE* course pursued or followed; as, (met.) a line of argument, a line of conduct; a direct course, sc. of succession or geniture, from parent to child; geniture.

Line is sometimes used as equivalent to Delineation, (qv.) and to Lineament; i. e. the lines which mark the features of the face, or countenance; the features, lit. and met.

Linear, lineation, are used principally in books of natural history.—Holland.

Fr. Lign-er, -e; It. Sp. & L. Linea, from Linum, because made of line, whence Linum, (qv.)—Voss. Perhaps from A. S. Lin-ian, lin-ig-an, lig-an, to lie, to lie along. De- Trilineate; Inter- Out-Under-line; Un-lineal.

LINE, s. Linum is so called because made -EN, s. ad. of line (linum) or (as it is now named,) flax.

LINT. Fr. Linge; It. Lino; Sp. Linco; L. Lin-teum, -um; Gr. Λινον; Go. Lein; A. S. Lin, -en; D. Lijn, -en; Ger. Lein, leenen.

LIN-SEED. Though this word exists in the ancient and modern Northern and Southern languages, its original meaning is lost. Scheidius proposes for Gr. Λινον, an obsolete ν. Δι-ειν, to bind, to fasten: the Etymologus Magnus, απερνε λειοντητος, from its smoothness; perhaps, adds the same Scheidius, truly. See LIN, ante.

LING, s. A word (says Sk.) of common use in Lincolnshire: it is the northern name for heath, hether.—Gross. Bacon distinguishes heath from ling; and in Ayrshire, (v. Jamieson), a thin long grass is so called. It is also the name of a species of codfish, perhaps (Sk.) a longitudine.

LING, ter. In some parts of Saxony, Ling, imago dicitur; and it was customary in A. S. to subjoin it to the name of the father, as Eadmund, Eadmon-ling, (and thus resembling the Gr. as Atrous, Atrides);—it was further subjoined to denote offspring, or progeny, gen. as duck, duckling. In the former cases, Wach. derives from Lang-en, tangere;—a son being called ling, velut tangens, quia patrem proxime tangit origine. In the second, he derives from Lang-en, pertinere, to pertain (to be-long,) and he has several other unnecessary distinctions, with respect to the use and origin of this same termination ling. It always denotes long-ing, or pertaining; and from being app. to progeny or offspring, has the force of a dim.; used to designate, the added circumstances of pertaining or belonging, of being connected with or dependent upon, derived or deduced from. See Lye; Wach. Prolegom. sec. 6; and Spel. Gloss. Archæol. in v. Adelingsres.

LINGENCE, s. Any thing used by licking.

L. Lingens, p. p. of Lingere, to lick. See LINC-TORUS, and LOCUS.

LINGER, v. To lengthen, to protract; -ER. to remain or continue long; to -ING. move tardily or slowly; to stay, -INGLY. stop, or remain inactive.

From A. S. Lang-ian, prolongare, producere, to prolong or lengthen out, to protract or draw out.

LINGET, s. An ingot, (qv.) lump, or mass of metal.—Cot. Fr. Lingot.

LINGLE,* s. "Fr. Ligneul, a shoemaker's thread, or a tatching end."—Cot. "The langot of the shoe, is, in the North, the latchet of the shoe, from Fr. Languet, lingula, a little tongue or slip."—Ray. **Drayton*.

LINGUIST, s. One skilled in tongues or languages.

It. & Sp. Linguista; from L. Lingua, a tongue. Om. -AL, pertaining to the tongue; to language.

LINIMENT, s. In Fr. (Cot.) app. to—The rubbing or smearing; and also to the ointment itself. In Eng. only to the latter.

Fr. Liniment; It. mento; L. Linimentum, from linire, to anoint; Gr. λειναι-ειν, to render smooth and slippery, as is done by ointment when laid, spread, or smeared over any thing.

LINK, s. v. -ING. App. to—The parts by which a chain is extended in its length; to the parts of which a chain is formed. To link is—

To connect or fasten together; to combine, (as a series of rings, and gen.) to conjoin, to concatenate.

Sk. derives from Ger. Gelenck, which he tells us means a junction, knot, or fastening, and also the ring of a chain; from Lenk-en, flectere, to bend; he has no authority for Gelenck so used. And link is probably from the A.S. Lenca-as, to lengthen; meaning, a length. Add another link, i. e. a length, to the chain. En-Inter-Over-Un-

LINK, s. Pitch or other combustible, mixed with tow or flax, used ignited.

Not from Gr. Λυγος, but from Ger. Lencken, flectere, to bend, quia Resina tædæ complicatur, pitch interlinked with tow.—Sk.

LINNET, s. A bird.

Fr. Linotte, linaria avis; so called, perhaps, because it feeds on linæ, or flax, or on the seeds of flax.

LINSEL, s. -SEY-WOOLSEY. App. to—Any flimsy texture; any thing flimsy.

Vestis ex lana et lino simul mixtis confecta.—Sk. A vest made of wool and linen mixed together.

LIN-STOCK, s. -TEL. A torch or match to let off guns, &c.

From Ger. Lunte; D. Lunte; i. e. lint, or linen; L. Linteam; qd. linteum sulphuratum, linen prepared with brimstone, (Sk.); or other combustible material. And stock or stick. The Ger. Lunte was first app. to a kind of tinder so prepared to receive the fire struck from flint.—Wach.

LINT. See LINE, LINEN.

LINTEL, s. -ERN. App. to—The head-piece of the door or casement.

Fr. Lint-eau; Sp. -el; from the ancient Lintimentum, for linum, qd. linimentellum, whence the god Lintimentus, who presides over the thresholds or posts of a door.—Sk.

LION, s. An animal.

-ESS. Lionly, (met.)—magnanimous and
-LY. majestic (as a lion).

-SHIP. Fr. Lion; Sp. Leon; It. Lione; L. Leo; Gr. Λεων; D. Leue; Ger. Lew. Wach. rejects the etym. of Porphyry from the Gr. Λαω, video, and affirms the A.S. Hlew-an, to roar.

LIP, s. v. To lip,—to touch with the lips, to kiss.

Lip is app. gen. to the edge of any thing that folds or may fold or lap over.

Cot. has Lippe, a lip; and Lippu, thick-lipped, great-lip; also, a powting or hanging the lip, as a child that's ready to cry.

Lip-good, (met.)—good in words only.—B. Jonson.

A.S. Lippa; D. Lip; Ger. & Dan. Lippe; Sw. Læpp; from L. Labium.—Sk. Wach.—from Ger. Leiben, to divide, to separate. Not improbably from Lap, to fold over, as the lips fold over the mouth.

LIPOTHYMY, s. -ous. A swooning, wherein the patient seems dead. Cot.—i. e. wherein his soul seems to have left him.

Fr. Lipothamie; Gr. λειποθυμία, λειν-ειν, to leave or quit, and θυμός, the mind.

LIPPITUDE, s. A running of the eyes, blear-eyedness.—Bacon.

Fr. Lippi-tude; It. -tudin; L. Lippitudo; lip-pus, from λειβ-ειν, fundere, stillare, to pour, to drop; because the eyes drop tears.

LIQUATE, v. To liquate or liquefy,—to -QUATION. dissolve, to melt.

-QUEFY. Liquid,—watery or fluid,

-QUEFIABLE. dissolved, melted; fluent,

-QUEFACTION. flowing clearly and easily;

-QUID, ad. s. diluted, thin.

-QUIDATE, v. To liquidate,—to clear off,

-QUIDNESS. and, thus, to diminish, to

-QUOR, s. v. lessen.—Glanvill.

-QUIDITY. Fr. Liquidite, -guor; It. -guido;

-guore; Sp. -guido, lecor; L. Liquidus, liquor, from Liquare, to melt; and this Voss. derives from the old L word Lis, which he contends signified water, and hence Liquare, to reduce to water, or to a fluid state. Cot-De-Un-

LIRE. (See LEER.) It is in our old romances variously written,—leire, lyre, lire. See Jamieson.

LIRIPOOP, s. Fr. Liripipion. A graduate's hood. Liripipie,—hooded, as a graduate.

LISP, s. v. Lisping, or—the defect in the -ING. prolation (as Wilkins terms it) or -INGLY. utterance of particular letters, arises from striking the tongue against the inside of the teeth.

A.S. Wlisp. Dentiloquus, per dentes loquens. A lisper. D. Lisp-en, -elen; Ger. -eln; Sw. Læspa; Dan. Læper. All of which Sk. declares must be formed from the sound. Aristophanes, however, uses the expression Λις πυλωσα, which is interpreted a slipper, stuttering tongue, and some etymologists decide for a Gr. original. Stuttering or stammering is distinguished by Wilkins from lisp; he considers both to be defects of speaking, the first as to the continuity of speech, the second as to the prolation of particular letters.—Real Character, pt. ii. c. 9.

LISS, s. v. To loose, free from, relieve, remit. See TO LESS or LEASEN.

*Chaucer. Gower.

LISSOME, i. e. Lithesome. See LITHE.

LIST, s. v. List, s.—that which is collected; a collection, ac. of names. And to list,—

To enroll, to write in a roll or catalogue; to register, ac. the names of those engaged for a particular purpose, as for military service; and, thus, to engage the services.

Fr. List-e; It. & Sp. -a; from Go. & A.S. Lis-an; Ger. & D. Lezen; in its cons. usage, colligere, to collect. En- or In-

LIST, s. App. to—The inclosure of as-ed. sembled or collected persons, (septum -ING. intra quod hastiludium celebratur,) to any thing inclosing or surrounding; and, thus, to the edge or border;—the border of cloth, stripped off,—bounds, limits, or confines. Among pugilists the lists are now called the ring.

Fr. Lice; It. Lizza; Low L. Licla, the barriers of camps or cities; so called—A licia, from threads, strings, or ropes, of which they were at first made.—Du Cange. But Voss. thinks it is the same word as list; A. S. List; D. Lijet; Fr. Licêtre; It. & Low L. Lista; the edge, or border, or hem (of cloth), app. pro lined aut metà: the line, the bounding line; part. (adds Lye) to that line which bounds or defines the space within which combatants are to fight. The words (there can be little doubt) are the same, (and see Listr, suis.) from Lis-an, lis-ed, list, colligere, congregare, to collect, to assemble.

LIST, s. v. To wish, to covet, to desire
-LESS. (to lust, qv.)

-LESS-LY. Listless,—having no wish or desire; heedless, indifferent.

Dan. Lyster; A. S. List-an, or lyst-an, velle, cupere, desiderare.

LIST, or -EN, v. To hearken, to attend, -ENER. to pay or give attention, to heed or -FUL. take heed.—Spenser.

Listful seems the opposite of listless, the one—heedful or anxious, the other—heedless or indifferent; and the A. S. Hlyst-an; D. Luysteren; Dan. Lyster; Ger. Laustern, audire, auscultare, attendere, observare, to hear, hearken, attend to, observe, regard, seems to vary from Lystan, to care for, be desirous for, merely in the greater latitude to which the word (without the aspirate) is extended in its application. See LITRIS. Un-

LITANY, s. "It grew that supplications with this solemnity for the appeasing of God's wrath, and the auerting of publick evils, were of the Greeke Church termed litanies; rogations, of the Latine."—Hooker.

Fr. Litanie; It. & Sp. -a; L. Litania; Gr. Λιτανεία, from λιττεύειν, precari, to pray, because, says Mina. "Litanie is nothing but prayers and supplications."

LITCH-OWL,* s. "Lic, or lick, a dead corpse, whereof the unlucky night-ravens are lichfouls."—Verstegan. See LICH.
**Drayton*.

LITE,* ad. i. e. littile, (qv.)—Chaucer.

LITERAL, ad. s. Literal,—strictly according to the letter; or to the

-ARY. sense or meaning of the words,

-ATE. (combinations of letters,) without

-ATORS. any metaphorical or cons. application.

-ATISM.* Literary,—pertaining to letters,

-ALIST.† (collectively,) i. e. to learning;

-ALITY.† pursuing or devoted to learning, to learned studies.

Literator,—used by Burke contumeliously, as in Latin—pretenders to Literature.—Milton. †Bp. Hall.

Fr. Lit-tral, -draire; It. -teral, -terato; Sp. -eral, -erario, -erato; L. Littra-lis, -rius, -tus, from Littera, a letter. See LETTER.

LITH, s. Perhaps Lithe, flexible, (see infra); app. to the limbs from their flexibility at the joints.—Chaucer. Gower.

Go. Litha; A. S. Lith; Ger. Lid; D. Lide; Sw. Lied. Verellus (see Ihre, and Wach)—from Led-a, to bend.

LITHARGE, s. Litharge d'argent,—Silver foam, or the spume of tried silver.—Cot.

Fr. Litharge; It. & Sp. Lithargiria; Gr. Λιθαργυρος; λίθος, stone, and αργυρος, silver.

LITHE, ad. v. Lithe,—soft, gentle, compliant, pleasing. To lithe, to

-ER-LY. soothe, to soften, (and in Gower,

-NESS. an ear lithe) to bend, to bend

LITHE. an ear; cons. to attend, to listen.

Lither,—soft, yielding, flexible, complying, willing.

"Is it the nature of love to breed numbness or litherness?" Lily, Endimion; i. e. (Steevens) limberness, or yielding weakness. And—Lithy and lither are so used; cons.—

Weak, lazy, dissolute, depraved, wicked. A. S. Lith, from the v. Lith-an; ge-lithian, mollire, mitigare, temperare, mollem et tractabilem se præbere,—to soften, to mitigate, to temper or moderate; to be or cause to be soft and manageable. Skelton writes—Liddrous.

LITHOMANCY,* s. Divination, from stone.—Brown.

Fr. Lithomantie; Gr. λίθος, a stone, and μαντεύεσθαι, to prophecy, or predict.

LITHOTOMY, s. -IST. Stone-cutting. Gr. Λιθοτομία, from λίθος, a stone, and τεμνεναι, to cut.

LITIGATE, v. To strive or contend;

-ANT. to carry on a strife or contest,

-ATION. (sc. by suit at law;) to dispute

-IOUS. at law, or in courts of law.

-IOUSNESS. Fr. Littiger; Sp. -ar; It. & L. Litigare, from lis, litis, strife; which Voss. thinks formed from elis, and that from Gr. Ερις, of the same signification.

LITTER, v. s. A litter,—a bed or couch on which persons are carried. Litter for horses, a bed, sc. of straw, and hence app. to the straw.

To litter,—to strew a bed; to scatter straw; to be brought to bed, sc. to be in the straw.

A litter of pigs,—the number thus brought forth: and so, of kittens, &c.

A litter,—a scattering, sc. of straw, and then, gen. a scattering; a sluttish or slovenly scattering.

To litter,—to make such strewing or scattering.

Fr. Lichère; It. Lettiera, lettiga; Sp. Litara; from L. Lectus, a bed or couch, and Lectus from Gr. Λεκτρον, itself from λεγειν, eubare. Voss. remarks it as singular,—that the Latins have retained the Gr. Λεκτρον, and have not retained the Gr. λεγειν in this signification. The Ga. is Ligha, from Lig-an, to lig, or lie.

LITTLE, ad. s. -NESS. A little,—a small part, or portion, or degree; a small matter.

Little, adj.—small, diminutive; met. trifling, inconsiderable, mean. Littling, (Chaucer),—very little.—Tyrrus.

The dim. of Lile, in A. S. Lyl, lyle; Go. Leitil; A. S. Lytel; D. Luttel; Ger. Litzel; Sw. Lytan; Dan. Liden. Sk. thinks from Lith, a member, a part, quia, sc. pars est minor toto, because part is less or smaller than the whole. The dim. term. el, is considered by Tooke to be (die) the A. S. Dæl, a deal or part.

LITURGY, s. App. in the christian -ic, ad. s. church to—a form of public de--ICAL. votion; a form of prayer and thanksgiving, to be ministered in public.

Fr. Liturgie; It. Sp. & L. Liturgia; Gr. Λειτουργία, a public work, a public office; Λετρον, public, and εργον, a work.

LIVE, s. ad. s. To remain, to continue,
-ER. to dwell; to remain, to con-
-ING. tinue, sc. to breathe; in a state
-LONG. of animation, of existence; to -LY. be or have being, to exist, (here
-LI-HOOD. or hereafter.)
-LY. To gain or procure, to use, em-
-NESS. ploy, manage, or conduct the LIFE. means of life; or that which
-LESS. supports or maintains life.
-LY.* To be in a state of action or -FULL† motion, of growth or increase,
LIVE-LODE.‡ animal or vegetable.
-ISE.‡ Life, the s. is opposed to death:
-LESS.‡ it also is app.—

To our present state of being as opposed to the future; to a continued state or condition, manner or mode of living or of acting in life; to the living form, body, or person; to a lively, spirited, animated form or resemblance; to animation, spirit, vivacity, energy; the usual qualities of living beings.

Life is much used—pref.

*Chaucer. †Spenser. ‡Gower. §Holinshed.
Go. Lib-an; A. S. Lib-an, (B. of Gloucester, Libbe); lyfan; Ger. Leb-en, leib-en; D. Leven; Sw. Lefve; Dan. Lever, which Jun. and Wach. think may be A. S. Lyfan; Ger. Leib-en, to leave;—manere, remanere, supersedere, superstitium esse. Quid enim (says Wachter) quid enim est vivere, nisi supervivere. See BELIEVE, BELIEVE, and LEAVE. Be-En-In-Mis-Over-Out-Re-Un-

LIVER, s. In Anatomy, the name of a viscus or entrail; of a darkish red colour, whence liver-colour.

A. S. Lyffer; D. & Dan. Lever; Ger. Leber; Sw. Lefver; from A. S. Lyfan; D. Lef-en; Ger. Leb-en; Sw. Lef-en; Dan. Lever, to live: because of so great importance to life or animal vitality.—Sk. and Kithen. And see Thre and Wach.

LIVERY, s. v. Formerly denoted,—the clothes, and food, also, delivered and distributed by masters to their servants; now, to the clothes or marks upon the clothes, by which the servants of one master may be distinguished from those of another. More gen.—the clothing, garb, or dress.

To livery,—To clothe or deck in livery; to clothe or deck.

The liverymen of London are those free-men who are entitled to wear the livery of their respective companies.

“What livery is, wee by common use in England knew well enough, namely, that it is allowance of horse-meate, as they commonly use the word in stabling, as to keepe horses at livery:—the which word, I guesse, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightly foode. So in great houses the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening's allowance for drinke. And livery is also called, the upper weede which a serving man weareth, so called (as I suppose) for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure.”—Spenser.

Fr. Livres; It. Livrea; Sp. Librea; Low L. Liberatio; (see in Spet.) from the Fr. Livrer, to deliver: to the origin of this word (says Jun.) these words of Chaucer allude: “that is the comfance of my livery, to all my servants delivered.” De-LIVERY, i. e. Delivery, (qv.) “Livery of seisin is no other than the pure feudal investiture, or delivery of corporeal possession of the land or tenement.”—Blackstone.

LIVID, ad. Fr. Lividité; Lividity,—the -NESS. colour appearing upon a stroke, -ITY.* black and blue; a dead, earthy, leaden hue.—Cot. **Arbutus*.

Fr. Livide, -idité; It. -ido, -idezza; L. Lividus, (of unknown etym.) the same, says Voss. as plumbens, leaden.

LIXIVIAL, ad. See LIE, s. and ELIXATE.

-ATED. carl, indeque cinerem dici lixivium, qui aqua est percolatus, quomodo cibus dicitur elixus, qui in aqua est coctus. E-

LIZARD, s. (Anciently also written Licerte.) An animal.

Fr. Lézard; It. Lusardo, lucerta; Sp. Lusarto; L. Lacerta; so called because its limbs resemble the arms (lacerte) of man

LO, int. The imperative of Look. So (adds Tooke) the common people say corruptly, “Lo you there now.”—“La you there.”
Look,—see, behold, observe, mark.

LOAD, v. s. -ER. To lay or put on, to impose (a weight or burden); to put in, to take in, that which is to be borne or carried, sc. the cargo, the freight, the charge; to burthen; to oppress.

A. S. Hiad-en; D. & Ger. Lad-en; Sw. Ladda, onerare; Dan. Ladder; from the Go. Log-gan, A. S. Leog-an, ponere, to lay; “the participle Lag ed, or lag'd, (dismissing the sound of the g.) becomes lad (a broad) or load; and though weight is subaud. and therefore implied in the word load, yet weight is not load, until cuius impositum.”—Tooke. See LAD. Over-Re-Un-

LOAF, s. Loaf is,—a raised mass of bread, of sugar, &c.

Ger. Laib, leib; Sw. Lef; A. S. Hlaf, (a broad.) the past p. of Hlif-ian, to raise; in Mæso-Go. Hlaibe, the past p. of Hleib-yan, to raise, to lift up; after the bread or brayed grain has been wetted, (by which it becomes dough.) then follows the leaven, by which it becomes loaf, (i. e. raised: (See Tooke.) The Ger. Laib, leib, shows its immediate descent from the Mæso-Go., and the Sw. Lef from A. S.

LOAM, s. v. -Y. App. to a species of—Earth of an adhesive and tenacious quality.

To loam,—to cover with such earth.

A. S. Lam; D. Loam, terra madida, lutea; from A. S. Lim-an, ge-liman, conglutinare, connectere, to stick or bind together.

LOAN, s. That which, any thing which, is lent.

Go. Loan; A. S. Læn; D. Loon; Ger. Len; Sw. Loan; Dan. Loan. The past p. of A. S. v. lēan-an, læn-an, to lene or lend. See LEND.

LOATHE, v. To hate, to hold or keep
LOATH, ad. in, to look at with, hatred, detestation, or abhorrence; to detest, to abhor; to feel disgust, dislike, or reluctance, at or towards; to be backward or unwilling.

-LINESS.
-NESS.
-SOME.
-SOMELY. A. S. Leth-ian, (a broad,) odio habere, detestari, tædere, fastidire, to hate, to detest, to loath.—Som.
-SOMENESS.
-Y.*
D. Leeden; Ger. Leiden; Sw. Led-as; perhaps from the v. Lat-tan, to let; to put back. Wiclif writes Wlatit, and Chaucer Wlat-some; i. e. Loathes, and Loathsome.

LOB, s. v. Lob, s. looby, and lubber, appear to be merely words of -ILY. consequential usage, from the
LUBB-ER. v. To lob,— -ERLY. To drop or let fall or depend
-ARD, ad. s. (as a lap or lappet) inertly, whether from weariness or laziness; and to be thus applied to—
An inert or inactive, lazy or sluggish, heavy or lumpy, dull or stupid, person.

LOBBY, s. A covered passage, (pertaining to an interior building.)
In Low L. Lobium, from Ger. Laube, (a leaf,) a place covered or shaded by foliage or leaves; any covered place. (See Wack.) Sk. calls it, —Forticus, seu umbraculum ædium.

LOBE, s. Lobes du foye, the lobes of the liver;—from the Gr. Λοβος, (Men.) the lower part (of the ear), the outer part (of the liver;) that by which we take hold (of the ear, &c.) from λαβ-ειν, to take. Cot. calls it the lap, or lowest part of the ear, the lappet of the liver.—Also the lobes of a leaf, seed, &c.

LOBSTER, s. A shell-fish.
A. S. Loppestre, topust; it is called by Chaucer simply the loppe; and has its name from the v. To leap: the leap or spring of the lobster is noted by naturalists.

LOCAL, adj. Local is an ad. which we
-ITY. have borrowed from the Latin,
-LY. without borrowing the s.

LOCATE, v. Of or pertaining to place.
-ION. Fr. & Sp. Loc-al; It. -ale; L. Localis, from locus, a place; potius ἀπο-σταλ, quod est cubo, jaceo.—Voss. A. S. Lic-an, lug-tan. See LOOK, and PLACE. Ab-Con-Dis-E-Trans-

LOCHE, or LOHOC, s. Fr. Loch,—a liquid confection or soft medicine, that's not to be swallowed, but held in the mouth until it have melted, and so past by degrees down the throat. Fr. Lohoc,—an electuary, or medicine more liquid than an electuary, appropriated to the lungs and windpipe, and to be licked, and let down the throat by leisure.—Cot. See ELECTUARY.

LOCK, v. s. -ET. To close, to shut in, to fasten.
A lock,—that which closes or fastens, holds fast, encloses or confines.

In A. S. Loc, the regular past p. of Lge-an, obsecrare, claudere, to shut, to close. Go. Luk-an; D. Luyken, lok-en; Dan. Lukker. See BLOCK. Be-En-Un-Up-

LOCK, s. A lock of hair,—perhaps so much as was closed together, tied or fastened into one part or portion.

Dan. Lok; Ger. Lock; A. S. Loca, locca, locas, floccl, toments, locks of wool or flocks, of some called lucks; also locks of hair, foretops.—Som. Etymologists are almost unanimous for a Greek origin, but differ much as to the specific word. See LOCK, ante. Fore-

LOCO-MOTION, s. -MOTIVE. Motion from place to place.

L. Locus, a place, and motio, from movere, motum, to move.

LOCUST, s. An insect.

Locustical, in Byrom, is coined for the occasion.

Fr. Loc-goute; Sp. -gosta; It. & L. Locusta. Voss. prefers the etym. of Perotus;—ex locus and utis, quod tactu multa urat, morsu vero omnia erodit.

LOCUTION, s. -ORY. Speech; mode or manner of speech.

Fr. & Sp. Locution; L. Locutio, from loqui, to speak; Gr. ἀπο-ειρ. Al-Circum- & Inter.—Prolocutor, Col-Ob-loquy.

LODE, s. Now more commonly written
-SMAN. Lode. Lode (in Cornwall)

-MANAGE.* is the name given to the -STAR. vein, that leads in the mine;
-STONE. or the leading vein. Lodesman, (A. S. Lad-man, ductor, dux, a leader or guide,) a pilot, a ringleader; D. Leydsman. Lode-stone,—qd. lapis-ductorius, a leading-stone, (Som.) the stone that leads, guides, or directs. Lodestar,—D. Leydsterre, the star that leads, guides, or directs. G. Douglas calls it Lade-sterne. Lode-manage is used as equivalent to pilotage; but, as Mr. Tyrw. observes, it would have been more English to have said lodeman-ship, as seamanship, by adding an English rather than a French term. to an English word.—*Chaucer.

LODGE, v. s. (Anciently written To logge.)

-MENT. To place or station, to lay up or
-ER. deposit, to put up, to dispose, to
-ING. repose, to give or yield a place
-ABLE.* or station, dwelling, resting, or abiding place; to harbour, to shelter; to dwell, abide, or reside.

*Sir J. Finett (1656).

Dan. Logerer; A. S. Leggian, ge-loggian, to place, to lay up, to put up, to dispose; (Som.) probably formed upon A. S. Lecg-an, to lie, or lay. Un-

LOFT, s. A loft, s.—any thing, (room,
-Y. floor, &c.) lifted, raised, or elevated.
-ILY.

-INESS. Lofty,—raised, elevated, exalted; met.—haughty, proud, sublime.

Sw. & Dan. Loft. From the v. To lift, (qv.) Lofty, met.—mente sublimatus.—Sk.

LOG, s. Any thing that lies or is laid;
-GATA. inert, motionless, heavy,
-GERHEAD. lumpyish.
-GERHEADED. Logger-head,—a head hard,
-MAN. and thick as a log.—Sk.

Sk.—from A. S. Loggan; D. -eu; Ger. Liegen; in Lincolnshire (and in the North gen. he might have added), To lig, because it lies or lies unmoved. Tooke refers to the same source. Go. Log-gan; A. S. Log-gan, to lay. Logyan is but another way of writing liggan.

LOGIC, s. It is the province of grammar
-AL. to teach the etym. and manner
-ALLY. of signification of words; and of
-IAN. logic, to teach the use of words in general reasoning:—It will thus embrace science and art: science, or knowledge;—and art, or power or skill in the use of knowledge, (art being the practical use of science, or principles of science.)

Fr. Logique; It. Sp. & L. Logica; Gr. Λογική, from λογος, and that from λογειν, to say, to speak.

LOGO-GRIPH,* s. An enigmatical question, a puzzle, a riddle.

*B. Jonson. Bp. Hall.

Gr. Λογος, speech, and γρῆφος, rete, a net; and, cons., questio enigmatica.

LOGO-MACHY, s. A dispute about words; a verbal dispute, or contention.

Fr. Logomachie; It. Sp. & L. Logomachia; Gr. Λογομαχία, from λογος, speech, and μαχη, fight or contention.

LOGO-THETE, s. An accountant: in the Roman (Eastern) Empire,—A receiver of the finances.

Gr. Λογοθητης, λογος, and θετης, from τιθεσθαι, to put or place, to dispose, to settle.

LOGY, term. Gr. Λογ-ια, from λογειν, legere, colligere, seligere; also, loqui: to gather, to select: to discourse, as—Anthology is a selection of flowers; Etymology,—the true (origin of) words; Philology,—a love of speech or speaking. It is in constant use for the formation of scientific terms; of the more ancient and unusual, Aitiology (qv.) is an instance. Among modern empiricisms may be mentioned, Craniology, and Prenology.

LOIN, s. Anciently written Lende.

In Anatomy.

D. & Ger. Lend-e, -en; Fr. Long-e; It. Lon-gia, -a; all from L. Lumbi, says Sk. In A. S. Lend-ene, perhaps from A. S. e. Hlon-an; Ger. Len-en, to lean, niti, reclinare, recumbere, quia in lumborum extrema reclinamus sedentes.—Martin. (in Wack.) Sux- or Sir-

LOITER, v. To loiter, is to later. (See ER, s. LATE.) To be or cause to be -ING. slow or dilatory, to retard, to delay; to move, to act slowly, idly, lazily; to pass or spend the time idly, lazily, inactively.

LOLL, v. LILL, v. To loll appears to mean, gen, to hang or depend upon, to lean upon or against; to hang from, as the tongue from the mouth.

Swift (Cantata) uses the word lolloping, which may yet be heard in vulgar speech.

To loll out one's tongue, i. e. exerere linguam, perhaps from D. Lelle, lalleken van de tongde, pars lingue anterior, to thrust forth the front part of the tongue.—Sk.

LOLLER, s. Lollardy,—the doctrines of
-ARD. Reformers, called Lollards, who
-ARDY. derived their name from one Walter Lolkard, a German, who flourished about the year 1315. (See Spel and Jus.) Kilian suggests a different origin; but appears to stand alone in his opinion.

LONDONER, s. A native or inhabitant of London. Londonism, (a word used, and probably invented, by Mr. Pegge),—the idiomatic speech of Londoners.

LONE, ad. From alone, that is, all one;
-LY. one being all.

-LINESS. Solitary or single, unaccompanied, deserted; without society or company.

-NESS. Solitary, deserted; without society or company.

-SOME. Solitary, deserted; without society or company.

-SOMENESS. Solitary, deserted; without society or company.

LONG,* v. Cons.—to reach, to attain, to appertain. We now use Be-long.

Chaucer. Gower. Bible, 1551. Spenser.

A. S. Long-ian; Ger. Lang-en; D. len, prolongare, pervenire, attingere; to lengthen, to stretch out to or towards. Be-

LONG, v. av. To lengthen, to stretch or
-ING. reach out for, (with earnestness,
-INGLY. with eagerness;) and, cons.—
-LY. to desire eagerly, to wish for earnestly.

A long on me, long on you, are equivalent to—produced by me, produced by you. See ALONG.

A. S. Long-ian; Sw. -ia; Ger. Langen. The same word as the preceding, diff. app. "When we consider (Tooke) that we express a moderate desire for any thing, by saying that we incline (i. e. bend ourselves) to it; will it surprise us that we should express an eager desire by saying that we long, i. e. make long, lengthen, or stretch ourselves after it, for it? especially when we observe, that after the v. To incline, we say to or towards; but after the v. To long, we must use either the word for or after, in order to convey our meaning." Dryden singularly combines the literal and metaphorical usage:—"He (the fire) wades the streets, and straight he reaches cross, and plays his longing flames on th' other side."—Annus Mirabilis.

LONG, ad. av. Extended, produced; in time or space: met.—delayed,
-ANIMITY. tardy, tedious.

-EVAL. Long, i. e. extended, is opposed

-EVIOUS. to short, i. e. shear'd or sher'd,

-EVITY. cut off. See LENGTH.

-INQUITY. Long is much used pref.

-SOMENESS. Long-animity,—long, (patience

-WISE. or endurance,) of mind, long-

-I-MANOUS. sufferance.

-LATERAL. Long-ævous,—long aged; long-

-TUDE. lived.

-TUDIN-AL. Longi-manous,—long-handed.

-ALLY. Longi-lateral,—long-sided.

-ALNESS. Longness is sometimes in the Sydney State

Papers; and Longsomeness in an anonymous History of Conformity, 1681.

Go. Lagg, (pron. lang;) A. S. Lang, long; D. Langh, launch; Ger. & Dan. Lang; Fr. & Sw. Long; It. Lungo; Sp. Luengo; L. Longus. Wach. derives from langen, trahere; and Tooke asserts lang or long to be the preterperfect of the A. S. v. Lang-ian, to long, to make long, to lengthen, to stretch out, to produce; and that no other derivation can be found for L. Longus. Ob- Over-Pro- Pro-longate, Re-longed.

LOO, v. z. A game at cards.

LOOBY. See LOB.

LOOF, or LUFF, v. z. D. Loeven, to ply to windward, de loef hebben, to sail before the wind, (see LEE.) from A. S. Hlif-ian, to rise or raise. The loof of a ship, Sk. says, is, qd. the loftiest part of the ship, pars navis suprema.

LOOK, v. z. To turn or direct the eye or -ER. sight, the visual or perceptive -ING. powers; lit. and met.—

To appear or seem, or cause to appear or seem; to have or take the appearance, the aspect.

To look (with prepositions) is used as equivalent to words derived from the compounds of L. Specere; e. g.—

A looking about,—circumspection, vigilance.

To look out for,—to expect.

To look at or into,—to inspect; and, thus, to examine, to search into, to investigate.

A look or looking, forward,—prospect; backward,—retrospect.

A. S. Loc-ian; D. Luchten; Ger. Lug-en; to see, to be or cause to be an object of sight; to view. Mis- Over-Out- Pre-

LOOM, v. -ING. (A. S. Log-ian, ponere, lo-care,) to lay, to place, sc. before the eye, the sight.

The looming of a ship,—the external form or appearance of a ship; as we say, She looms a great sail, or she looms but small,—she appears a large or a small ship.

From A. S. Leoman, (ge-leoman, whence gleam,) lucere, to shine; a word (Sk. adds) truly elegant.

LOOM, s. -ED. In A. S. Loma, ge-loma; D. Alaem, alem, utensilia, supellex,—utensils, things of frequent and necessary use. Hence Som. adds,—the heir-lome of lawyers, pro supellectile hereditaria. Ray tells us that in Cheshire,—A loom is an instrument or tool in general. Also, any utensil, as a tub, &c. Paribusque accingitur armis, is rendered by Douglas,—“With lume in hand fast wirkand like the laif;” (working like the rest.) May it not be from A. S. Hleom, (for so lim was also written,) that which pertains or belongs to? (See LIMS.) Thus heir-loom,—that which appertains, an appurtenance to, the inheritance; brew-lumes, milk-lumes, wark-loom, utensils or instruments appertaining or appropriate to brewing, milking, working; and then specifically app. to a particular frame or machine.

LOON. See in v. Low.

LOOP, v. z. A loop, or loophole, is app. to -HOLE. the hole left by the involution -HOLED. of the loop; to holes of a similar form or construction; to holes in battlements or towers; to holes for escape or evasion.

Probably, as Sk. suggests, from D. Loopen, (A. S. Hleapan), currere, to run; so called because it is easily removed or slipped off from that which it binds or fastens:—a running knot is an expression of the same kind. Over- Un-

LOORD, s. LOURDEN. Loord, Lurdane,—Lazy, slothful, worthless. A low, debased, degraded, worthless person.

The Sc. writers use Lurdanery, which is also preserved by Holinshed, (Scotland, Malcolmie.)—See JAMIESON.

“Lourdains; because the Danes when they sometime domineered over the Englishmen, would be honoured with the name of laford, which is now lord, the people in scorn did call them lour daines, instead of lord, or rather laford dane, lour being as much to say in our ancient language, as ignavus in Lat. to wit, lither, cowardly, or sluggish.”—Verstegan. Jamieson, who notices the antiquity of the etym. of Verstegan, refers the word immediately to Fr. Lourdais, and that to D. Lupaerd, piger, desidiaus, ignavus homo, or loer, loerd, which have the same meaning, and to the latter of which Kilian traces Fr. Lourd. Loord, lourd-en, are perhaps low-er-ed, lowerd, lowerd, lowerd, lowerd-en; and thus from the same source and of equivalent meaning with lown and low, (qv.) It probably owes its lengthened term. en into ane, from Verstegan’s traditional etym. See LOAR, s.

LOOS, v. LOSED. To praise, to celebrate, to confer fame or renown upon.

Loos or los (Tooke) is evidently the past p. of the v. Hiss-an, celebrare, to celebrate; as laus also is:—he has produced eight instances of the s., and one of the past p. losed, from Chaucer.

LOOSE, v. s. ad. av. To free from its hold -LY. or fastening; to untie, to unbind, -EN, v. to remit, to dismiss; to relax, to -NESS. separate or sever, to take away; -ENING. to separate or sever, (from a close or connected state or condition,) to unclose; to disconnect, to disengage. And thus, loose, the ad. is opposed to—fixed or fastened, tied or tight; bound or obliged: met.—close, connected, or adhering; confined, or defined, or definite; restricted or restrained.

The expression in Shak. (Love’s L. L.) —“at his very loose,” Mr. Steevens explains, “at his moment of parting, i. e. of his getting loose or away from us.” See TO LOSE, or LEAZE; the same word, somewhat diff. app. See also LESS.

Go. Lisan; A. S. Lysan; D. & Ger. Lösen; Sw. Lösa; Dan. Løse; amittere, dimittere, to dismiss, or let go. En-Out-Un-

LOP, v. z. -ING. To hew or cut off (boughs or branches;) gen.—to cut off.

This word does not appear to be of very ancient use in the language. To lop the bough in Isa. x. 33, is in preceding translations, to cut. Drayton and Spenser are the most remote authorities that have occurred. Mina derives it from D. Loef; Ger. Loeb, frons, qd. ramos amputare; in Fr.

Exbrancher,—"to lop or cut off boughs; to bare or deprive of branches."—Cot. Thus, frondator is in Lat.—a lopper of trees, distinguished by Ovid from putator,—a pruner.

LORD, v. s. Lord is a general name for
-ING. one high-born, or of high rank;
-LING. and, cons., of high authority;
-LY, ad. av. a superior, a master.
-LINESS. To lord,—to be or become, to -SHIP. act as lord, i. e. as superior or master; as sovereign; to use or abuse the authority or power of a superior; to dominate.

A. S. Hlaf-ord, afterwards loved, (says Sk.) from hlaf, bread, and ford for afford, to supply, because a lord supplies many with bread. Jun. dislikes this afford, knowing no such word in the A. S., and pronounced hlaf-ord to be composed of hlaf, panis, bread, (see LOAF), and ord, initium, origo, source, origin. Tooke composes the word of the same parts, but gives to hlaf its literal meaning, raised or exalted, as the past p. of hlif-isa, to raise:—Lord, therefore, means high-born, or of an exalted origin; hlaf, raised or exalted; and ord, ortus, source, origin, birth. (See LADY, O. and O. and.) Verstegan writes copiously and curiously upon this word, and upon Lady.—See his Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 10. Un-

Bochart thinks it is Eng. Lord; app. contemptuously, and that the usage arose in the wars between the Fr. and Eng.—See Men. And see LOORD.

Lorel, from A. S. Leor-an, past p. Lor-en, to lose; and Loe-el, from A. S. Leor-an, lor-ian, also—to lose. Chaucer renders perditissimus, lorel. It is well explained by Verstegan.

LORICATE, v. -ION. To cover or protect, (as with a breastplate.)

L. Loricare; propriè lorica est tagimen de corio, tanquam de loro factum; a covering of leather, (for the breast, and thus—a breastplate.)

LOSENGE, or -ZENGE, s. Tyrw. says,—“A quadrilateral figure of equal sides but unequal angles, in which the angles of women are usually painted.”—Rom. of the Rose. “Losynges seems to signify small figures of the same form in the fretwork of a crown.”—House of Fame.

Fr. Lozenge. Men. writes largely upon this word; mentioning among others the etym. proposed by Scal. and selected by Sk.—A voce laurenge, on account of its resemblance to the leaf of the laurus, which has the figure of a rhombus.

S. Hlot to be the regular past tense and past p. of Hlidan, tegere, operire, to cover; and that it means something covered or hidden. Upon this past p. then, A. S. Hleot-an, sortiri, must have been formed. See LID.

Wach. derives from lieb, bonum, because every one desires that which is good: lieb, it is more probable, is from lieb-en, grateful, and therefore good. It may at least admit a conjecture that A. S. Luf-ton, to love, has a reason for its application similar to that of L. Diligere, (legere, to gather, to take up or out (of a number), to choose, sc. one in preference to another, to prefer;) and that it is formed upon A. S. Hluf-ton, to lift or take up, to pick up, to select, to prefer. Be-Over- Un-

LOUKE, s. Sk. tells us, is said to be—a fellow receiver; Jamieson, (in v. Lucky), thinks Chaucer used the word as equivalent to a trull. Tyrw. seems to suspect it has an affinity to lusk, (qv.)

LOUNGE, v. s. -ER. To loiter about inactively.

We owe this modern usage to the old Eng. Lungis, (Fr. Long-is, It. -one, which Men. derives from L. Longus), a long, lazy loiterer.

LOUSE, v. s. An insect. Lousy, (met.)—-Y. filthy, mean.

-INESS. A. S. & Sw. Lus; Ger. Laus; D. Lugs; Dan. Lause. Wach. suggests the v. Lies-en, (to lose), perdere, corrumpere, as Gr. φθειρ, from φθειρ-ειν, perdere, corrumpere, sive quia est animal perniciosum, et suis instar serpens, sive quia corrumpit et ex corruptione nascitur.

LOUVRE, s. An open place (to let in or out any thing).

A louer (Mina.) or tunnel on the top of the house, from Fr. L'ouvert, that is, apertus, a place open to let out the smoke.

this from the v. Ligen, to lay. And Tooke is of opinion that low (in D. Laag) is the past p. of A. S.

Lic-gan, jacere, cubare, to lay or lie; that the v. to low, or to make low, is, according to common custom, formed of this past p. that the past p. of this

v. to low, is indifferently either low-en, low'n, lowm,

LUG, v. s. -GAGE. To lug, is—to pull or drag; Luggage, that which is pulled or dragged (heavily) along; and, cons. heavy, cumbersome baggage, or package.

Ascham applies the name to a strong, heavy bow. And Lugger is a vessel sailing heavily, draggingly along.

A.S. Ge-luggian, vellere, to pull, pluck, or luggē. Some of our countrymen at this day call the ears luggs; hence with us, aurem vellere, to pull one by the luggs.—Som. Sw. Luggs, crines vellere.—Ihre. Luga, in the North of England and in Scotland, is the common name for the ears; and in the former it is a common punishment to pull them. But the A.S. Ge-luggian is probably the A.S. Ge-lucco-ran, capere, arripere. See TO PLUCK.

LUGUBRIOUS, ad. As the Fr.—“Doleful, mourning, mournful, sorrowful, wailing, funeral.”—Cot.

Fr. It. & Sp. Lugubre; L. Lugubris, from Lug-ere, to mourn.

LUKE-WARM, ad. -NESS. As app. (met.)—With little warmth; cool; without fervour, ardour, or zeal.

A.S. Wlæc, tepidus, (from Wlæc-ian, to warm,) sometimes by pleonasm is written Wlæc-wærm, whence our Luke-warm.—Lye. And Tooke says, the A.S. Wlæc (our Luke) is the past p. of Wlæc-ian, to warm or make warm; and Len, in A.S. Hlæw, aleow, is the past p. of Hlæw-an, aleow-an, (to low, qv.) to warm, to cherish: to say—luke or low-warm, is merely saying, warm-warm; he asserts, however, that it is a modern pleonasm, and Lye produces no instance of ancient usage.

LULL, s. v. -ARY. To soothe, to compose (to sleep,)—to soothe, to assuage, to calm.

D. Lollen, lullen, massare, numeros non verba canere, sonum imitari.—Kilian. Sw. Lulla, canere; to sing in a manner to invite children to sleep.—Ihre. To lull may be the same word as Loll; children are placed lolling upon the arms or lap of those who lull them to sleep; and who accompany their song lull baby lullaby, with a gentle soothing motion. The L. Lullare, from Gr. Λαλεω, had the same usage, and is considered by Voss. to be formed by the sound.

LUMBER, v. s. -ING. App. to—Articles of furniture not in use or orderly arrangement, thrown together in a lump, cumbersome and bulky.

To lumber,—to move lumpishly, clumsily, or heavily along; to put together or aside as lumber, in lumps, heaps, or masses.

Probably formed from the v. To lump. Sk. says, supellex vilior. A.S. Galoma. Supellex simpliciter.

LUMINE, v. Luminary,—that which en- —ARY. lightens or gives light to, which —OUS. makes clear or bright; a light:— —OUSNESS. (met.) that which gives light to the understanding; one who shows or manifests brilliant powers of mind.

Fr. Lumin-aire; It. -ari; Sp. -arias; L. Lumen. Tooke derives L. from A.S. Leoman, lioman, to irradiate, to glitter, to shine. En- In- (Il-) Re-lume.

LUMP, v. s. To put together in one mass;

—ISH. to take in one collected body;

—ISHNESS. to amass.

—Y. Lumpish,—massive, bulky, heavy, dull.

Also written as the D. Lompe; perhaps from A.S. Lim-an, ge-timan, connectere, conglutinare; to bind or fasten together, sc. in one mass; (or to glue or join together.—Som.) See LIMZ.

LUNACY, s. -TIC, ad. s. App. gen. to—Madness, insanity of mind.

Lunes (acts of lunacy) occurs four times in Shak.; but has not been met with elsewhere.

LUNCH, s. -EON. A hunch (qv.) of bread, a lunch of bread—appear to be the same thing.

As app. to the refreshment between breakfast and dinner, luncheon seems to be corruptly used for noonshun, i.e. noonshun, the refreshment taken at noon, when labourers desist from work, to shun the heat.

Mins. derives from Sp. “Lonja, a long piece, a slice, a silver, a good cut.”—Delpino.

LUNGE, or LONGE, s. Is perhaps as Sp. Lonja, a long slice, a good cut.

LUNGIS, s. This word is in Baret, Cot. (in v. Longis), and Sherwood. Cot. among other hard names, calls him—One that being sent on an errand is long in returning.

LUNGS, s. LUNGED. Of the body; by which the breath is inhaled and exhaled:

app. to a person who makes good use of his lungs.

A. S. Lungena; D. Lunga; Ger. Lunge; Sw. Lung-or; Dan. -er. It bears an affinity, says Jun. to Gr. Singultire, to sob. Wach. derives, with good reason, from Lang-en, trahere, to draw, quia spiritum attrahit, because the breath is drawn through them. See LIGHTS.

LURCH, v. s. To lie or cause to lie in wait

-ER. or watch; to lie in concealment.

LURK, v. To lurch, is also to leave in the lurch, -ER. i. e. perhaps, on the watch; when further watch was useless, when the game had fled; in trouble, danger, or difficulty, to help ourselves as we may; and thus, further, to escape, when others do or can not; to gain or win what or when others do not or can not; to carry off the prize.

There can be no doubt that Lurk and Lurak are the same word, varying a little in the application. It has not been satisfactorily traced to its origin. The D. Loeren, Ger. Lauer-en, Sw. Lura, are explained—insidiari, oculis auribusq. insidiari, limitis oculis insidiari; to lie in wait for, to lie in wait or watch with eyes and ears, with eyes a-sance; and in Sc. To lours is to lurk, i. e. to lower or crouch down. To lurk, or lurch, then, is as above explained.

LURDANE. See LOORD.

LURE, v. s. -ING. To induce or attract, by some temptation; to present, to offer or hold out temptations; to attract, to tempt, to entice.

Fr. Lurrer; It. Logorare; D. Loren, leuren. The Ger. Luder, D. Loe-ger, -der, is the bait with which birds are lured. Wach. Gesner, and Kilian derive from Luden, to invite, (the Eng. Lead.) Sk. prefers A. S. Be-law-an, prodere, to betray, to ensnare. See ALLURE. Al-

LURID, ad. Pale to excess, ghostly pale; ghastly.

L. Luridus, supra modum pallidus, pale to an excess, & lro, i. e. crudo, corio, a raw (i. e. undressed) hide.

LURK. See LURCH.

LUSCIOUS, ad. Lush,—full of juice, -NESS. swollen with juice; juicy, succulent.

Luscious is used as equivalent to—delicious to an excess of sweetness.

Lye suspects Luscious to be corrupted from Delicious. Sk.—that it is more probably from Fr. Lousche, vin lousche, thick or unsettled wine; such wines being of exceeding sweetness. Lush, in Shak. Henley asserts to mean, "rank;" and Malone, "juicy, succulent." Golding, (quoted by the latter,) in his Ovid, translates, turget et insollida est, (sc. herba,)—lush and foggy is the blade. Lush may be from A. S. Lew, (qd. Lewiah), the past p. of Hleow-an, fovere, to nourish; and thus mean, nourished; and, cons. full of juice, &c. Over-

LUSK, v. s. To indulge in idleness, in -ISH. laziness; in indolence, in inactivity.

-ISHNESS. tivity; to be or remain,—idle or lazy, indolent, or inactive; in sensual indulgences.

Mins. derives from Fr. Lasche, desidiaous, slothful. Dr. Jamieson refers to D. Lewschen; Ger. Lauschen, latitare, to lurk. It may be the same word as Lush, (qv. in v. Luscious), cons. app.—to nourish, to cherish.

-IST. Ger. Laut; Sw. Luta. Wach. derives from the Ger. v. Laut-en, sonare, in A. S. Hlyd-an, the past p. of which is Hlyd, or Lud. See LOW, LOUD. Un-

LUX, v. "When two bones, which being

-ATED. naturally united make up a joint,

-ATION. are separated from each other, we call it a luxation."—Wiseman.

Fr. Lux-ation, -er, to loose, or put out of joint; also to be out of joint, or out of due place; from L. Luxare.

LUXURY, s. Looseness or freedom,

-I-ANT. sc. from restraint; exuberance;

-ANCE. lavishness; looseness of desire;

-ANCY. lustfulness; looseness or free-

-ANTLY. dom of indulgence; voluptu-

-ATE, v. ousness; abundance, copious-

-OUS. ness.

-ETY.* Luxuriety,—is a wantonness of

-OUS-LY. *Sterne.

-NESS. Fr. Luxure; It. Luxuria; Sp. & L. Luxuria, from Lusus, and that from Luere,—lusus is equivalent to dissolutus, and luxuria, the vice of a dissolute mind. Propriè luxus et luxuries significant profusam impensam. Luxury then means,—as above. In-

LY, term. From A. S. Lic,—like, written by old authors,—Lich, or Liche. Affixed to ss. as Mædælic,—maidenly; to denote likeness, or similarity, or resemblance; e. g. like a maiden,—having qualities like those of a maiden. It is also affixed to ads.; as, luxurious,—luxuriously; and sometimes blends into the preceding syllable, as, single,—(single-ly), singly.

LYCANTHROPY, s. “A frenzy or melancholy, which causeth the patient (who thinks he is turned wolf), to flee all company, and hide himself in dens and corners.”—Cot. **Ep. Hall.*

Fr. Lycanthropie, from Gr. Λυκος, a wolf, and άνθρωπος, a man.

LYM, ad. So written by Shak. for Limehound.

LYMPH, s.—ATIC, ad. s. Water; a watery liquor. Lymphatic, as the Fr. Lymphatique,—watery; “allayed or mixed with water; also,—mad, furious, bestraited; giddy, fantastical.”

Lymphatic vessels,—vessels which convey to the circulating organs the decayed and useless parts of the body.

Fr. Lymphæ, -atique; L. Lympha, which Voss. says is Nympha, aquea illa; (n changed into l.)

L. Lymphæ, -aticus; credebant enim lymphæ, si conspicerentur, furorem immittere.—Festus. See Hor. Od. 19, lib. II. Lymphaticus, quod aquam timeat.—Isidorus. See Voss.

LYNX, s. LYNCEAN. Met.—Keen-sighted: from the fabled sharp or keen-sightedness of the animal, the Lynx.

Sp. Lyncæ; Fr. -te; It. Lince; L. Lynx; Gr. Λυγξ, so called from λύνειν, light.

LYRE, s. A musical instrument.

—IC, ad. Fr. Lyre; It. Lira; Sp. & L. Lyra; Gr.

Λύρα, perhaps (Voss.) from λύειν, solvere, dissolvere, quia in multas dividitur voces.

—IST.

M.

M is pronounced (says B. Jonson) with a kind of humming inward, the lips closed; open and full in the beginning, obscure in the end, and meanly in the midst; and Wilkins calls it the natural sound of lowing, when the lips are shut, and the sound proceeds out of the nose. See N.

Wach. denominates this labial, naturale blandimentum; and observes, that, as such, it has in almost all languages furnished (as B, with its cognates also has; see B.) the name of the female parent; it has furnished the name of the female child also. See MA-MA, MOTHER, MAI or MAID. (In A. S. Mæ-g, ma-go, is pa-rens, pu-er, pu-ella.) It seems also, as a literal root, to have been the source of words in various languages, signifying, as the Eng. Am, merely sensation and motion. (See AM.) From the same source, we may deduce the pronominal Me, which in Pers. is written Am, and in Sanscrit Ah-am, that is I-am; in L. Ego-m-et;—and comprising the reduplicate force of the two—Ig, Eg, or I, and Am, or Me. And this Am or Me may, or rather must have derived its reference and appropriation to the individual speaking, from the persevering, reiterated cry of the speaker. Hence also, the first pers. of the Sanscrit and Gr. v. in Mi, and the tenses in M of the L. v. The Go. Imma; Eng. Him; L. Hom-o,—Ma-n, had probably the same origin, and have given us the term. M, in the-m, who-m. See ME.

MACARON, s. Cot. calls the It. Mac-on-I, aroni,—“Lumps, or gobbets of—IAN. boyled paste, served up in butter, —IC. and strewed over with spice and grated cheese. A macaronic,—a confused heap or huddle of many several things.”

Macaronian or macaronique poetry;—“The macaronian is a kind of burlesque poetry, consisting of a jumble of words of different languages, with words of the vulgar tongue latinized, and Latin words modernized.”—Cambridge.

The application (perhaps the original one) of macaroni to persons, is explained in the Spectator:—“Those circumforaneous wits, every nation calls by the name of that dish of meat which it loves best. In Holland, they are termed pickled herrings; in France, jean pottages; in Italy, macaronies; and in Great Britain, jack puddings.” The more modern usage is—

A spruce beau, a fopling. Donne appears to intend,—

A conceited pretender, a frivolous, tiresome intruder: “So I sigh, and sweat, to hear this makaron talke.”

Fr. Macaron, -aronique; Sp. -arrones; It. -aroni, -cheroni: as some think (says Sk.) from the Gr. Μακαρ, qd. μακάρεν ευτυχία, the feast of the happy; and he adds his surprise that the Grs. should derive any happiness from eating such paltry food. Men. writes more largely.—See his French and Italian Etymologies.

MACE, s. “In the nutmeg, another tegument is the mace, between the green pericarpium and the hard shell immediately enclosing the kernel.”—Ray.

It. Mace, -te; Sp. -tas, -te; Fr. & L. Macle; Gr. Μακερ.

MACE, s. A club, a staff; a staff (borne as an ensign of office).

Flem. Mase, clava.—Kilian. Fr. Masue; It. Max-na; Sp. -a; Mid. L. Maxuca, a club, from the L. Mass. R. Glouc. uses Matts, i. e. clubs, says Hearne.

MACERATE, v. Cot. well explains the -ION. Fr. Macrer,—"To make lean; -CILENCY." to mortify, weaken, bring down, punish, or pull under, the body; to suppress or subdue the lusts thereof by abstinence, or hard fare; also,—to allay, soak or steep in liquor."—Sandys.

Fr. Macrer; Sp. -ar; It. & L. Macerare; macrum reddere, attenuare; to make lean, or lank, or meager, (qv.); Macer, from the Gr. Μακρος, long. (See U. EMACIATE.) Macerate is extended to things which are rendered soft and tender, i. e. the juices of which are all extracted by being soaked in water. E

MACHINATE, v. A tool or instrument -INATION, v. made, invented or contrived -INATOR, by thought, by ingenuity; an -INE, engine, whether of war or -IN-ERY, peace, for useful or destructive purposes.

1st. To machinate,—to contrive, to scheme, to devise.

Machinist,—a name in common use at the theatres.

Fr. Machin-er; Sp. -ar; It. Macchinare; L. Machinari, which Voss. derives from the Gr. Μεθεω, εξεωγίλα, to find out, (A. S. Mac-ion, to make,) by thought, by ingenuity. See MECHANIC.

MACKEREL, s. A fish, so called, as some think,—a maculis, from its spots.

Fr. Maqueriau; D. Mackereel; Dan. Makrel.—See Men.

MACROCOSM, s. "Paracelsus, certainly is injurious to man, if (as some eminent chymists expound him) he calls a man a microcosm, because his body is really made up of all the several kinds of creatures, the macrocosm or greater world consists of, and so is but a model or epitome of the universe."—Boyle.

Comp. of Gr. Μακρος, large, and κοσμος, the world. See MICROCOSM.

MACTATION,* s. A slaughter.
**Shukford*. L. Mact-are, -atum, to slay.

MACULATE, v.* ad.† -ION.‡ To spot or stain with spots or specks; to stain.

**Sir T. Elyot*. †Beau. & F. ‡Shak.

Fr. Macul-er; Sp. -ar; It. & L. Maculare, from Macula, a spot. E Im-

MAD, ad. v. Madness is popularly app. to -DEN, v. —such a disorder or disorganization, such an insanity or undingoly. soundness of the mental faculties, -LY, as disables a man from the government of himself, or the -MAN, the management of his own affairs. -NESS.

Mad,—insane, or unsound of understanding, disordered or distracted to the loss of reason, to a violent, furious excess; to frenzy or delirium; furious, frantic, delirious.

The older etymologists refer to the Gr.; but do not agree upon the specific source. Sk.—Gemaad, gemad, insanus, vecors. It. Matto, stultus. Seren.—from Go. Mod, anger. Tooke,—from A. S. Met-an, somniare, to mete, to dream, past p.

Matt, mad. Tooke also disputes the Gr. origin ascribed to It. Matto. The Gr. derivatives (he observes) in the It. proceed through the L.; and in the L. there is nothing which resembles Matto. Be-

MADAM, s. -OISELLE. Madame, ma damoiselle; mia donna, mia donzella,—my dame, my damsel.

Fr. Madame; Sp. -a; It. Madonna; L. Mes domina.

MADDER, s. A plant.

"Madder, (rubia), is in great request among diers and curriers: for to 'set a colour upon their wooll and leather, right necessarie."—Holland, Plinie.

A. S. Madre; D. Meed; It. Madera; which latter, Sk. thinks, may be, qd. wateria tinctoria. Mins.—from D. Meeden, tingere, to tinge, to dye; but there appears no authority for such a word.

MADE-FACTION,* s. A wetting, making or being wet.—**Bacon*.

Fr. Madfer; L. Made-feri, -facere, -factum, to moisten, to become moist. L. Mad-ere; Gr. Mud-ar; to wet, to soak. See MUD.

MADGE-HOWLET, s. A bird.

In Fr. called Machette, whence, or from Madge, for Margaret, and howlet, Sk. forms the word. See Owl.

MADRIGAL, s. A shepherd's song; a pastoral song.

Fr. & Sp. Madr-igale; It. -ale, -igale; also more anciently written Mandrial, (Men.) from It. & Sp. Mandr-a; Fr. -a; L. Mandra, a sheep-fold, or any place for sheep and shepherds to take shelter in; and thus, madrigal was orig. app. to Chanson de berger, the shepherd's song. See Men's Fr. and It. Etyma; he derives L. Mandra, from Gr. Αντρον, a cave.

MAFFLE,* v. -ER. To stutter, to stammer.

**Holinshed*. Holland.

D. Mafelen, (also Mufelen.) Balbutire, et buccas movere. Ang. Maffe.—Kilian. Sk. thinks,—omnia à sono ficta; but see MURGLE.

MAGAZINE, s. A store-house, a repository,—for provisions, ammunition, &c.—for literary essays, or other writings; in this latter usage, it has now completed its first century.

Sp. Mag-acen; It. -azzino; Fr. -asin; Ar. Machzan; gaza, thesaurus.

MAGGOT, s. MAGGOTTY. A grub; so called, from its eating, devouring capacity. Met.—a causeless or unaccountable fancy; unaccountable as the brood of maggots; a whim, a caprice.

Go. & A. S. Mattha; D. Made, made, waage, which latter Kilian (as Jun. adds) derives from Magen, metere, despacere; to feed upon. The D. Mayen, is from Go. Mat-yen or mat-yen, the third pers. of which is Matgish, that-which eateth. And see MOTTE.

MAGIC, ad. s. "It is confessed by all of -ICAL. understanding, that a magician -ICALLY. (according to the Pers. word) is -ICIAN. no other than divinorum cultor et -I. interpres, a studious observer and expounder of divine things; and the art itself (I mean the art of natural magic) no other, quam naturalis philosophia absolutus

consummatio, than the absolute perfection of natural philosophy. . . . He is called a magician now-a-days, who having entered league with the devil, useth his help to any matter."—Ralegh.

Fr. Magique; It. Sp. & L. Magica; Gr. Mayun, μαγυν, from μαγος, and this from the Pers. Go. Mag-ian, posse.

MAGISTRY, s. See MAGISTRACY.

-IAL. Magistry, as used by chem-

-IAL-LY. ists, is, — "A preparation

-NESS. whereby there is not an analy-

-TRAL, ad. s. sis made of the body assigned,

-TRAL-LY." nor an extraction of this or

-ITY.† that principle, but the whole, or very near the whole body, by the help of some additament, greater or less, is turned into a body of another kind."—Boyle.

Magisterial,—master-like, with the authority of a master, in the manner of a master; authoritative, domineering; powerful, efficacious, of sovereign or supreme power or efficacy.—"Bramhall. †Bacon.

MAGISTRACY, s. Magistracy,—the

-TRATE. office or station of magistrate, i. e.

-TRATIC. of one greater than, or superior to, placed over or above, in power or authority over, the others in society, or the social body, in a state; one appointed or invested with authority to interpret and execute the laws, or some portion of them.

Fr. Magistr-at-ature; It. -ato; Sp. -ado; L. Magistratus, from Magistrare, regere, temperare, to rule; and this from Magister, which (Voss.) is either from Magis, greater, (as Minister from Minus), or rather from the Gr. Μεγιστος, the greatest, whence, magistrates are by the Grs. called Μεγιστῶνες. But see MAGISTRY.

MAGNALITY,* s. -NATE. Something great; greater than ordinary, or than usual.

Magnate, from L. Magnates, is not uncommon in speech.—"Brown.

Low L. Mag-nalis, -nalis, from L. Magnus, great.

MAGNANIMITY, s. Greatness of

-M-ous. mind; loftiness of thought, feeling,

-OUSLY. or sentiment: opposed to pusilla-nimity, and mean-spiritedness.

"Magnanimitie is an excellencie of mynde, concernynge thinges of great importaunce or estimation, doinge al thynge, that is vertuous, for the acheuinge of honour."—Sir T. Elyot.

Fr. Magnanim-e; It. & Sp. -o; L. Magnanimus, i. e. magnus animus: of or pertaining to, having or possessing, a great mind. See MAGISTRY.

MAGNES, or MAGNET, s. A stone so

-NET-ICAL, ad. s. called from the country,

-ICALLY. Magnesia.

-ICALNESS. The ad.—Having the -IC. powers of the magnet; attractive.

-ICNESS.

-ISM. It. Magneta; L. Magnes; Gr.

Μαγνην; à patriâ, quia circa Magnesiam proveniret.—Voss.

MAGNI-FY, v. To enlarge, to amplify,

-YING. to augment, to aggrandize.

-IABLE. Magnificence,—Greatness or

-IC. grandeur; but app. rather to the splendour, the splendid

-ICAL. pomp, the sumptuousness, of

-ICALLY. grandeur, than to simple gran-

-ICATION. deur itself.

-ICENT.

-ICENCE. Magnificent,—in Shak. (L. L.

-ICENTLY. L.) pretending to greatness.

-ICO. Fr. Magni-fer; Sp. -fear; It. & L.

-IER. Magnificare, qd. magnus facere, to

-NITUDE. make or cause to be great: magni-

-NITUDE. facus, qui magna facit, who does great things. A. S. Mag-en; L. Magnus. See

MAID, MAY, and MIGHT. Over-

MAGNI-LOQUENCE, s. Greatness of speech. L. Magniloquentia.

MAG-PIE, s. MAGOT-PIE. Mina and Sherwood,—a Magotapie. "Magot-pie

(Steevens) is the original name of the bird:

Magot being the familiar appellation given to pies, as we say Robin to a red-breast,

Tom to a titmouse, Philip to a sparrow,

&c." It is not unusual to call this bird also Madge. See PIE.

MAHOGANY, s. A kind of tree, common to all the provinces of South America;

also found in great quantities about the bay of Honduras and the Isthmus of Panama.

Also the wood of the tree.

MAHOMETAN, or MAHUMETAN, ad.

-ANISM. Of or pertaining to Mahomet, or

-ISM. to the religion established by

-RY. him.

-ANIZE, v. Mahound,—Mahomet, (Sk.) but

MAHOUND. I believe the Fr. formerly called

Mahomet, Mahon, although the word is now disused. See MAWMET.

MAI,* or MAID, s. Maid is app. to—a fe-

MAIDEN, ad. s. v. male child; to a female

-ENLY, ad. av. who has preserved her

-ENHEAD, or chastity; a virgin; to a

-ENHOOD. female servant.

-HOOD.‡ Maiden, ad.—Pure, unsullied, unstained, unpolluted; unsullied

by use or abuse, untouched, untaken; un-spotted, unused.

Maiden;—Warton says, "Surrey speaks loosely and poetically in making the maiden tower, the residence of the women. The Maiden-tower was common in other castles, and means the principal tower, i. e. the tower of the greatest strength and defence."

He produces several instances of this use of Maiden, and asserts it to be a corruption of the old Fr. Magne, or mayne, great. The principal tower was also named the master- tower. See MASTER.

Mr. Nares suggests a different origin:

that the tower was so called because never touched or taken; and Beauvais, he adds, on the Oise, is for that reason named La

Pucelle. To which may be added from

E. Hall: "You haue manfully defended this Cytee [Tournay] sythe the beginnyng of this siege, but alas, although it be wrytten on the gates, grauen in stone, Iammes ton ne a perdu ton pucelage, that is to say, thou haeste neuer lost thy maidenhed; yet yf thys Cytee had not ben well furnished and euer at the day appoynted suer of reskeue, it could not haue contynued."—Hen. VIII. an. 5. The reader will find other conjectures in Sibbald's Chronicle, vol. iv. p. 32.

*Chaucer. Gower. †Bp. Hall. ‡Shak.

Go. Magath; A. S. Mag-den, mæd-en, mæden-man, and also mægeth; D. Maged, mægd; Ger. Magd; Dan. Mæ. Sk. derives from Go. and A. S. Mag-an, posse; qd. viripotens. (Vir-go, see VIRGIV.) Jun. is struck by the manifest affinity between the Go. Magath, and the Gr. Meyebos, greatness, dignity, majesty; and enlarges upon the dignity and majesty which has been attributed to a state of pure virginity or maidenhood. The A. S. Mag, maga, was a name app. to a father and to a son, and in general to relations and kindred. Maid is in old authors written, (as R. Brune, Chaucer, and Gower.) Maie. See To MAY, MAM, and Letter M. Un-

MAJESTY, s. Greatness, grandeur;—
-IC. action or conduct suiting
-ICNESS. greatness of station, bespeaking
-ICAL. greatness of mind: worthy of
-ICALLY. greatness; a dignified stateliness
-ATIC.* or loftiness.

-ATICAL.† The name or title by which persons of the rank of kings and queens are addressed.—*Pocock. †Scott.

Fr. Majesté; It. Maeità, magetà; Sp. Majestad, magestad; L. Majestas, from the old majus, i. e. magnum, great. See MAJORITY.

MAIEUTICAL, ad. Obstetricious, (qv.)
Gr. μαευτικός, obstetricius. Cudworth uses this Græcism.

MAIL, s. v. Mail, is strictly—the mesh, singly; but app. to—the coat formed of meshes, collectively.

To mail,—to cover or protect; to cover or envelope.

Fr. Maille; It. Maglia; Sp. Maila; tunica ferrea reticulata, (Sk.) from Fr. Maille, macula, retis, from its manifest resemblance to the meshes of a net; and to the same effect, Men.

MAIL, or MALE, s. MALLET. Not improbably the same word as the preceding, app. to a bag instead of a vesture, and for the same reason, because made of net-work, as those which anglers use still are, and as the modern reticule also is: and app. not only to the bag, but that which conveys, (boy, carriage, &c.) or by which it is conveyed.

Fr. Male; Sp. Malota; D. Maela. Men. forms it thus from L. Mantica, a bag. Mantica, dim. manicula, manila, malla.

MAIM, v. s. or MAY-HEM, s. To wound,
-ED-LY. so as to disfigure the appearance,
-NESS. of, or disable from the use
-ING. of; to lame by mutilation; to mutilate.

Maim, s.—mutilation, defect, injury, or mischief,—in some essential particular.

"By a man's limbs for the present we only understand those members which may be useful to him in fight, and the loss of which alone amounts to mayhem by the common law."—Blackstone.

Sk.—perhaps from Fr. Maimie, mutilated; me-haign, mutilation; me-haigner, to mutilate; all from L. Mancus. And Men.—Fr. Mehaigner; It. Maggagnare, from Fr. Mancer, it. Mancare, and this from mancus. But Jun. thinks it is clearly formed from the reduplication of mai, in maimaitun, abscindebant; from Go. Maitan, to cut off, to amputate. Un-

MAIN, s. (at Cards,) lit. A hand; (Fr. Main; L. Manus;) the dice or cards held in the hand; met. the good, the prize in hand, in possession.

MAIN, ad. s. -LY. The ad.—Forceful, powerful, mighty; and, cons. chief, principal.

The s.—Force, power, might, and, cons. the chief, the principal; the chief or principal part; the mass, or bulk, or gross.

The main sea, (elliptically the main.) The main is opposed to the bye: the main way, the bye way; a main end, a bye end. (See BYE.) "You are fools, you are on the bye"; Raleigh and I are on the main; we mean to take away the king and his cube."—State Trials, James I. 1603.

Main is much used pref.; as main-land, -mast, &c.

Main,—with all his might and main,—from A. S. Magen, force, power, from A. S. v. Mag-an, posse, to may, or be able. The ad. Sk. derives from Fr. Magne, great; and this from L. Magnus; (which is itself from mag-an. See MAJORITY.) Lye justly observes, that Mag-en, in Composition, signifies great: whence the main sea, the ocean or great sea; the main land, terra continens; and hence also the main mast, the great, the chief, or principal mast; the chief or principal way, road, the high road. A-

MAIN-OUR, s. Corrupted from Man-œuvre, work by hand, handy work. "All offenders taken with the mainour, (or main-œuvre, à manu,) that is, in the very act of killing venison or stealing wood, or preparing so to do, or by fresh and immediate pursuit after the act is done."—Blackstone. "A thief taken with the mainour, (or main-œuvre) that is with the thing stolen upon him in manu, (in his hand)."—Id.

MAIN-PRIZE, s. -PERNOUR. "The writ of mainprize, (manu-captio), is a writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take sureties for the prisoner's appearance; usually called mainperners; and to set him at large."—Blackstone.

From the Fr. Main, the hand, and prise, captus, from prendre, capere, to take, qd. manu-captio.

MAIN-TAIN, v. Cons.—To uphold, to -ABLE. support; to hold firmly, to -ER. hold or keep safe or secure, to -TENANCE. preserve, to defend.

A cap of maintenance,—a cap worn as pledge or badge of maintenance.

Fr. Maintenir; It. Mantenere; Sp. Mantener; manu tenere, to hold with the hand.

MAJOR, ad. s. Greater in number or -ATION. quantity, larger.

Major, in Logic,—“The predicate of the conclusion is called the major term, because it is generally of a larger extension than the minor term, or subject.”—Watts. “The proposition which contains the predicate of the conclusion, connected with the middle term, is usually called the major proposition, whereas the minor proposition connects the middle term with the subject of the conclusion.”—Id.

Majority is used by Sir Thomas Brown as equivalent to the L. Majores, ancestry.

Fr. Majeur; It. Maggiore; L. Major; (magnior majior, majior,—Voss.) greater; and the s. Mayor of the city, so written, as if the major or principal office. See MAYOR.

MAISTER, MAISTRESS. See MASTER.

MAIZE, s. An Indian corn.

Fr. Maïs; Sp. Maíz.

MAKE, v. s. To cause to be, or bring -ABLE. into being, to cause to live or to -LESS. exist; to beget, to create, to pro- -ER. duce, to bring forth, to effect, or be -ING. efficient, to conduce.

To cause to be in certain form or fashion, mode or manner; to form, frame, or fashion, to model; to compose or put together, to construct, to fabricate; to shape or mould. To form or fashion; to delineate, to depicture, to describe, to represent.

To make (elliptically) sub. safe or secure, —to preserve, to secure, to keep. To make, (sub. by force or against the will,) —to force, to compel. To make or compose, sc. verses; and a maker, (Gr. Ποιητής) a poet, good or bad; a maker, or composer, or writer, of verses, good or bad: the quality of good or bad, not essential to the thing or the verse made, or poetry, (see POET.) To make, sc. way, —to direct the course, to proceed, to advance.

To make or to match; i. e. to make one or more fit for another; to fit, to suit, to proportion, to correspond, to coequal: to fit or suit, in marriage. And a make, —a fit or suitable companion or associate; a consort, a colleague. Makeless, (Chaucer), —matchless.

To make, combined with other words, has various applications resulting from the force of such combination. Few require explanation.

To make good, i. e. sound, or secure, or strong, —to amend, to repair, to restore; to secure, to strengthen, to establish.

To make up, sc. a breach, —to amend, to repair, to heal, to restore—met. good will or kindness; and thus, to reconcile.

To make up, sc. a default or deficiency, —to supply, to complete or fulfil, to accomplish.

To make danger, (Beau. & F.) facere periculum, —to make trial or experiment.

A make-bate, —a maker of bate, debate or strife.

A. S. Mac-ten; D. Mach-en, maken; Ger. Machen; Sw. Måka. Made, i. e. maked, mak'd, mad, or maad, made. See M. Mis-Un.

MAL, ad. A prefix with the force of—Ill, evil, bad, wrong.

L. Malè, malus, ill, bad.

MALACISSATION, s. This word is not uncommon in Bacon, and is app. by him to denote—a softening or mollifying; and, as he expresses it, a suppling of the body.

L. Malacissare, or malazare; Gr. Μαλασσειν, to soften. See TO MALAX.

MALADY, s. Illness; disease, sickness.

Fr. Mals-die; It. -dia, -tie; Sp. -tia. Men. quotes from Salmasius, Malatus, qui malè se habet: quem malatum vocamus. It. Malato, i. e. male affectus.—Sk.

MALA-PERT, ad. Quick to an ill excess, -LY. (in speech;) excessively pert, -NESS. saucy, presumptuous.

Sk. thinks most probably from Male, and Fr. Appert, (qd. adperitus), dexterous, active, prompt; and thus to signify, prompt in speech to an evil excess: but as the word does not exist compounded in Fr. it is perhaps of home manufacture; from mal, and pert, (qv.) Over-

MALAX, v. To blend or beat together, as eggs; also, to soften, work, or knead unto a softness; to handle a thing until it be soft.—Cot. See MALACISSATION.

Gr. Μαλασσειν; L. Mal-acissare; Fr. -axer.

MAL-CONTENT, ad. s. or MALECON-ED. -TENT, ad. Discontented, dis-EDNESS. satisfied, displeased.

-MENT. Fr. Mal-content; It. & Sp. contento. Mal or male, in composition, from L. Malè, badly, ill; in male-content it is equivalent to dis, (qv.)

MALE, ad. s. Mas (or male) is opposed to femina (or female), i. e. to that (sex) which beareth, which bringeth forth its kind; and is app. to that (sex) which causeth (the other) to bear or bring forth.

Fr. Mas-le; It. -chio; Sp. Machis; L. Maculus, mas; the syllable male, in Female, is corrupted through Fr. Femelle, from L. dim. Femella, a little woman. Mas is of uncertain origin: Scal. (De Canals, lib. iv. c. 79.) affirms that mas was a word in the ancient Tuscan, contracted from mamers, and that mamers, mavors, and more, in that language signified strong, (fortis.) See MAN.

MALE-ADMINISTRATION, s. Bad or ill administration, management, or conduct.

MAL-EASE, s. i. e. Disease, ill at ease.

MALE-DICENT,* ad. Speaking ill or -TION. evil; reviling, slandering.

-ENCY.† Malediction, —a speech, pronunciation, denunciation of ill or evil; imprecation or execration, curse.

**Sir E. Sandys*. †Atterbury.

Fr. Male-dicence, -diction; It. Maledicente, maledizione; L. Male-dictio, from male-dicere, to speak ill (sc. of any one).

MALE-FACTION,* s. A malefactor,— -EFACTOR. one who does ill or wrong,
-EPICE.† mischievously, wickedly, or
-EFICIENT.‡ unlawfully; an evil-doer, a
-FICI-ATE,§ v. transgressor of law; a cri--MINAL.¶

*Shak. †Chaucer. Spenser. ‡Burke.
§Burton. ¶Bp. Hall.

Fr. Mal-facteur; It. -fattore; L. Male-factor, from malefacere, to do ill or wrong.

MAL-ENGINE,* s. Ill or evil ingine, or genius; ill or evil device, contrivance or design.

*Gower. Berners. Spenser.

Fr. Malengin, and Malenginoux.

MALE-VOLENT, ad. s. Willing or
-ENCE. wishing, ill, injury, or mis-
-ENTLY. chief; feeling, bearing ill-
-OUS. will. Malicious and Malignant
(app. to the will) are words equivalent in usage.

Cot. in v. Malivole, is the first authority for Malevolous; and Warburton (perhaps) the last.

Fr. Mal-voloe, -euillant, -euillance; It. -uolo,
-volenza; L. Malevolus, -ens, ill willing, or wishing. Opposed to benevolent.

MALICE, s. v. The s.—ill or evil, harm-
-IOUS. or mischief; evilness; ill-will,
-IOUSLY. ill or evil intention or design,
-IOUSNESS. or meaning; a spiteful or ran-
-LESS.* corous disposition.
-ING.† The v.—To do ill or harm, feel malice or evilness, ill or evil disposition, of mind; to treat with malice or ill-will.

*Leighton. †Spenser. Daniel.

Fr. Malice; It. -sia; Sp. -cia; L. Mallitia. The Greeks used Kakia, which Cicero chose to render by vitiolitas rather than by mallitia, as contrary to virtus; because mallitia was the name of a specific vice, vitiolitas of all.

MALIGN, ad. v. The v.—To cause or -ANT, ad. s. produce evil; to injure; to feel
-ANCE. or bear evil intent, ill-will,
-ANCY. malice.
-ANTLY. Malignity,—malice, or male-
-ER. volence, ill-will, ill or evil in-
-ITY. tention or design:—ill or evil
-LY. disposition or agency; harmful, pernicious, or destructive influence.

During the great rebellion, Malignant was the name given by the insurgents to the defenders of the church and monarchy, and in that sense it constantly occurs in writings of that period.

Fr. Maligne; It. & Sp. -o; L. Malignus; (opposed to benignus, benign, qv.; and, cons., app.
to those qualities or dispositions which are productive of evil; with an evil intent.)

MALISON, s. Opposed to benison or benediction, (qv.) Malediction.

MALKIN, s. Ritson says—is properly the dim. of Mal, as Wilkin, Tomkin, &c.
And see the notes on Shak. (Coriolanus), and Nares's Gloss.

MALL, or MAUL, v. s. To beat, to bruise,

-EABLE. to crush. Malleable, (Fr.
-EABILITY. Malleable,)—
-EABLENESS. That can or may be beaten,
-EATE, v. (out in extent), that can or
-EATION. may be extended or ex-
-ET. panded (by beating).

Used met.—pliable, manageable. "Malleable to the precepts of love and obedience."—Bp. Taylor.

Fr. Mall, maillet; It. Maglio; Sp. Mallo; L.
Malleus. In the words gemal-widans hadrin, (conritus in corde,) Lye seems to discover the traces of Go. v. Gamalielias, conterere, to beat, to bruise: whence, with Hicks, he would derive Eng.
Mall, mail, L. Malleus. See PALL MALL. Be-

MALLARD, s. A wild drake.

Fr. Malart. Sk. from D. Mal, lascivus, and aerd, natura, qd. natura seu indole lascivus: but the compound word does not exist in Dutch.

MALMSEY, or MALVESEY, s. A Gr.
wine, so called from the place (Malvoisia),
where made.

Fr. Mal-voisie; It. -vagia; Sp. -vasta; vinum Arvianum, a promontory of the Isle of Chioe, now called Marvota, or Malvoisia.

MALT, s. v. Grain wetted, and otherwise
-STER. prepared for brewing beer.

-ING. Maltworm,—a cant term for a tippler of malt-liquor.

A. S. Mealt; D. Moult; Ger. Mais; Sw. &
Dan. Malt. Sk. suggests—To melt, liquefy; and Spel. (in v. Brassius), malt and mealt, q. liquefactum. Wach. objects that liquefacere is not macerare, to steep or soak, but to cause to flow or become fluid, which is by no means the case with malt. Tooke derives it from moistile, the past p. of moistile, to wet or to moisten.
"Moistile, anglicized, becomes moistiled, moistil'd, moistle, then moist, maist, malt. Wetting or moistening of the grain is the first and necessary part, he adds, of the process in making what we therefore well term malt." This may be just, but the grain after wetting must remain to ferment, and be dried again in the kiln before it is called malt; and thus a name appropriate to an intermediate stage is used to designate the completion of the process. See BREAD, DOUGH, and LEAV.

MAL-TALENT,* s. Ill-will; evil disposition.—*Chaucer. Spenser.

Fr. Mal-talent, malignity, malevolence; qd.
malum talentum.—Sk. Talent,—pour volenté, (Men.) for the will. See TALENT; Mal-talent in Men.; and 2. Talentum in Du Cange.

MAL-TREAT, v. To treat ill; to use ill, to behave ill towards.

MAL-VERSION, s. "Misdemeanour, misbehaviour, ill conversation."—Cot.

Fr. Malversion: malverser en son office,—to behave himself ill in his office.

MAL-URE,* s. Ill-fortune, mischance.

*Chaucer. Fr. Malheur.

MAMBLING.* Perhaps Mumbl'ing, (qv.)
*Bp. Hall.

MAMMA, s. Without doubt (Sk.) the word is formed by Nature herself, since all infants of all nations begin to speak with this word, as the most easy of pronunciation; being, in fact, formed solely by the compression of the lips. See Letter M.

MAN

MAMMER,* v. The commentators on -MERING.† Shak. say—To hesitate, to -ORY.‡ stand in suspense. Perhaps ma-ma-ering—like an infant: not able, or not knowing what to speak or say. See letter M.

*Shak. †Udal. More. ‡H. Wotton.

MAMMET. See MAWMET.

MAMMOCK, v. s. To mamnock (Steevens) is—to cut in pieces, or to tear.

Maum, in various counties, is—to handle, or smear about any thing eatable.—Grose. Sk. derives from the Welsh.

MAMMON, s. -IST. “Mammon is riches or abundance of goods.”—Tyndall.

MAN, s. v. Man is in common speech opposed, by sex, to woman; by age, to boy; by kind, to beast.

- ABLE.
- FUL.
- FULLY.
- FULNESS.
- HOOD.
- KIND, ad. s. Manly, or manlike,—like a man, becoming, fitting or suiting a man; that is—strong, robust, fearless; with the courage, fortitude, dignity, of, or belonging to, a man.

- NISHNESS.
- QUELLER.
- QUELLING.
- SLAYER.
- SLAYING.
- SLAUGHTER.

Man is used in composition; manqueller,—a killer, slayer, slaughterer, &c.

Mankind, the kind of man, is used in old writers as opposed to woman-kind; and to denote qualities opposite to -SLAUGHTER. feminine.

Mannish, (Chaucer, Gower,)—human, proper to the human kind; opposed to womanish, or feminine; and—when app. to woman, (Beau. & F.)—not proper to woman, unbecoming her sex.

Go. Manna; A. S. Man, mon; D. Ger. Sw. & Dan. Man. In A. S. also May; from Go. & A. S. May-en, to be able or strong. May-en, dropping the en, leaves may; May-en, mayn, man, (by the mere change of e into a), gives man. And Wach. observes, that the name is, in the opinion of all etymologists, derived from the powers or faculties of body and of mind with which man has been furnished by Nature above all other animals; although, he adds, a dispute may arise concerning the specific source. The L. Vir has its application for a similar reason. See VIATLX. Un-

MANACLE, v. s. To bind or fasten the hands; gen. to fasten, to bind.

Fr. Man-acle; It. -ette; L. Manica; from Manus, the hand. See TO FETTER. Im- Un-

MAN-CHET, s. “Of bread made of wheat we have sundrie sorts dailie brought to the table, whereof the first and most excellent is the mainchet, which we commonlie call white bread; and our good workemen deliver commonlie such proportion, that of the flower of one bushell with another they make fortie cast of manchet, of which euerie lofe weigheth eight ounces into the oven and six ounces out, as I have beene informed.”—Holinshed.

Mina, derives from Maine, the hand. In Fr. Miche is a manchet; and Michet, a small manchet, said (see Men and Sk.) to be from L. Mica, a small bit, a crum. Cheat, is a name given to wheaten bread, (see Narus), and may be the same word as Cate, the hard e softened into ch. But Manchet itself seems to have an affinity with Fr. Manger, to eat.

MAN-CIPATE, v. -ION. To deliver into servitude, to subject to servitude, to enslave. L. Mancipare, i. e. manu capere, to take with the hand, to deliver from hand to hand. E-

MAN-CIPLE, s. An officer (Tyrw.) who has the care of purchasing victuals for an inn of court.

From L. Manceps, (see MANCIPATE.) which, in Mid. L. was a name given to various characters. (See in Du Cange.)—Sk.

MANDATE, s. A charge given, an order -ATOR. or direction given; an order, a -ATORY. precept.

-MENT. Fr. Mand-at; It. & Sp. -ato; L. Mandatum, from mandare, i. e. in manus dare; to give into the hands of another. Warner writes Mausd, v. Con-De-Re-mand.

MANDIBLE, s. The organs with which we eat or chew; the jaws.

Fr. Mandibule; L. Mandibulum, (from Mandere, to eat, to chew,) the chaws or jaws. See MANDUCATE.

MANDILION, s. A mantle, (qv.)

Fr. & Sp. Mand-il; It. -iglia. So Chapman translates Gr. Χλαίρα.

MANDRAGE, s. A plant, said to be so -DRAGORA. called, because it points out -DRAKE. that a cave (μανδρα) is near.—Voss.

Fr. Mandragora; It. -gola; Sp. -gora, cula; L. Mandragoras; Gr. Μανδραγόρας, from μανδρα, speluncæ, and perhaps αγορα, to tell. Si id placet, its mandragoras dicitur, quia indicio sit, in proximo esse mandram, vel speluncam.

MANDUCATE, v. -ION. To chew; to eat—properly with some strong action of the jaws, or, as anciently written, chaws.

L. Manducare, from Mandere, to chew. Manducator, quod denti resistatur.

MANE, s. -ED. The mass of hair hanging from the neck of horses and some other animals.

D. Maene; Ger. Mans; Sw. Maan; Dan. Man. Mina, derives—a manando, because it flows from his neck. Wach.—from L. of lower ages, Minare, to lead, to guide, because the horse was guided by means of it, before the bridle was invented. Jun.—from Gr. Μανω, or μω, a kind of ornament adapted to the neck. Kilian says, that it is so named from its resemblance to the moon, whence it is called, by Martial, juba lunata, and by Catullus, rustula. May it not be from A. S. Magen, mægn, main, strength?

MANGE,* v. Manger,—that out of which
-ER. (cattle) eat or feed.
-ERY. Piers Plouhman.

Fr. Manger, -soire; It. -iare, -ialaja, from L. Mandere, to eat.

MANGE, s. An eating, corroding (loath-
-Y. some) disease.

-ILY. Fr. Mangeon, also called Roigne, or -INESS. rongne, from Roigner, to gnaw. (See ANONYM.) The same word as the preceding, (cu-tem enim exedit et erodit.)

MANGLE, v. -ER. To maim; to mutilate, to lacerate, to tear to pieces.

Mins. and Sk.—from L. Mancus; (D. Manek; Ger. Manc.) Jun.—from D. Mancken, mencken, mincken, to mince. It may be a dim. of Main, (qv.) or from the engine called a Mangonel, (qv.)
in Fr. Mangonneau; and in Fr. also, Mangonner is, "to mangle, or disfigure by mangling." Be-

MANGLE, v. s. "A kind of press to press buckram, fustian or died linnen cloth, to make it have a luster or glass," (i. e. gloss.)—Florio.

Ger. Mang-en, -ein; D. Mangelen het Hinwaet; Ger. Mangel-brat; D. Mangel-stock, lignum politorium.—See Wach and Kilian. It.
Manganare, mangano, manganaro. Be-Un-

MANGONEL,* s. An old-fashioned sling or engine, whereout stones, old iron, and great arrows were violently darted.—
Cot. **Chaucer*.

Fr. Mangonneau; Low L. Manganum, or mangana, which Voss. (de Vit. lib. iii. c. 23.) derives from Doric Maxava, a machine.

MANGONIZE,* v. -ISM.† To give a fresh hue or appearance.—**B. Jonson*. †Evelyn.

Fr. Mangonisme, -ner; Low L. Mangonare;
L. Mangonisare, from Mango, a slave dealer, who received this name, quia re parvum, sive fuccolorem falsum inducit mancipia, ut carius ven-dat.—Voss.

MANIA, s. App. to—Raging or raving
-AC. madness; furious or excessive in-
-ACAL. sanity.

Fr. Manie, maniaque; It. & Sp. Mania; Gr.
Mania, from μαίωμαι, to rage or rave.

MANIABLE,* ad. Manageable. See
MANAGE.—**Bacon*. Fr. Maniable.

MANI-FEST, ad. v. s. The v.—To find -ATION. or discover promptly; to discover
-LY. or disclose, to declare, to show,
-O, s. to make known or evident.

-LY. or inwrapped, complicated, having
-ED.* many folds, (a many-folded shield,) various involutions or complexities; complex, or composed of many or various kinds.—**Spenser*.

A.S. Manig-fald, mani-fald, multiplex, having or consisting of many folds, being much folded or multiplied.

MANIPLE, s. A handful, a bundle; a small band of soldiers. Also,—a scarf-like ornament worn round the left hand or wrist of a sacrificing priest.—Cot.

Fr. Manipule; It. -olo; Sp. -ulo; L. Manipu-lum, that which fills the hand, quod manum impleat.

MANNA, s. -ED.* (Heb.) "And the house of Israel called it man. And it was lyke unto coriander seede, & whyte & ye tast of it was lyke vnto wafers made with honye."—Bible, 1551.

Mannaed,—honied.—**Mickle*.

MANNER, v. s. App. to—The mode or
-ISM. method, fashion or form; the -IST. sort or kind; occasional or
-LY, ad. av. customary;—to the habit or
-LINESS. behaviour; to the general mode
-HOOD.* of action, conduct or manage-
-LESS.† ment; the habits, the morals.

To take in the manner.—Dryden. See **Bacon*. †Skelton.

Fr. Manière; It. -a; Sp. Manera, modus agendi aut loquendi. From Fr. Main, the hand, was formed Manier, to handle or manage, and thence Manière, a mode of managing; extended from action to speech.—Wach. Chaucer writes,—
"A maner Latin, a maner love-drinke, a maner rime;" and our common translation of the Bible,
Lev. vii. 23, reads "no manner fat;" but in ver.
26, "no manner of blood." Over-Un-

MAN-CEUVRE, v. s. To do any thing handily or dexterously; cleverly or adroitly.

Low L. Manu-operarius, one who works with the hand; (manus and opera.) Cot. has Manceuvrer, to hold, occupy, possess, (an old Norman word.) Manœuvrier,—a mechanical workman or labourer, an artificer, a handicrafts-man.—See
Du Cange and Men. See MANOUR, and MANURE.

MANOR, s. Voss. calls it—Habitation,
-NERY. cum certâ agri portione; a dwell-
-ORIAL. ling, with a certain portion of land.
"A manor, manerium, & manendo, because the usual residence of the owner, seems to have been a district of ground, held by lords or great personages; who kept in their own hands so much land as was necessary for the use of their families, which were called terra-dominicalis, or demesne lands, being occupied by the lord or dominus manerii and his servants."—Blackstone.

Bacon uses "his mansion-house, or his manor-house," as equivalent terms.

Fr. Manoir; Bar. L. Maneria vel manerium, from L. Manere, qd. maneo, the mansion.—Sk.

MANSE, s. A dwelling, habitation, or -ION, s. v. abode; it is not unfrequently
-IONRY. app. emph. to a house of some magnitude; and Manse, as in Scotland, esp.
to a parsonage house.

Low L. Mancus; Fr. Mansionner, a dweller, inhabitant, abider; one that hath a mansion in a place.—Cot. L. Mansio, from Manere, to stay or abide. See MAWRA; also Manse, in Jamieson; and Mancus, in Du Cange.

MANU-DUCTION, s. -OR. A leading by the hand; a leading, guiding, or directing.

From L. Manus, the hand, and ductio, a leading, (from ducere, to lead.)

MANU-FACTORY, s. The v.—To make -FACTURE, v. s. with the hand, to work with -FACTURER. the hand; to frame or form, -FACT. to make up with the hand: gen. and met.—to fashion, frame, or form, to work or make up.—Maidman, an. 1691.

Fr. Manufact-urer; Sp. -ura; It. s. Manifestura; from L. Manus, the hand, and facere, factum, to do, to make.

MANU-MISE, or -MISS, v. App. to slaves -MISSING. —To deliver or set at liberty, to -MISSION. liberate, to free from slavery or -MIT, v. servitude, to enfranchise.

Fr. Manu-mission; Sp. -mitter, -mission; It. Mano-mittere, missione; L. Manu-mittere, s. manu mittere, to send away or dismiss, out of the hand.

MAN-URE, v. s. To work with the hand;

-ABLE. app. to such work when employed

-AGE. in the cultivation of land; and,

-ANCE. thus,—

-MENT. To cultivate; to to cultivate land, to till it; (as more restrictedly app.) to cultivate by the addition of other substances, e. g. different soil or earth, dung, mixtures, or mixens, &c.; and thus, to improve, to enrich, to fertilize.

Sir T. Smith uses it as equivalent to Manage.

The same word as Manœuvre, (qv.) by the mere corruption of œuvre into ure. Un-

MANU-SCRIPT, ad. s. -AL. Any thing written with the hand.—Byron.

Fr. Man-uscrit; It. -scritto; Sp. -scritto; L. Manu-scriptum, written with the hand.

MANY, ad. s. MENIAL, ad. s. Very variously written.

Many, or Meine, or Meinie, is app. to—a mixture or medley of persons or things; a number of servants, or attendants, or followers; a company or retinue; the company or collected number of a household or family: whence the ad. Menial.

Many, ad. cons.—of or pertaining to a mixed number; numerous; of an unspecified, an indefinite or undetermined number.

In the expressions Many an horn, &c., Tooke considers an or a to be a corruption of—of, many of, hornes, &c., many a message, many of messages.

Many is much used pref. See MANIFOLD.

Go. Manag; A. S. Manig, manig; D. & Sw. Menig; Ger. Maning, manch; Dan. Meange. I believe, says Sk. from A. S. Ge-men-gan, Ger. Meng-en, miscere, to mix; for where many are, there is a certain mixture, or medley, of men,—quædam hominum miscela. Wach. reverses this, and derives the v. Meng-en, to mix, from menge, multus vel multudo; and Dr. Jamieson is convinced that the term primarily respected multitude. Tooke affirms it (Many) to be the past p. of Meng-en, miscere, to mix, to mingle; and that it means mixed or associated, (for that is the effect of mixing), subaud. company or any uncertain and unspecified number of any things. Many (Lowth) is chiefly used with the word great before it. G. Douglas (p. 153) uses the expression, "A few menyte, or menze."

MAP, v. s. -F-ERY. A tablet, picture, or delineation of the world, or of any part of it; showing the relative situations of places on the earth, of stars in the heavens.

Fr. Map-pe, pemonde; It. -pa, pamondo; Sp. -a, from L. Mapa, (Mins.) a tablecloth of the similitude and likeness whereof the mappe of the world took this name mappe. Mappe monde,—tabula cosmographica.

MAPLE, s. A kind of tree. "The maple in bigness is much about the linden tree; the wood of it is very fine and beautiful. A kind there is, which hath a curled graine running to and fro with diverse spots; the more excellent work whereof, resembling the eies in the peacocks taile, thereupon tooke also the name."—Holland. Plinie.

A. S. Mapul-tree; D. Maes-hout; Ger. Maeholder; Sw. -ar. Aœr arbor.—Sk.; who would derive Maple from L. Amabilis, because furnished with so pleasing and beautiful leaves. Wach. and Ihre derive from mas, a spot. The latter notices Bar. L. Mosorbolla; and A. S. Mapul is thought by Mr. Thomson to be a corruption of mar boll. See MAZE.

MAR, v. z. To disperse or scatter; and —R-ER. thus, to ruin or destroy; to spoil, —ING. to hurt or harm, to injure, (to —MENT. "murther.")—Gower.

Go. Mar yan, or -gan; A. S. Merr-as, mirr-an, myrr-an, to dissipate, to disperse, to spread abroad, to scatter.—Tooke. "A. S. Amirr-an, to destroy, corrupt, impair, deprave, defile, deform, pollute, distract, dissipate, consume, marre."—Som. See MOSE, MUSTER, MERRY. Un-

MARAUDE, v. -ER. To go on a marauding party, is to go in search of pillage or plunder.

Men. notices the derivation of this word from a Comte Merodes, who commanded in the armies of Ferdinand II.; but Duchet shows that it existed long before. Cot. has Marauder, to beg, to play the rogue, or idle vagabond. Sk. (in v. Marrow) says, that marade, in Fr. denotes a beggar or vagabond, and derives it, improbably enough, from Ger. Mare, a mare, and aïd, a servant; qd. a mean servant, who takes care of horses, a groom. It is not improbably formed upon the v. to mar.

MARBLE, s. ad. v. To marble, cona. to speckle, to flake, to variegate, like marble. "Those fine covers of books, for their resemblance to speckled marble, are wont to be called marbled."—Boyle.

Fr. Mar-bre; It. -mo; Sp. -mol; L. Marmor. From Gr. μαρμαρεω, and this from μαρμαρειν, resplendere, vibranti splendore coruscare, to shine, to glitter. Em-En-

MARCASSITICAL, ad. Fr. Marcassite, —the marcassite, or fire stone; a mineral that smells like brimstone, and is of two kinds,—the yellow shining as gold, and the white (the purer and better of the two) like silver.—Cot.

MARCH, v. To march, (Fr. Marcher), —ES, s. To form or constitute, to be placed —ER. or situated upon, the bounding —ESE, v. mark, or line of demarcation; to confine, to bound or border upon.

"Strange londe, which marcheth upon Chimerie."—Gower. "Other townes marching on thèpyre. . . . Whiche countie marched on the cōltre of Tholousin."—Berners.

"A marquess (marchio) is the next degree of nobility. His office formerly was (for dignity and duty were never separated by our ancestors) to guard the frontiers and limits of the kingdom, which were called marches, from the Teutonic Marche, a limit: such as, in particular, were the marches of Wales and Scotland, while each continued to be an enemy's country. The persons who had command there were called lords marchers, or marquesses."—Blackstone.

A. S. Mearc, terminus, a bound. Hence Bar. L. Marcæ, marchæ, pro limite imperil.—Som. See MARK.

MARCH, v. z. -ING. To go or proceed, or cause to go or proceed, in a military form or order; to walk as soldiers walk, regularly and steadily; to make a regular progress.

Fr. Mar-cher; It. -ciare; Sp. -char; Ger. -schëren, to walk in military or martial manner, with slow and lengthened step, qd. marthari.—Sk. Men. forms it from the v. Faricare. (And see his Diet. Etymologique for various conjectures. To add one more:) The A. S. Marc, Ger. Mark, a mark or sign, is also an ensign, a standard;—to march may thus be,—to go or proceed under the same standard, in order of battle, in battle array. Over-

MARCH, s. Orig. the first month of the Roman year, and so named by Romulus, in honour of his imputed father—Mars.

MARCH-PANE, s. Marchpane (say Sk. and Wach.) was a confection of almonds, pistachio nuts, sugar, and rose-water. All agree (says the latter) that pane is L. Panis, bread, and by some said to be massa panis; by others, martius panis; by others, mixtus panis, from miscen, miscere, to mix or mingle. Stevens declares our macarons to be only debased and diminutive marc-panes.

Fr. Mar-cepain; It. -zapane; Ger. -zipan; Sp. Magapan.

MARCID,* ad. -OUR,† Shrunken, withered, meagre.—Dryden. †Brown.

It. Mar-cido, -cia; Sp. -chilo; L. Marcidus, from marcere; Gr. μαλακω, μαλκω, from μαλασσω, to soften, to soak. Mercee, cona.—to become languid, shrunken, or withered. See TO MAE.

MARE. See NIGHTMARE.

Ger. Mar; D. Maere; A. S. & Sw. Mara, incubus. Wach. says,—Proprie est somnus impeditus, et spiritum dormientia intercipiens; from marren, impedit, to impede or hinder, to mar.

MARE, s. Now app. to the female of the horse.

A. S. Mare, mare, myra; D. Maere, merie; Ger. Mare, equa, and also—puella. Wach. derives mare, equa, from mar, a horse; but his etym. goes no further. Mar in Ger. Maere in A. S. is—mollis, tener, tactil facille cedens, gentle, yielding easily or readily to the hand; and mare may be so named from its gentle and tractable disposition. But A. S. May is app. to maid and man; and mar, mare, equus, equa, may have the same root,—the v. To may; and be app. for similar reasons. May, may-er, mare, mar,—that which has strength, ac. to bear, to carry; the male, perhaps—burthens, &c.; the female—younge. See FILLY.

MARGE, s. A point or line marked.

—ENT, or The shore or separating edge, —IN. the edge, brink, or brim, the —INAL. border. The margin of a book,— —INALLY. the border that extends around —ENTED. the letter-press, or printed portion of a page.

Fr. Marge; It. -iso; Sp. -en; L. Margo, a margin, if we believe Isidorus, who says, that it properly denotes the sea-shore (marginem maris, hoc est, litus).—Voss. Probably a mark, march, or boundary. See TO MARK.

MARGUERITE, s. A pearl.

Fr. Marguerite; It. Sp. & L. Margarita; Μαργαριτης.

MARIGOLD, s. A plant, so called from the yellow colour of the flower.—Sk.

Marigold, qd. aurum Maria, à colore floris luteo.

MARINE, ad. s. Of or belonging to the sea.

-ATE, v. Marine, the s. is app. as a collective term, to naval force, or the number of ships; to naval or sea affairs; to a soldier serving on ship-board.

To marine,—to prepare, to dress in sea or salt water.

Fr. Mar-in; It. & Sp. -ino; L. Marinus, from mare, the sea: from Heb.—Foss. See MARSH. Sub-Trans- Ultra-

MARJORAM, s. A plant.

Fr. Marjolaine; Sp. Majorana; It. & Mid. L. Majorana. Men. thinks from L. Major, because app. to a larger sort of this herb. Gerard,—from its greater or superior virtues. See Men. Fr. and It. Etyma.

MARISH. See MARSH.

MARITAL, ad. Of or pertaining to marriage.

L. Maritalis, from maritus, a husband.

MARITIME. See MARINE. Drayton

-IMAL. writes (merely for rhyme's sake)

-INE. Maritime.—"Ralegh.

-IMATE.* Fr. Maritimé; It. -itmo; Sp. -imo; L. Maritimus, from mare, the sea.

MARK, v. s. Cot. well expresses the

-ABLE. common applications,—"To

-ER. mark,—note, sign, spot, set a

-MAN, or print or stamp on; also, to heed,

-S-MAN. regard, observe, take special notice of."

Also, to mark, sc. a line, a bounding line, a boundary, a border, a frontier, a confine, a shore, a marg-in. See MARCH.

Fr. Marquable,—markable, notable, of mark, of note. We now use Remarkable, (qv.)

A. S. Meare-an, -ian, (i.e. meare-ic-an); Ger. & D. Marken, mercken; Dan. Marker, signare, notare; Fr. Mar-quer; It. -care, -chiare; Sp. -car. Com-De-Mis-Un-

MARK, s. A coin, so called from the mark impressed upon it.

Fr. Marc; It. Marco; D. Mark; Ger. & Sw. Mark; quia sc. signo regio impressum est.—Sk. And see Men. The Mancus, mancusa, qd. manu cusa, (see Spel. in v. Masca.) "A mancus, some think to be all one with a marke, for that mancu and mancusa is translated in ancient bookes by marca."—Camden.

MARKET, v. s. -ABLE. Market-(place,)—a place for buying and selling goods, provisions, &c.

Market-folks,—folks or people who frequent the market-place for the purpose of buying and selling.

Market-beter, (Chaucer),—"He was used to swagger up and down the market when it was fullest."—Tyrr. In Cot.—bateur de pavez,—an idle or continual walker.

A. S. Market; D. Markt, merkt, marchten; Ger. Markt, markten; Sw. Marknad; Fr. Marché; It. Mercato; Sp. -ado. The etymologists agree to derive from L. Mercari, with the exception of Serenius, who writes,—from Mark, marca, quâ unice pecuniam numerabant. See MERCHANT.

MARLE, v. s. -Y. A kind of rich earth.

"This marle is a certain fat of the ground, much like unto the glandulous kernels growing in the bodies of beasts; and it is thickened in manner of marrow or the kernel of fat about it."—Holland. Plinie.

D. Margel, mergel; Ger. Mergel. Sk. thinks—from A. S. Merg, marrow; qd. terra, instar medulle, pinguis, an earth rich as marrow, or which softens and fattens the land, as the marrow (qv.) nourishes, cherishes, and enriches the bones.

MARMALADE, s. A preserve of quinces; also of other fruits.

Fr. Marmelade; It. -lada; Sp. Membrillada; Port. Marmelado, and this from Port. Marmelo, Sp. Membrillo, a quince. Of uncertain origin. See Men.

MARMORATE, ad. Covered with marble.

L. Marmor, marble. Wood produces this word from an epitaph on Sp. Kyte, who died an. 1537, and was buried at Stepney.

MARMOSET, s. A kind of ape or monkey.

Fr. Mar-mouset, -mot; It. -motta; Sp. -mota.

MARMOT, s. "The Marmotto, or Mus Alpinus,—a creature as big or bigger than a rabbit, which absconds all winter, doth (as Hildanus tells us) live upon its own fat."—Ray.

Fr. Mar-mot; It. -motta. Men. derives from Mus.

MARQUE, s. "In old time, he onelie

-QUESS. was called marquesse, qui habuit

-QUISATE. terram limitaneam, a march-

-QUISDOM. ing prouince vpon the enimies

-QUESSHIP. countries, and thereby bound

-CHIONESS. to keepe and defend the frontiers."—Holinshed.

"Letters of marque and reprisal signify—the latter, a taking in return; the former, the passing the frontiers in order to such taking."—Blackstone.

Fr. Mar-quis; It. -chese; Sp. -guss. Marquess is by Chaucer written Markis; and Marchioness, Markiesse. Marquess, by Ascham, Marches. See MARCH, MARCHES.

MARROW, s. The soft, tender, oily

-Y. substance, contained within the

-ISH. bones; (met.) the essential strength

-LESS. or goodness.

-BONES.

A. S. Merg, mearg, meark; D. Marg, mery; Ger. Mark; Sw. Marg, (Ihre); Dan. Mari. Wach. and Sk. propose—from A. S. Mearu, Ger. Mar, mollis, tener, soft, tender. Marg-er, from the v. To may, is not improbably the root,—the marrow giving life, or strength, to the bones. See MARE.

Marie, as used by Sir T. More, in Marie-bones, ("then down he fel vpon his maribones,") now com. written and spoken Marrow-bones, is supposed to be Mary, the name of the Virgin, and the compound to be app. to the knees, from the genuflexions made to her.—See BRAND.

MARROW, s. A companion, mate, fellow.

This word had escaped Sk.'s reading; he says, that he had seen it only in the Eng. Dict., and denies that it is anywhere used as equivalent to socius. It is a common Sc. word, and occurs in The Braes of Yarrow, by Hamilton. Ray says,—"A marrow, a companion or fellow. A pair of gloves are not marrows, i. e. fellows. Voss generalis." The Gloss. to Douglas (who notices the oversight of Sk.) explains thus: "An equal, fellow, associate, accomplice, companion, comrad. The word is often used for things of the same kind, and of which there are two, as of shoes, gloves, stockings; also eyes, hands, feet, &c. Either from Fr. Camarade, Angl. -rad, socius, sodalis, by an aphoresis, or from Fr. Mari, a husband, L. Maritus, in which sense the word is also taken. Thus Sc. a husband or wife is called half-marrow, and such birds as pair are called marrows. Hence the v. Marrow, to equal, and Marrowless, that cannot be equalled, incomparable." G. Douglas renders Comes Sibylla, Sibylla his crew marrow. Sibbald says, perhaps from Fr. Maride, a spouse. May it not rather be A. S. Mearw, tender, used as a term of endearment, (mearw cild is a tender child, a tender infant,) app. to a bride, for instance, then extended to a friend or fellow, a mate; and thence, to a match or pair?

MARRY, int. Properly written Mary. A vulgar oath. By Mary, (Tyrw.)

MARRY, v. As the Fr. Marier,—To wed, -IAGE. to give or take in wedlock, to -IAGEABLE. join in matrimony; to be or -IABLE. become, to cause to be or be -YING. come, husband or wife; to espouse; to unite or conjoin, (as those in the conjugal state.)

Fr. Mari-er; It. -lar; Sp. -dar, uxorem ducere, qd. Maritare,—a word, adds Sk. which occurs in approved authors. But it is not improbable that L. Mars (whence Maritus) had the same origin as the Eng. Man, and Maid, viz. the v. To may:—May-en, man; May-ed, maid; May-er, mar; with the articles affixed—Mar-is, mars, (mas.) Jun. observes that the A. S. used two words: Ceorltian, nubere viro; and Wifian, uxorem ducere. The common word in Wiclif is Wed, A. S. Weddian, spondere, to espouse. Inter- Re- Un-

MARSH, s. -y. Anciently written Maris, Maress, Marish. App. to (an extent or space of)—Wet, washy, watery land; to land that remains covered with water, or that is flooded with water.

Go. Marisaius; A. S. Mere, marc; D. Maer-usch, maersche, marcke, maersche, marck; Dan. Marsha; Ger. Marck; which Wach. derives from Ger. Mer, (D. Maer, mer.) a collection of waters, L. Mare; and he might have added, Go. Marei; Fr. Mare, marais; It. Mara, marazzo; Low L. Maricus. The Go. Marei is probably the source of all the rest; but what the original word, with a meaning to cause and account for the application? Perhaps A. S. Mar-ran, ampliare, to extend or expand. See MARE, MOOR.

MARSHAL, s. v. The v.—To manage, -LING. dispose, or arrange; to rank or set -SHIP. in order; to settle, to prescribe.

Fr. Mareschal; It. -callo; D. Maer-schalck; servus equorum, curator equorum:—Maer or mare, equus, and schalck, servus. It. Scalco. The word appears to have been extended from this primitive usage, (curator equorum, he that had charge of horses), to curator, he that had the charge, management, provision, arrangement, of various matters assigned to him; and thus the v. is—as above explained. Un-

MART, v. s. -ING. Contracted from Market.—Sk. To buy or sell; to purchase or vend.

MARTEL,* v. To beat hard, to hammer. *Spenser.

Fr. Mari-eau; It. & Sp. -ello; Fr. Marisier. Mari-us, -ellus, and -eau, says Wach. (for Mallens, a hammer or mallet, are from Ger. Barten, to beat, and by no means a marie: what more usual than to exchange the labials? Others—from L. Marisulus, a small mallet. See Men, and the etym. suggested for the L. Mars, in v. MARRY.)

MARTEN, or -ERNE, s. An animal so called from its fierceness and destructive-ness.

A. S. Meorthe; Fr. Marte; It. -ora; Sp. -a; Low L. Martures; D. Mar-ter; Ger. -der; Sw. Marde; L. Martes; a name that seems to come—A marie, because it destroys poultry and other birds, vi maris.—Voss, and Gess. Wach. seems to think the Ger. Marder may be from the v. Morden, to murder, or murier.

MARTIAL, ad. Warlike, of or pertaining to war or battle; military, cou- -IST. rageous; also (as in the Fr. likewise) "born under the planet, or being of the humour of Mars."

Fr. & Sp. Mart-ial; It. -ziale; L. Martialis, from Mars, the god of war. Im-

MARTIN, s. Minshew thinks (with more -INER. ingenuity than truth,—Sk.) that -LET. these birds are so called because they come here about the end of March, and leave us about the feast of St. Martin.

Fr. Martinet.

MARTINET, v. A precise, punctilious, rigid observer and enforcer of discipline: so called from a Fr. officer of that name, mentioned by Voltaire.

MARTINGALE, s. "The martingale, invented by Evangelista, an eminent horseman of Milan, is a long strap, or thong of leather, the one end of which is fastened to the girth, between the fore legs, and the other to the bit, or, which is the better way, should have a thin mouth-piece of its own."—Berenger.

Fr. Martingale; It. & Sp. -a.

MARTYN-MASSE, s. The feast of St. Martin.

MARTYR, v. s. A witness;—but he is -DOM. peculiarly so called by Chris- -IZE, v. tians, who not with his mouth -OLOGE. only, but with his blood, bears -OLOGY. witness to heavenly truth.—Voss. -OLOGIST. To martyr is—to put a martyr to -SHIP. death; gen. to put to death:—"to torment or afflict extremely."—Cot.

Fr. Mart-ir, -irer; It. -ire; Sp. -ir; L. Martyr; Gr. Μάρτυρ, a witness. Valkner derives from Μεγαογρος, pret. per. of μεγ-ειν, dividere, discernere, to divide or separate, to discern or discriminate. Be-

MARVEL, v. s. To wonder, to feel great -LING. admiration or astonishment.

-OUS. Fr. Merveille; It. Mara-giglio; Sp. -ella, corrupted from L. Mirabilis, that can or may be wondered at, wonder- -OUS-LY. ful, great,—so as to raise wonder. See -NESS. MIRACLE. En-

MASCULINE, ad. -LY. Male, manly or virile; virtuous, vigorous, hardy.

Fr. Masculin; It. & Sp. -ino; L. Masculinus, from Mas, a male. See the etym. suggested for Mars or Mas in v. MARRY. E-masculate.

MASH. See MESH.

MASH, v. s. -Y. As app. in Brewing, To mask is simply—To mix, sc. malt with the water; to reduce to the state of things so mixed; to rub or beat into the same mixture.

Sk. says,—A mask for a horse, perhaps from Ger. Mischen; D. Mischen, (i. e. A. S. Miscian), to mix or mingle; but the v. To mask he derives from Fr. Mascher, to chew. The first etym. will be sufficient. See SMASH.

MASK, v. s. A mask is app. first, to a
-ER, s. v.

visor or cover to the face, worn to disguise it; an entertainment at which the

MASQUERADE, s. parties wore such masks;

gen. an entertainment or

MASKING. revelry; cons. a disguise or concealment.

D. Masche, masche; Dan. Mas-que; Fr. quer, que; It. cherare, chera; Sp. cara; Fr. guarde; It. cheria; Sp. cara. The etymologists have written largely and elaborately upon this word, esp. the contributors to the Etymologique de la Langue Française of Men.; all very unsatisfactorily. (See them.) Salmastus,—from Gr. Bac-cavia, (fascinus) larva, worn to avoid fascination. Men. and Sk.—from Ar. Mascara, sport, jest, or joke. (See also Masks in Wach.) Martin. (in v. Mace),—from D. Masche, a net, to veil the face. Kilian observes that there is a class of idle fellows who walk attired (densis reticulis) with thick nets, who are commonly named Nes-bowen, who can see through the masks (retis maculis) and themselves remain unknown. (See MSEX.) Holland renders—densus reticulus, a thick mask.

MASLINE. See MESLINE.

MASON, s. v. -RY. Is app. by usage to—
A builder in stone; Masonry, work in stone;
also the solid mass of stone from the quarry.

Fr. Mason; Low L. Machio, or Macio. Du Cange derives from L. Machia, a long wall. Others from Machina, because the builders stood upon machines to raise their walls. It appears to be obviously the same word as Maison, a house or mansion; app. to the person who builds, instead of the thing built. The Fr. Maisonner, is to build houses; Masoner,—to build of stone.

MASORAH, s. "Masorah, a certain
-RETH. Crítica Sacra, wherein are delivered
-RETH. the varieties of writing and reading throughout the Old Testament; not performed by any one author, but the successive labours of many, and continued for some hundreds of years."—Grew.

MASQUERADE. See MASK.

MASS, s. The quantity or magnitude
-Y. formed by collecting or compress-
-ING. ing into one heap or bulk; a heap
-IVE. or accumulation, a bulk or body, a lump.

Fr. Mass; It. Sp. & L. Massa; Gr. Maça, from massa-eiv, subigere, to beat or press (into a lump).
Sp. Massar, amassar, to knead the dough. A-

MASS, s. v. A solemn ceremony in the -ER. Church of Rome: a solemn festival;
-ING. as in Christ-mas, &c.

Fr. Mass-e; It. & Sp. -a. The word was introduced into the northern languages also. Sk. says,

Bar. L. Miss; and Voss. that it is undoubtedly used—A mittendo pro missa; the people being dismissed when the services were ended, with the words, "Itē, missa est." Various other reasons are assigned for the derivation; but this seems the most probable. (See MISSAL.) Tyndall adopts the Hebrew etym.: "*I doubt not but that it was called massa of his Hebrew word masach, which signifieth a pension greiving, because that at every mass mē gave every man a portion accordyng vnto his power vnto the sustentation of the poore.*"

MASSACRE, v. s. -ER. Gen.—To slaughter or slay:—it appears to be app. when little or no resistance is or can be made, and the carnage or butchery is indiscrimi-nately murderous.

"Slaughter grows murder when it goes too far,

And makes a massacre what was a war."

Dryden.

Fr. Massacrer; It. Macellare. Sk.—from the
It. Massare, to kill (properly) with the stroke or blow of a club or mace; It. Massu; Fr. Massé.
Jortin thinks Sk. wrong, and that it comes from
Marti sacrum.

MAST, s. -ED. The beam or pole set up in the ship or vessel, to support or carry the main-sail.

A. S. Mast, mast-cypp; D. Dan. & Ger. Mast;
D. Mast-boom; Ger. baum; Fr. Mas; Sp. Mástil.
In A. S. Ger. & D. the word is used in conjunction with cypp, a beam, D. Room, Ger. Boom, and may be the ad. Mást; the greatest, the chief, the principal beam or pole. See JAS. Under-

MAST, s. The fruit of certain trees, e. g.
-FUL. the oak, the beech.

-LESS. A. S. Ger. & D. Mást, glandes suum
sagina, acorns, pigs' meat; from Ger. Masten; D.
Mesten, saginare, to fatten.—Sk. A. S. Mást, glans; mást, to fat swine withall. Mást-an, ge- mást-an, to cram or make fat, as swine with mást.
—Som.

MASTER, s. v. A master is one who has

-DOM. most power or skill; and,

-LESS. cons.—

-LY, ad. av. 1. A ruler, governor, com-

-SHIP. mander, manager, conductor,

-Y. director; owner or posses-

-FUL.* sor; opposed to—servants,

-OUS.† or those ruled, &c.

MAISTRESS, or 2. One possessing most, or MISTRESS. a greater degree of skill or knowledge; one who excels or is eminent for his skill or knowledge; a doctor or teacher, opposed to—scholar, or to those taught.

Masterful,—powerful, mighty,—is sometimes used to denote an excess; as full, too full of the idea of being master; domineering, imperious.

Maistress,—now written Mistress, (qv.)

Master, in composition,—chief, principal.

Maister tour, the chief tower. See MAIDEN

TOWER.—Wiclif to Dryden. † Milton.

Fr. Maistre; It. & Sp. Maestro; L. Magister, which (Voss.) is either from Magis, greater, as Minister from Minus, or rather from the Gr. Me- gistros, the greatest. (See MAESTRACY.) The word exists in all the northern languages. D.
Meester; Ger. Meister; Sw. Maistare; A. S. Mást; (magister); and Jun. derives it from A. S. Mást;
D. Mást; Ger. Meist; Sw. Mest. The root is probably from the A. S. v. Mag-an, posse, to may;
and see En. Over- Un-

MASTIC, s. ad. Now app. to—Gums of various sorts; to a cement, adhesive as gum.

Fr. Mastic; It. -ice; Sp. Almastiga; L. Mastiche; Gr. Μαστιχη; the gum of the lentisk tree.

MASTICATE, v. To chew the food, to -ION. bruise or crush it with the teeth.

-ORY. Fr. Mastication, -aloire; It. -are, -azione; Sp. -ar. L. of Low. Ages, Masticare, i.e. mandere cibum, dentibus terere, manducare; Gr. Μασταζειν.—Voss. De Vit. lib. iv. c. 13.

MASTIFF, s. A dog.

Fr. Mestif, mastin; It. Mastino; Sp. -in. Sk. derives from Maesten, sagine, to fatten, because it is a dog of a large size, and on that account appears the fatter. Mina.—from Maison tenant, because he keeps or guards the house. Manwood, (Forest Law,)—from Mase the thefte, "being supposed to frighten away robbers by its tremendous voice."—Pennant.

MAT, v. s. -TRESS. App. to—An intertexture or interweaving of rushes, straw, or other material. And To mat,—

To cover or protect with mat; also,—to interweave into a close or thick mass; to close, thicken, or join closely into one mass.

A. S. Meatt-a, -e; D. Ger. & Dan. Matte; Sw. & L. Matta, which Martin derives from Heb. Mittah, a bed or couch. Wach.—from Ger. Meiden; A. S. Mithon, to cover. The Fr. Natte, from L. Matta.—Men.

MATACHIN, s. Danza de matachones, a dance with swords, in which they fence and strike one at another, as if they were in earnest, receiving the blows on the bucklers, and keeping time; so called from Matar, to kill, because they seem to kill one another.—Delpino. I believe, (Sk.) from It. Matto, (mad,) from the mad gestures which the dancers use. Douce supposes the names—Dance of fools (quære madcaps), and Dance of matachins to be equivalent.

Fr. Mat-achin, -assin; It. -lacini; Sp. -achin.

MATADORE, s. At the game of Ombre there are four matadores, that is, four murdering cards, so called, because they win all others.

Sp. Matador, a murderer, from Matar; L. Maculare, to kill.

MATCH, s. Cot. explains the Fr. Meiche,—The wick or snuff of a candle; the match of a lamp; also,—match for a harquebuse. It is app. to—

Any unctuous or resinous substance; or a material dipped in an unctuous or resinous substance, for the purpose of speedy ignition.

Fr. Mèche, meiche; It. Micci-a, -o; Sp. Mecha; Low L. Myxa, ellychnium lucerne, from the Gr. Μύξα, which (Voss.) properly signifies muscus, but met.—ellychnium, quodque emungitur de lucerna.

MATCH, v. s. See To MAKE. To pair

-ABLE. or couple, to intermarry.

-ING. Matchless,—that do not match;

-LESS. that cannot be matched.

A match, (e.g. at Cricket,) in which the contending parties are matched or made equivalent to each other, or opposed, as of equivalent skill or strength. Over-UN-

MATE, v. s. Check-mate.—Fr. Eschec, and mat; It. Scacco matto,—at the game of Chess, when the king is mat, i.e. defeat, so that he cannot stir, and cons. the game lost. Mait,—from Old L. Matt-us, -are; Gr. Ματτειν, subigere, to subdue.—See Sk. and Ruddiman; and see MATADORE.

MATE, v. s. -LESS. To match, to pair, to couple, to co-unite, to co-equal: to be, stand, or be placed as co-equal, or in equipoise; to stand up against or withstand, as equal; to oppose.

A mate,—one of a pair or couple; one coupled or co-united with another or others: an associate or co-fellow, one whose offices or labours are the same with those of another, (without reference to rank or authority, as—ship-mate, master's-mate.)

A. S. Mac-a; D. Mact. Sk. thinks—from A. S. Met-an, to meet: pares enim paribus facile aggregantur, birds of a feather fly together. But see MAKE and MATCH. Co-in-UN-

MATE, v. ad. To be or cause to be insensate; to stupify, to astound or astonish, to appal.

From A. S. Mat-an, somnare, to dream. Gower applies the word to the effects of drunkenness. It is written by G. Douglas, Mait and Mais. See the Gloss. to his Virgil. Ruddiman derives as Mate in Check-mate, supra. See To AMATE, and the Commentators on Shak.

MATERNAL, ad. -NITY. Of or pertaining to a mother, motherly; appropriate to, or becoming, a mother.

"Fr. Maternité,—maternity, motherhood, the being a mother."—Cot.

Fr. Matern-el; It. -ale; Sp. -al; L. Maternus; Gr. Ματρικος. See MOTHER.

MATH, s. G. Douglas, (p. 454, v. 31,) uses the expression,—"latir meith," that which one moweth later or after the former math or mowing.

A. S. Maw-eth, the third pers. sing. of the indicative of Maw-an, metere, to mow.—Tooke.

MATHEMATICS, s. "Mathematicks

-IC. treat of magnitude and numbers,

-IC-AL. instructing us how to measure,

-ALLY. estimate, and compute the differ-

-IAN. rent distances, magnitudes, and MATHEsy. motions of bodies, with respect to one another."—Horne.

"Mathematicians, among the Romans, were, for some time, specially meant of astrologers, or star prophets; as appears in Suetonius, and others, best skill'd in language of their own country."—Grew.

Fr. Mathématiques; It. Matematiche; Sp. -a; L. Mathe-matica, -is; Gr. Μαθηματικά, μαθηματιка, απο του μαθειν, discere, docere, to learn or teach.

MATRICE, s. -IDE. The mother's womb; app. gen. to—that in which any thing is formed or moulded.

Fr. & It. Ma-trice: Sp. -dra, -dris, -tris; L. Matris, i. e. the mother's (sc.) womb.

MATRICULATE, v. s. ad. -ION. "Then are young scholars in an university said (to be) matriculated, when they are sworn and registred into the society of their foster-mother of learning the University."—Mins.

Fr. Matric-ular; It. -olare; Sp. -ular, from L. Mater, a mother. Un-

MATRIMONY, s. Matrimony is,—That -IAL state (sc. of union, or cohabitation) -IALLY, in which women become—mean, or -IOUS.* have a mind, to become—mothers; the nuptial, the conjugal state; marriage, wedlock.—Milton.

Fr. Matrimon-ia; It. & Sp. -io; L. Matrimonium, from Mater, a mother. Monium (Voss.) est mera productio vocis; in which assertion Voss. is most probably wrong. See MONT, and PATRIMONY.

MATRON, s. Of a motherly character; of -AL a motherly age; of age or character -LY, befitting, or suited to perform, the -AGE* duties of a mother.—Burke.

Fr. Matrone; It. Sp. & L. Matrona, from Mater.—Voss. Perhaps Materna, (sc. femina,) a woman, who is a mother.

MATTER, s. v. App. to—That of which -TERY, any thing is formed or -ERI-AL, ad. s. fashioned, composed, constructed, constituted; that which is subjected or supposed. Met.—a subject, an object; object in view, pursued or followed, contemplated, considered; considered or deemed, esteemed -ERIATION,<sup>1</sup> or valued—as worthy of pursuit, of gaining, acquiring, or possessing; of perceiving, knowing, or understanding. Also app. to—

The corrupt liquid secreted from a sore or wound.

To matter,—to form such corrupt secretion. To be (met.) or be deemed, considered or esteemed, worthy of pursuit, of value or weight, of moment or importance; to import; to estimate or esteem; to value.

Material is used lit. and also met. (thus) pertaining to the matter or subject; important, momentous, weighty, substantial, essential.

"The Materialists maintain, that man consists of one uniform substance, the object of the senses; and that perception, with its modes, is the result, necessary or otherwise, of the organization of the brain."—Belsham.

Fr. Mat-ière; It. & Sp. -eria; L. Materies. Putamus à Matre dici Materies, quia in corporum ratione se matris instar habet.—Voss. Go. Mat-ian, concidere; or Met-ian, comedere, seem to give the root. Com-Im-Un-

MATTIN, ad. s. The morning; the break MATUTINE, or dawn of day; the beginning -AL, or early part of day.

In the Roman Catholic Church,—Matins, officium horse matutina, forms the third watch of the monastic day, sc. from three till six o'clock, A. M.

Mattens-ed—seems a splenetic coinage of Bale: "They are mattensed, massed, canded, &c."

It. Mat-tutino; Fr. & Sp. -ines; preces vel horse matutina. L. Matutinus, from Matula; a name given to Aurora; and Matula, from Mans, (optima diei pars.)—See Voss.

MATTOCK, s. A trident, a spade, a shovel, a delving tool, a mattock.—Som.

A. S. Mattuc, meot-uc, -oc. Mina derives from D. Met haecke, with hook, from Hacken,—to hack;—ridiculously, says Sk., who proposes A. S. Meos, moss, or any low herb, and teg-en, to tug or pull, because it (a mattock) pulls or tears up.

MATURE, v. ad. That is properly said -LY, to be mature, which is neither too -ITY, quick or early, nor too slow or -ATION, late, (Voss.); and thus,—Ripe, -ATIVE.* perfect, complete, digested.

**Holland*.

Fr. Matur-e; It. -o; Sp. Maduro; L. Maturus, of uncertain origin. Im-Pre-

MAUDLIN, s. Maudlin is the name of a plant, Herba Magdalena; and used as an ad. is a corruption of Magdalen, (which Sir T. More writes Maudleyne), who is depicted with eyes wet and swelled with tears: and is app.—when the eyes are watery, and the countenance swollen,—with sottishness; weakness of mind.

MAUGRE, ad. In spite of their hearts, against their wills, whether they will or no.—Cot.

Spenser says, (b. ii. c. 5. st. 12,) "Maulgre her spight," i. e. Fortune; by which he appears to mean—Spight on her spight.

Fr. Mauigré, i. e. Malgré; It. Malgrado; Sp. Mal grado; mal grado, not at all grateful or agreeable; (Gré and grado, from Gratum.—Sk.) Mina notices a common expression,—"In spite of his nose."

MAVIS, s. A name of the Thrush, still com. used in Scotland.

Fr. Mauvis; It. Malviccio. The Fr. also call it La Grive de Figne, because it feeds upon the ripe grapes, (Pennant;) and it is said to have received its name Mauvis, L. Malus, from the mischief it does to the vintage. See Men.

MAUKIN. See MALKIN.

MAUL. See MALL.

MAUND, s. -Y, s. An open basket or pannier having handles.

A. S. Mand; Fr. Mande, manns; D. Mande, from L. Manus; qd. a hand-basket; others from Mandere, to eat, because eatables were usually carried in it. Sk. prefers the former.

MAUND, v. To bear or carry the basket, -ER, v. s. (maund), the beggar's basket; to -ERING. receive the dole of charity: hence, —to beg. And To maunder,—

To use the speech, or mode of speech, customary with beggars; their whine or mutter, (their cant,) either of solicitation or discontent: hence,—to whine or mutter, to grumble or complain. Grose says,—

"Maundy,—abusive, saucy. Hence,—Maundering," (Glouc.)

To maunder. (Sk.) is to murmur, perum deflexo sensu, from Fr. Maudire; (L. Male-dicere;)—Seren.—from Sw. Mana, clere, provocare, (i. e. the A. S. Man-ian.) But it is very probably merely a consequential usage of maund, a basket.

MAUNDY, ad. This word is app. by our old writers, at the time of the Reformation, to the command which Christ gave to his disciples for the commemoration of his last supper. Spel. however, thinks that *Maundy-Thurs*day, on the evening of which day the command was given, may be so called from Mande, a basket, (see ante.) baskets being formerly brought on that day to receive the charitable donations of the king.

MAUSOLEUM, s. -LEAN. "This mausoleum was the renowned tombe or sepulchre of Mausolus, a petie king of Carie, which the worthie ladie, Artemisia, (sometime his queene, and now his widow,) caused to be erected for the said prince, her husband, who died in the second yeere of the hundredeth Olympias: and verily so sumptuous a thing it was, and so curiously wrought, by the artificers especially, that it is reckoned one of those matchlesse monuments which are called the seven wonders of the world."—Holland, Plinie.

L. Mausol-eum; Fr. -le; It. & Sp. -eo.

MAUTHER, s. Ray says,—a modher, or modder, mothther, a girl or young wench; used all over the eastern parts of England, viz. Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridge; and he quotes the etym. of the word from Dan. Moer, virgo, puella, (see MAID, or MAY.) given by Spel. in his Gloss. in v. Moer. Norfolk, from its situation, was much exposed to Dan. settlers, and Spel. imagines those of Norfolk, who sprang from the Danes, preserved the word, though with a corrupt pronunciation.—See Nares, Moor, and Ray. *B. Jonson.

MAW, s. The stomach,—wherein the meat is received and digested.

A. S. Maga; D. Maeghe; Ger. & Sw. Mage; Dan. Mase. See MEAT, and MOUTH.

MAWKING, s. App. to—A servant who -INGLY. does the dirty house-work; a -ISH. dirty wench; a slattern; one careless of cleanliness, dress or ornament. And Mawkingly, Mawkish,— Tasteless, insipid, unsavoury, disgusting. See MALKIN.

MAWMET, or MAMMET, s. -RY. Mahomet,—gen. an idol, a graven image. Mawmetry,—the religion of Mahomet; idolatry; the worship of graven images.

Any thing set up as an object of adoration; (Shak.) a popet or puppet, a fondling.

MAXILLARY, ad. Of, pertaining, or belonging to, the jaw.

Fr. Maxil-laïre; Sp. -la; It. Mascellare; L. Maxillaris, from maxilla, which is formed from mass, maso, masa, masula, maxilla, (whence mala), the jaw.—Scol. De Causa, L. l. c. 31. Masura, to reduce to one masa, to crush.

MAXIM, s. A position or proposition of greatest authority: received and acknowledged as of great authority; a general truth.

Fr. Maxime; It. Massima; Sp. & Low L. Maxima; because it is of the greatest authority, and in greatest estimation. In like manner Axiom, (qv.) from Axiō, dignus. There are certain legal maxims unquestioned in our courts.—See Fortescue, c. 8; and Blackstone, vol. i. p. 63.

MAY, v. Can, (qv.) is, cons., to be able; May, lit.—

To be able; to have power, strength, or ability; to be possible.

To have power, sc. given, granted, or conceded; and, thus, to be free, or have freedom, or liberty, or permission; to be permitted or suffered.

Go. & A. S. Magan; Ger. & D. Magen; Sw. Mao, to be able; Dan. Maa; Sc. To man or maun. See MOVE, MIGHT; also MAN, MAID, &c.

MAY, s. -ING. App. met. to—The spring or early season of life; also to the flower of the hawthorn, then in season; to the whole plant.

Fr. May; It. Maggio; Sp. Mayo; L. Maius; for which various etyms. are given. (See Faes, and Mariti.) The latter prefers—A majoribus, from the growth (qv. strength)?—see MAY, ante of vegetable nature at that period of the year.

MAYOR, s. The greater or principal -ALTY. (man or magistrate, of a city, -ESSE. town, &c.) Or rather, "as To may (Verstegan) signifieth to have might or power; so a mayor is as much to say, A haver of might, one that hath, and may use authority."—Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 10.

Fr. Maieur; It. Maggiore; from L. Major. In our elder authors it is com. written Maïor; upon a presumption, no doubt, that we owed the word (as Men. insists) to the Lat.; but the more ancient writing was Meyer, and in Ger. & D. it is Meyer or Meior; and in Fr. also Maire; which Sk. derives (with Verstegan) from the v. To may, posse; whence L. Maj-or itself is derived. See MAJON, and MAENITT; also MAY.

MAZARD, s. The jowl, the whole head -ER. or skull.—*B. Jonson.

-ARDED.* Supposed to be from Fr. Manchoir, the jaw.

MAZE, v. s. To wander or stray away; to -EDNESS. be or become bewildered, confounded, or astonished; to be-wilder, confound, or astonish, to perplex or puzzle; to wind, to intertwine, confusingly, perplexingly.

From D. Miscen, (i. e. A. S. Mis-ian.) to misc, to err, to wander or stray away from. A- Be-

MAZER, s. -LING. Du Cange says, that cups of a more valuable kind or material are universally called Mazer, Mazerinus, &c.; but that with respect to this material, opinions differ. Sk. says,—Poculum ligneum, from D. Mæsser, the wood of the maple tree, (qv.) of which wood these cups were usually made.

ME, pro. In Grammar, a pro. of the first person, used in or as the accusative case.

Me-thinketh, him thinketh, i. e. it thinketh or causeth me or him to think.

Sans. Me, ma; Hind. Mu-gā; Pers. Am; Go. Mic; D. Mij; Ger. Mich, mir; Sw. & Dan. Mig; Fr. Moy, me; Sp. Mi; A. S. It. & L. Me; Gr. Me. (See letter M.) Go. Mic probably includes within it the nominative I; Go. Ik; A. S. Ic; Ger. Ich; thus me-ik, meich—contracted into mic, and mich. So Sans. Ah-am, and L. Ego-met, include I and Me.

MEACOCK, s. Sk. says,—uxorious, too subject and devoted to his wife; also, pusillanimous, delicate, effeminate. Stevens,—a cowardly, dastardly creature.

Either from Mæ, (equivalent to Mal, or to our Egg. Mæ,—Cot.) and Cog, gallus ignavus, imbecillus, a cowardly cock; or mew-cock, a cock mewed up in a coop.

MEAD, s. -ow. That which (land, grass-land which) is mowed.

From A. S. Mæw-an; D. Maed-en; Ger. Mehen. —Jen. From A. S. Mæd, (i. e. maw-ed), mowed, the past p. of Maw-an, metere, to mow.—Tooke.

MEAD, s. MEATH. See HYDROMEL, and METHEGLIN.

A. S. Mædo; D. Mæde; Ger. Mai; Sw. Mjød; Dan. Mjød; Mid. L. Medus. Wach. thinks the word had its origin in the woods of Poland, where honey, called miød, abounds. In A. S. Mæthe is said to be "wine made of new wine, and until half be boyled away."—Som. Mæthe and Mead (Sk.) are alike in their excessive sweetness; and Wach. thinks the former may be from Gr. Mæth, wine.

MEAGER, ad. or MEAGRE, v. Lean, thin, -LY. poor, hungry; emaciate, without -NESS. flesh or fleshy substance; insubstantial; without nutriment or fertility; barren.

A. S. Mægre, lean, thin; Mayeregean, to make lean, to macerate; D. Mægher; Ger. Mager; Fr. Maigne; It. & Sp. Magro; from L. Macer.—Sk. Macer, from Gr. Maçpor, long, and, consl., lean. (See EMACIATE.) A. S. Mægre, Eng. M-eager, seems to contain within it A. S. Egor, Eng. Eager.

MEAL, s. The A. S. Mæl, and Eng. Meal, is,—A part or portion, a measure, — of food or any thing else.

Meal-tide or time,—the tide or time when each receives his part, portion, or measure of food.

A. S. Mæl; D. Maal; Ger. Mai; Sw. Maal. Under-

MEAL, v. Were he mealed, —were he mixed with; were there intermixed or intermingled in him—that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous. "Were he meal'd with that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous."—Shak. Meas. for Meas.

Fr. Mæler, to mix, to mingle; Sc. To mell. See MEDLEY, and YMWELL.

MEAL, s. -y. Corn or grain ground or crushed to a powder.

Mealy,—having the qualities or appearances of meal, its whiteness, fineness, softness.

Meale-mouthed or fair-spoken,—whose words are mild and soft, as meal.—Mins.

A. S. Mealewe; D. Meil; Ger. Mai; Sw. Meol; from Go. Mai-an; D. Mælen; Ger. Mælen, mælen; Sw. Mals; L. Mol-ere; to grind, bruise, or crush, sc. to a powder; into fine, small particles.

MEAN, ad. s. -LY. Mediate; being or lying at equal distance, between the beginning and end; intervening; being or lying at a distance, between the extreme points; and thus, distant, removed, restrained or withheld—from extremity, from excess; moderate, temperate.

Mean, s.—that which is mediate, or intermediate; that by the intervention, intercession, instrumentality or agency of which any thing is done.

Fr. Moyen, moyennant, from It. Mediante, and that from Low L. Medianus; L. Medium. The Sc. write, or wrote, Moyen.—See in Jamieson.

MEAN, ad. Cons.—Low or base; abject, -LY. degrading, dejected; disgraceful, -NESS. dishonourable.

A. S. Ge-mæne; D. -meen; Ger. -mein; Sw. -men; communis, vulgaris; A. S. Mæne; Ger. Mein; Sw. Men. The A. S. Mæne is maney, the many, (qv.) app. to the many or multitude, the menial, the rout or rabble, the low or base.

MEAN, v. To signify; to design; to have, -ER. bear, or keep in mind; in the -ING. mind or understanding; to purpose, to intend, to think.

Go. Mun-an, -yan; A. S. -an, mæn-an; D. Mæn-en; Ger. Meynen; Sw. Mena; Dan. Mæner, significare, denotare, demonstrare, to signify, to denote, to show; to be or cause to be a sign, or mark. See MIND, MINT, MENTAL. Un-

MEANDER, s. v. "The Mæander fetch-drouis. eth such windings to and fro, -DEY. that oftentimes it is taken for to run back again from whence it comes."—Pliny, b. v. c. 29.

"(She) in mæad'rad gyres doth whirl herself about, That, this way, here and there, back, forward, in, and out.

And like a wanton girl, oft doubling in her gate, In labyrinth-like turns, and twines intricate." Drayton.

-IFY,† s. Not-Fr. Amiercie, to amerce, to merce, or to mercy; to impose or exact a recompense, to impose a fine; and, as finer were accepted in commutation for life forfeited to the law, or over which power had been obtained in battle, To mercy, to grant mercy,

(that is, to grant that mercy or fine should be imposed and received as a ransom for life forfeited,) was benefit or beneficence to the party to whom the punishment of death was remitted;

and was ascribed to—benevolence or willingness to spare and save; to—clemency, kindness, compassion, pity.—See Casen. in Men. Further,—to cry mercy, in our old chronicles, is to cry ransom;

which was acceded to or not, “according as it fortuned to fall into the hands of them that were cruel or courtesee.” Courtesy, aided by covetousness, com. prevailed, for mercy paid in ransom was an important portion of the booty in the constant predatory scrimages, recorded (by Froissart esp.) there was nothing gained by slaughter.

Thus to cry mercy, was cons. to beg for life; and to grant mercy, was to spare life; and, as this forbearance was attributed wholly to courtesy, and covetousness allowed no share in it,—hence the general app. of mercy. Mins. produces from an old statute of Henry VI. the expression,—“To be in grievous mercede of the king; i. e. to be in hazard of a great penaltie.” And yet by our law writers,

Mercie is retranslated into L. Misericordia. To be in mercy (a common Law term) is to be “under fine.” “Then the kyng was counsayled to take them to mercy, so that amonge them they shulde give to the king ix. thousand franks toward his charges.”—Bersera. Froissart. “At length, upon their submission, the king took them to mercede, upon their fine, which was seized at twentie thousand marks.”—Holinshed. A-Be-Un-

-FUL. pleasantness, cheeriness, or

-FULLY. cheerfulness. And Merry,—

-LESS. Pleasing, agreeable, cheerful or cheering; gay, jovial, laughing; loving or inclined to laughter, laughable.

Chaucer's nightingale (a "merry bird") is the true English songstress, rattling out her notes, and, like the lark, though at different hours, "startling the dull night;" or even like the cock, who with "lively din, scatters the rear of darkness thin." Such also was Chaucer's Chaunticlere: "His vois merier than the mery orgon." Milton might have prefixed the ad. Merry—"to the hounds and horn," which "cheerly rouse the slumbering morn." His epithet, most melancholy, app. to the nightingale, is evidently in correspondence with the context—alluding to the metamorphosis of Philomela into that bird. He imagines her singing—"in her sweetest, saddest plight."

A. S. Mýrig, mirige, hilaris, jucundus, lætus; Myrkhh, hilaritas, jucunditas, lætitia. Sk. derives from Ger. Mehren, augere, to magnify or dilate. Jun.—from Gr. Mupi-εἶν, to anoint, because the ancients anointed themselves at public festivities. Tooke, from Go. Mer-gan, A. S. Merran, mirran, myrran, to dissipate, to disperse, to spread abroad, to scatter; and of this v. he affirms Mirth to be the third person, and to mean—"That which dissipateth, viz. care, sorrow, melancholy." See To MAN. Over-

MESENTERY, s. MESERAICA. The middle of the bowels, or the fat, thick, or double skins, that fasten them to the back, and each unto other.—Cot.

Fr. Mésentère; It. & Sp. -to; L. Meenterium; Gr. Μεσεντερῖον, from μεσος, middle, and εντρον, the intestine. Meseraic,—Gr. Μεσαραῖον, (μεσος, and αἰσος, venter.)

MESH, v. s. -y. To take or catch in a net or snare, to ensnare, to entangle.

D. Maesche; Fr. Maesche, maile; It. Maglia; L. Macula; the hole of a net between thread and thread; app. to the entire net. En-

MESLINE, s. A medley or mixture, sc. of corn, metal, &c.

This word is variously written Meslin, Mastline, Mesline, and by Bacon, Miscelane; and his authority has suggested Miscellane, (L. Miscellaneous.) to be the true word. Hall writes Misceline and Mesline. It is more probably Fr. Meslinge or Meslange, a medley or mixture, from the v. Meslanger, mesler, to meddle or mix. The D. have Mischelung, from miscelen, to mix.

MESS, v. s. -MATE. By usage, To mess is—To feed, sc. together, as soldiers or sailors do.

A mess,—food, a quantity of food: sometimes app. to a large quantity, or hotchpot, more than one can manage; and hence, (met.) the common expression, To get into a mess, to get into difficulty, into a bad plight.

From Mes, meis; It. Messo. Sk. suggests,—Bar. L. Misus, qd. cibus misus, meat or food sent round to those who were to eat it; he seems, however, to suspect that it has some connexion with Meat; and Tooke considers it to be the past p. of Melsian, cibare, to furnish meat or food. Inter-

MESSAGE, s. -AGER, or -ENGER. Any thing sent, sc. information, news; order or request, sent by one to another.

Messenger,—one sent with, one who carries or conveys, news or information, an errand.

Fr. Message; It. -gio; Sp. Message; from Low L. Misaticum, and this (Men.) from misus, (past p. of mittere), one sent: in old Fr. Mes.—See Du Cange, in v. Misus. The old Fr. Mes was app. both to the Message and Messenger.—See In Roquesfort. Serenius composes Message of Sw. Méd, with, and säga, to say or speak; though the Swedes have not the word in its compound form.

MESSIAS, s. -SHIP. "The word Messiah signifies anointed; that is, a person appointed to some high station, dignity, or office; because originally among the Eastern nations men so appointed (particularly kings, priests, and prophets,) were anointed with oil."—Porteus.

Heb. from מָשִׁיחַ, the anointed.

MESSAGE, s. A dwelling house, including certain out-houses and grounds, as parcel of the house.

Sk. refers to Messe, domus, which he derives from Fr. Mais, or, as Men. writes it, Mes; and Du Cange,—Mes, an old word for maison. Du Cange says of Low L. Messuagium, that it is formed from mes, i. e. mansus, a manse or mansion; and Voss.—q. mansuagium, (de Vit. lib. III. c. 25.) The word is of common usage in legal instruments of conveyance.

META, Gr. pr. Used in Composition.

With, together with, into, towards, in addition to, in union, in accordance, in exchange with; amongst. Dr. Jamieson finds this pr. in all the Gr. dialects.—See Hermes Scythicus, c. 6.

MICH, v. Also written Meech.

-ER. To miche is,—to take or steal small -ERY. things, to pilfer; and cons.—to lay -ING. in wait, to lurk.

A micher,—one who takes or steals, small things; a pilferer, a petty thief; one who lies in wait, lurks, or loiters about; either to thieve, or for other purposes.

To miche, to lurk, with a slight deviation, from Fr. Muser, to idle. A micher,—a covetous man, either from L. Miser, or from Fr. Miche; mica panis, because he counts all the crumbs that fall from his table.—St. The latter etym. is undoubtedly the true one. Tyrw. tells us that in the Promptuarium Parvum, "mychyn" stands as equivalent to "pryvely stelyn smale thyngs." And Lambard, in his Eirenarchia, says, that one justice may charge constables to arrest such as shall be suspected to be "draw-laiches, wasters, or robertmen, that is to say, either miching or mightie thieves."—contrasting these different sorts of plunderers. The Fr. Miche; L. Mica, is a small thing. See CURMUDGEON.

wifum, is mulieribus administrare, obetetricare.

MIEN, s. Mien is app. to—The whole manner and appearance of behaviour or comportment; to—the look, the countenance, with correspondent carriage of body.

Fr. & Ger. Mine, from Meinen, significare, to signify, to mean.—Wach. Sk. considers it to be a word newly introduced, and derives it from the Low L. Minare, ducere; qd. ductus seu lineamentum faciei, the draught or delineation of the face.
Wach. may be right; but it is evidently used by Spenser as equivalent to Demean or Demeanour.
See DEMEAN. Such interchanges of a simple and compound term are familiar to our old poets.

MIFF, s. A muttering discontent or displeasure.—**Fielding*.

Perhaps from D. Maffelen, musaltare, to mutter.
See MAFFLE.

MIGHT, s. v. Might, s.—power, strength,

MILLET, s. A plant.
Fr. Millet; It. Miglio; Sp. Mijo; L. Milium; perhaps so called from the multitude of its seeds. —See Foss. and Martin.

MILLINER, s. One who deals in a mixed variety of articles.

So called from Milner, one from Milan; or Melineer, from maline; or Millenarius, because he deals in a thousand articles. It is perhaps Miltener, from miltten or mestlin, a medley or mixture.

MILLION, s. A thousand-thousand; -IONED. or the thousandth thousand.

-IONTH. Fr. Mil-lion; It. ione.

MILT, s. -ER. Also written Melt.
The spleen:—app. to the soft roe of a fish.

A. S. Milt; D. Mild; Ger. Milch; Sw. Melt; It. & Sp. Milca, is—the spleen. Kihlan and Wach. agree to derive from Mild, mollis; the former, because the spleen is soft; the latter, because it is the seat of mildness or gentleness.

MIME, s. v. To mime or mimic, is, to -ER. imitate, to counterfeit, the action, mode, or manner;
-ETICAL. to mock. "Of a mime we
-IC, s. ad. v. have no pattern from ancient
-ICALLY. writers, except some frag-
-ICRY. ments, which contain many
-O-GRAPHER. acute and wise sentences. And this we know in Laertius, that the mimes of Sophron were of such reckoning with Plato, as to take them nightly to read on, and after make them his pillow. Scaliger describes a mime to be a poem, imitating any action to stir up laughter."—Milton.

Miniard, or Minion, ad. —decorated or otherwise treated or esteemed as a minion; having the manners or appearances of a minion.

Miniardise,—to fondle, or wanton with; to treat with wantonness or effeminacy.

Fr. Mign-ard, -on, from D. & Ger. Minnen, amare; one loved or beloved; from A. S. Mænan, velle, cupere, (to mean,) to will, wish for, or desire.

MINIATE, v. A small painting or deli-
-IATURE. neation of an object, smaller
-ION. than the object itself: painting
-IOUS.* letters with a red colour. See RUBRIC.—**Brown*.

It. Minia-re, -tura, to colour or paint with vermilion, (L. Minium;) confined to small paintings;
whence Miniature, small.

MINIKIN, s. A. S. Minicene, (c hard.)
A nonne, a minchene, nonna, monachia;
whereof, says Som., our modern Minneken,
Minneken lasse, for a demure, neat, and spruce wench; (in this Lye and Sk. agree;) unless, adds Som., happily it come from D. Minneken, (from D. v. Minnen.) See
MINIARD.

MINIM, s. The least part or portion;
any very small thing.

App. to that which was the shortest note in ancient music, and which is now equal to two crotchets.

Fr. Minime; L. Minimum, the least.

MINIMENT, s. i. e. Muniment, (qv.)

MINISH, v. To lessen, to decrease, to
-ING. weaken, to impair.

-MENT. Fr. Minuer; L. Minuere, to be, or cause to be less (minus). Di-

MINISTER, v. s. To serve or subserve;
-ERY, or to officiate, to contribute
-RY. services or offices, to supply,
-ERIAL. to dispense, to manage.
-ERIALLY. "The word minister, in the
-RACY. original Διακονος, signifieth
-ANT. one that voluntarily doth the
-ATION. business of another man;
-ESE. and differeth from a servant
-ING. only in this, that servants
-ATORIOUSLY.* are obliged by their condition to what is commanded them: whereas ministers are obliged only by their undertaking, and bound therefore to no more than they have undertaken."—Hobbs.

**State Trials*. Wiclif.

Fr. Ministr-er; L. & It. Ministr-are; Sp. -ar,— to act as the less (minor) or inferior agent, in subservience to another. Ad-Sub-Under-

MINNOW, s. The Fr. Menueise, (Cot.)— is small fish of divers sorts; or the small fry of fish cast into a pond, &c.

MINOR, ad. s. Less; smaller, inferior.
-ITY. One less than—below—who has
-ATE,* v. not attained—a certain age.

-ATION.† To minorate, (L. of the Low.
Ages, Minorare,)—to diminish or diminish;
to lessen. See MINISH.

**Glanville*. †Brown.

Fr. Min-er; It. -ora, -orare; Sp. Men-or,
-orar; L. Minor, (from Gr. μῖνός, Att. pro μῖνός,) less. For Minor, in Logic, see MAJOR.

MINO-TAUR, s. The Bull of Minos.

Fr. Minotaur-s; It. & Sp. -o; L. Minotaurus, qd. Minos taurus.

MINSTER, s. A monastery, a cathedral.
A. S. Mynst-er, -re; Fr. Minister, from monas- terium, a monastery, (qv.)

MINSTREL, s. -SY. Ministers of song or music; of poetry; a songster, a poet, a bard.

Fr. Minestr-al, -ler, -andier; Sp. -il, Ministril; Low L. Minestrallus, Ministrilius. The various ways in which this word was written have perplexed the etym. It appears, however, to have been no more than a cons. usage of Fr. Ministre;
L. Ministri, (in the dim. form of Ministrus, minis- trili;) and app. to a class of persons, who were to administer their skill in poetry and music for the amusement of their patrons. They are in Low L. sometimes called plainly Ministri; by Chaucer, in his Dream, Ministers; and in the old paper roll printed by Leland, we find "minis- ters," who were appointed "to syng." See Du Cange, Gloss.

MINT, s. A plant.

Fr. Mente; It. Minta; L. Mentha; Gr. Μένθη.

MINT, v. s. Mint, s. is—The place where
-AGE. the marking or stamping (of coin)
-ER. is performed, where the coin is made: met.—where any thing is coined, forged, or invented.

A. S. Mynettan, cudere, to coin or mint money.
—Som. Ger. Munt-en; D. Munt-en; Dan. Mind- er. The meaning of the word is found in A. S.
Mynog-ian, (mun-ig-ian; see MEAN;) to mark;
whence Tooke forms it; Mincey, mincyed, mind, mint. (See MONEY, MIND.) Mint, in A. S.
Mynet, was app. to the coin marked or stamped;
and upon this (mynet) the v. Mynettan may have been formed.

MINUET, s. A dance.

Fr. Menuet, (minuete.)

MINUTE, ad. s. v. Min-ute, ad.—little,
-ARY. small.

-LY, ad. av. A minute,—a small, sc. por-

-NESS. tion of time, as the sixtieth

-IE. part of an hour. And hence also the ad. Minute, (" Minute drops from off the eaves,"—Milton)—being, happening, minutely, or every minute.

A short or concise memorandum or note.

Fr. Minut-e; It. & Sp. -o; L. Minutus, past p. of minuere, to lessen, or make less, to minish or diminish. Con- Di- In-

MINX, s. Perhaps contracted from Misik-en, (qv.)

MIRACLE, s. v. In our old writers, ex-culous. hibitions or entertainments -CULOUSLY. contrived to excite surprise, -CULOUSNESS. &c. were called miracles. -BLE. In popular language, —any -BILARY.† thing astonishing, marvelous, wonderful, either natural or preternatural.

In Theology,—to such acts as those of Christ in attestation of his mission; contrary to the ordinary course of nature.

*Shak. †Bacon.

Fr. Mira-cle; It. -colo; Sp. Milagro; L. Miraculum, from mirari, which Martin derives from the Heb., and explains intendit inseri; to gaze earnestly, (sc. with wonder or astonishment; as new, strange, incomprehensible.) A. S. Mir-an, to mar? See MAXVEL. Ad- Un-

MIRE, v. s. -y. Is commonly app. to—that thick, adhesive dirt, in which we are apt, not only to bedaub ourselves, but to stick fast.

Sk. derives from D. Moyer, modder, lutum, limus, mud. It is probably from the same source as Meere, moor, maris or marsh, (qqv.) Be- Un-

MIRK, or MURK, ad. Dark, dismal, gloomy.

-y. It appears to be app. to that -INESS. thickness or density of atmo-sphere, which overclouds, and -SOMENESS. thus mays or destroys the clear-ness of light.

A. S. Mire, tenebre, carcer.—Lye. Sw. Moerk, obcurus; Dan. Mork. The origin of this old word has not been traced. Som. thinks that Mire may mean perditio, aut aliquid simile; and it is not improbably mirig, mirg, mir, from A. S. v. Mirran, miran, to mar. See MORROW.

MIRROR, s. A bright, lucid substance, in which may be seen the reflected images of objects; a looking-glass; met.—that in which men may see their own reflected image; and, consequently, order and regulate their actions and behaviour: hence, the reflected image; example, pattern.

Fr. Miroir. From Fr. Mirer; It. Mirare; Sp. Mirar, to look, to view, to behold; L. Mirari.

MIS, pref. Go. Missa; A. S. and other northern languages, Mis or Miss; Fr. Mes; It. Mis; from A. S. Mis-sian, to miss, (qv.) It is equivalent to ill or bad, wrong or wrongly, erroneous or erroneously; wrong-ful or wrongfully; different, diverse, ad-verse to; and sometimes to the pref. Dis. No limit can be fixed to the formation of such compounds. Miss is not infrequently written separately—as an ad. before a s.: as missa construction; or as an av. before a v. as To misse, write, (qqv.)

MISTER, s. -IE. From the mastery or skill in a trade, necessary or needful, it was extended in its application to—the trade or occupation, art or craft; skill. And hence in Spenser, "It mistrereth not to tell," is,—it skillereth not; it needeth not; there is not need or occasion.

Sk. says,—from Fr. Mastier; It. -ero; the art or business by which any one supports himself.
All, I believe, from L. Mysterium, because every art or craft, however mean, has its own secrets, which it discloses only to the initiated. Lye traces it from Ital. Maestari, a master; and Thomas Warton is of opinion that "Mystery, antiently used for a particular art or skill in general, is a specious and easy corruption of Mastery or mastery, the Eng. of L. Magisterium, or artificium;
in Fr. Maistrise, maestrie, maestrie; and in It. *Ma-

MISTLETOE, or MISSLETOE, s. "Moreover, set or sow this misselto which way soever you will, it will never take and grow: it commeth onely by the meeting of birds, especially of the stockdove or quoisit, and the blackbird, which feed thereupon, and let it passe through their bodie. And this is the nature of it, unless it bee mortified, altered and digested in the stomacke and belly of birds, it will never grow."—
Holland. Plinius.

Jun. writes it also Misselden, and Sk. Missendine; the latter, with Wach. derives Mistel from Ger. Mist, (A. S. Misen.) dung; and ta, or toe, that part of the foot by which the bird is caught with the viscus or bird lime.

MOD

MO. See MORE.

MOAN, v. s. To bewail, to lament, to deplore, to grieve.

-FULLY. A. S. Mannan, de-mannan, dolere, to be-mourn, (qv.) Be- Un-

MOAT, v. s. App. to—A ditch or trench containing water, of such width and depth, as to be a defence.

Mina and Botm. (see Lye) derive from Fr. Moite, moist, wet. But see Mote, in Du Cange.

MOB, s. v. Mob,—the movable people or -ILE, ad. s. populace; the crowd, the multitude.

-BISH. Mobile,—that can or may be moved; movable.

Fr. & It. Mob-ile; Sp. -il; L. Mobilis, (contr. mobilitas), that can or may be moved. "The mobili people" is an expression as old as Chaucer; the movable, unsteady, inconstant people; mobile was then used alone, (suband. people,) and subsequently contracted into mob. Dryden uses both mobile and mob, the latter as if not long introduced; the former (in the stage directions) as the common word.

MOB, v. s. -LED. Our lexicographers do not notice the word: it appears to have had the same origin with the preceding, and to have been app. to—an article of dress for the head—thrown on or thrown off—as convenience required it to be worn or laid aside, moved or removed.

Ray says, that To mob, is to dress carelessly. Mobs are slatterns. See the Commentators on Shak. and Mr. Nares, who produce other instances of Mobbed.

MOCK, v. s. ad. To deride, to scoff at; -ER, to jeer or gibe; to ape or imitate;

-ERY, scoffingly, jestingly; to render or cause to be or appear ridiculous

-INGLY, or contemptible, feeble or in-ABLE, effectual.

-AGE,† Shak. †Bible, 1549. Bp. Hall.

-ISH,† Sir T. More.

Fr. Mocker, which the etymologists agree to derive from the Gr. "Γράμι μωκαρίας, propriè dikunt de his, qui ore vultuque distorto et valgis labia aliquem derident."—Jus. The D. have Mocken, "Buocam ducere alve movere," (perhaps, Mow-co-en.) See Mow. Be-

MOCKET, or MOCKETER. See MUCK, MUCKINDER.

MODE, or MOOD, s. App. in Eng. as Fr.

-AL. Mode,—"Manner, sort, fashion, -ALITY, guise, use, custom, way, means."

-ISH. —Cot.

The mode is,—the fashion; the style of fashion. It is also used in Logic, in Metaphysics, and in Music. "A moode is a lawful placing of propositions, in their dewe qualitie or quantitie."—Wilson. "Modes I call such complex ideas, which, however compounded, contain not in them the supposition of subsisting by themselves, but are considered as dependencies on, or affections of substances."—Locke. "A series of sounds relating to one leading note, is called a mode, or a tone."—Jones.

MONTH, s. Moon,—a satellite or attendant of the earth, going round the earth in 29d. 12h. 44m., and round the sun with it every year. The period from change to change (from first phasis to first phasis) is called lunar month. The length of the calendar month, according to the Julian division, followed in our almanacks, is various.

A Moonthalf is an imperfect festus, so called, because it is supposed to be occasioned by the influence of the moon. Hence it became a term of reproach.

Pope writes "The moonlight shade," "their moonlight sports." Modern refiners would write Moon-lit.

Spel. calls Month-day,—lamentatio mensura, Month's-mind; and Som.—gemynd-dag, dies commemorationis, "that day which our ancestors called their moneth's-mind, their year's mind, and the like: being a day wherein their souls (after their deaths) were had in special remembrance, and some office or obsequies done for them; such as obits, trentals, &c.;" and hence app. to—A special remembrance or attention to; a desire for.

1. Month.—Go. Men-ath, -oth; A.S. Mon ath; Ger. at; D. Maend; Sw. Maend; Dan. Maend.
2. Moon.—Go. Mona; A.S. Mona; Ger. Mon, mond; D. & Sw. Maena; Dan. Maen. Kllian, and after him Wach., derives the latter class from Men-en, (A.S. Monian), monere. Wach. supports his opinion by reference to the regard which was paid to the moon, and her changes, by our German ancestors; and adds,—the moon warns or admonishes the husbandman of the seasons for sowing and planting, and of other things pertaining to agriculture, as recorded by Cæsar and Tacitus. Tooke says that Month (anciently written Moneth) means—the period in which that planet (the Moon) moneth, or compleateth its orbit. But this decides nothing as to the origin of the word Moon.—To mon or moon may be a v. or usage of a v. formed upon the s., and signify merely to be, or become, or cause to be, a Moon: and, cons. to complete the orbit of that planet.

But why is Moon so called? Wach. seems to give the best reason, and Dr. Jamieson adopts his etym.: the names which were given to some of the months may help to confirm their judgment; such are mede-month, weed-month, harvest-month.

MONUMENT, s. Any thing made or done, with a meaning or intention -ALLY. to call to mind or memory,—to remind,—in remembrance or memory.

Any thing raised or erected in memory of.
Fr. Monu-ment; It. & Sp. mento; L. Monumentum; quidquid est scriptum aut factum memorie causa.—Var. lib. iii. From Monere,—to call to mind, to remind, (says Voss.) Is Monimen, and anciently Monumen, whence Monumentum.

MONEY, term. Voss thinks, the L. Monium is—mera productio vocis, (see MATRIMONY.) It is, probably, the same word, with the same meaning, as Men, ment-um: thus,—testimony, testament, alimony, aliment, differ merely in their application. Any thing meant or intended to testify;—to nourish, support, or maintain. See MENT.

MOOD. See MOOD.

MOOT, v. s. -ABLE. Mot is a meeting or convention, ac. for the discussion of public affairs. Michel-gemot,—the great meeting; Wittena-gemote,—the meeting of wise men.

Hence, To moot, is (cons.)—to converse, to discourse, to argue, to dispute.

Mooting-time,—meeting time, (ac. of fowl.)—Drayton.

A.S. Mot, ge-mot, mot-heal; from the Go. & A.S. v. Mot-ian, to meet, convenire, to convene, to come or bring together.

MOP, s. v. Mops and mows, and To mop and mow, appear to be familiar expressions with our old dramatic writers; the former word (Mop) app. to some action of mocking, and sometimes confounded with mock; but the origin is not known. Sw. has Mopa, illudere; but that itself requires to be accounted for.

MOP, s. -PET. Perhaps a mob, (qv.); and so called from the looseness, movableness of the parts.

*Gower. †Wiclif.

A. S. Mæ, mare; Ger. & Sw. Mer; D. Meer; Dan. Meere. Sk. suggests the L. Major. Tooke accounts for More, most, thus.—Mow, or mowe, is the pret. and past p. of A. S. Maw-an, metere, (in D. Maeyen, Ger. Mähen, Sw. Mäja), and means simply that which is mowed or mown; and as the hay, &c. which was mown was put together in a heap, hence, figuratively, mowe was used in A. S. to denote any heap, and was pronounced (and therefore written) with some variety, Mæ, mæ, mo, mows, mow, which, being regularly compared, give,—

Mæ, mæ-er, (A. S. mare), mæst, (mæst.)
Mæ, mæ-er, (mære), mæ-est, (mæst.)
Mowe, mower, (more), mow-est, (most.)
Mo, mo-er, (more), mo-est, (most.)

Mo, (mowe, acervus, heap.) which was constantly used by all our old English authors, has with the moderns given place to Much, (qv.)

Dr. Jamieson asserts that this hypothesis labours under several considerable difficulties. One alone deserves notice, viz. that the A. S. Mæ is as really a comparative, as Mare, both being used adverbially in the sense of plus, magis—to which it may be answered, that Mæ, or Mæ-er, is grammatically a comparative formed by the addition of the termination er to Mæ; but that Mæ itself is not a comparative by any grammatical formation, and that the simple circumstance of its being used in the sense of plus, magis, will not constitute it etymologically a comparative. Less is not so; our elder writers, following analogy, added the termination er, (see Ea.) and wrote Lesser. The meaning of Less will account for its usage, as app. to something small-er than, or not so large as, something else; and the meaning of Mæ or Mo will account for its usage, both as app. to something large (positively), and to something larg-er (comparatively) than something else. Let that which is Mow-en be heaped, accumulated, raised, as is usual, into small heaps or stacks, each stack will be a mow, or quantity mown; put several together, the accumulation is still a mow; put all in one, the whole conservation is still a mow or stack, containing the quantity mown; and the reason of the application of the word to increase or enlargement appears evident from this practice of increasing or enlarging the heaps by repeated co-cervations, till the whole were raised into one heap. Mo, or Mæ, became thus, by consequence, a comparative term: its positive meaning remained unaltered: the addition of the termination er constituted the grammatical comparative, which has obtained exclusive use. The progress with Less, lesser, has been different. Over-

MORE, s. v. App. to.—The root; because it spreads; and the v. formed upon the s.—
To root or root up; get up the root.

Grose says—that More, or Mawr, in Gloucestershire, signifies a root: as a strawberry more; and moreing-axe, an axe for grubbing up the roots of trees. Probably from A. S. v. Myrran, to spread. See MORROW, MORAX.

MORGANATIC, ad. A marriage is called Morganatic, when the Morgen-gift, or morning gift or dowry, was given and received in lieu of all other dowry, and also of rights of inheritance, that might fall to the issue of such marriage.

words; Tooke's researches are most happy. Mor-row, morn, and morning, were in old Eng. written Morow, morowa, morowende; in A. S. Merian, mergen, merne; Margen, marne, or Morgen, morn; and he believes them to be the past tense and past p. of Go. & A. S. Merjan, merras, mirras, myrras, to dissipate, to disperse, to spread abroad, to scatter; Morr, the regular past tense of this e. was pron. and written Morow, Morow, and subsequently Morowe, morrow. By adding the participial term. en, we have Merg-en, merien, mer'n; Marg-en, mar'n, merg-en, morn; or Morow-en, morew'n, mor'n. Morrow and Morn then have the same meaning, viz. dissipated, dispersed, suband. clouds or darkness, whose dispersion, or the time when they are dispersed, these words express. Morning, the p. p. Myrrande, in old Eng. Morowende, (ende, as usual, converted into ing), as in Chaucer—Morwening; thence Mor-e-wing, morwing, morning.

MOROSE, ad. Self-willed, and, cons.—LY. Ill-humoured, ill-tempered, surly. —NESS. **Selden*.

—ITY. Fr. Morosité; L. Morosa, (from Mos, —OUS. **mos*, manner, custom.) Morosi homines, qui sui cuiusdam moris sunt; who follow their own peculiar ways or humours; following their own, and repelling the ways or humours of others.

—UARY, ad. s. ject, to debase, to humiliate;

to feel humiliation, or the vexation of being humiliated; to vex.

Mortuary,—pertaining to the dead; to the burial of the dead; the place of burial;

a bequest, gift, fee, on death or burial.

(A. S. Sauwel-accat.)

Fr. Mort-el, —ier; It. —ale, —ficare; Sp. —al, —ficar; L. Mortalis, from mors, death. Voss throws forth about half a dozen conjectures, without relying upon any one. Tooke is of opinion, that it is one of those words which the Latin borrows from the A. S.; and that Mors is from

Morih, morthe, the third pers. of the v. Myrran, to mar, and cons. to destroy, sub. life. (See

MURDER.) Our words Morial, &c. return to us from the Latin. Im-Un- Also A-mort. Com-

MORTAR, s. —TRESS, or —TREWE. App. to —That which destroys, breaks to pieces, bruises, or that in which any thing is—broken, bruised, or crushed, or pounded. And, afterwards (as Wach. observes) app. to a kind of gun, from the resemblance in shape. It is also app. to the composition used in building, because the ingredients were bruised or pounded together. "In Greece they have a cast by themselves, to temper and beat in morters, the mortar made of lime and sand wherewith they mean to parget and cover their walls, with a great wooden pestle."—Holland. Plinie.

"A mortress made with the brawn of capons stamped and strained."—Bacon.

Fr. Mort-ier; It. —ario; Sp. —ero; L. Mortarium; Ger. Mort-er, and A. S. —ere. The Latin etymologists derive Mortarium from morsum, a hutch-potch of herbs, cheese, &c.; and this from Gr. Moror or μωρον, a part or portion. Probably from A. S. Myrran, to mar, to destroy. See MORTAL. Un-

MORTER, s. Fr. Mortier,—a kind of small chamber lamp.—Cot.

MORT-GAGE, v. s. Gen.—To pledge, to —EE. stake; to assign or convey as security

—ER. for repayment.

Fr. Mort-gage, or —gaige, dead pledge, pignus seu vadimonium mortuum: because that which is put in pledge is by law, in case of nonpayment at the time limited, for ever dead and gone from the mortgager.—Blackstone. Un-

MORTISE, v. s. —ING. The hole, or bore, by which beams are jointed and fitted or fastened together.—Sk.

A mortised lock is a lock let or placed in a hole cut into the wood to receive and hold it.

Fr. Mortaise. Foramen quo coartulantur et coaptantur ligna in edificis. Mén. derives from Mordere, to bite.

MORT-MAIN, s. "All purchases made by corporate bodies are said to be purchases in mortmain, in mortuud manu; for the reason of which appellation Sir Edward Coke offers many conjectures; but there is one which seems more probable than any that he has given us: viz. that these purchases being usually made by ecclesiastical bodies, the members of which (being professed) were reckoned dead persons in Law, land therefore, holden by them, might with great propriety be said to be held in mortuud manu."—Blackstone.

Fr. Mort-maine; in mortuud manu, a dead hand.

MORT-PAY, * s. i. e. "Taking or receiving of the King's Highness (pay or) wages for more souldiers then served, or for more dayes then they served,"—being dead or discharged.—**Bacon*.

MOULT, v. i. e. To mute or change, sc. their feathers. (See To MEW.)

Low L. Mute is app. to the disease felt by birds when changing their feathers.

MOUND, v. s. To mound,—to raise, sc. a fence or defence.

A. S. Mund, septum, perhaps from A. S. Mund-tan, tueri, protegere; to defend or protect: but it seems more probably to be a mound, or something raised, sc. as a fence, or defence. The A. S. Mund-tan is merely a consequential usage of Mynd-tan, to mind. Un-from muere, abdere, to hide.

MOUTH, s. v. Mouth,—into which the

-FUL. meat is placed; in which it is

-ING. eaten; and (because it opens to receive the meat, &c.) it is app. to the opening or entrance of a river, of a vessel,

&c. Also to the voice or speech, to the speaker, and principal organ of speech.

MUG, s. —gy. Mug means merely a wet, sc. a draught of liquor; afterwards app. to—

A vessel for containing liquor.

Muggy is—wet, damp, dank; (dense and damp, with some degree of warmth.) See MUCK.

Sk. suggests Welsh Muglio, to warm, qd. a vessel to warm liquor in.

MUGGER. See HUGGER.

MUGIENT,* s. —ENCY.* Lowing, bellowing.—Brown.

Quintilian supposes L. Mugitus to be formed from the sound. From Mugiens, p. p. of Mugire, to low or bellow. Re-

MUL-BERRY, s. A plant or tree: the fruit of the tree.

D. Mylberry; Ger. Maulbeer, (bacca mori), and derived from L. Morus, (r into l), no unusual change.—Wack. Som. and Lye have A. S. Murberien.

MULCT, v. s. —UARY. To amerce, to impose; to exact an amercement, fine, or penalty.

Fr. Mult-er; It. -ere; Sp. -er; L. Multare, or Multare, to amerce. Voss. quarrels with the etym. of Var., and with good reason, but has no better to propose. Scheldius from L. Mult-er, educere, exprimere.

MULE, s. Formerly also written Moyl. —ETEER. The mule is a cross breed from —ISH. the horse and ass; and the word is app. to other productions out of their specific course.

Mulish, met.—stubborn, obstinate.

Fr. Mul-e, —et; It. & Sp. —o; L. Mulus. Voss. suggests four several etyma. One, Gr. Molos, labour, he supports by a reference to Eliny, who calls it,—“A beast of exceeding strength to bear out all labour and travail.”—Holland.

MULL, v. MULSH, v. s. Vinum mollitum, i. s. wine rendered milder by the admixture of sugar, and having its spirit subdued by warmth.

MUL

Mulsh, Ray calls—straw half rotten. To mulsh the roots of trees, is to lay about them straw or other litter, softened or saturated with liquid; also—to soften or saturate the earth itself.

It is probably from A. S. Milescian, mitescere. Hammer (on Shak.) says, softened, and dispirited as wine is when burnt and sweetened. L. Mollitus.

MULL, s. —OCK. Ray, (North Country Words,)—Mullock, dirt, rubbish. Tyrw.—dung, rubbish. See MULL, ante.

MULLI-GRUBS, s. seems to have an application somewhat similar to that of Maw-worm, viz. to some unknown disease in the bowels, for which fanciful causes are assigned; the latter part of the word will then be easily accounted for; and as to the first, Jamieson is too learned.

MULTI-FARIOUS, ad. Gen.—Various, —LY. or having many variations; di- —NESS. versified.

The word is not very old.

L. Multifarius, from multum, and fari, quod multis modis est fari; sic Græcis Πολυφατος, à φωνη, fari; deinde non sermonis tantum, sed et aliis variatilibus dicitur.—Martin.

MUM, s. v. Mum.—Sk. calls an int. indi-
-M-ER. eating silence, because while we
-ERY. pronounce this word, we draw the
-ING. upper to the lower lip, and shut the mouth. It may be so app. from the silence observed by mummers when playing their tricks, and especially when making them a cloak for thievery.

Mome.—one who cannot or will not speak;
a speechless, senseless, stupid fellow.

D. Momme; Ger. Mumme, larva. D. Mommer;
Ger. Mumm-er; Dan. -eris; Fr. Mommeur, larvatus, one who wears a mask. Some derive from Gr. Mopua, tericulum, (what we call a bugbear);
others from Momus, or mimus, the Fr. applying their word Momme, to the sport of momes, or mimes, who deride others; and this latter etym. seems the more probable;—the Gr. Mopua, the snake-game even of his brother gods, transmitting his name and characteristics to all the modern European languages.

MUM, s. A kind of strong beer.

D. Momme; Ger. Mumme; which Sk. calls a strong kind of beer, introduced by us from Brunswick, and derived either from Ger. Mummeln, to mumble, or from Mum, (silent) index, i. e. either drink that will (ut nos dicimus) make a cat speak, or drink that will take away the power of speech.

MUMBLE, v. To utter an indistinct, an--ER. inarticulate sound or voice; with the
-ING. mouth closed, or but little open: to eat with the mouth so closed.

"Ne mombisness ne sonenese,"—no
mumbling talk nor noisy sound.—Chaucer.

D. Mom-melen, -pelen; Dan. Mum-ler; Sw. -la; which Ihre considers to be Ger. Mummeln, and L.
Murmurare, to murmur, (qv.) The D. Mommelen seems to be the dim. of Mommen, (see MUM), and thus to mean—to speak like one wearing a mask, with his face, his mouth confined in a mask.

MUMMY, s. -IFY, * v. The flesh of man preserved against corruption in balsam, or myrrh, and aloes and asphalt.—Voss. It is also app. to—

That which distils from mummies; the

A. S. v. Myrr-an, to mar; but it seems more probable that Go. and A. S. v. Maurthrian, myrthrian, were formed upon this third pers. and the Eug.
s. and v. from it. The meaning of the Go. and
A. S. v. is—to dissipate, to disperse, to spread

MURR, s. -AIN. The old s. Murr, was app. to—That which mars or destroys, (sc. the speech or utterance.) Murrain, to—that which destroys life; a destructive disease, plague, pestilence.

**Skelton*. Holland.

Sk.—from L. Mori. Mins.—from Gr. Mapaureiv, labescere. It is from A. S. Myrr-an, to mar; to dissipate, to destroy.

MURREY, ad. s. Reddish, (Bacon); dark red.

From Fr. Mur-é, -el, -eus; It. -ello; Sp. -ado, so called, from the colour of the Moore, sc. obscure or dark; or rather from the colour of the mulberry, (mori.) verging from red towards black.—Sk. Men. prefers the former.

MURRION. See MORION.

MUSCADEL, s. -DINE, ad. s. A kind of grape.

Fr. Musc-adel, -at; It. Moscattello, so called either from their scent of mus, or because flies (muscae) feed eagerly upon them; in confirmation of the latter, the Uvæ Aplannæ of Pliny are referred to: "As touching the muscadell wines, (Aplannæ) they took that name of bees, which are so much delighted in them, and desirous to settle and feed of them."—See Men. and Sk.

MUSCLE, s. A shell-fish.

Fr. Mus-cle; Sp. -culo; L. Musculus,—ab similitudine aliquâ muris.—Voss. A tenui, quo mures referunt, streptu:—Jun.; who observes that muves was the general denomination of shell-fish, avo voe muvein, from their shutting themselves up.

MUSCLE, s. Muscle,—the instrument of -CELLING.* voluntary motion, compounded
-CUL-AR. of sinews, veins, arteries, ten-
-ARITY. dons, and flesh; and having a
-OUS. skin peculiar to itself.—Cot.

Muscelling,—app. by Walpole to the delineation of the muscles in picture.

Fr. Mus-cle; It. -colo; Sp. -culo; L. Musculus; Gr. Mus; because it resembles a skinned mouse, or the fish so called.—See Voss. More probably from Gr. v. Moeriv, to cover; because the muscles cover or clothe the bones.

MUSE, v. s. To follow the Muses, to be -ARD. contemplative or thoughtful, as one
-ER. who follows the Muses; to medi-
-FUL. tate, dwell upon, keep the mind
-LESS. fixed or employed upon; to weigh,
-ING. to ponder.

Musard,—one who muses or spends his time in musing; a dreamer.

Muse, the s. is sometimes app. to—the poet.

Fr. Mus-er, -ard; It. -ara; in D. Mysen. From L. Musare, or Gr. Mo-ia, from Museis, claudere.—Sk. More probably formed upon the s. Muse, L. Musa. See MUSIC. A-Be-Also Im-Un-musical.

MUSET,* s. Steevens refers to Fr. Trouée, in Cot.—"A gap or muset in a hedge."

**Shak.*

MUSEUM, s. A place dedicated to the Muses, to literature, to philosophy; to the preservation of rare and curious articles.

Gr. Museum.

MUSHROOM, s. A plant; app. met. to—any thing of sudden growth from lowly origin.

Fr. Mouscheron. Salmasius thinks they are so called—à Musco, because they grow—ubi brevissima est herba, et plerumque non nisi muscus,—where the herbage is very short, and scarcely aught except moss.

MUSIC, s. The science, the art, of com-
-AL. bining sounds, agreeably to the -AL-LY. ear; the combination of such
-NESS. sounds.

Fr. Musique; It. Sp. & L. Musica; Gr. Musikê, from μουσα, musæ. J. Scal. from μῦθος or μῦσος, ea notions, qui significat cupidè, ac cum impetu in aliquid ferri, to be borne along with eagerness and violence. See in Voss. other conjectures. "The name of the Muses, and universally that of Musie, was derived, as it seems, from μῦσθαι, to inquire, and from investigation and philosophy."—Taylor. The Cratylus of Plato. Un-

MUSK, s. -Y. App. to—A perfumed substance, said to be obtained from an animal of the same name.

Musky,—sweetly scented or perfumed; sweetly odoriferous, fragrant.

Fr. Musc; It. Muschio; Low L. Muscus; Ar. Mosch, or musch.

MUSKET, s. A very small species of
-EER. hawk was so called, from Moschetto,
-OON. a little fly, or a troublesome stinging fly. And a musket (or small gun) is supposed to be a further consequential usage.

Fr. Mosq-uet; Sp. -uete; It. Moschetto.

MUSLIN, s. A fine manufacture of cotton.

It. Mossellina. Fr. Mousselin,—so called from a town in Mesopotamia, named Mousrai, where muslin was first manufactured.

MUSS, s. In our poets, used as equivalent to—A scramble.

Fr. Mousse; the play called Musse. Nares observes, that Musse is one of Garagantua's games, (b. i. c. 21); and is mentioned again, (b. iii. c. 40,) "à Muscho inventore."

MUST, v. Anciently written Mote, Most.

To be behoveful, needful, necessary; to be bound or obliged; to be under a necessity.

A. S. Mot, most; Ger. Mussen; D. Moeten, -ten. The Old Eng. Mote, A. S. Mot, Ger. Mussen, were used as we now use both May and Must, (posse, oportere, neccesse esse), and are of the same origin as Mought, Mote, (qv.)

MUST, s. Mustum is app. to any thing (not wine merely,) new. Must, in Eng. to—new wine, or other fermented liquor, in its uncleaned state.

Fr. Mouste; It. & Sp. Mosto; L. Mustum; Gr. Mostron, young, new.

MUST, v. To be or become foul, by con-
-Y. finement from air, or by disuse;
-INESS. to be or become fusty, stale, stagnant. From Fr. Moiser; L. Mucere.

MUSTACHE, s. -to. The hair or beard grown upon the upper lip.

Fr. Mustache; It. Mossa-chio; Sp. -cho; Gr. Mustaf, the upper lip, and hair growing upon it.

MUSTARD, s. A plant.

Fr. Moutarde; It. Most-arda; Sp. -aza; à musto et ardore.—J. Scal. See Men. Dict.

MUSTER, v. s. To muster is, cons.—To assemble or collect together, for view or review; and, gen. to assemble or collect together; to bring together.

Ger. Mustern; D. Monstern; Sw. Moensira. Anciently written Moistre. It. Mostrare; Fr. Faire un monstre; Sp. Hazer una muestra; from L. Monstrare, to show. Cot. calls the s. Monstre, a muster, view, show, or sight.

MUTE, v. That can or may be changed—-ABLE. or altered; changeable, alter—-ABILITY. able, fickle, unsteady, inconstancy. -ATION. stant.

Fr. Mu-able; It. -abile; Sp. -dabile; L. Mutabilis, from Mutare, to change. See To Mut. Com-Im-Trans- Also Un-mutable. Per-mutation.

MUTE, v. s. -ING. Also written Mewt. Mute,—that which is moved (motum), s. out of the bowels.

Fr. Muttr, esmentir, seems formed upon the s. Emente, a motion or commotion; and to be employed physically or medically, as To move, a motion, now in Eng. are.

MUTE, ad. s. Having the organs of speech—-LY. dammed up, stopped, or closed; and—-NESS. thus, speechless, silent.

Fr. Muet, muet; It. Muto; Sp. Mudo; L. Mutus; which Scheidius derives from Gr. Mueiv, claudere, to close, to stop; having a reason for its application similar to that for the Eng. Dumb, (qv.) Obmutescence.

MUTILATE, v. -ION. To take away, cut off, in any way deprive of, some part of the entire body; to maim, to dismember.

Fr. Mutil-er; It. -are; Sp. -ar; L. Mutilare, from Mutilus, i. e. captus aliqua parte corporis, from Mulus, dumb. See MUTE. Un-

MUTINE, or MUTINY, s. To move or—-EER. commove; to raise a commotion. -OUS. to (insurge or) make an insurrection; to rise, sc. against authority.

-ING. Fr. Mutiner; It. Ammutinarsi; Sp. Amutinarse. Sk. says—from Motus, a motion, or from Mutire, to murmur. His first conjecture seems the more rational, i. e. from Motus; but through the v. Mutir, esmentir, to move; Emente, a motion or commotion.

MUTTER, v. s. To speak inarticulately, -ER. indistinctly.

-ING. In D. Muyten; L. Mutire; to speak as one mute, or having the organs of speech stopped or obstructed. See MUTE.

MUTTON, s. App. now—To the flesh or meat of sheep; formerly to the animal itself.

Fr. Moulon, aries castratus; from Ger. Mutsen, truncate, and this from Mehen, to cut.—See Metzen, in Wach.; and Moulon, in Men.

MUTUAL, ad. Interchangeable, reciprocal. -ALLY. rocal.—H. More.

-ALITY. Fr. Mutu-el; It. -o; Sp. -al; L. -ATIVITIOUS. * Mutuuus. Varro says the Romans had the word from Sicilian, Motvov, which Voss. thinks is formed of μοι τεον, or μοι τον, mihi tuum. Con- Inter-

MUZZLE, v. s. Anciently written Moesel. App. to—The mouth; and to any thing to fasten, close, or confine the mouth.

To muzzle,—to do any thing with the mouth or muzzle; to fasten, to bind, to constrain the mouth.

Fr. Muselière; It. Musoliera. From Fr. Museau; It. Muso, which Sk. thinks may have been formed from A. S. Muth, the mouth. Un-

MY, pro. Of or belonging to me.

MINE. Fr. Mien, mon; It. & Sp. Mio; L. Meus; MYSELF. Gr. Εμω; Go. Meins; A. S. Mīn; D. Myn; Ger. Meyn; Sw. & Dan. Min. See Mx, and letter M.

MYRIAD, s. Is used for any number that cannot easily be counted.—Lennep.

Fr. Myriade; L. Myrias; Gr. Myrias, which nearly corresponds with L. Infinitus.

MYRO-BALANE, s. An aromatic acorn or nut; a dried fruit, something like a date or plum.—Nares.

Gr. Μυροβαλανος, glans unguetana; (μυρον, unguentum, and βαλανος, glans); Fr. Myrobalan,—"an East-Indian plum, whereof there be divers kinds."—Cot. And see Pliny, (b. xii. c. 21.)

MYRRH, s. A plant.

Fr. Myrrhe; It. & Sp. Mirra; L. Myrrha; Gr. Myrra; of Eastern origin, and deriving its name from its bitter taste.

MYRTLE, s. A plant.

Fr. Myrte; It. & Sp. Mirto; L. Myrtus; Gr. Myrtos, from μυρον, a perfumed ointment, from μύρα. See MYRRH.

MYSTERY, s. Gen.—Any thing shut

-ERIOUS. up, hidden, or concealed; -ERIOUSLY. and, cons. that cannot be perceived or understood.

-IC, ad. s. A mystic,—one who pretends to mysteries, or doctrines or opinions that cannot be understood or comprehended.

-ICAL. Mytagogus,—chief or head of, guide to, the mysteries.

-ICISM. Mytagogus,—chief or head of, guide to, the mysteries.

-AGOGUE. Mytagogus,—chief or head of, guide to, the mysteries.

-AGOGIC. Mytagogus,—chief or head of, guide to, the mysteries.

-AGOGICAL. Mytagogus,—chief or head of, guide to, the mysteries.

-ERIAL. Mytagogus,—chief or head of, guide to, the mysteries.

-ERIZE,† v. Mytagogus,—chief or head of, guide to, the mysteries.

Fr. Myt-ère, -ique; It. & Sp. Mist-erio, -ico; L. Myst-erium, -icus; Gr. Μυστηριον, μυστηριον. Voss. exhibits a variety of conjectures. The opinion of Eustathius, adopted by Lennep and Valcknaer, seems well founded. From Μεμυσται, the third person of the pret. pass. of μυειν, claudere, was formed μυστην, qui claudit et celat, and hence μυστην, μυστηριον, quod clauditur et celatur; that which is shut up, hidden, or concealed. -LOGUE. fair mint of English analogy;"

he applies it to the exposition; the Fr. to the expounder.

Fr. Mytholog-iser, -ie; It. & Sp. Mitologia; L.

Mythologia; Gr. Μυθολογια, from μυθος, a fable, and λογειν, to tell; Fr. Mythologiser,—to expound or moralize the fable.

N.

N, says Wilkins, is sinnitus, when the breath is sent out, the limbus (or tip) of the tongue being fixed towards the gums, or bottom of the fore teeth. In the pronouncing of this, the breath is emitted only out of the nose: (in which, and in the lips, as B. Jonson remarks, it ringeth somewhat more than the letter M.) They, he adds, (i. e. M and N), are letters near of kin both with the Latins and us. N presents itself as a literal root in the A. S. An-an. See AN, EN, pref. and term., and ONE.

NA, av. i. e. No, (qv.)

NAB, v. Nab-cheats:—the beggars probably so called their caps or hats, because they caught in them what they obtained by cheating, or false pretences.

In Sw. Nappa, prehendere, to catch.—Lye. It is of common use in vulgar speech. See NIP.

NADDE,* v. i. e. Ne-had; had not.
*Chaucer.

NADIR, s. In Astronomy, an Arabian word (Sk.) signifying the point lying in a direct line—or perpendicularly under our feet, and opposite to the point called the Zenith: though our and other languages may have received the word from the Arabians, as now app. only to astronomy, the old Go. Nadr is much older than that science among the northern nations. See NEATH. Fr. Nadair.

NÆVE, s. "Fr. Neve,—a mote, freckle, or other the like natural mark or blemish on the body."—Cot. L. Nævus.

NAG, s. Gen.—An animal that neighs; a horse; usually, a horse of small, handy size.

D. Negge; Ger. Nack. As the L. Hinnulus was so called ab hinniendo, so Nag from A. S. Hnegan, to neigh.

NAIL, v. s. Nail,—that which fixes or fastens, holds fast; as a spike of iron; the nails or talons of birds; the nails or claws of other animals; the nails of the human hand, (similar in position to those of beasts.) Also app. to a measure of length.

To nail is—to drive in a nail; to fix or fasten with nails; to cover with nails; met. to fix or fasten, to keep or hold close or tight to.

D. Naegh-el, -elen; Ger. Nag-el, -eln; Sw. -el, -la; Dan. Nægl; A. S. Nægl, nægl-an, ge-næglan. The nail of the hand is derived by Sk. and others from the A. S. Gnag-an, to gnaw, (rodere, mordere;) Sk. assigning as a reason, that they are gnawed by contemplative and uncleanly persons. A nail (ac. of iron) he composes of D. Nac, to, and A. S. Æge, an edge. Wach. has no doubt that they are the same word: the nails of man and animals (he observes)—videntur infixæ tanquam clavi; and the clavus, he is convinced, received its appellation from that part where it ends in a point, and may be infix in wood, and this leads him to Gr. Nurruv, pungere, fodicare; to pierce, to dig. It is not improbable that the word itself, Nægl-an, signified, to fix & fasten, to infix. Un-

NAIVELY, av. Fr. Naïvement. Of Naïveté, the best account is given (says Blair) by a Fr. critic, M. Marmontel, who explains it thus:—That sort of amiable ingenuity or undisguised openness, which seems to give us some degree of superiority over the person who shows it; a certain infantine simplicity, which we have in our hearts, but which displays some features of the character that we think we could have art enough to hide; and which, therefore, always leads us to smile at the person who discovers this character.—Lect. 19. Naïvely, used by Pope in one of his early letters, does not seem entitled to this refinement.

NAKE,* v. To be bare or without cover;

-ED. to strip, to lay bare; and the ad.

-ED-LY. —unclothed, uncovered, unpro-

-NESS. tected; disclosed, exposed; manifest, unhidden, unconcealed.—**Tourneur*.

NAVY, s. App. to—The whole fleet or -AL. float of ships; usually of armed ships or vessels. -IG-ATE. ships or vessels. -ATION. To navigate,—to guide the -ATOR. course of a ship; to pass over -ABLE. or along in ships, to sail. -ANT.* s. **Hackluyt*.

NAUTICAL. Fr. Nav-le, -iger; It. Agere; Sp. Agar; L. Navigare, i. e. navem agere; L. Navis, from Gr. Navis, and that from ve-eiv, to swim, to float. Circum- In- Un-

NAWL, or NALL, s. A navel, i. e. an awl; my navel, i. e. mine awl. (See AWL.) Cotton ("And packing my navels," ) perhaps means "mine alls," all my goods and chattels.

NAY, s. s. av. To nay, v.—to be averse or unwilling; to dissent, to refuse, to deny. Nay, s.—Dissent, refusal, denial.

Nay, av. is used elliptically—ac. as denying what is said to be all that might be said.

A. S. Na, na, no; D. Neen; Ger. Nein; Dan. Nei. Sk. derives the A. S. from L. Ne; Wach.—the D. and Ger. from the L. Nos. Tooke has no doubt that they have the same origin and signification as Dan. Nideg; Sw. Noodeg; D. Noode, node, and no, which mean averse, unwilling. See UN.

NAZARITE, s. One who separates himself.

From Heb. Nazar, separare, segregare. The old translation of the Bible, 1551, uses the word abteyner.

NE, av. Ne was used as we now use Not, Nor, and Neither;—all which see.

A. S. Ne. (See NAY.)

NEAL, v. To heat, to burn, metals, to improve their temper.

A. S. An-ai-an, onai-an, ai-an, to heat, to burn. Vitrum sensim igni admovere, vel (sensim) ab igne tollere. Lacombe and Roquefort have neillé, émaillé, i. e. enamelled. An-

NEAP, ad. s. Skinner says,—that neaps, or neap tides, are tides—aquarum inopes, (A. S. Næftig, inops.) tides scant of water. As a navel is an awl, a neap may be an ebb; a decreasing tide; decreasing as the moon decreases.

"The action of the sun diminishes the effect of the moon's action in the quarters, because the one raises the water in that case where the other depresses it; and therefore the tides then are least; and these we call the neap tides."—Maclaurin.

NEAR, v. ad. av. To near,—to draw close -LY. together, to come or move close; -NESS. to lessen the distance, to approach, to approximate.

Near, ad.—Close, compressed, contracted, confined, connected; strict, straightened, direct; the least distant; cons. niggardly, or having a narrow and confined disposition.

A. S. Neah; D. Nai; Ger. Nake; Sw. Nacia; Dan. Nær. Tooke derives from A. S. Nyrwian, (to narrow, qv.) coartare, comprimere, contrahere, to draw together, to compress, to contract. See NIGM.

NEAT, s. Also written Note, Nout.

-HERD. Horned cattle.

-RESS. A. S. Neat, nitien; Sw. Noet; Dan. Nood. Thre thinks so called from nitellan, nyttian, utl, to be useful, because of its great use to mankind. In Sc. "Nolt, nout,—black cattle, as distinguished from horses and sheep. It properly denotes oxen."—Jamieson. It seems properly to denote horned cattle, from A. S. Hnit-an, cornu petere, to butt or strike with the horn: to note, (qv.)

NEAT, ad. Clean or cleanly, nice; op-

-LY. posed to dirty and slovenly; pure,

-NESS. without mixture or adulteration,

-IVY,* v. unadulterated; clear, entire, after every deduction; opposed to gross; and in this application it is not uncommon written Nett. Spenser writes—"Nett ivory."

**Chapman*.

Fr. & D. Net; It. Nitio; Sw. Natt; L. Nitidus. Jun. thinks, that as L. Nitidus, and Nitere, are from Gr. Nitron, or νίτρον, lavare, to wash; so D. Sw. & Eng. may be from D. Natten, or netten, humectare, proluere, to moisten or wet, to wash.

NEB. See NIB.

NEBULE,* s. A little cloud.

**A Ballade*, imp. to Chaucer.

Fr. Nebule; L. Nebula.

NECESSARY, ad. s. Necessary and -ARIAN. Necessity are negative terms; -ARILY. the former is used as equivalent to—
-ARINESS. -IT-ATE, v. Needful or compulsive; -ATION. avoidable or inevitable, or that -IED. cannot be shunned or escaped; -OUS. irresistible, resistless, or that -OUSNESS. cannot be stood up against, -UDE. supported, or opposed; -INDIA-Y. pensable, or that cannot be set apart or aside, cannot be done without; also to—needful or requisite. And thus,—

Necessaries are things requisite or required for particular objects or purposes; that are wanted, or must be had or used, for the fulfilment of those purposes. And—

Necessitous,—wanting, or not having such necessaries or things needful or requisite; needy, poor.

"I have one thing to observe of them [the several kinds of necessity], that the idea of some sort of firm connection runs through them all: and that is the proper general import of the name—necessity. Connection of mental or verbal propositions, or of their respective parts, makes up the idea of logical necessity—connection of end and means makes up the idea of moral necessity. Connection of causes and effects is physical necessity. And connection of existence and essence is metaphysical necessity."—Waterland.

Fr. Nécessaire, -Mer; It. & Sp. -ario; L. Necessarius, -s. Scal. (de Causis, cap. 166) says, that necesse is nec esse. Voss. and others, with more probability, derive from ne and casso; ut proprie necesse sit, quod differri non potest, (αὐτὸς ὁ χρόνος, inaccessibile,—Martin.) that which cannot cease, stop, or be stopped. Un—

NECK, s. The (bending) part between -ERCHIEF. head and shoulders.

-LACE. A neck-land, or neck of land,—a part extending from the main-land, as the neck from the shoulders.

Neck-verse,—verse read by a criminal, claiming benefit of clergy, to save his neck, i. e. save him from being hanged.

To break the neck,—to kill, to destroy, to gain the mastery; to overcome the greater portion of the difficulty.

A. S. Hnecca, necca; D. Nek; Ger. & Sw. Nacks. From A. S. Hnig-an; Ger. Nel-en; D. Nick-en, to bow, to bend, to incline.—See Wach, Kilian, and Tooke: also KNEE, KNUCKLE, NOD, and KNECHIEF.

NECROMANCY, s. Anciently also

-ANCER. written Negromancy and Ni-ANT-IC, ad. s. gromancy.

-ICAL. "Divination (μαγεία) by conference with dead (νεκρός) bodies raised."—Cot.

Fr. Nécromancie, nigromancie, négramancie; It. Negroman-zia; Sp. -cia; L. Necromancia; Gr. Nekropanteia. Voss. asserts Negromantia, which some call the black art, (nigra ars,) to be a corruption from necromantia.

NECTAR, s. App. to—Any liquor of

-EAL. excessive sweetness, or excessively -EAN. delicious. And the fruit (Nectar-
-ED. ine) so called from its pleasing -EOUS. taste.

-INE. It. Neltare; Fr. Sp. & L. Nectar; Gr. -OUS. Nectar. Ambrosia, says Voss. is the name of the food of the gods; and Nectar, of their drink. The etym. unsettled.—See Voss. in v. Ambrosia; and Nectar in Lennepe.

NEDDER, s. A name given to all the serpentine class.

Go. Nadr; A. S. Næddre, a serpent, an adder, (qv.); from A. S. Neoth-an, low; neother, nether, or lower.

NEED, s. v. Compulsion, necessity; ex-
-ER. tremity.

-FUL. To be needy, or in need,—to be

-TREMELY. tremely or excessively wicked; infamous.

L. Nefarius, (from ne, and fari.) not to be spoken; too bad to be spoken or told.

NEGATION, s. Negation,—A denial or

-IVE, s. ad. v. refusal; a saying or declaring -IVELY. that a thing shall not be, is not, or has not been.

"We have negative names, which stand not directly for positive ideas, but for their absence, such as insipid, silence, nil, &c., which words denote positive ideas; e. g. taste, sound, being, with a signification of their absence."—Locke.

"Negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity, to be present with it; as when we say, a stone is inanimate, or blind, or deaf, that is, has no life, nor sight, nor hearing; or when we say, a carpenter or a fisherman is unlearned, these are mere negations."—Watts.

Fr. Néga-tion, -tion; It. -zione, -tion; Sp. -cion, -tion; L. Negatio, from negare, (ne-go, q. ne-go, —Voss.) to say no or not; to deny, to refuse. Ab-De-

NEG-LECT, v. s. Cons. To disregard, to —ER. disesteem; to slight, not to heed —FUL. or care for; to pass by inattentively, to omit. —INGLY.

—ION.* A negligent person, — one who neglects, disregards, disesteems, —IVELY.† slights, heeds or cares not for, —IVELY.† passes inattentively, omits. And the ad. — regardless, heedless, —ENTLY. careless, inattentive. —ENCE.

NEG-OTIATE, v. To be employed, —ATION. occupied, busy; to manage or —ATOR. conduct business, to traffic; to —ANT, s. manage or conduct a treaty; to —OSITY. treat.

Fr. Négo-tier; It. -ziare; Sp. -ciar; L. Negotiari, from negotium, i. e. nec otium. Voss thinks, — otium from some word which, like Gr. Ορεβν, signified alone, sole.

NEGRO, s. A black man.

Fr. Negr-e; It. & Sp. -o; L. Niger. Be-De-nigrate.

NEGUS, s. "The mixture now called negus was invented in Queen Anne's time by Colonel Negus."—Malone.

NEIF, s. The hand with the fingers contracted into the palm.

Sc. Neive, neif; Sw. Knaeve, pugnus. In Isl. Kno: and Ihre thinks it may have the same origin as Knee, (i. e. A. S. Hnig-an, to bend,) and hence its application, from the bending of the joints of the fingers.

NEIFE, s. "The children of villeins were also in the same state of bondage with their parents; whence they were called in Latin Nativi, which gave rise to the female appellation of a villein, who was called a neife."—Blackstone.

NEIGH, v. s. -ING. To utter the cry of the horse. See NAO.

A. S. Hnig-an; D. Neyen; Sw. Gnaga. These (as well as L. Hinnire, with Fr. & It. derivatives) Sk. and Lye believe—a sono facta.

NEIGH-BOUR, v. s. To be, dwell, or —HOOD. abide, near or nigh; close to; —LY, ad. av. or at small distance from; to —ESS.* border upon or adjoin to, to connect closely with.

Neighbourly, — having qualities convenient to, becoming, or suiting, a neighbour; or those who live near each other; friendly, social, kind.—Bible, 1549.

Fr. Néoménie. Neomenia, used by the Latin fathers. Gr. Nea mēnē.

NEO-PHYTE, s. One newly implanted, sc. in the church; and cons. newly converted to the christian faith; one newly initiated, newly introduced or employed.

Fr. Néophyte; It. Neäfte; Sp. Neophyta; L. Neophytus; Gr. Neophytos, (neos, new, and φυτον, from φύειν, to bear.)

NEO-TERIC, ad. -AL. New, novel, modern; of the present time, or time not long past.

Gr. Neωτερικος; from νεωτερος, comp. of neos, new.

NEPHEW, s. In our old writers app. to —Grandsons; issue or descendants, gen.; now restricted to the sons of a brother or sister.

A. S. Nef, new; Fr. Nepveu, neveu; It. Nipote; Sp. Nieto: all, says Sk. from L. Nepos. Jun. derives from Gr. Νηπιος, infans, one who cannot speak.

NEPHRITIC, ad. -AL. Pertaining to the gravel or stone.

Fr. Néphritique; It. Ne-frítico; Sp. -phritico; L. Nephriticus; Gr. Νεφριτικός, from νεφρις, a disease in the reins, (νεφροί) e. g. the gravel or stone.

NEPOTISM, s. App. in Addison as in French, to the corrupt promotion of nephews by the reigning pope.

Fr. Népotisme, from L. Nepos.

NERVE, v. s. To nerve,—to strengthen,

—LESS. to invigorate; to empower; to —OUS. give strength or vigour, might, —OUSLY. force, or power. —OUSNESS. Nerve is used as equivalent to —Y. sinev.

Nervous, or Nervy,—well strung, strong, vigorous, powerful,—also sensitive in the nerves, sc. to excess, and, cons. weak, debilitated, diseased in them.

Fr. Nerf; It. Nervo; Sp. Nervio; L. Nervus; Gr. Νευρον, a string, that which stringeth or strengtheneth. E-Ke-Un-

NESCIENCE, s. Ignorance; want of knowledge or science.

From L. Nesciens, p. p. of Nescire, not to know, to be ignorant.

A. S. Nesc, knesc, mollis, from ahnescian, ahnescian, emollire, to soften.

NESS, term. A. S. Nes, nesse, nys, nyssse. The same word as Ness, a promontory (qv.); perhaps from the v. Nes-an, neos-an, visere; meaning—any thing seen; evident, conspicuous; and hence, prominent, projecting. Wallis observes—"Ex concretis adjectivis, sunt substantiva abstracta, addita terminatione ness,—as white, whiteness." It corresponds, he adds, to the Ger. Heigt; Eng. Head or Hood. (See Hood.) Wilkins adds this term. ness, to better, and worse,—betterness, worseness. Ness denotes the prominent or distinguishing, or characteristic quality, or gen. the quality; as whiteness, goodness,—the quality of being white or good. Discretion is the only guide in the construction of such words. Many have recently been introduced, and are now current both in speech and writing, which will undoubtedly stand the test of time:—others will not.

NESS, s. A promontory or cape, a nesse, nose, or point of land, lying or shooting out into the sea.—Som. See NOSE; and NESS, ante. A. S. Nase, ness.

NEST, s. v. A nest,—the haunt, the abode, —LE, v. the residence, place of rest; —LING, ad. app. esp. to the bed of birds, in which they breed; a snug, well-protected abode.

To nestle, v.—to go to; to frequent; to abide, to reside; to form an abiding or resting place; to nourish or protect, as a bird her young; to lie warmly and securely, as birds in a nest.

A. S. D. & Ger. Nest; Sw. Näst; A. S. Nistan; D. & Ger. Nesten, nisten, nestelen, to build or make a nest; whence happily our Nestle, and Nestling, for a busy bestirring, as a bird in making or building her nest.—Som. Tooke considers Nest to be the past p. of A. S. Nesan, neos-tan, to visit, to visit frequently, to haunt.

NET. See NEAT.

NET, v. s. —TY. To connect or fasten together (threads or strings crosswise, at regular distances.)

Net-work,—work in the form of an extended net.

A. S. & Dan. Net; D. Nelt, nettle; Ger. Netze. Some (Wach.) derive from Net-en, to sew, to connect; because a net is opus textum. Tooke, from Cnyttan, to knit, (qv.) net-ere, alligare. Be-

NETHER, ad. Lower, inferior.

—MORE. A. S. Neother; D. Neder; Ger. Nider; —MOST. Sw. Nedre; Dan. Nedrig; Go. Nadr. R. of Gloucester, (p. 217), uses the v. Another, to lower, to cast down, or defect. Be-

NETTLE, v. s. —ER. A nettle,—a plant.

To nettle,—met. to sting, to inflame, to irritate, to vex, to provoke.

A. S. Nell, netel; D. Netel; Ger. Nessel; Sw. Naella, natta; Dan. Naide; perhaps of the same origin as needle, and meaning that which pricketh, that which stings.

NEVEN,* v. To name. Sk. and the Glossary to G. Douglas agree;—only a different way of speaking and writing Name, (in Dan. Navn-er.)—*Chaucer.

NEVER, av. Not ever, not at all or at —THE-LATER. any time.

—THE-LESS. Not ever the later, or the less,—not at all the less.

Never is much used prof.

A. S. Næfre, i. e. ne, not, and æfre, unquam, semper, ever. See NATHLESS.

NEURO-PAST,* s. A puppet or doll, put in motion by drawing strings or wires; as if sinews.—*H. More.

Gr. Neuropastorion; L. Neuropastion, (νευρον, a nerve, and πασι-ν, to draw;) to this piece of mechanism Horace refers, (Serm. II. vii. 82.)

NEUTER, ad. s. Not either one or —TR-AL, ad. s. other; "taking neither part, —ALITY. helping neither side."—Cot.

—ALIZE, v. Indifferent, inactive, inert.

Fr. Neutre; It. & Sp. —tro; L. Neuter; i. e. ne, not, and uter, either.

NEWT, s. Jun. supposes to be corrupted from an ewet; a newet, a newt. See EFT.

NEXT, ad. —LY. Nearest or nighest,—without reference either to succession or precedence.

Ger. Nechst; Sw. & Dan. Næst; A. S. Neahgost, neaght, neast, the superlative of Neah, neahg.

NIAS, s. Used met. as the Fr. Niais: "A youngling, a novice: a simple, witless, unexperienced gull."—Cot. See EYAS.

NIB, s. v. Nib, or Neb, is nip, (qv.) by the —BLE, v. s. change of p into b; and Nibble, —BLER. the dim., to nip gently or slightly, so as not to hold fast; to bite by small nips; to bite at timorously or cautiously.

To nib, so. a pen, is to nip off the point; cut it off.

Sw. Näbb; Dan. Næb; D. & A. S. Nabba, the bill, beak, or nib of a bird.—Som.

NICE, ad. Nice is more various and ex-

—LY. tensive in its application than Nesh;

—NESS. though they are the same word

—TY. diff. written and spoken.

Soft, tender, delicate; delicately sensitive, fastidious, scrupulous; curiously exact or refined; tender to excess; effeminate; weak, simple; silly, foolish. See NESH. Over-

NICHE, s. "A hollow seat, or standing for a statue or image, made (i. e. cut) into a wall."—Cot.

It. Nicchia; Fr. Niche. Probably a nick, or nook, (qv.) from the v. Nick, to cut into; and usually app. as Cot. explains.

NICK, v. s. -ER. To cut into; to cut a notch or hollow into, sc. into one thing to suit the reception of another; to make a suitable or convenient incision; to nick or do anything in the nick, i. e. at a sitting time, suitably, conveniently, opportunely, seasonably; at the right moment, at a lucky moment.

To nick is, also,—to cut a notch in a tally, by way of reckoning or keeping account; and thus, out of all nick, is out of reckoning; and to nick, is to cheat, (by cutting a notch fraudulently,) to impose upon, to play a trick of delusion or mockery: and hence, perhaps, To nick-name, (qv.)

Jun. refers to D. Nicken, nictare oculos; and Sk. to the Ger. Nick, a nod. The word is used in Eng. as equivalent to the L. Incidere, to cut into.

NICK, (Old.) s. "Nicka was the Gothic demon, who inhabited the element of the water, and who strangled persons that were drowning." (Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, Diss. 1.) and from him the name has been transferred, with the epithet "old," to the devil of the christian theology. Butler gives Machiavel the credit of conferring the cognomen.

In Dutch, says Wach. Nicker is the devil; and the name seems derived from A. S. Næc-an, to slay; for the devil was a manslayer from the beginning.

NICK-NAME, v. s. To impose a name in mockery or jest; from some real or imputed characteristic, or some act of the party.

Jun. imagines,—from nom de nique, an expression borrowed from the Italians, who use not only inique, but aiquo. But see Nick.

NICOTIAN, s. ad. "Tobacco; first sent into France by Nicot (the maker of the great French Dictionary) in the year 1560, when he was Ambassador Leiger in Portugal."—Cot.

Fr. Nicotienne; It. tiana; Sp. ciana.

NICTATE, v. To wink, to move the eye-
-ATION. lid quickly up and down.

-ITATE, v. L. Nictare, to wink. Voss.—from the ancient Nictare, still remaining in the compound Con-nictare.

NIDI-FICATION, s. NIDULATION.* The making or building of a nest.—Brown.

L. Nidificatio, from nidificare, i. e. Nidum facere, to make, to build a nest. Gr. Neceor, neoror, from neor, young.

NIDING, s. NIDGET. A low, base, worthless fellow.

A. S. Nithing; Sw. Niding. In Fr. Nigaud, nigeur, are explained by Cot. a nidget, a fop, an idiot; the v. Niger, to play the nidget or fop, to trifle, from the L. Nugari.—Men. Spel. and Sk. have also Nidring, or Nidering, which the former would derive from Anglo-Norman Nid, a nest, and ing, a chicken; qd. a chicken that dare not leave his nest. The latter from Neher, lower.

NIDOUR,* ad. Cot. calls Fr. Nideur,—-OROSE.† "the stench or fulsome savour
-OROUS.† of things broiled or burnt," and in Eng. it is applied to the scent of meats dressed or dressing.

**Bp. Taylor.* †Arbutnot. ‡Bacon.

L. Nid-or; Fr. -eur, -oreux. The L. Nid-or, properly, says Voss. is the smell or odour of esculents, and sometimes of other things; perhaps from the Gr. Kveta.

NIECE, s. Now app. to—the daughter of a brother or sister.

Fr. Niece, and niece; It. Nizza; in A. S. Nift, which bears a manifest resemblance to Nefn, a nephew; in D. Nichte is cognate, neptis; in Ger. Nift, nichte, and in Go. Nithya, is cognatus, akin: and it is probable that the word has an origin in some term signifi. gen. (nighnas, nearness,) proximity, near relationship. The etymologists, in general, refer it to the L. Neptis.

NIFLE,* s. "Unless I am deceived (Sk.), from the Fr. Neuf, new; qd. Neufes, news." Tyrw. explains it,—trifles.—**Chaucer.*

NIGGARD, ad. s. v.* Niggard means,—

-LY, ad. av. Near, or of a narrow, close, confined disposition; pari-

-LINESS. monious, sparing, covetous,

-NESS. avaricious.

-IZE,† s. Grose says, that in the North,

-ISH.‡ niggards are iron cheeks to

-OUS.§ a grate; probably because

-SHIP.¶ they narrow or contract the -Y.¶ space for fuel.

-GISH,** ad. space for fuel.

**Shak.* †Spenser. Drayton. ‡Baret.

§Sir T. More. ¶Sir T. Eliot. E. Hall.

***Chaucer.* ***Udal. Surrey.*

Sk. and Jun. suggest—A negando, or perhaps, adds the latter, from nigh, or near; he looketh very nigh, or, he is a near man, being common expressions, app. to one who is stingy, and too anxious about money. Un-

NIGH, ad. av. v. To nigh,—to approach

-LY. or come close; to be or come close

-NESS. to, to approximate; to border upon, to touch.

Go. Nehwa; A. S. Nih, neh, nenh. See Near. There is also Go. and A. S. v. Nehw-an, to approach, to come close to.

NIGHT, s. The time when the sun, or

-ED. the light of the sun goes, and

-LY, ad. av. is gone down. Lit. and met.—

-ISH.* darkness, gloom, ignorance.

Night is much used pref.—**Turberville.*

Go. Nakte; A. S. Nih; Ger. & D. Nacht; Sw. Natt; Dan. Nat. Wach. assents to the etym. of Clauberius, who derives Ger. Nacht from Ger. v. Neigen, inclinare, declinare. In Go. Hneisvan; A. S. Hnig-an. Dago dugann Anisvan—Dies cooperat declinare (Luc. ix. 12).—"And the day began to bow down." (Wiclif). The Gr. Nef is derived (immediately from vev-an, inclinare, to bend or bow down, (Mart.); and the Gr. is probably from the Go. See Nod. Be-Over-

NIGHTER-TALE, s. Nighter-deal,—the nocturnal (deal or) portion of the natural day.—Sk.

NIGHTIN-GALE, s. A bird so called, because he sings at night.

"To matens went the lusty nightingale,
Within a temple shapen hauthorn wise,
He might not sleepe in all the nightertale,
But Domine labia gan he cry and gale."—Chaucer.

A S. Nicht-gale; D. Nacht-garl; Ger. Nachtigal, (from Nicht, the night, and gale, to gale, to sing;) Dan. Natiergal.

NIGHT-MARE, s. "Mara, from whence our Night-mare is derived, was, in the Runic Theology, a spirit or spectre of the night, which seized men in their sleep, and suddenly deprived them of speech and motion."

—Warton.

D. Nacht-merrie; Ger. Nachtmar. In Sw. Mara is,—Incubus; in Ger. Mare, parca; but Sk. thinks that mara in Night mare is,—Equa quæ nobis accubat, vel porticus incubat. Warton gives the true origin of our word; though it does not appear why "the spirit or spectre of the night" was in Runic theology called Mara. The meaning, ascribed by all, is an oppressive weight or burden, and may be formed of the A. S. Mā, and er. See MONK, and EA, term.; and see INCUBUS.

NIGHT-SPELL, s. i. e. The night-charm.—Tyrw. "Chaucer.

NIHILITY, s. "Nullity, the being nothing, or of no value."—Cot.
L. Nih-illum, -iti; Fr. Ni-tille. An-nihilate.

NILL, v. NILE. To will not, to be unwilling; to dissent, to deny, to refuse.

**Wiclif. Chaucer. Gower, &c.*

A. S. Nillan, nolle, or non velle; compounded of Na, not, and will-an, to will.

NIM, v. -MER. To take, to take away, to deprive, to rob, to steal, to filch. It is still a common word among thieves.

**Chaucer. Gower, &c.*

Go. & A. S. Niman; D. & Ger. Nemen, to take, to take away. See NUM, and NUMSKULL.

NIMBLE, ad. Active, agile, quick in -Y. motion or action; quick, speedy, -NESS. alert.—"Spenser.

-ESS. "Agilis, (Sk.)—"One who can do any thing quickly and easily; from the v. To nim," (qv.); and Jun notices that Num-ol is capax, able to take or receive.

NIN-COMPOOP, s. i. e. A Non-compo, or one who is non compos (sc. mentis); not strong in mind, insane; an idiot, a simpleton.

NINE, s. Nine,—one less than the number NINTH. of fingers to the two hands;

NINE-TEEN. s. e. than ten.

-TY. Nine-teen,—nine and ten.

Nine-ty,—nine times ten.

Go. Ninan; A. S. Nig-an, -en, -on; D. Nepfen; Ger. Neun; Sw. Nio; Dan. Ni. In Gr. Ennea; L. Noem; Fr. Neuf; It. Nove; Sp. Nueve. Becman thinks Noem is from Novus, qd. Novissimus, the last (sc.) of the numerals. Voss dissents. Martlin agrees with Becman as to the L.; and with regard to Ger. he observes,—"Nig-en est inclinara. et inde numerus ille inclinatus dici quest." This Wach thinks not improbable; but what does numerus inclinatus mean?

NOB

NINNY, s. -HAMMER. A silly, simple fellow, a simpleton.

Sp. Ninno, infans; It. Nencio, or nescio, a fool, an idiot, a natural, a dolt; one that knows nothing, ignorant.—Florio. See ZANY.

NIP, v. s. To pinch or press off sharply;

-PER. to pinch (sc. with the teeth);

-PINGLY. and cons.—to bite; to pinch off

-PLE. (sc. the germ or bud); and hence,

—to blight, to perish. Met.—to bite, to pinch, to hurt, to injure (sc. by censure, rebuke, or sarcasm); to reprehend, to satirize.

D. Nippen, kniipen; Ger. Kneipen, kneifen; Sw. Nypa, nypa; Dan. Nepper, comprime; c. constringere. Jun. (in Gloss. Go p. 116.) observes—that Go. Ca-nipnanda, contristatus, seems to belong to some old v. corresponding with D. Nippen, or Eng. Nip; and in A. S. the dim. Nyppe, a nipple, shows the word to have existed in that language also. Over-

NIS, v. i. e. Ne is, or is not.

**Chaucer. Spenser.*

NIST, v. i. e. Ne wist, or wist not, knew not.—Chaucer. Gower.

NIT, s. -TY. An insect.

A. S. Hmita; D. Nele; Ger. Nisse; Sw. Gert; Dan. Gnid. In Exodus, (viii. 16.) the A. S. is Gnattas, (gnati); L. version Cimiphæ; our version, Lice. See GNAT. Sk. would derive from Gr. Noveau, to prick, to penetrate.

NITENCY, s. Endeavour, effort.—"Boyle.
L. Nitens, from Niti, to strive, to endeavour. In-Be-

NITID, ad. Clean, clear, bright.—"Boyle.
It. & Sp. Nitido; L. Nitidus. See NIZAT.

NITRE, s. Cot. describes it as—A salt-ous. resembling substance, of colour light-Y. ruddy or white, and full of holes like a sponge.

Fr. Nitre; It. -o; L. Nitrum; Gr. Nitrop.

NIVEOUS, ad. Snowy.—"Brown.
L. Niveus, from Nix, nivis, snow.

NIZZY. See ZANY.

NO, ad. av. No, the av. is used to express—NOR. Negation or denial, refusal, rejection; NOT. aversion, unwillingness.

No, the ad. to express—the absence, negation or privation of any thing.

Nor,—Sk. compounds of Ne, and or. Ne and No are used alone equivalent to Nor.

Not, (also written Nought, Noght, Nat), may be a corruption of Nought, (qv.)

No is usually written in composition with body, thing, where, wise, in old writers with more, as nomore, &c. &c.

A. S. No; D. Nem; Ger. Nein; Dan. Nei. Tooke observes,—that Dan. Nedig, Sw. Noddig, and D. Noede, node, no, mean,—averse, unwilling.

NOBLE, ad. s. v. Renowned, famous;

Nocturnus,—any thing done at night; prayers at night. That monastic watch contained between the hours of twelve and three A.M. Officium horæ nocturnæ.

Fr. Nocturne; It. Notturno; L. Nocturnus, from Nox, the night, and this from Neu-ere, inclinare, to bend or bow down, to go down. See NIGHT. Per-noctation.

NOD, v. s. To bend down, to incline, to -DER. decline; to bend or drop down; -DING. sc. the head, as one drowsy or -DLE, or sleepy. See NECK, KNEE, and NUDDLE, v. NIGHT.

-ING. Sk.—from the L. Nutus, and that from Neu-ere, to bend down. "The past tense of the A. S. v. Hnig-an, to bend, is Hnash, which, by the addition of the participial term. ed, forms Nahed, nah'd, nah, (a broad.) nod."—Tooke. In-nuendo.

NODDLE, s. The head; familiarly, or contemptuously.

The nodding part of the head.—Mins. From A. S. Knot, the top.—Sk. See NOWL, or NOLL.

NODE, s. A knot or knob, a connexion -OUS. or complication, a lump, protuberance, or swelling.

-ULE. The nodes of a planet,—les noeuds d'une planète. "The centre of the moon appears to us to trace a different circle from the elliptic, the circle which the centre of the sun appears to describe in the heavens. These circles cut each other in two opposite points, that are called by astronomers the nodes of the moon."—Maelaurin.

NOM

L. Nod-us, -eus; Fr. -eus; It. & Sp. -o. Voss.—from the Heb. Tooke,—from the A. S. Knittan, to knot, nectere, connectere. Inter-nodial.

NODY,* or NODDY,* s. Equivalent to Ninny, (qv.)

**Bale*. Sir T. More. Beau. & F.

Sk.—from Nor. Fr. Naudin, which Cot. calls, "a noddy, linny, goosecap, coxoomb." Naudin, Sk. suggests, may be from the v. To nod; it perhaps is connected with Nodde; and app. contemptuously to the person, as Noddie to the thing.

NOEMATICAL,* ad. -LY.† Mental, intellectual; existing, originating in the mind.—Cudworth. †H. More.

Gr. Nomia, nomiavor, the mind, the intellect, or understanding.

NOMINAL, ad. s. That can or may be
-ALIST. named; of or pertaining, belong-
-ALLY. ing or relating to the name; op-
-ATE, v. posed to real. "About the twelfth
-ATELY. century, Roscelinus or Rosceli-
-ATION. nus, the master of the famous
-ATOR. Abelard, introduced a new doctrine, that there is nothing universal but words or names. However, by his eloquence and abilities, and those of his disciple Abe-lard, the doctrine spread, and those who followed it were called Nominalists."—Reid.
L. Nominale, from Nominare, to name, (qv.)
Ag-Con- Pro-nominal. De- Pre-nominate. Ignominy. In-nominable.

NON, pref. A negative prefix, used in common speech with much licence; equivalent to Not, In or Un.

NON-AGE, s. -AGED. Infancy or minority (in Law).
Lacombe has "Nonage, minorité." Nos and age; not of age.

NONCE, s. Anciently written Nones or Names. And Once, (qv.) was formerly written Ones, Anes. In the expression "for the nonce," nonce is corruptly used for once; for the once, this once, the, or this one thing,
one occasion, for an especial purpose. Mr.
Gifford observes,—"The aptitude of many of our monosyllables beginning with a vowel to assume the n is well known; but the progress of this expression is distinctly marked in our early writers; a ones, an anes; for the ones, for the nanes, for the nones, for the nonce."

NON-CONFORMING, pt. i. e. Not con-
-IST. forming; refusing to conform, refusing
-ITY. or rejecting uniformity; not complying, yielding, or assenting.

Non-conforming clergy,—those who refused to conform to the Church of England, by subscribing certain Articles required in the Act of Uniformity, an. 1662.

NONE, av. i. e. No one, or not one; A. S.
Nan, i. e. Ne ane.

NONES, s. In the Roman calendar,—the nine days before the ides, (qv.)

NON-JURING, pt. -ROR. Not swearing; one who does not, or will not swear—sc.
allegiance. Usually app. to those persons, esp. clergymen, who refused to take the oaths of allegiance to William III. at the Revolution.

NON-PAREIL, ad. s. Having no like or equal, match or fellow; one unparalleled, unequalled, unmatched, unrivalled.
N-on, not, and pareil, (Fr.) like, equal, even, or matching with. L. Par.

NON-PLUS, v. s. To do, to be able to do,
no more; to dian from doing more.
Non, not, and plus, more.

NON-POWER,* s. i. e. Impotence.
*Chaucer.

NON-PROFICIENT,* s. One who is no proficient, or not a proficient, or who has made no proficiency, who does not profit, gain, or benefit.—Ep. Hall.

who does not reside, (qv.) abide or dwell.

NON-RESISTANT, ad. -ANCE. (Ess, Ent.) Not resisting; not standing against,
or opposing.

NON-SENSE, s. i. e. Not sense; that -ICAL. which is not intelligible, not to
-ICALLY. be understood or comprehended;
-ITIVE. which has no meaning, or that is unmeaning; not worth a thought.

NON-SOLVENCY, s. Non-payment;
insolvency, (qv.)

NON-SPARING, ad. i. e. Sparing none;
un-sparing any.

NON-SUIT, v. s. "If either party neglects to put in his declaration plea, replication, rejoinder, and the like, within the times allotted by the standing rules of the court, the plaintiff, if the omission be his, is said to be non-suit, or not to follow and pursue his complaint, and shall lose the benefit of his writ."—Blackstone.

NOOK, s. App. to—A small recess or retreat, (qd. cut into a solid body,) a corner, a niche.

Lye refers to Nock or notch; and Tooke—all the past p. of the v. To wick, incisere.

NOON, s. -ING. "The ninth hour of the day, which was at three of the clock afternoon. Non-mete,—a meal or bever at that time: howbeit of latter times noon is midday; and none-mete, dinner."—Som. Non- sang, was the cantus or singing at that hour; the Nones,—prayers at that hour. This manner of reckoning is said to have been derived from the Romans.

Nooning,—a meal or refreshment at noon.

See NUNCHION.

D. Noen; A. S. Non; hora diei nona.

NOOSE, s. v. A noose,—a knot, a tie or fastening; gen. app. to the fastening formed by what is called a running knot.

Laqueus nestiti, say Lye and Sk.; the latter hesitates between the L. Nodus, a knot, and the D. Noose, noze. Lye says—"perhaps from Nu- sada, impeditiv, a word which occurs in the Gloss of Lipulus." It is not improbably from the
A. S. Cniltan, cnyltan, nectere, connectere; to net, to tie, to fasten.

NOR. See No.

NORMAL, ad. Measured by, adapted or conformed to rule; constructed upon, subjected to, conducted by or according to, prescribed rules or laws; instructed in rules, first principles or elements; in general, systematic principles. A word very recently introduced. Fr. Ecoles normales were first established by the National Convention of France, in the third year of the French Republic.

L. Normalis, from Norma, a rule; a rule to measure right angles. Florio has—It. Norma, normare, normevole. See ENORM. Ab- E-

NORTH, s. ad. App. first, to—The wind, -ERLY, which bindeth or constraineth the -ERN. ground, hardens it: then to— -ERNLY. The region, whence such wind -WARD. comes.

A.S. North; D. Noerd; Ger. Dan. & Fr. Nord; Sw. Nord, norr. The Sw. Nor, a narrow strait, fretum angustum, thence derives from Nyrwan, coarctate: he rejects all the etyms. offered for North; but does not proceed to anticipate Tooke in deriving Sw. Norr from the same v. North. i.e. Ny-weth, or nyrweth, is the third pers. sing. of Nyrwan, coarctare, constringere; to bind together, to constrain.

NOSE, s. v. That which is prominent, -GAY, which projects, sc. from the face; -LESS, the organ of breathing and smell-
NOSTRIL, ing.

Nostril, or nose-thrill, A. S. Nose-thryla; from Thirlan, to drill, to bore.

Nose-wax,—"Hereunto they add also a similitude not very agreeable, how the Scriptures be like to a nose of wax, [nasus cereus], or a shipman's hose: how they may be fashioned, and plied al manner of waies, and serue al menues turnes."—Jewel.

Nose-gay,—a gay or gaud; a bouquet of gay flowers, of gay and scented flowers, to gratify the (nose or) smell.

A. S. Nase, nase; D. Nas; Ger. Nase; Sw. Nasus; Dan. Nase; Fr. Nes; It. Naso; all usually derived from L. Nasus; which Wach. doubts, and thence very rationally objects, that it is not credible our Gothic ancestors should not have a name for the organ of breathing, until they obtained it from Rome; it is undoubtedly of the same origin with Nase, a nase, or nass; the latter so common a term to the names of projecting headlands, (s. p.) Dunne-nase, Shoer-nass; and also the Nase or Nass used alone. See Nass.

NOTHING, s. -NESS. i.e. No thing, or not any thing; equivalent to the L. Nihilum, non-entity, or non-existence; also app. to any thing very small or minute, of no worth or value; worthless, trifling.

NOTION, s. Notion is now used indiscri-

-ALLY. minately as equivalent to—

-ALLY. Idea, perception, conception, opi-

-ALITY. nion, thought; and was used (as -IST. in Shak. and Milton) for knowledge, power of knowing or understanding.

"His notion weakens."—Shak.

"The acts of God to human ears cannot without process of speech be told, so told as earthly notion can receive."—Milton.

It would be of service to establish a distinction in the usage of idea and notion.

Locke and Bolingbroke both attempt it, but with no effect. Idea might be used as a simple and specific term to express our sensations numerically separate; notion as a general and complex term for a collection of ideas: and thus we could not (and now should not) say "I have an idea of a man, or of an animal; but we might say with propriety, I have a notion of a man, or of an animal."

"Of the first part of speech—the noun—it being the best understood, and therefore the most spoken of by others, I shall need at present to say little more than that it is 'the simple or complex, the particular or general sign or name of one or more ideas.'"—*Tooke. NOUSLE, v. The gen. application seems to be—To creep closely or snugly into, (as a child with its nose nestles into the breast of its nurse,) to sink into, to lie closely or fondly, to cling fondly to, to hang or dwell fondly or doatingly upon; to fondle, to doat.

A nousling mole,—a mole working its way with its nozzle or nose.

Sk. writes Nuzzle, corrupted from Nestle.—Lye. Nuzzle,—nasum aliquo indere, from D. Neuselen, to search after with the nose or snout. Nosel, the dim of Nose. Steevens, on Pericles, would read Nursle. A fondling, he observes, is still a nursling. To nuzzle, or, as it is now written, nuzzle, is to go with the nose down like a hog. The application of the ov. To nestle, To nursle, and To nuzzle, border so close upon each other that it is difficult in some instances to discriminate the source of corruption. An infant may be said to nestle, to nursle, or to nuzzle, in the breast or bosom of its nurse or mother.

NOW, av. By our oldest authors written also Nouth.

At this instant or present point of time; at this moment of time; at this or that time; instant, present.

Fr. Numismatique; L. Numisma; Gr. Νομισμα, from νομίζ-ειν, to legalize or establish by law; Gr. Νομισμας, nummus, vox Sicula pro νομίζω, from νομίζω, tribuere. See NUMMEX.

NUMP, s. NUMPE. A weak, silly, stupid person.

A word not in our old lexicographers; perhaps from Num, used as in Numskull, (qv.) and intended to denote a person so far nummed in mind as to be—as above.

NUN, s. A female, consecrated to devo--NERY. tional exercises, and confined to
-NISH. the privacy of a convent.

In A. S. Nonna, nun; Fr. & D. Nonne; Ger. Nunne; Low L. Nonna. Voss. thinks the word is Egyptian, and derived from Heb. Nim, fillus. Erant enim nonni fillorum, nonnae fillarum loco. —De Fittis, c. 6. Others, that it is moni, i. e. monachi, (monks,) by the change of n into m. The Italians use Monaca, and the Spanish Monja. The A. S. Nun, is a fatherless child.

NUNCHION, s. Browne's manner of writing the word (Noonshun) has suggested that it was the name of a meal or refreshment taken when labourers retreated to shun the heat of noon; but Cot. (in vv. Recliné, Ressie) and Sherwood write Nuncion or Nuncheon, and speak of it as an after-noon's repast: the application, however, of Noon in earlier times was to a period of the day which was subs. called afternoon; i. e. after mid-day or meridian, but still during even an increase of heat. Cion, or Chion seems an easy corruption of Shun in speech, and the mode of writing may have been adopted in conformity to our common term. in cion, sion, or tion. This repast is now more com. called Lunchion, (qv.) See also NOON, NOONING.

NUNCIATE, s. One who bears news;
-CIATURE. who makes known—a mes-

Trafficking; bargaining, selling.

"Fr. Nundination, a trafficking in fairs and markets."—Cot. L. Nundina, i. e. Novendina, fairs or marts held every ninth day.

NUPTIAL, ad. -TIALS, s. Of or pertaining, belonging or relating, to marriage or matrimony; connubial.

The s. is usually written with the plural term. S. Shak. writes it without.

Fr. Nup-tial; Sp. -cial; It. Nuzziale; L. Nup-tialis, from Nuptia, and this from Nub-ere, to cover, and therefore Nupta (i. e. Nubila, nubia) is femina coverta. (See NUBILE.) Dr. Burgess contends that Nubo was really the same word as Nuo, (the digamma merely changed into b), and orig. signified assumo, assentior, to assent or consent: it is only in composition that Nuo remains in the Latin language. ## O.

O, the vowel, Wilkins calls the first and most apert of the Labials, being framed by an emission of the breath, betwixt the lips, a little drawn together and contracted; and B. Jonson remarks, that it is a letter of much change and uncertainty with us.

O, s. OES. App. by Shak. and others (see Steevens's Note in Mids. N. D.) to various things shaped like an O.

OAF, s. Oaf is a common word in the Northern counties:—a fool, a booby. See
AUF, and OUPH.

OAK, s. A tree.

 perhaps from Go. Auc-an; A. S. Eac-an,
 -ican; augere, to grow, to increase; and so called from the bulk to which it grows. See BEECH.

OAKUM, s. Sk. writes it Ockam; and calls it, "old cables untwisted and torn in pieces; tow or hemp wherewith they stop the seams of ships to exclude the water."

OAR, v. s. -Y. Oars,—with which a boat, barge, &c. is moved or impelled forward by pressure against the water.

Oary,—shaped or employed as oars.

Sc. Air; A. S. Ar; Sw. Ara; Dan. Aare; perhaps from A. S. Eri-an; Sw. Eria, arare, to ere, to plough, to ply (to move forward). To ply the oars, is a common expression; and Sk. suggests L. Arare, because it (the oar) divides or cuts the waters into furrows.

OASIS, or AVASIS, s. A small inhabited tract, surrounded by vast deserts, like an island in the ocean. App. met.

A Coptic or Egyptian word preserved by the Arabs. Wake, an habitation.

OAT, s. -EN. A kind of grain or corn.

Oat is used met. for the tuneful instrument made of the oat-straw.

 from A. S. v. Ei-an, to eat, because everywhere the food of horses, and in some places of men.

OATH, s. -ABLE. "An oath is 'the calling upon God to witness, i. e. to take notice of what we say;' and it is 'invoking his vengeance, or renouncing his favour, if what we say be false, or what we promise be not performed.'"—Paley.

Sc. Atha, ath; Go. Aith; A. S. Ath; Ger. Eid;
 Sw. Ed; D. & Dan. Eed. Of unknown etym.
 (See Ihre, and Wach.) Perhaps from the same root as Aye, (qv.)

OB, pr. Voss. derives the L. pr. Ob, from Gr. ὄω, or ωω, or ωω; and Butler decides for the last; and observes that it sometimes merely increases the signification, as dorm- ire, to sleep; ob-dormire, to sleep upon sleep, i. e. to sleep soundly. See AE.

OB-AMBULATION,* s. A walking about, a continued or repeated walking.

Gr. Οκτω, and τευχος, a book.

OCULAR, ad. Of or pertaining to the eye,
-LARLY. evident or manifest to the eye or
-LIST. sight; evident.

Fr. Ocul-aire; It. -dre; Sp. -ar; L. Ocularis, from oculus, an eye; the origin of which is left uncertain by the L. etymologists. Tooke assigns it to the Go. Auge, A.S. Eage, an eye, from augan, ostendere, to show. In-oculate.

ODD, ad. Used in numbers when there
-ITY. is one wanting to make the num-
-LY. ber even, or divisible into two equal
-NESS. numbers. Gen.—

ODDS. Singular, unmatched, unequalled, not having its like; unlikely; uncommon, unusual, extraordinary.

Odds,—inequality, either for or against; unevenness, disparity, disagreement, dissension.

Oddity is a common word.

Sw. Udde, impar, cul par deest.—Ihre. Sk. says—from the D. Oed, ood; Ger. Oed, ode, od, desertus, vacuus; cul, sc. aliquid deest ad numerum complendum. Jun. thinks Oed cut off (abscisum) from the Eng. Added; and Lye—that we owe the word to the Sw. Udda. Tooke asserts it to be the past p. Owed, ow'd. Thus when we are counting by couples or by pairs, we say—one pair, two pairs, &c. and one owed, ow'd, to make up another pair; (and this coincides with the interpretations of Ihre and Sk.) It has the same meaning (he adds) when we say—an odd man, or an odd action; it still relates to pairing; and we mean—without a fellow, unmatched, not such another, one owed to make up a couple. He might have noticed the equivalent expressions,—a singular man, a singular action.

ODE, s. “Music and Poetry are coeval, and were, originally, always joynted together. But after their separation took place, after bards had begun to make verse compositions, which were to be recited or read, not to be sung, such poems as were designed to be still joined with music or song, were, by way of distinction, called odes.”—Blair.

It. & Sp. Oda; Fr. & L. Ode; Gr. Odē, from aeid-eiv, to sing. Fallin- Para- Pros-

ODIOUS, ad. Hateful, detestable, loath-
-OUSLY. some; causing hatred or envy;
-OUSNESS. invidious.

-UM. **Fabyan. Bale. Stow.*

-BLE.* Fr. Odieux; It. -dre, -deo; Sp. -ar, -oso; L. Odiosus, odiosus, (which we have adopted in common speech,) from the v. Odi, which is traced through Gr. v. Odov-eiv, trasci, obsolete odoviv, to an obsolete primitive odviv, pungere. See Odoviv in Lennep. In-olate.

ODOUR, s. Odour, (equivalent to our
-DOR-AMENT. vulgar usage of the word
-ATE. Stink, qv.)—smell, scent.
-IFEROUS. Odoriferous,—bearing or
-OUS. bringing a smell or scent;
usually a pleasing smell.

Fr. Odour; It. Odore; Sp. Olor; L. Odor. Voss. thinks L. Oleo, to smell, was orig. written Odoo; and Scheldius has no doubt that odor was so used,—ab acrimonis odoris, nares quasi pungen- tis; and thus refers it to the same source as L. Odi. (See Odious; and Lennep.) In-

ECONOMY. See ECONOMY.

ECUMENICAL, ad. -LY. Comprising the whole habitable world; general, universal.

Gr. Oikoumevicos, habitalis, from oiv-eiv, to dwell, to inhabit.

OEDEMA, s. “A painless, waterish, and -RIC. flegmatick swelling; which when -TIOUS. pressed down with the finger retains the impression thereof.”—Cot.

Fr. Œdème; Gr. Oedhma, a swelling, from oedviv to swell. Bullokar writes Œdeme.

OF, pr. Go. Sw. Dan. & D. Af; A.S. Of; Sk. derives from L. Ab, Gr. Awo. Jun.—from Awo, ap'. Tooke says, “I imagine that Of (in the Go. and A.S. Af), is a fragment of the Go. and A.S. Afara, posteritas; afora, proles; that it is a noun s. and means always,—consequence, offspring, successor, follower, &c.” This presumes that the composite s. Af-ar-a, was in use before Af was used prepositively. See Fox. He further observes, “The Dutch are supposed to use Van in two meanings; because it supplies indifferently the places both of our Of and From. Notwithstanding which, Van has always one and the same single meaning, viz. beginning. And its use both for Of and From is to be explained by its different apposition. When it supplies the place of From, Van is put in apposition to the same term to which From is put in apposition. But when it supplies the place of Of, it is not put in apposition to the same term to which Of is put in apposition, but to its correlative. And between two correlative terms, it is totally indifferent to the meaning which of the two correlations is expressed. Of and For (he adds) differ as widely as cause and consequence. We may say: we are sick of hunger: or we are sick for hunger. In the one case, sickness is said to be the consequence of hunger; and in the other, hunger is said to be the cause of sickness.”

OFF, pr. Also written with a single f, and is probably the same word (Of) diff. app. It is one of the five prepositions for which Tooke refrains to account. Sw. Dan. & D. Af; Ger. Ab.

In usage opposed to On, or Upon; and is further app. to express—A motion or removal; separation or departure, disunion, distance.

To go off,—as a gun; where the charge is expelled or driven from the barrel, &c.

To get off, to come off well, (met.)—to get or remove to a distance, sc. from danger, misfortune, &c.; to escape.

To be well off,—to be removed or at a distance, sc. from danger or misfortune; to be in a prosperous state or condition.

Off hand,—as by some dexterity or adroitness, dexterously, promptly, on the spur of the moment; without premeditation.

OFFAL, s. Gen.—Any refuse; any thing cast or thrown away, as unfit for food; any thing worthless.

Sk.—that which falls off the table. Tooke,—the past p. of Fall-an, afestian, to fall.

OFFEND, v. To strike against; to as--ER. sault or assail; to hurt; to OFFER, v. s. To bear or bring before or -ABLE. in presence; to present; to pro-

-ER. pose; to hold forth, to exhibit;
-ING. to show; to show signs of; to
-TORY. bring before, sc. the altar as a sa-
-TURE.* crifice; to sacrifice; also to make proposal; to give; to bid.

This word appears to have been introduced into the A.S. with the version of the Bible. (See Lye.) The show-bread is—offring hlafas, offering loaves; in Wiclif “loaves of proposition.”

Offertory,—the act of offering: in the Mass, a hymn or anthem: in Protestant churches, a portion of the Communion Service during the offering. “As soon as the Sermon or Homily is ended, the Priest is directed ‘to return to the Lord’s Table and begin the Offertory, saying one or more of the sentences following as he thinketh most convenient in his discretion; i. e. according to the length or shortness of the time that the people are offering,” as it was worded in King Edward’s first Common Prayer and from thence in the Scotch one. These are in the place of the Antiphona or Anthem which we find in the old Liturgies after the Gospel, and which from their being sung while the people made their oblations at the altar were called Offertory.”—Wheatley. **Milton*.

OLD, ad. Old, or eld,—remained, staid,
-EN. continued, lasted, endured, delayed,
-NESS. deferred, sc. long, a long time, to great age; ancient.

Mr. Steevens says, that Old (he knows not why) was anciently a common augmentative in familiar language; perhaps merely because many things that have stood the trial of time are, and are esteemed the better, stronger; as old ale, old hay, &c. &c. In Lingua, 1607, quoted by Steevens, “There’s old moving among them.” In Dekker’s comedy, called If this be not a good Play the Devil is in it, (1612), “We shall have old breaking of necks.” And in Le Bone Florence, quoted by Boswell, “Gode-olde fyghting was there.” The word so used is not uncommon in Shak. See the Note to 2d Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 4. A. S. Eald; Dan. Ælde, old age, ældre, oldest, D. Oud; Ger. Alt, from A. L. Omnis, and sciens, p. p. of scire, to know.

OMNI-VOROUS,* ad. Devouring all and every thing.—**Burke*.

ON, pr. On, in A. S. is both In and Super, and in old Eng. writers we find In used where we should now use On. (See IN.)

The difference between the two is probably the result of usage, with the intention to distinguish; In being app. to union beyond or below the surface, and On, to union by mere imposition. i. e. by putting or placing one thing superficially in union or contact with another.

When equivalent to Upon, it is opposed to Off. See UPON.

It is used elliptically:—Keep on, sc. keep moving on the way. A little further on, sc. the way or course.

On-ward, (see BACKWARD, FORWARD),—keeping on, sc. the way; proceeding, advancing.

Onwardness,—advance, progress.

A. S. On, Eng. In, corrupted into an before a vowel, and a before a consonant, has given many ans to our language. On day, aday; on night, anight; on long, along, (qv.) &c. &c. See A.

Go. Ana; A. S. On; D. An; Ger. An. On, as well as Off, (qv.) is of unsettled etym. See Ex-ter.

ONDE, s. Tyrw. says,—“Sax. Zeal, malice.” A. S. Ond, onda, or anda, envy, malice, rancour, from the v. And-ian, to envy, to hate.

ONE, *ad. v.* s.* One,—single, singular, individual; used emph. when
-LY, or one is all; all-one, alone: used
ONLY, ad. av. also indefinitely, without specifying the particular individuality.
ONE-ING.***
-HEAD.† To one,—to unite, to join into one.
-MENT.†
-LINESS.† One-ment,—union, adunion. See ATONEMENT.

Once, (anciently written An-es, Anis, Anys, Ones, Onys, the genitive of An, An, or One,)—ones, (sub. time); that one time; that single and same moment of time.

Only, i. e. One-like, or, as anciently written, Onliche; like one, in the state or condition of one; of one being all; this one and no other. All hym one, (Gower,) hym alone, or all-one.

ONEROUS, ad. Burthensome, heavy, weighty.

Fr. Onereux; L. Onerosus, from Onus, a load or burthen; which Lennep derives from Ovis, tollo, et per metonymiam, sublatum gero. Ovis, or ovinus, is usually rendered prosum, utilitatem fero or affero. Ex-onerate.

ONION, s. A plant.

Fr. Oignon; L. Unio,—a bulbi unitate nomen habens, taking its name from the oneness of the bulb.—Martin.

ON-LESS, co. So Unless was anciently written, of which a large collection of examples may be seen in Tooke. He considers it to be Onless, the imperative of the A. S. v. Onlesan, to dismiss; and to mean dimittite, sive dimisso; dimiss this, or this being dimissed. Sk. also refers it (rather) to this A. S. v.; but without fixing upon the particular part. See LESS, and UNLESS.

ONO-MANCY,* s. -TICAL.* Prediction, or divination by names.—*Camden.

Fr. Onomantie; Gr. Ονομα, a name, and μαντεια, μαντεύεσθαι, to foretell, to predict.

ON-SET, s. i. e. A set on, assault, attack; also, something added or set on;—Brocket, who says,—“a dwelling-house and out-buildings” are so called:—perhaps the out-buildings to a dwelling-house.

ON-SLAUGHT, s. An attack, an assault:—(a slaughterous assault.)

A. S. On, sle-an, on-slag-an, to dash or strike against, (to slay.) See ANSLAUGHT.

ONTO-LOGY, s. “Ontology is a discourse of being in general, and the various and most universal modes or affections, as well as the several kinds or divisions of it. The word being here includes not only whatsoever actually is, but whatsoever can be.”—Watts.

Gr. Ontra, accusative plural of on, being, and λογος, discourse. Mod. L. Ontologia. Le Clerc employed this word in preference to Metaphysica, and seems to claim the invention of it: he defines it,—Scientia de ente in genere, ejusque proprietatibus.

ONYX, s. “Sudines saith, that the precious stone onyx hath a white in it resembling the naile of a man's finger.”—Pliny. Fr. & Sp. Onyche; It. Ice; L. Onyx; Gr. Ονύχ, unguis; a corneo unguis candore.

Ooze, v. s. -Y. Ooze is,—(Earth) wetted or washed; (lutum,) mud or mire; also water or other moisture slowly, sluggishly, or gently issuing forth, rising, or springing. And, To ooze,—

To issue forth, rise, spring, flow—slowly, sluggishly, or gently.

The ancient Britons (says Lye, from Baxter) by Asc, esc, iac, osc, and usc, (changed into As, es, os, or ous, and us,) meant water, gen.; and the Ger. Asche, aqua—præcipue fluens, (see AQUATIC,) is (Wach.) vox Celtica. But Lye also tells us that Ouse, indiscriminately written Is, oes, use, is in A. S. not only called Usa, but Wusa; which seems to lead directly to A. S. Wes-an, to wet, wesec-an, to wash, and wes, water. Tanners' ouse is the bark wetted or washed, steeped or soaked in water.

OPAL, s. -INE. A precious stone.

Fr. Opal-e; It. & Sp. o; L. Opalus. Of unknown etym.

OPAQUE, ad. s. By usage,—Shady, dark, -NESS. gloomy, obscure, cloudy.

OPACATE, v. Fr. Opac-que; It. & Sp. co; L. Opacus, which Scal. and Voss. derive from Ope, hoc est, terra; (Ops, Mater Deum); nam umbra et frigoris caplandi causa in subterraneis se specus addebat.

OPE, or OPEN, v. ad. To sever or separate. rate, ac. that which is close; to -ING. give entrance or passage; to uncover, to disclose; to uncover, to -LY. discover; to manifest, to explain; to expose, to begin or commence the exposition. Open, the ad., is thus,— Plain, evident, unclosed, uncovered, unprotected; and (met.)—Undisguised, sincere, unreserved, frank.

Open weather,—clear from clouds, not overcast, not condensed or constricted.

Open-headed, (in Chaucer;)—he saw her open-headed, i. e. with her head uncovered, &c.

OP-PUGN, v. To fight against; to strive,
-ANCY. or contend against, to attack, to
-ATION. oppose, to resist.
-ER. Fr. Oppugner; Sp. Opugnar; It. & L. Oppugnare, to fight against.

OPSI-MATHY, * s. "Opsimathis is too late beginning to learn."—Hale.

Gr. ὀψιμαθία, (μαθεῖν, to learn, ὀψε, late.)

OPTATIVE, ad. Optative,—that can or -ION. may choose; choosing, selecting.
-IONAL. Optiom,—choice, selection; pre-
-IVELY.* ference.—**Bp. Hall*.

Fr. Optier, to choose; optate, elect.—Cot. It. Optà-re, -tere; Sp. Opt-ar, -atire; L. Optare, which may be from Gr. ὀπτα, vel ὀπτομαι, quod est, video, considero; and thus, optare, proprie sit considerare, eligere; to consider, to elect, to look at, to choose. But see To Hope—the words hope, optare, opt-are, are probably the same in origin and radical meaning. Ad-option. Co-optation.

OPTIC, ad. Optic,—that can or may see.
-ICS. Optics,—the science of the pro-
-ICAL. perties of light and vision.
-ICIAN. Fr. Optique; Sp. -co; It. Optico; L. Optice; Gr. ὀπτικόν, from ὀπτεσθαι, to see. Di-Cat-optic. Syn-optic.

OPTIMACY, * s. Optimacy,—a select
-M-ISM. body; nobility; supremacy.
-IST. Optimist,—one who thinks every thing best as it is ordained.

Fr. Optim-isme, -iste; L. Optimus; ab opto, quoque optimum dicitur, quod electissimum; i. e. that which is most choice, or worthy of choice. See OPTION.

OPULENT, ad. Abounding in riches
-ENCE. or wealth; rich, wealthy, sc. to an
-ENCY. excess.

Fr. Opul-ent; It. & Sp. -ento; L. Opulens, opulentus, from Opes, opibus abundans, abounding in riches.

OR, term. Or, ore, is ere: Only (R. Brunne)
ORE, is early: Ord (Chaucer), is or-ed,
-LY. or'd. A. S. Ord; Ger. Ort; initium,
ORD. principium, cuspis, acumen. The front; the beginning, the point, the edge. The A. S. & L. Ora, the edge, the water's edge.

Or, our, the term,—also written Ar, Er. (See ERE, ER.) Our writing of these terms is capricious, e. g. author, honour, instructor, instructor. It appears also as the first syl-lyble of many words in L. Or-ire, or-igo, or-do, &c.—See Hickes, i. 115. Or, Lye says, in Composition, is privative; as Or-mod, sine mente: it may have been used to denote the beginning, the point of separation, severance, or departure; and thus attained the force of separation or division, difference or disjunction.

Ore, (A. S. Are; D. Eere.) is,—first in place, rank, station, &c.; and hence honour, glory. "By Christ's ore," (Chaucer,) by Christ's glory.

OR, co. In Go. Aiththan; A. S. Oththe; D. Of; Ger. Oder; aut, vel, sive. It is used to express separation or division, difference or disjunction. See OR, ORD, ante.

ORACLE, * s. v. The answer spoken or -CUL-AR. uttered by the gods; their priest
-ARLY. or priestess.
-OUS. Oracular, oraculous,—having or
-OUSLY. pretending to the authority of an oracle; authoritative; affecting or pre-tending to wisdom or foresight: having the ambiguity of an oracle; ambiguous; equi-voating.

Fr. Orac-le; It. -olo; Sp. -ulo; L. Oraculum, from Oracum, past p. of Orare, to pray: ab eodem orandi notione, (i. e. dicendi ore), deorum responsa dicuntur oracula.—Voss. Inest in his Deorum Oratio, (Cic. Top.) See ORATION.

ORAISON. See ORIZON.

ORAL, ad. -LY. Spoken or uttered by the mouth; by word of mouth.

And Orally, in Bp. Hall,—"That it should be corporally, carnally, orally present, and torn in pieces with our teeth;" i. e. "so present as to be received in the mouth."

L. Os, (i. e. or-s), oris, that which utters, throws forth, speaks; perhaps from Gr. ἔρ-ειν, to speak. See ORATION.

ORANGE, * s. A tree, and the fruit of it.
-ERY. Fr. Orange; It. Arancia; Sp. -TAWNEY, ad. s. Naranja; Low L. Aurantium; L. Aurata mala, χρυσά μήλα, golden apples, because of their golden colour.

ORATION, * s. v. Usually app. to—An
-OR. elaborate speech or harangue.
-ORY. An orator,—one who makes
-ORICAL. or utters such a speech; or
-ORIAL. an eloquent speaker. "An
-RESS. orator is he, that can or may
-RIX. speke or reason in every ques-
-ORIOUS.* tion sufficiently, elegantly, and
-ORIOUSLY.† to perswade properly, accord-yng to the dygnitie of the thyng that is spoken of, the opportunitie of tyme, and pleasure of them that be herers."—Sir T. Elyot.

Orator and Oratrix,—the male and female suitors in our courts of Equity.

Oratory, (Fr. Oratoire,)—a place, (closet, chapel, &c.) for prayer.

†Sp. Taylor. †Spelman.

Fr. Ora-tion, -leur; It. -zione, -zione; Sp. -cion, -dor; L. Ora-tio, -tor, from Orare, (ore, pro-ferre,) quod ab ore factum, (see Sched. in Lennep, in v. Op.) proprie significat ore precari,—to pray or beseech, by word of mouth: and thus,—the Fr. Ora-ison; It. -azione; Sp. -acion,—a prayer. Ad-Ex-Per-oration.

ORB, s. v. A sphere or circle; any round
-IC. or spherical body; a wheel; a
-ICULAR. circular motion or revolution.
-ICLE. Orbit is motion by Young as a
-IT. dim. of Orb.
-Y.*

**Chapman*. †H. More.

-ICULATION.† Fr. Orb; It. & Sp. Orbe; L. Orbis, a sphere or circle. Dis-Ex-

ORBATION, s. -BITY. Gen.—Any lack or want; privation. See ORPHAN.

Fr. Orbillé, orphanism; lack of parents, also want of children.

ORC, s. A kind of marine beast.

L. Orcæ, belluæ marinæ genus: quod Gr. Ὀρκα, estque orca ex ἀρχα. Holland (Plin. b. ix. c. 6,) writes the word with the L. term. Orcæ.

ORCHARD, s. Orchard is now app. to—
-ING. An inclosed plantation of, a yard
-IST. garden for, fruit trees.

Some of our old writers (Holland, North) write this word Hort-yard, (qv.) as if they would give a L. origin to the first syllable: the word is variously written in A. S. Ort-gæard, orc-gæard, orc-æard, orc-grd. Jun. and Lye think the first to be the most ancient, and that it is formed from Wort-yard, i. e. wyrt-yard, a yard or place prepared for worts or herbs; and in John, xviii. l. 26, we find Go. Aurigtards, aurigtarda, hortus, in A. S. Wyrt-tun, an inclosure for worts. Wyrt-gard.—Som. (See Town.) Lye would derive L. Hortus, from Ort or Wort. Wach. observes—that Auri or Ort in ancient writings denotes the same as Wyrt; and refers to the O. Ora, surgere, oriri, as the root. See Ox, and Ond.

ORCHESTRA, s. -TRE. That part of the theatre among the Greeks in which the chorus danced; among the Latins, in which the senators sat; in modern Eng. usage, where the musicians sit: also app. to the company or band of musicians.

Fr. Orchestra; It. Sp. & L. Orchestra; Gr. Ὀρχήστρα, from ὀρχεσθαι, saltare, to dance.

ORDAIN, v. To put, place, or set in
-ABLE. order; to dispose, appoint,
-ER. regulate, arrange, the order
-DIN-AL, ad. s. or method, the station, rank,
-ANT. or degree; to determine or
-ANCE. define, to settle or establish.
-ARY, ad. s. Ordinary,—settled, esta-
-ARILY. blished; regular, and, hence,
-ATE, v. ad. usual, common, vulgar.
-ATELY. An ordinary,—a settled or
-ATION. established officer; an offi-
-ABLE.* cer to whom some peculiar -ABILITY.† jurisdiction is ordained; a
-DONNANCE. settled sum or price; place where a settled sum or price is charged.

Ordinate,—regulated; well regulated; regular; direct.—**Hale*. †Sp. Bull.

Fr. Ord-onner, -inaire; It. -indare, -indale, -indario, -indato; Sp. -enar, -inal, -inario, -enado. In Fr. also, Ordinatif, (which Cot. renders Ordinative.) L. Ordin-are, -atum, -arius,—and in the Lower Ages Ordinavit; ordinale nomen, ordinem significans, primus, secundus, &c. signifying order or succession; as first, second, &c. Ordinare, from Ordo, ordinis. See Ox, Ond, and ORDEN. Co-Pre-Re-ordin. De-ordination. Extra-Un-ordinary. In-Sub-ordinate.

ORDEAL, s. -DALIAN. “The ordeal was an established method of trial among the Anglo-Saxons. It was practised either by boiling water or red-hot iron. The former was appropriated to the common people; and the latter to the nobility.”—Hume.

A. S. Ordæl; D. Oordeel, ordæl; Ger. Urteil. Spel. derives from or, magnum, and dæl, iudicium. Lye from or, (priv.) and dæl, differentia; an indifferent or impartial judgment. Hickeys thinks, that or is an emphatic prefix, as a and ge were; and that the v. Urdele, (ur, and dæl.) iudicare, was once in use.—Dissertatio Epistolaria, p. 149. It is probably or, primus, principalis, and thus (as Spel.) magnum. See Ox and Ond.

ORDER, s. v. To order,—to put, place,
-ER. or set in rank or station; as
-ING. going before or preceding,
-LESS. following or succeeding, going,
-LY, ad. av. being with, accompanying; to compose, to dispose; to arrange, to methodize; to direct, to rule, to regulate, to determine, to establish. And Order, s.—

The regular position, disposition, or arrangement; the rank or station; regular or established procession or succession; course, tenour, or series; rule, regulation, or regularity, direction or command. Order is also app. to—

A class of persons ordained or appointed to any civil or religious rank; to a brotherhood or fraternity.

Fr. Or-dre; It. -dine; Sp. -den; L. Ordo. Scal. (De Causis, c. 35) says, Ordinis nomen Græcum est. Dicebant militibus tribuni,—Hactenus tibi licet: hic conlatis; eo progrediere, huc revertere; ὁπον δὲ, inde ordo. Scal. adds,—“Sic et Græci τὰτιν ab aciei directione.” And further,—“Est igitur ordo, loci ratio, quâ quid aut præit, aut sequitur: vel ante, vel retro, vel dextrorsum, vel sinistrorsum, vel sursum, vel deorsum. ‘Ὀπον δὲ terminans hunc tibi do,’—Voas; who also suggests the Gr. Ὀπόρ, rectus. But see Ox, Ond. Dis-En-Mis-Re-Un-

ORDNANCE, s. or ORDENANCE. Guns of large size: great guns or cannon, distinguished from Musquetry.

Fr. Ordonnance,—gens ou compagnies d’ordonnances. “Gendarmes des ordonnances,—the ordinary men of arms of France; first reduced by Charles VII. (in the year 1444) into certain companies, and under particular orders.”—Cot. it was indispensable that these men should have been archers; (Fr. Artillier;) and in v. ARTILLERY, we have seen that from them the modern artillery took its name, and by them was conducted; and from these gens d’ordonnances, the single word ordonnance may have been app. to the guns now distinguished by the name of Ordnance.

ORDURE, s. -OUS. Filth or foulness, nastiness, dirt, dung.

Fr. Or-dure; It. -dura; lordenza, from the Fr. ad. Ord, which some derive from horridus, and others from ordidus.—Mén. Perhaps A. S. Oretl-an, deturpare.

ORE, s. App. to—Metal unrefined; to metal generally.

A. S. Ora; D. Oor, oore: Sk. writes it Oer,—metallum crudum, and supposes it may be the Fr. Or; L. Aurum, quia aurum est metallum, κατ' εἶδος. Jun.—from Gr. ὄρειν, to guard with care. (See Oa and letter E.) Ore was also the name of a coin introduced among the Anglo-Saxons by the Danes.

OREAD, s. A mountain nymph.

Gr. Ορειας; from ορος, a mountain.

ORFRAY, s. Broad welts, or gards of gold or silver embroidery laid on copes and other church vestments.—Cot. Gold embroidery.—Tyru.

Fr. Orfraie; Low L. Aurifragia, (frange d'or), a fringe of gold.—Du Cange.

ORGAN, s. v.* That with which any thing

-IC. may be made or done; the organs

-ICAL. of sense, by which we see, hear,

-ICALLY. &c. An instrument of music.

-IZE, v. Organic,—instrumental, work-

-ISM. ing, operating; acting as means

-IST. or instrument.

-IZATION. **Mannyngham*, 1681.

Fr. Organ-e; It. -o, -istore; Sp. -o, -isar; L. Organum; Gr. ὄργανον, from ὄργα, ecorga, from the obsolete εργ-ειν, to do or make. Dis-Re-Un-organise. In-organical.

ORGASM, s. App. to—Any sudden excitement or strong emotion.

Fr. Orgasme, Gr. ὄργασμος, from ὄργαζειν, incitare, instigare, to incite or instigate.

ORGIES, s. App. to—A feast of Bacchus; any feast of revelry or riot.

Fr. Orgies; L. Orgia; Gr. ὄργια, for which various etyms. are proposed. Απο της οργης, à furore, (bacchantium;) απο των ορων, à montibus, in which they were celebrated; αβειρ-ειν, arcere, because the uninitiated were driven from them; or perhaps οργα θεια, divine deeds or ceremonies.—See Foss.

ORGULOUS,* or ORGILLOUS,† ad. Proud, swelling.—**Berners.* †Shak.

Fr. Orgueilleux, -eil, pride, arrogance. Orgueille is used in A. S. version of Boethius, p. 41. Casen. derives from Gr. ὄργιλον, iracundus, from ὄργιζεσθαι, irasci.

ORI-CHALCH,* s. Mountain brass.

**Spenser.*

L. Aurichalcum, or Orichalcum; Gr. ὀρειχαλκος, ar montanum; from ορος, a mountain, and χαλκος, brass. But see Foss. in v. Aurichalcum.

ORIENT, ad. s. Rising, and, cons.,

-ENCY. shining, brilliant, lustrous,

-ENT-AL, ad. s. (as with the rays of the -ALISM. sun;) also Eastern, because

-ALIST. the sun rises in the quarter

-ALITY. we call East.

-NESS. Orientalism,—an idiom or form of speech peculiar to the Eastern languages.

Fr. Ori-ent; It. & Sp. -ento; L. Oriens; Gr. ὀρ-ειν, (see Oa, and Oan), to rise, or raise.

ORI-FICE, s. Any opening in form of a mouth; any opening; or perhaps more strictly app. to the superficial gap or opening.

Fr. Orief-e; It. & Sp. -io; L. Orieficium; from os, a mouth, and facere, to make or form.

ORI-FLAMBE,* s. "The great and holy standard of France; borne at first only in war made against the Infidels; but afterwards used in all other wars; and at length utterly lost in a battle against the Flemings."—Cot. **Fabyan.*

A banner so called, qd. aurea flamma, Fr. Ori-flambe.

ORIGAN, s. Bastard Marjoram.

L. Origanum; Gr. ὀρειγανον.

ORIGIN, s. Rise, spring, source, or -AL, ad. s. fountain; beginning; first or

-ALITY. primary state of being or exist-

-ALLY. ence; first issue or procession;

-ATE, v. derivation or descent.

-ATION. Fr. & It. Origine; Sp. -en; L. Or-igo; from or-iri, to rise. See Oa, and Oan. Ab-Un-

ORISON, s. ORAISON. A prayer; a supplication. The second syllable, though etymologically long, is by our poets usually made short; Dyer wanted it long, and has written it after the Fr.

Fr. Or-aison; It. -azioni; Sp. -acion, from L. Or-are, to pray. See ORATION.

ORIZONT,* s. i. e. Horizon, (qv.)

**Chaucer.*

ORLOGE,* s. i. e. Horologe, (qv.)

**Chaucer.*

ORLOP. See OVERLOOP.

ORNE,* v. To orn, or adorn, (qv.)—to

-AMENT, s. v. deck, dress, apparel, or attire

-AMENTAL. —beautifully; to beautify or

-ATE, ad. v. embellish, to decorate.

-ATELY. †Wiclif. †Joye. †Bala. Holm-

-ING.† shed.

-ATUBE.† Fr. Orn-er; Sp. -er; It. & L. Orn-are, which Voss. derives from Gr. ὄρα, time; (see Ere.) "Tempus æstatis, quo quæ maxime floret et viget," (Scheideus); the time when every one most esp. gains strength and beauty: thence ὄρα is app. to beauty. Ad-Sub-orn. Ex-ornation. Un-ornamented.

ORNITHO-LOGY, s. A discourse on

-IST. the natural history of birds.

-ICAL. Gr. ὀρνιθολογος; ornis, ornithos, a bird, from ορνειν, and this from ορνειν, to rise, and λεγειν, to discourse.

ORPED,* ad. ORPIMENT. An orped knight (Gower)—a knight whose garments glittered with gold, either true or base.—Sk.

"Orpiment,—a mineral digged out of the ground in Syria, where it lieth very ebb, and painters use it much: in colour it resembleth gold, but brittle in its substance like as glass stones."—Holland. Plinie.

**Gower. Fabyan.*

Fr. Oripeus, base gold.—Fr. & Sp. Orpiment; It. -ento; L. Auripigmentum. But Sk.'s explanation of Gower does not suit Fabyan: "He was reasonable of speche and well lettered, and orped." Hearne says—that Orped also signifies courageous, stout, manly, or manfully; and he produces two instances (from prose additions to R. Glouceter) of the word Orpedyche, or Orpedly; for the latter of which (he adds) 'tis manly in Caxton. Orpedlice in A. S. is interpreted—openly, manifestly.—Lye, and Soss.

ORPHAN, ad. s. Bereaved, deprived, of
-ANED. any thing; of children, parents,
-ANAGE. friends. See ORBIT.
-ALIN,<sup>2</sup> or <sup>1</sup>E. Hall. †Udal. †Drayton.
-ELIN.† Fr. Or-phénim, -phélin; It. -fano; Sp.
vor; (orbus, bereaved, deprived.) See Scheldius, in Lenæp, v. Ope.

ORT, s. Oret, or Ort, means—Any thing, something, made vile or worthless. (See Tooke.) Any worthless leaving or refuse.

Com. used in the plural, because usually spoken of many vile things together; the past p.
of A. S. v. Oret-an, turpare, vilefacere, deturpare. Jamieson suspects that Ort is the same word as Wort; and cites the prov. "E'enings worts are gude morning's foddering." In Ray,—
"Evening orts is good morning fodder."

ORTHO-DOX, ad. One whose opinion or
-Y. doctrine is right; right faith or -AL.<sup>2</sup> doctrine; in Religion, con-
-ALLY.<sup>2</sup> sistent with, according to the
-ALITY.† Scriptures; in Polemics, ac-
-LY.† cording to particular creeds.
-NESS.† **Milton.* †Cudworth. †Bacon.
-ASTICAL.† †Killingbeck. †Fox.

Fr. Orthogonal; Sp. -al; L. of the Low Ages,
Orthogonus; Gr. Orthogonios, formed from Gr.
Orthos, right, and gonia, an angle.

ORTHO-GRAPHY, s. App. to—The -ER. right mode of writing or spelling
-ICAL. words; and also in Architecture, to the description of the erect elevation of a building. "Orthographie, that is to say, the form and precise rule of writing set down by grammarians, he [Augustus] did not so much observe: but seemeth to follow their opinion rather, who thinke, Men should write according as they speake."
—Holland. Suetonius.

Fr. Orthographe; It. -sta; Sp. & L. Ortho- graphia; Gr. Orthographia, from orthos, right, and graphein, writing, describing.

ORTHO-LOGY, s. "The natural, and as it were the homogeneal, parts of grammar be two—orthology, and orthography:
in both which parts of it, God hath put his special hand; as even by the Heathen themselves is acknowledged in the first of them, orthology; in teaching men the right imposition of names: the second of them, orthography; in teaching them the rare invention of letters."—Fotherby. Athe- omania.

Formed of Gr. Orthos, right, and logos, a word.

ORTOLAN, s. A bird that frequents gardens, the hedges of gardens.

Men.

OSCILLATE, v. To move, as a pen-
-ION. dulum; to move backward and
-ORY. forward, this way and that; to waver.

Fr. Oscil-ler, -lation; Sp. -acion; L. Oscillo, which Voss. and Fras. Jun. think is obs and cillere, i. e. movere, to move; nam per aera librati movebantur.

OSCITANT, ad. Gaping, yawning;
-ANTLY. and, cons., idle, lazy.

-ANCY. Fr. Oscit-ation; Sp. -ancia; L. Osci-
-ATION. talio, oscitare, ab ore ciendo, from moving the mouth, the jaws of the mouth.

OSCLARY, s. i. e. For kissers.

**Latimer.*

From Osculum, a kiss. In-osculate.

OSIER, s. Fr. Osier, the low Water-willow.
Perhaps (Sk.) from Gr. Oieov, salix. Salmastius forms oieapiov, from oieov, thence hausarium, and from that Fr. Osier.

OSPRAY, s. OSSIFRAGE. A bird, so called, because of its strength to break bones (frangere ossa).

Fr. Ofrays, ossifragus, L. Ossifraga avis.

OSSEOUS, ad. Ossify,—to become bone,
-ICLE. or bony.

-IFY, v. Ossificorus,—devouring bones.

-IFIC. Osteology, (Gr. Osteon, and logos.)

-IFICATION. sw, to discourse,)—a discourse

-IVOROUS. on the bones.

OSTEO-LOGY. Brown (Christian Morals) uses
-LOGER. Ossaceous met. — "The osseous and solid part of goodness."

Fr. Oss-eus, -ifer; It. -oso; L. Ossesus, from os, ossis, a bone; Gr. Osteon, osteon para to osto, steon, kai osteon to aktion tes staseos, that by which we are enabled to stand. See in Lenæp.
Ex-ossation.

OSSES, s. Holland renders—bonis omi-nibus, "with good osses and luckie forespeaking's:"—he explains his own meaning —"Osse be words cast forth at unware,

OSTEO-MANTY, s. Divination by bones;
a word apparently invented for the occasional.

Gr. Osteon, a bone, and mantia, divination.

OSTIARY, s. Ostuary was formerly the name of the keeper or porter of the church door; also app. to the outlets of a river from its own channel, whence it enters the sea.

L. Ostarius, a door-keeper, from ostium, a door or entrance.

OSTLER, s. Also written Hostler.

App. to the servant at an inn who has the care of the horses.

Fr. Hostellier, a host, (qv.)

OSTRACISM, s. A mode of banishment, acize, v. ment practised at Athens, and -EACEOUS,* so named, because the name of the person to be banished was inscribed upon a shell given in by the voters. Potter calls it a tile.—Cudworth.

Fr. Ostracisme; It. & Sp. mo; L. Ostracismus; Gr. Οστρακισμός, from οστράκον, a shell.

OSTRICH, s. A bird.

Fr. Austruche; It. Struzzo; Sp. Avestruz; L. Struthio; Gr. Στραυτός, a sparrow; but why the Ostridge was called στραυτός, or στρουτοκαμηλός, is not satisfactorily explained.—See Foss. In v. Passer.

OT-ACOUSTIC,* s. App. to—an instrument to assist hearing.—Hammond. Grew.

Gr. Οτακοωνειν, to hear with the ears, to listen attentively; οτα, the ears, and ακουστικός, (whence acoustics), that can or may hear.

OTHER, av. App. to express—Some one more; some one different. In our old writers, Either.

Otherwise, or otherways,—in a different wise or guise; in a different way.

Otherwhile,—at a different time.

Otherwhere,—at a different place, where.

Go. Antar; A. S. Other; D. And-er; Sw. -dre, glus, alter. Of unknown etym. See On.

OTIOSE,* ad. Leisurely, idle, indolent.

**Palsey*.

It. Otioso; L. Otiosus, from otium. See NEGO-TIATE.

OTTER, s. An animal.

A. S. Oter, olor, otter, otyr; D. & Ger. Otter; Sw. Utter; Dan. Odter, which some derive from L. Lutra, the same animal; others from Gr. Υδωπ. Ibre observes, that Isl. Udr also signifies water, the proper element of this animal. In Fr. it is Loutre, It. -ra, Sp. Lutra, nutra.

OVAL, ad. s. Having the form or shape

-ARY. of an egg; like an egg.

-ARIOUS. Fr. & Sp. Oval; It. -ale; L. Ovum, an -ATE. egg.

Ovation, s. "At the second triumph, called the ovation, he onely sacrificed a mutton, which the Romans call in their tongue ovem, and therefore it was called ovation."—North. Plutarch.

Fr. Ova-tion; It. -xione; Sp. -cion; L. Ovatio, from ovis, a sheep.

OUCH, s. NOUCH. Niches or notches of gold, (in which the onyx or any other stones were set,) or bits of gold niched or notched in, or inserted in niches or notches.

See the commentary on Shak. Hen. IV.

Pt. ii. Act ii. sc. 4.

Tyrw. thinks Nouch to be the true word, Ouch the corruption; and he cites Du Cange, to show that Tent. Nuschis means fibula, a clasp or buckle; but how it so means, neither he nor Du Cange explains. Nouch and Ouch are, perhaps, both correctly used, as they appear to have the same, or very nearly the same meaning; the first, from Fr. Niche, a notch; and the second, from Fr. Oche, also a notch, from ocher, hacher, to hack, incider, to cut into. Sk. derives ouches (vox facialis, as he calls it) from this Fr. v. Ocher, incidere, och, sena incisura. And thus ouch, or nouches, (sc. of gold.)

OVEN, s. A place, (a fire or furnace,) heaved or raised.

Go. Auan; A. S. Ofne; D. Oren; Ger. Ofen; Sw. Ugn; Dan. Ovn. Wach. thinks Go. Auan or suchn, a corrupt pronunciation of ofa; and Jun. derives ofa from Gr. Ινvor, furnus. Tooker thinks A. S. Ofne, and Eng. Oven, are the past p. of A. S. Heaf-onse, Eng. To have; the regular past tense being A. S. Haf, hof; Eng. Have; and by the addition of the term. en, was formed the pt. Hafen, hofen, hosen, and by the mere omission of the aspirate, Afen, ofen, oven, and meaning heaved,—raised or lifted up.

OVER, ad. av. pr. -EST. See ABOVE.

Over lip,—the upper lip.

Overest slop, (Chaucer),—his uppermost slop.

Over is much used in composition. In some words it is used merely with the same force that it would have if it followed the v; as to over-come us, to come over us; to over-blow, to blow over; to over-gance, to glance over; to over-flow, to flow over (superfluere;) and hence the application when a superfluity or excess is intended; Over is then equivalent to—too much, more than, more than sufficient or needful, and may, when pref. to ads. and avs. be supplied by the word too, (which we do not attach by the hyphen,) as over-bold, too bold; over-credulous, too credulous; over-earnestly, too earnestly, or with an excess of boldness, credulity, earnestness. In these, Over is an av. and need not be affixed.

In ss.—over-greatness, excessive greatness; over-moisture, excessive moisture;—in these, Over is an ad. and need not be affixed.

In vv.—to over-go, to exceed, to surpass; over-do, to do to excess; over-burden, to burden to excess.

It is sometimes used with a suband. of the v: The storm was over, i. e. gone, past over. In some words the application is cons.; as To over-come, to come over, sc. a country, a territory, with superior power, and thus,—to subject, to subdue, to conquer. To over-throw, as in wrestling, to throw over, and thus, to gain the superiority, the victory; to over-throw, sc. a tower, and cons. to destroy. To over-hear, to over-reach, (met.) to over-take, require more particular explanations.

Manifestly from Gr. Υπερ, say the etymologists; but of Gr. Υπερ they give no etym. It is, itself, probably of Northern origin.—See Jamieson, Hermes Scythicus, c. 9. In A. S. Ufa, ufra, ufamast, are the ss. Altus, altior, altissimus. Ufera, afara, ofer,—altior; over or upper. Ufemast,—altissimus; upmost, uppermost, upperest, overest. In Ger. Auf, uber, oben, ober, oberste; D. Op, opfer, over, opperate, overide; Sw. Uppr, up, oofwer, oofra, oofwerde, oppert; Dan. Op, over, yppest, överst. Tooke supposes A. S. Ufon, ufa, (from the comparative of which our pr. and ad. Over.) means top or head, and to be orig. derived from the same source as head, i. e. A. S. Heaf-an, heaf-an, to heave, to lift up. See To HEAVE.

OWE, v. To owe is—to possess, or hold. OWN, ad. v. or have, or keep in possession. OUGHT, v. In Beau. & F.—“I know not how long I shall owe it;” i. e. keep it, have it; also—to have, keep, with-hold or retain (de-habere, debere) what belongs to, is due to, another. In Wiclif, “How much owist thou my lord?”—how much hast thou, holdest or retainest thou, that belongs to, is the property of, is due to my lord, which ought at some time to be delivered or paid to him.

“The ower of heaven,” (Bp. Hall.)—the owner, master, ruler.

To own,—formed upon the past p. Owen, and meaning possessed. “The carle that owned the good,” (Tuberv.)—who had or possessed them, or the property, or right to property, in them; who claimed or declared them to be his. And hence, To own is gen.—

To declare, to avow, to profess, to confess, acknowledge.

Ought,—also the preterperfect and past p. of Owe, and used likewise in the present tense, as a v. formed upon them:—“The one ought five hundred pence,” (Wiclif.) i. e. owed. “The man that ought the dog,” (North,) i. e. owned. “Neither sones owen to treasures,” (Wiclif.) i. e. ought. “The fairest dames the Turkish empire owes and bows to,” (Massinger,) i. e. own:

Ought, as now used:—“The children ought not to lay up for the fathers;” that is, owe it not, it is not their duty; are not bound or obliged, or required by duty on their own part; by right of others. And thus, Ought,—

To be bound or obliged; to behave or be behoveful; to be needful or necessary.

Own,—possessed, suband. property,—and hence used substantively,—property; any thing appropriated to, or peculiarly and exclusively belonging to, due to, or the right of. Used adjectively, it is emphatical, as—my child, my own child.

Sc. Alp-h; Go. -an; A. S. Ap-an, -nan; Ger. Eig-en; D. -enen; Sw. Ega, habere, possidere; proprium esse vel habere, tenere, retinere. Owe is formed from A. S. Ag-en, by softening the guttural g into w, ow, owe. The regular past p. is owen, own, also owed, owt, ought. Own, (contr. owen),—Go. Alp-in, alin; A. S. Ap-en; D. Eygen; Ger. Eigen; Sw. Egen, proprium. Mis- Un-

OWL, s. A bird.

—ET. A. S. Ule; D. Uyl; Ger. Eule; Sw. —ISH. Uggle, from A. S. Gyllen, gallan, ululare, to yell, to howl. See Howlar.

OWLER, s. —ING. Blackstone (book iv. c. 12) seems to intimate that owling (the offence of transporting wood) received its name from the time when it was usually committed, viz. the night, when owls fly; by others it is thought to be a corruption of woolling, ooling, owling.

OWN. See OWL.

OX, s. —EYED. An animal.

Go. Auke; A. S. Oxe; D. Oese; Ger. Ochs; Sw. & Dan. Oxe. Jun derives from Aufzuehen, auferre, (Ger. Auchen, auferre, multiplicare,—Wach; Go. Aukan; A. S. Eac-an, to eke,) because the Ox, pater armentum, increases the herd and the wealth of his owner. Ithre rather believes, from Ox, a yoke, the ox being—animal subjugale. His difficulty is to deduce fat, fug-um, and owism, bos, from the same root: in the latter word we may suppose the guttural k softened into g, and then entirely suppressed. If Ithre were right, a bullock would be a bull yoked or used for the yoke. Yoke itself is derived by Tooke from the same A. S. v. Eac-an, ecan, to add, to join; ge-ican, to yoke. Ox (probably so called from the size to which he grows) is not now app. to the pater armentum, but to the bull after he is incapacitated from being so.

OX-LIP, s. A plant.

So called from some likeness in the flowers to the lips of the ox, or from the grateful scent of the flowers.—Sk.

OYER, s. OYEZ. O yes, the word of the crier requiring silence, from Fr. Oyez, audite, Hear ye; which corresponds with the proclamation of the Athenian crier, akoue aya.—Sk. Fr. Oufir, audire, to hear.

OYSTER, s. A shell fish.

D. Estor; Ger. Auster; A. S. & Sw. Ostra; Fr. Huître; It. Ost-ria, —rica; Sp. -la; L. Ostrea, Gr. Oestreon. All supposed to be of Gr. origin, either from oerreo, a bone, or oestreon, a shell.

P.

P, says B. Jonson, breaketh softly through the lips: it is called by Wilkins a non-spiritous or breathless consonant, of which he calls P the incassation, as V is of B. It is but slightly distinguished in its pronunciation from B; the latter requiring a stronger compression of the larynx. See B.

PABULOUS.* Feeding, having or supplying food or nourishment; nutritious, alimental.—Brown.

From L. Pabulum, which some think to be, q. pascibulum, from pascere, to feed; Voss. derives immediately from Gr. Itam, pasco, as pabula from paon. (Pabulum is sometimes used in works of science.)

PACE, v. s. —ER. To move step by step, or gradually; to move or pass on; to surpass, to move or cause to move in regulated or measured steps.

A pace,—a step or gradation; degree of swiftness in motion or progression.

A pace, (passus,)—the distance measured by the extension of the foot from point to point in walking: by computation, —five feet.

Fr. Pas; It. & Sp. Passo; L. Passus, from passum, past p. of pandere, to open, to stretch open; propriè dicitur de pedibus passis, of the feet opened or extended, sc. in walking.

PACIFY, v. To bring or restore to —PIC. peace; to still, to calm, to —PIC-AL. quiet, to tranquillize. —ATION. Bp. Hall. —ATOR. Fr. Pacifier; Sp. -car; It. & L. Pacificare; to put or bring to a state of peace, or quiet. L. Pax, paxis. See PAT. Re-Un- Also Im-pacable.

PACK, v. s. To put together; to bind or —ET, s. v. fasten up.

—ING. To pack cards, simply means to put cards together in a pack, heap, or bundle; but by gamblers and others they may be put together fraudulently: ("Shee has packt cards with Cæsar,"—Shak.) and hence the expression "to pack a jury." And hence, further, To pack may mean—to defraud, to cheat, to impose upon; and a pack may be app. to—

Persons combined for purposes of fraud, cheating, or imposition; and also to any individual of the party. See PATCH.

To pack off,—elliptically—to pack up the goods, and go off or away.

Packings, — fraudulent combinations; fraud, cheating, imposition.

Packet,—a small pack or parcel.

The vessel by which packets (sc. of letters) are conveyed is called—the packet.

D. & Ger. Pack-en; Sw. -a; Dan. Pakker; Fr. Empaqueter, paquet; Sp. Pa-ca, -queto; Tooke, from A. S. Pac-an, -cean, "To deceive by false appearances, imitation, resemblance, semblance, or representation, to counterfeit; to delude, to illude; to dissemble, to impose upon;" but no simple v. could mean so much intrinsically, and it is probable that some v. whence the D. Ger. Dan. Sw. and Eng. have descended, existed in the A. S.—meaning, as those D. Ger. Dan. Sw. and Eng. do, to put together, to bind or fasten up together; and that the false appearances which caused the deception were effected by the manner in which the package was performed, the shape, or form, or position, the hue, colour, or complexion, thereby given. From this v. Pac-an, is the Northern and Sc. Pauky or Pawky—aly, cosening. See Jamieson and Gross. Re-Un-

PACK, or PAX-WAX, s. "Along each side of the neck of large quadrupeds, runs a stiff robust cartilage, which butchers call the pax-wax."—Paley.

PACT, s. A bargain, contract, or agreement.

—IONAL† **Fox. Prynn.* †Sanderson.

Fr. Pact, pacte; It. Patto; Sp. Pacto; L. Pactum, from pangere. Pango was anciently written pago or paco, which Voss. derives from the Dor. Παγ-ω, quod tum Agere notat, tum componere; which signifies to fix, and also to put or set together, to settle. Com-Im-

PAD, v. s. —DER. To move along the path; to move or pass on the way or road; to tread or trample a way or road; and, cons. to level it. See PAD, infra.

A padder,—one who goes on the path or road, sc. to waylay passengers, to rob them; hence a robber is so called, (a foot-pad.)

A. S. Pethian, to path; qd. pathed, path'd, pa'd, pad.

PAD, s. Anything flattened, or laid flat, (straw, wool, or paper.)

Perhaps (Sk.) contracted from Sp. Pajado, and this from paja; L. Palca, straw; s. pad of straw would then be a straw of straw. It is more probably from the A. S. Pethian, to path; and, cons. to tread flat, to flatten.

PADDLE, v. s. —ER. To move or push along or about in the water, as ducks or other aquatic birds do with their feet; to move or push along gently, or by touching gently on the surface; to touch or handle gently.

A paddle,—any thing to paddle with; and also any thing formed in breadth and flatness resembling such paddle.

Fr. Patouiller, to paddle or dabble in with the feet, from Fr. Patis, a foot, or that which treads or tramples upon, from A. S. Pethian, to path. See PAD.

PADDOCK, s. A toad.

A. S. Pad; D. Padde; It. Botta.

PADDOCK, s. App. to—A small inclosure of land.

Corrupted (Lye) from Parruck. See PARR.

PADLOCK, v. s. A lock for a pad gate;—meaning, it may be supposed, a gate opening to a path.—Thomson.

Sk. from D. Padde, serm habitum.

PADUA-SOY, s. A silk (soye) originally manufactured at Padua.

PÆAN, s. Gr. ἰαῶν, a name given to Apollo. A hymn in honour of him, and also of other gods, usually sung upon occasions of triumph, was likewise so called.

PÆONY, s. —IED. "As touching Paonie, it is one of the first hearbes that were ever known, and brought to light, as may appear by the author or inventor thereof (Pæon), whose name it beareth still."—Holland. Plinie. L. Pæonia.

PAGAN, ad. s. "Whereas religion did —IC. first take place in cities; and in —ICAL. that respect was a cause why the —ICALLY. name of Pagans, which properly —ISH. signifieth a country people, came to be used in common speech for the same that infidels and unbelievers were."—Hooker. —LY. Pagan is used with great latitude as a term of abuse, contempt, &c.

**Cudworth.*

Our old authors write it Pæon, Pægen, and also Painin, &c.

Fr. Pagen; It. & Sp. -geno; L. Pagenus, a villager, a peasant, from Pagus, a village, from the Gr. Doric Παγ-ω for πηγ-ω, a fountain; pageni,—quasi ex uno fonte potantes. See HEATHEN.

PAGE, v. s. -INAL. App. to—the whole leaf or folium; and afterwards to each side of the leaf.

Fr. Page; It. Sp. & L. Pagina; from pangere, anciently pagere, to fix, because formed of papyrus, fixed, or compacted together.

PAGE, **v. s.* App. by Chaucer to—A boy-child, a boy or young male servant; a page of honour, a boy or youth attending upon persons of rank.—**Shak.*

Fr. & Sp. Page; It. Paggio. Sk. and others derive from Gr. Παις, which among the Greeks denoted not only a boy but a servant. Casen.—from Pedagogium. Boethornius,—from Bagoes, an attendant on foot of the king among the Persians and Macedonians. Reland,—from the Turkish Peck. Wach.—from the Sw. Poika, a little boy. (See Men. and Wach.) Tooke says, that "as servants were contemptuously called harlot, varlet, vaiet and knave; so they were called pack, patch, and page." He produces two instances, one from Dives and Pauper, and the other from History of Prince Arthur, to show that the office was not originally one of honour; and derives the word (page) from the A. S. Pac-an, to pack, and cons. to impose upon. See TO PACK, and PATCH. It is not uncommon also to call a boy—a rogue.

PAGEANT, v. s. -RY. Usually app. to—A representation or exhibition of a showy or splendid kind; to—allegorical representations.

The v.—To exhibit; and (as in Shak. Tr. & Cr.) to exhibit in derision or mockery, to mock.

Pageant (Tooke) is, by a small variation of pronunciation, merely the p. p. Paecand, of the v. Pac-an, paec-an, to deceive by false appearances, imitation, resemblance, semblance or representation: to counterfeit; to delude; to illude; to dissemble; to impose upon. He traces the changes thus,—Paecand, pacheand, pacheant, pageant.

PAIL, s. -FUL, s. A kind of vessel.

In Sp. Pella is a great bowl or pail; in Fr. Paille, a small pan; and in It. Padella, a frying pan. Casen. derives from L. Pateila, from patere, to open; all having their applications from the openness or expansiveness of the vessel or utensil.

PAIL-MAIL. See PALL-MALL.

PAIN, v. s. To torture; to punish; and -FUL. cons.—to toil, labour, or work -FULLY. hard or diligently at: (with -FULNESS. less force,) to toil, to labour. -ING. Pain, the s. is app. to— -LESS. The feeling or sensation caused -LESSNESS. by torture, or torment; and, -ABLE.* (also with less force) to uneasy, disagreeable, displeasing sensations or feelings; to—

That which is imposed or inflicted as a punishment or penalty; to—

Toil, labour, or work; carefulness, diligence, or industry.

Painful,—full of pain, misery, or wretchedness; miserable, wretched, distressing; and so Evelyn uses Painable—full of toil, labour, or difficulty; toilsome, laborious, difficult:—full of labour, diligence, industry, carefulness; laborious, diligent, industrious, careful. And so Chaucer uses Penible.—**Evelyn*.

D. Peina, pisen; Ger. Pein, peina; Sw. Pina, s. and v.; Dan. Pinar, pine; Fr. Peine; It. & Sp. Pena; from A. S. Pisan, to quere, to cruciate, punire. Sk. and others derive even the A. S. from the L. Parna; Gr. Πονηρ. Tooke,—the L. and Gr. from the A. S.

PAINIM, that is Pagan, (qv.) Fr. Payen, paenisme.

PAINT, v. s. Paint, s.—Usually app. to -ER. a coloured substance. The v.— -ERSHIP. To form or fashion, delineate, -ING. describe, or portray, sc. the shape, -LESS. colour, resemblance, or representation of any thing. -URE. sentation of any thing.

To colour, or cover with paint or colouring substances; to decorate or adorn with colour.

Fr. Peindre; Sp. Pintar; It. & L. Pingere; which Scal. (de Causis, c. 87.) derives from Gr. Περνν, ius. From Περνν would come pingere, and then, with the omission of the aspirate, pingere:—pingere, est exprimere imitatione veram rem. Voss. prefers Πινω, quod tabulum signat, in qua pingitur. See PICTURE.

PAIR, v. s. To assort and place together equal things; things suited or adapted for an effect; to match, sc. in twos, braces, couples.

Fr. Pair; It. Pare, paio; Sp. & L. Par, equal: though now app. to a brace or couple, (words which themselves are not by their intrinsic meaning restricted to the number two.) Pair, as in Bacon and B. Jonson, (who call a pack of cards a pair of cards) and in common speech in the West of England, may with propriety be used of any number of equal things, any number of peers. Disim-Un.

PAIR, or PEIR, **v.* To make or become -ER.† less or worse; to lessen, reduce, -ING.‡ or diminish, sc. the quantity or -MENT.‡ quality, bulk or size; the value; and, cons. to hurt, to injure.

Bp. Hall writes, Peare, ad. Ap. Em. **Chaucer.* †Wiclif. ‡Cabbala.

Palatium*; the name of one of the hills upon which Rome was built; and, because from the earliest times the seat of government, and residence of the (princes or) chief men, app. — as above.

PALATE, v. s. App. to—The roof of the -ABLE. mouth; the sense of taste. -IAL. To palate,—to taste, to suit, to -INE. agree with the taste.

Fr. Pal-ais; It. -ado; Sp. -adar; L. Palatum; of uncertain origin. Un-

PALE, v. s. In Heraldry, a straight stripe, resembling a pale. Pallet,—the dim. of pale, (qv.)

PALE, v. s. To inclose or surround with -IFICATION. pales, stakes, posts, rails: -ISADE. gen.—to inclose or surround. -ISADO. Fr. Pal; It. & Sp. Pal-o; Fr. -sade; It. -izata; Sp. -izada; from L. Palus, (perhaps pagulus, from pag-ere, to fix.)—See PALE. Chapman translates, ἔρκος οὐροῦ—thy pale of ivory. Em. Im. Inter.

PALE, v. ad. or PALL, v. Pale is opposed -EDNESS. to red or ruddy; whitish or ap- -NESS. proaching to white. Also to - -ISH. brightness or strength of colour; -Y. faint, dim, wan. Pallid has a PALL-ID. similar usage. -IDLY. Pale, v. (which Chaucer and -IDNESS. Phaer write Pall)—to be or be- -OR. come or cause to be pale or wan; faint, spiritless. See APPAL.

Fr. Pale; It. Pál-ido; Sp. -ido; L. Pallidus; from pallere, which Voss suggests may be from Gr. Παλιν-ειν, humectare, conspergere, albefacere; to wet or moisten, to besprinkle, to whiten. Ap-Be. Also Im-pallid. See PALL.

PALEOUS, ad. Strawy, chaffy. From L. Paleus; the ear, straw, and all together threshed and beaten upon a paved floor, was so called.—Pliny, b. xviii. c. 10.

PALESTRAL, ad. Palestrall plais, in Chaucer, (says Jun.) are palestrall games (ludi palestrici) which were celebrated at the funeral rites of the great.

PALET, s. In Eng.—The broad, thin board, or other substance, used by the painter for mixing his colours.

Fr. Palette; It. -a, are app. to the various artists distinguished by a superficial breadth; and are derived from L. Pala, a tool similar to a spade or mattock, by the broad part of which the earth is turned or dug.

PALETTE, s. App. by Skelton to—The ball or crown of the head.

Fr. Peiole, a little ball; L. Pila.

PALFREY, s. A horse led by the bridle; a lady's horse led by the squire.

Fr. Pal-freys; It. -afreno; Sp. -afren. The etymologists have written largely about this word: it appears clearly to be composed of the three words, par le frein.—Nicoh. See Men.

PALIN-DROME, s. App. to—Words or sentences which, when read backwards, have the same succession of letters.

Gr. Παλινδρομία, recurrens; παλινδρομεν, recurrens; from παλιν, retro, and δρμεν-ειν, currere, to run back.

PALIN-ODE, s. A recantation, contrary song, unsaying of what hath been said.—Col.

Fr. Palinodie; L. It. & Sp. Palinode; Gr. Παλινωδία, (παλιν, rursus, retro; and ᾠδή, cantus.)

PALL, v. s. -IAMENT. App. to—A covering, cloak, or mantle; e. g. a cloak of an archbishop, pope, &c.; a cloak or covering of the dead. "This palle is an indument that every archebyssshop must haue, and is nat in full auctoritie of an archebyssshop tyll he haue recyued his palle [of the pope,] and is a thyng of whyte lyke to the bredeth of a stole."—Fabyan.

To pall,—to cover, cloak, involve.

R. Brunne writes Pallion.

Fr. Paille; It. & Sp. Palla; L. Pallium, vestis, quæ supernè iungitur. Of uncertain etym.

PALL, v. s. To wane, to decay, to dull or deaden, to grow or become senseless, tasteless, or insipid; cloving or surfeiting; to clog, to surfeit.

Sk. thinks from Fr. Appallir, pallescere, to grow or become pale. It is probably a cons. usage of the v. To pale, to appale, or appal, (qv.) And see PALL, v.

PALLET, s. Now app. to—Any poor or hard bed.

Mins. and Jun. derive from Fr. Paille; L. Pales, straw; qd. stratum paled.

PALLIATE, v. ad. To cloak or cover; -ION. to conceal, to hide; and, cons., -IVE, ad. s. to disguise, or give a false appearance to; to extenuate, to mitigate.

"To palliat, i. e. to cover. And such cures be called palliative, which search not to the root and cause, but give a show only of cure; as when a sore is healed up aloft, and yet festereth underneath: and so sweet pomanders doe palliate a stinking breath, occasioned by a corrupt stomach or diseased lungs, and such like."—Holland. Plinie.

Fr. Pallier; It. -itare; Sp. -iar; L. Palliatius, dressed with a cloak or mantle (pallium).

PALL-MALL, s. Also written Pail-mail, and Pell-mell.

"A sticke with a mallet at one end to play at a wooden ball with. Also, the name of such a game."—Florio. Also, the name of the place where this game was played. See MALL.

Fr. Pail-maille; It. -amaglio.

PALM, s. A tree. App. met. to—Victory;

-ER. because a crown of palm was placed -ETTO. upon the head of the conqueror.

-Y. Palmary, (L. Palmaris,)—worthy -ARY. of the palm, prize, or victory; having superior merit or excellence.

Palmer, (a baculus palmarum,)—from the staff of the palm which they used to bear when returning from the Holy War. See PILGRIM.

Fr. Palme; L. It. & Sp. Palma. The name is said to have been given to the tree because the spread or expansion of the branches bears a resemblance to the palm (palma) of the hand.

PALM, v. s. The hand thrown open or -ATED. unfolded.

-IPEDE. Palmistry or Chiromancy, (qv.).

-IPEDOUS. divination by inspection of the

-ISTER. hands. From the roguish tricks

-ISTRY. of the pretenders to this art, To palm is—

To trick or play a trick, to impose; to pass or practise a trick, imposition, or delusion. More restrictedly, To palm is—

To hold or keep in the palm; to touch with the palm, to handle.

Palmated is app. in Natural History, as palmiped or palmipedous, in Brown and Ray, i. e. whole or fin-footed.

Fr. Palme; L. It. & Sp. Palma; Gr. Παλαμή, perf. pass. of παλλειν, conculcare; qd. excussa, seu explicata manus.

PALPABLE, ad. That may be touched,

-ABLY. or felt, or perceived; tangible,

-ABILITY. sensible, perceptible, evident,

-ATION. manifest.—Glanville. Wats.

Fr. & Sp. Palpab-le; It. -ile; L. Palpabilis, that may be touched, felt, handled; from palpare, to touch, and this, perhaps from Gr. παλαφ-ειν, tangere, contractare, to touch, to handle. See Poss. Im-Sup.

PALPITATE, v. -ION. To move quickly; to beat frequently, (more frequently than the natural pulsation.)

Fr. Palpit-er; Sp. -or; It. & L. Palpitare; from Gr. παλλ-ειν, movere, to move.

PALSY, s. -IED. Contracted from Paralysis, (qv.)

Fr. Palasine, relâchement de nerfs, (Roquefort); tremblement de nerfs, (Lacombe). Gr. Παραλυσις, resolutio, sc. nervorum, λυ-ειν, solvere.

PALTER, v. -TRY. App. to—Cowards; men of mean, dastardly spirit; and then to any thing mean or dastardly. And To palter,—

To use false pretences, make trivial or frivolous excuses; to equivocate; to act or speak ambiguously; to fritter away.

Tooke, with Salmasius, Voss., Ferrarius, and Sk., in opposition to Men. and Wach.—think Poltron and Poltry to be formed from Pollice frangi, qđ. poltrones; those who maimed or cut off their thumb (pollex), to disable themselves from, and consequently to escape, military service. That such was no uncommon fact, is matter of historical notoriety. See POLTRON.

PAMPER, v. To nurse or foster, to -EDNESS. cherish, luxuriously; to feed -ER. with luxuries and delicacies; to -ING. indulge to an excess of refinement.

Fr. Pampr; L. Pampinus, a vine leaf. Fr. Pamprer, to fill, furnish, or cover with vine leaves; and hence, cons., to trala or nurse into luxuriant growth. Over-

PAMPHLET, s. ad. Now usually app. -ING. to a few printed sheets, merely -EER. stitched together.

Chaucer applies it to his Testament of Love. Ascham, to Sir T. More's Life of Richard the Third.

Various etyms. have been suggested for this word:—Par un fil, as if held together by a thread; Papine filata, a threaded page; stitched together with thread. D. Pampier, or papier, paper: as if mere paper, uncovered or unbound.

PAN, s. -ICLE. App. to a vessel to hold meats, &c.; to the part affixed to a gun to hold powder; to a part of the head or skull, to inclose the brain.

A. S. & D. Pan-ne; Sw. -na; Dan. -de; Ger. Pfanne. Wach. derives from A. S. Fon, capere, to take or hold: others from L. Pastina: in this latter case we should find it in Fr. It may be from A. S. Fynd-an, to pen or pin, to inclose, to contain, to hold.

PAN-ACEA, s. -AN. That which healeth all diseases, all ills, or evils; an universal remedy or cure.

Fr. Panache, wound-wort, all-heal, (Cot.); It. & L. Panacea; Gr. Πανααία, (παν, all, and αει-σθαι, to heal.)

PANADE, s. Crums of bread (and currants) moistened or brewed with water.—Cot.

-IASTIC. Gr. Πανκρατικός, (παν, all, and κρατος, strength.)

PAN-CREAS, s. -ATICK. The sweetbread. "The pancreas is a large salivary gland separating about a pound of an humour like spittle, in twelve hours."—Arbuthnot.
It. Pan-creatico; Sp. -cratico, from Gr. Παν, all, and σπασ, flesh.

PANDAR, v. or -ER, v. s. To act the -ARIZE, v. part imputed to Pandarus; to -ARISM. procure for another the object, -AROUS. or the gratification, of his pas- -ERLY. sions; to subserve as agent to -RESS. the evil passions of another.

From Pandarus, (Sk.) who procured for Troilus the love and good graces of Chryseis; which imputation, it may be added, depends upon no better authority than the fabulous histories of Diets Cretensis and Dares Phrygius.

PAN-DECTS, s. "Fr. Pandectes,—Books which contain all matters, or comprehend all the parts of a subject, whereof they intreat."—Cot.

It. Pand-ette; Sp. -ectas: L. Pandecta; Gr. Πανδεκτης, (παν, all, and δεκ-σθαι, to take.) Πανδεκται (general receivers) was a common title of the Greek Miscellanies.—Gibbons.

PANDORE, s. Stowe calls it a Bandore; "An instrument with wyer strings devised in the 4th year of Eliz. by John Rose."
The Greeks had an instrument named Πανδώρα, having a triple chord.

PANE, s. A segment or piece of cloth;— -ED. app. to a segment of other sub- -EL. stances, e.g. glass, wood, cloth, -LESS. parchment. "Paned hose were a kind of trunk breeches, formed of stripes of various coloured cloth, occasionally intermixed with slips of silk, or velvet stitched together."—Gifford Ford. "He returns the names of the jurors in a panel [a little pane, or oblong piece of parchment] annexed to the writ."—Blackstone.

Fr. Pan, paneau, a pane, piece, or panel of a wall, of a wainscot, of a glass window, of a house, of a cloak, &c. (See Cot.) Sk. thinks from L. Pannus, by metaphor—as above. Em-Im-

PAN-EGYRY, s. An assembly of all -IC, ad. s. (the people), a popular or public -ICAL. assembly; hence transferred to -IST. the speech or oration there -IZE, v. spoken, in celebration or praise of some thing or person;—a laudatory speech or oration; an eulogy.

Fr. Panegy-rique; It. & Sp. -rico; L. Panegyricus; Gr. Πανηγυρις, an assembly of all; from παν, all, and αγορη, an assembly. B. Jonson has a poem, A Panegyry on the Happy Entrance of James; and Milton writes, Panegyrics.

PANG, v. s. The v. is—To pain, to distress; and the s. is app. to—A sharp and sudden pain; a poignant or pungent sensation of bodily or mental pain, suffering, or distress.

A. S. Pyg-an; D. Pilnighen; Ger. Peinigen, gungere, cruciare; to prick; to pain; to torment. Un-

PANIC, ad. s. Potter gives three different reasons for the appellation; and explains panici terrores, or panic fears, to be sudden consternations, that seized upon men without any visible cause, and therefore were imputed to the operation of demons, esp. Pan, (qv.) upon men's fancies.

PANNIER, s. First—A basket for bread, then for other articles; and usually app. to the baskets suspended from the back of horse, mule, &c.

Fr. Panier; It. era; Sp. Panera; L. Pannarium, a bread-basket; from panis, bread. Impanate.

PANOPLY, s. Armour, covering or protecting all, the whole (body); entire or complete armour, or protection.

Gr. Πανοπλία; pan, all, and ὄπλον, arms or armour.

PANSY, s. A violet so called because it causes thought or reflection: because of its fanciful appearance, &c.

Fr. & D. Pensee, from Penser, to think.

PANT, v. s. To breathe, to blow, quickly—ER. and shortly; and, cons. to pursue—ING. eagerly, to desire with strong emotion. INGLY. tion.

Fr. Panteler, which Jun. derives from Gr. Πανθεω, to mourn, to lament; and Men. from L. Paipitare. Qy. Cognate of Fan, Winnow, &c.

PANTALOON, s. "Pantaloon,"—A garment consisting of breeches and stockings fastened together, and both of the same piece."—Grey. "Pantalone, (in Italian Comedy) is generally an old cully."—Addison.

It. Pantalone; Fr. on.

PANTELER, s. -TRY. A place in which to keep bread, (panis); and now, any other sort of victuals.

The person who has the care of the bread.

In Sp. Panadero is the bread-maker, or baker.

Fr. Panet-ier, -erie; It. Panai-iere, -eria.

PANTER, s. Fr. Panthière or panthère, a great swoopnet or drawing net.—Cot.

It. Pantera; Gr. Πανθηρον, omnes feras, (παντων θηρων) capiens.

PANTHEISM, s. Worship of all the—ISTIC. gods; a temple of all the gods.—ON. (Παντων των θεων.)

PANTHER, s. An animal.

Fr. Pant-hère; It. & Sp. -era; L. Panthera; Gr. Πανθηρ. Some think this animal so called, qd. pan, all, and θηρ, a beast; because the colours of all beasts may be distinguished in it. Voss. thinks it more probable that the word is Eastern.

PANTOFLE, s. -TABLE. With the addition of an upper covering, it is equiv. to—A slipper.

Fr. Pantoufle; It. -uola, a shoe or slipper. Some etymologists determine upon a Gr. origin, and devise the compound παντοφῆλλος, (pan, omnia, and φῆλλος, suber, a cork,) or from πατεω, calcare, and φῆλλος, because (says Sk.) they were formerly made of cork, on account of its lightness. And see Men. Wach. contends for a northern origin. In Sw. and Ger. Toffel, without any prefixed word, has the same application, and is derived by Wach. from L. Tabula. Schilter supposes pan to be bain, (i.e. bone,) app. to the foot; and thus, that the word means tabula pedis; the thing itself being used merely for the tread of the foot.

PANTO-MIME, s. ad. -IC. App. to both persons and their performances; to persons—because they mimicked, or imitated, or expressed by correspondent action, every thing they intended to represent.

Bacon writes with the L. term. mimi.

Fr. Pantomime; It. & Sp. -o; L. Pantomimus; Gr. Παντομιμος, αὐτο του παντα μιμεσθαι.

PAP, s. Pa, pa, Pap, (See BA, BABE, BUB,)

L. Parvus, small, and animus, the mind.

PARVIS, s. Cot. calls it, the porch of a church; also, or more properly, the utter court of a palace or great house.

Fr. Parvis; Low L. Parvulus, formed from Paradisus. Atrium porticus circumdatum ante sedes sacras. And see Du Cange, in v. Paradisus; Men. in v. Parvis; Tyrw. Note on Chaucer; and Warlow, History of English Poetry, vol. I. p. 453. Note W.

PARVITUDE, s. -ITY. Smallness, littleness.

Fr. Parviti-4; It. -à, from L. Parvus, small.

PASCH, s. -AL. "For ever after, every year this paschal feast was kept, (which was as long as the Jewish polity lasted,) when the lamb was set upon the table, the master of the house spoke to his company in these words: This is the passover, which we therefore eat, because God passed by our houses in Egypt."—Sharp, Serm.

Fr. Pas-que; It. -qua; Sp. -cua; L. Pascha; Gr. Πασχα; Heb. Pesakh, transire, to pass over.

PASH, v. s. To pash may be merely—To push, to push hard against, to strike, to dash. And Pash, the s.—

That which pushes; and, from the action of the ram or bull with the head, app. to the head itself.

To pash, elders, conterere, to dash, to bruise. Perhaps, says Sk. from Gr. Πα-ειν, or παρ-ειν, to strike. He proposes other sources, but is not satisfied with any. Grose interprets pash, "the brains. A mad-pash, a mad-brains." Jamieson,—"the head; a bare-pash, a bare-head."

PASQUIL, or -QUIN, s. It is app. gen. -QU-ILLER, to—Any lampoon; a satirical -INADE, epigram.

Fr. Pasquin. The name of an image in Rome, whereon libels and defamatory rhymes were fastened and fathered. Pasquillo, a libel clapt on a post or image.—Col. It. Pas-quino, -quindis; Sp. -quin.

PASS, v. s. To step; gen. to move or -ABLE, cause to move; to go or cause to go.

-ABLY, to go.

—transeundi portus seu portas venia seu licentia.—Sk. Leave or liberty to pass out of port or through the gates. In Hackluyt, called a letter of passe. "A travelling warrant is called passport, whereas the original is passee per tout."—Howell.

Passing-bell,—the bell formerly rung at the passing or departure of a soul; now rung speedily after death, according to the usages of the Established Church.

Pass-over,—see PASCH.

Berners. †Barrow. †Cowley.

Fr. Pass-er; It. -dre; Sp. -ar. The more simple etym. says Sk. is L. Passus. (See PACK.) Or it may be from the same source as Path, (qv.) For-Over-Re-Sur-Trans-

PASSION, s. v. App. gen. to.—The -IONATE, v. ad. ternal or mental feelings, -IONATELY. as distinguished from the -IONATENESS. external or corporeal; to the emotion or commotion -IONLESS. of the feelings; emph. to -IBLE. excess of feeling; to ardent, -IVELY. fervent feeling; ardour, fer- -IVENESS. vour, zeal; to feeling of -IVITY. great desire, of great anger.

Passionate, besides its general usage, is app. to one easily moved to, excessively moved by, anger. As—

Passion is opposed to action, passive is opposed to active; and thus app. to any thing acted upon; inactive, inert; suffering, enduring.

Passible, (L. of Lower Ages, Passibilis),—that may be acted upon; capable or able to receive passions, feelings, sensations.

Passivity is not uncommon in our Divines and Scholastic Writers.

Fr. Pass-ion; It. -ione; Sp. -ion; L. Passio, from Passus, passi p. of Pat. Gr. πάσσειν, to feel. Con-Dis-Em-Im-Mis-Un-Also Per-passion.

PASTANCE,* s. i. e. Pastime, (qv.) Fr. Passé-temps.—*Berners.

PASTE, v. s. Any thing or things beaten -IL. together into an adhesive mass: e. g. -LEL. meal or farinaceous substance; clay -RY. or earthy substance. -Y. To paste,—to cover with paste, to affix or stick together with paste.

Fr. Past-e; It. -a. Men. derives from Pistum, the passi p. of Pisere, to beat together. But Jun. resorts to the Gr. πάσσειν, conspersus, from πάσσειν, conspersere, to besprinkle. Sk. from Passus, fed.

PASTERN, s. The part from the fetlock to the heel of a horse is so called;—it seems also app. to the lower part of the human leg, satirically or in burlesque.

Pasterns is used by Beau. & F. in The Chances, (Act i. sc. 9,) but what they mean to denote is not clear.

Fr. Past-uron; It. -da, which Men. derives from Pedica. Sk.—from Passare, to pass or go; qd. is goutura passatola, i. e. articulus ambulato-rius,—the walking joint.

PASTIME, or PASS-TIME, s. That which passes time or causes time to pass, sc. agree-ably, pleasingly; an amusement, diversion, recreation. Used as a v. in the tragedy of Solyman and Perseda.

PATACCOON, s. A coin; as Sk. suggests—so called because it bore the impress of a patache.

Sp. Pataco, -on; It. -ca, -co.

PATCH, v. s. To patch is,—to eke out; -EDLY. to put together, (sc. one piece, to -ER. mend, or match with, another;) to -ERY. make up a whole of different -INGLY. pieces; to make up, mend, repair hastily or clumsily; to put on or fix on pieces. Also,—

To lay on or cover with a piece or pieces, sc. so as to hide the breach or rent; and, cons. to make it appear whole or entire; and hence, to wear or assume, to deceive or impose upon by false appearances. And—

A Patch,—(a person,) one who wears or assumes false or deceitful appearances; a rogue, a knave; and hence, contemptuously, any low or despised character.

See PACK. Tookes observes,—that "they who put patches on a little breach, to hide it, are careful that the colour shall as nearly as possible resemble that upon which they put it;" and he derives from A.S. Pæc-an, pæc-e-an, to deceive by false appearances, imitation, resemblance, semblance, or representation; to counterfeit, to delude, to illude, to dissemble, to impose upon; but, upon his own principles, the word would not mean so much.

PATE, s. -ED. First app. to a lumpish, dull head; then gen.—

The head; now again not used except contemptuously.

Pated has usually some pref. word, as in Shak.—periwig-pated.

Sk. thinks—either from Fr. Teste, by the change of t into p; or rather from L. Patina, a pan, the skull-pan. Perhaps from Fr. Paste, pâté; paste, dough.

PATEN, s. A plate;—a little plate, that covered the chalice, and served to lay the host on at mass.

Fr. Pat-ine; It. & Sp. -ena; L. Patina, a plate or dish.

PATENT, ad. s. Open, e. g. letters patent. -ENTER.

"These grants are contained -EFACTION. in charters, or letters patent, that is, open letters, literæ patentes: so called, because they are not sealed up, but exposed to open view, with the great seal pendant at the bottom; and are usually directed or addressed by the king to all his subjects at large."—Blackstone.

PATTEN, s. A foot-clog; foot-stall of a pillar.

Fr. Patin, pate, the foot.—Men.

PAU

PATTER, v. -ING. "In some places of England they yet say, in a derisory way,—to patter out prayers, i. e. to mutter or mumble them, qd. to say many Pater-nosters, as in times of Popery the ignorant women did in Latin, without understanding them."—Gloss. to G. Douglas.

"I have well leuer sooth to say, Before the people patter and pray."—Chaucer.

"They sing, and say, and patter all day with lips onely. . . . How blinde are they which thinke prayer to be the patterning of many wordes."—Tyndall.

Jun. thinks that the v. To patter, was derived from the very frequent repetition of the Lord's Prayer, Pater noster.

PATTERN, s. v. An archetype, precedent, sample, or example.

"For all an example, for no one a pattern."—Swift.

Fr. Patr-on; D. -oon; a patron, (qv.) and cons. one whom we follow, imitate, try to resemble. Un-

PAVADE, s. Some sort of a weapon of offence, says Tyrw., who had not met with the word elsewhere than in Chaucer.

PAUCITY, s. Small in number; smallness, fewness.

Fr. Paucité; L. Paucitas, paucus; Gr. Παυος, small, little.

PAVE, v. To beat or lay down firmly, sc. -MENT. stone, brick, or other substance, -ING. for way, road, flooring.

-ATION. or make a stop; to bide, to stay, to -ER. cease, to desist, to hesitate, to -ING. delay, to tarry; to stay judgment, -INGLY. to deliberate.

PEA

Fr. Paus-e, -er; Sp. -s, -or; It. & L. Pausa, pausare; Gr. Παυ-ειν, to stop. Tooke thinks pause to be from posium, the past p. of ponere, to place, to fix. Inter-

PAW, s. v. -ING, s. The foot; gen. app. to the foot of a beast. To paw,—

To move, to beat or strike with, the paw or foot.

Fr. Patte, pate; Sp. Pata; It. Piède, piè; L. Pes, a foot.

PAWKY. See PACK.

PAWN, v. s. -BROKER. To give or deliver, to place in the hands of; to deposit any thing, as gage, warranty, or security; to plight or pledge, to stake.

Fr. Pan; It. Pigno; Sp. Empeñar; L. Pignus; which (Voss) may be from pagere or pangere, quia pactionis lege datur. Or from pugno, (pugnus, the hand or fist.) because things which are given in pawn, are delivered over by hand. Un-

PAX, s. The par that covers the chalice at mass, and is sometimes given to the people to kiss;—so called, because then the priest says,—Pax Domini sit semper vobiscum; "The peace of the Lord be always with you."—Delphino.

L. Pax; Sp. Pax.

PAY, v. s. To pacify or restore to peace;

-ABLE. to satisfy, to content, to please.

-ER. To satisfy or content, by giving

-MENT. an equivalent (in money or other-

-DAY. wise), for something received or

-MASTER. bargained for; for something due or owing; to acquit, to discharge, to requite, recompense, or reward.

To pay, for To beat, says Sk. is by met. —verbera debita solvere, to pay the stripes, give the beating, due or deserved; to lay on heavily. And hence,—

In naval language, To pay is—to lay on, spread, or rub in, the materials used in caulking a ship.

Fr. Pa-ger; It. -gère; Sp. -gar, from L. Pacare, pacium reddere, satisfacere, contentum reddere. Ap- Mis-Over- Re-Un-

PAYSE, or PEISE, v. -ER. i. e. Poise, (qv.)

PEAGE, or PEDAGE, s. (Sometimes, as in Burke, written Page.) Sk. writes Pedage, and explains it,—a toll or tax paid by passengers, and for which they were entitled to safe-conduct and protection.

Fr. Péage; It. Pedaggio; Sp. Peage; Low L. Paagium, and pedagium: which Voss. considers to be two distinct words; deriving the former, (per syncope) from passagium, and the latter from pes, pedis, the foot: an opinion which Men. thinks the It. Pedaggio sufficiently refutes. Mins. has—Peager, Fr. Péager; It. Pedaggiere; Sp. Peagero.

PEAK, v. s. -ISH. Peak, s.—the top or point of a hill; and so called from the smallness or sharpness, the ac-uteness, of the point.

To peak,—to be small or sharp, or acute; to be or become sharp or thin, lean, meagre, and cons. sickly; to be or become little, mean, spiritless. The Pique or Pica, (explained by Gray on Hudibras to be) "a depraved and longing appetite of women with child, or girls in the green sickness," is probably the disease of those persons peaked by sickness.

Peek (in Gascoigne) seems equivalent to Peep, (qv.) or to look with the eye pointed or contracted: "That other pries and peekes in every place."

See PICK, PIQUE, and BEAK. The A. S. Pyc-an, to pick or peck, (Pe- or Be-ac- or ic-an, see AC-UTE), seems to be the root of all.

PEAL, v. s. App. to—a bellowing sound; a loud, clamorous, continued noise or sound; whether of warlike engines, instruments of music, thunder, &c.

To peal,—to make a loud, continued sound; to clamour, to din.

Mins.—from Fr. Appeller, to call; because people are called together by the noise of bells: others, from L. Pellere, to beat or strike. It is probably, by the mere change of b into p, from A. S. Bell-an, to bellow.

PEAR, s. PERRY. A tree, a fruit.

Perry,—a beverage from the juice of pears. Fr. Poire; It. Per-ò; Sp. -a; L. Pyrum; and in A. S. Perie.

PEARCH, s. A fish.

Fr. Perche; It. Peresca; Sp. & L. Perca; Gr. Περκα, from περκαος, marked with black spots.

PEARL, s. v. A small, spherical, indu-ed. rated substance, produced in a kind -y. of oyster. App. met. to—any thing resembling a pearl in shape and brightness—as a drop of water, a tear, a dew-drop.

Fr. Perle; It. Sp. & Sw. Perla; Ger. Perl; D. Perle. Men.—from pernula, a dim. of perna, shellfish, in which, Flinay says, pearls had been

PEASANT, ad. s. The ad.—Inhabiting -RY. the country; rural; or rustic: and -LY. the s.—one who works in rural or farming employment or business.—"Milton.

Fr. Peasant; It. Peasano, from L. Paganus. "By an easy extension of the word, pagan and rural became almost synonymous, and the meaner rustics acquired that name, which has been corrupted into peasants in the modern languages of Europe."—Gibbon.

PEAT. See PET.

PEBBLE, s. Gen.—a small stone.

-ED. A. S. Pæbol. In the northern parts of -Y. England large round stones are called boulders, from bol or bowl; and the bol in pæbol may have the same origin: but what or whence pa? Perhaps the reduplication, Ba.

PECCABLE, ad. Peccant,—Acting

-ABILITY. wrong, or ill, or evil; sinning, -ADILLO. criminal; offending against; -ANT, ad. offensive, corrupt, wrong, irre- -ANCY. gular.

Fr. Pecc-ant, -adille; It. -dre, -ante; Sp. Pec-ar, -ante, -adillo; L. Pecc-are, -ans. Among the variety of etyms. offered, Voss. prefers—à pecc, ut peccare propriè sit αλαγειν agere Instar pecudis, to act irrationally like brutes. Im-

PECK, s. A poke, (qv.)—a general word for all measures, (Ray) and perhaps by usage restricted to one-fourth of a bushel. See POKE. A. S. Pocca, a sack or bag.

PECK, v. s. To act or do with any thing -ER. pointed; to strike, to take up, with -ING. any thing pointed; as with the beak -ISH. of a bird: to strike at, as birds peck or strike each other, with their beak, (qv.)

Peckish,—disposed, inclined, to peck or pick, sc. to eat. See TO PICK.

A. S. Pyc-an, to pick or peck.

PECTINAL, ad. Formed like a comb.

-ATED. L. Pecten, from pectere, to comb; Gr. -ATION. Πεκ-ειν.

PECTORAL, ad. s. Of, pertaining, or belonging to the breast, (pectus.)

PECULATE, v. s. Cot. says—"To rob -ION. the public treasure, or convert it, -OR. by indirect means, unto private use." It is not entirely restricted to embezzlement or robbery of the public money.

Fr. Pécul-er; Sp. -ado; L. Peculatus, from peculati, (and this from pecus, a flock,) to take the public money (pecunia). De-

PECULIAR, ad. s. Peculiar, the s.—

-ITY. Private property; private or par- -LY. ticular right, authority, or jaria- -NESS. diction.

PED

Peculiar, ad.—acquired by, or appropriated to, a particular person; to a particular or especial use; appropriate; particular, especial.

L. Peculium was orig. app. to—the stock or money which a son, with the consent of his father, or a slave with that of his master, acquired of his own; and then, gen., to private property. It is sometimes so used by Eng. writers. The ad. Peculiaris, of or pertaining to such peculium, or peculiar property.

Fr. Peculi-er; It. -äre; Sp. -ar; L. Peculiaris, from peculium, quomodo propriè dicitur, quod ex peculio est; and peculium from pecus. Fr. Péculé is called by Cot.—a stock or substance gotten by private industry or toll.

PECUNIAL, ad. -ARY. Of, pertaining or belonging to, or consisting of, money, or stamped or minted coin. "And what was the marke imprinted thereupon? even a sheepe, which in Latine they call Pecus, and from thence proceedeth the word pecunia, that signifieth money."—Holland. Plinie.

Fr. Pécuni-aire; It. -äle, -ärio; L. Pecuniaris, from pecunia; so named—a pecus; because, as some think, stamped—ovium boumque effigis; other opinions are given by Voss, in voc. (qv.)

PEDAGOGUE, s. v. One who leads —G-Y. boys, (sc. to school;) who guides, —IC. directs, instructs, teaches them. —ICAL. Now gen. app. contemptuously—to —ISM. any one fit for no higher employment than to teach boys; or who treats men as if they were boys.

Fr. Pédagogue; It. & Sp. -o; L. Pedagogus; Gr. Παιδαγωγός; from παις, a boy, and αγω, to lead or guide.

PEDANT, s. B. Jonson applies it to a —IC. teacher of languages. "A man —ICLY. that has been brought up among —ICAL. books, and is able to talk of no —ICALLY. thing else, is a very indifferent —RY. companion, and what we call a pedant."—Spectator, No. 105. "Pedantry consists in the use of words unsuitable to the time, place, and company."—Coleridge.

Fr. Pédant; It. & Sp. -ante; one who acts or assumes the pedagogue, (qv.)

PEDDLE, or PEDLE, v. Gen. app. to— —DL-ER, s. v. One who travels on foot with —ERY. such articles for sale as he can —*RESS.** carry. To peddle,—

To deal in small or petty things; to be employed, engaged, or busy in trifles.

* Overbury.

Written in Sc.—Peddar, or Pedder, and used by G. Douglas, (Frol. of the Eight Booke.) The Glossarist is inclined to the etym. of Mina.—from Fr. Pied, the foot. Cot. calls porte-panier, a basket-carrier, a pedler; and Moor (Suffolk Words) says, that ped is a basket, a panier; and thinks pedler may be one who travels afoot with such a basket. Pedler (pedder) may be from A.S. Prithian, (ped-thian;) conculcare, pedibus obtere. to tread or trample; to be ever on the foot. Ray writes Pedder, (in v. Ripper.) Another etym. is Fr. Petit, qd. a dealer in small or petty wares.

PEDESTAL, s. The foot-stall, sc. of a pillar or column.

Fr. Pédestal; It. -ällo; Sp. Pedestal. (See STALL.) D. Foot-stal.

PEE

PEDESTRIAN, ad. s. -ious, ad. Going upon, using, the feet.

Pedestrian, ad. and s. are words in common use.

L. Pedestris, from pes, pedis, the foot.

PEDICLE, s. A foot-stalk of leaf, flower, or fruit; the part of the stalk which immediately sustains the leaf, or flower, or fruit.

Fr. Pédicule; L. Pediculus, dim. of pes, the foot.

PEDIGREE, s. The degre or rank of forefathers; or the genealogy or lineage of forefathers.

From Fr. Grâs, or Degrés des pères, i. e. gradus patrum, or à pedendo gradus.

PEDO- or PÉDO-BAPTISM, s. The baptism of children, or infant-baptism.

Gr. Παιδων βαπτισμα.

PEEL, s. Written Pele in Chaucer. Urry calls it a house, a cell. Tywr. doubts. Du Cange interprets Low L. Pela, castellum, arx; in Eng. a Pile or pille.

PEEL, v. s. Peel is sometimes written Pill: "Jacob pylled whyte strakes."—Bible, 1551. "The pill or rind of a pomgranat."—Holland. And on the other hand, To pill is also sometimes written To peel. See To PEEL, infra.

To take off, to pull, tear, or strip off, the skin, rind, or bark.

Fr. Peler; It. -äre; Sp. -ar; to take off the peel (L. Pellic) or skin.

PEEL, s. The tool with which bakers use to put things in or take them out of, the oven.

Fr. Paelle; L. Sp. & It. Pala; a spade or shovel.

PEEL, v. -ER. See To PILE. "But govern'd ill the nations under yoke, peeling their provinces."—Milton. "To peel the chiefs, the people to devour, These, traitor, are thy talents."—Dryden.

PEEP, v. "Fr. Pepier, to peep, cheep, or pule, as a young bird in the nest. Pepieur, a peeper, cheeper, puler."—Cot.

Gr. Πιπρῖς; L. Pipire, formed from the sound.

PEEP, v. s. -ER, s. To look, to look out; distinguished from a broad or open view, or survey, a gaze or stare; to look into or through a narrow or confined space; distinguished from a continued inspection or examination.

Perhaps the preceding v. transferred from the sound which chickens make upon the first breaking of the shell, to the look accompanying it. Under—

PEER, v. To peep, to look, to inspect; to poze, (qv.)

Fr. Paroir, "to appear or be seen; to peep out as the day in the morning, or the sun over a mountain; to show, present, or manifest himself."—Cot. Over.

PEER, s. An equal; one of equal, same, —AGE. like, or similar, rank or station, —ESS. age, or qualifications. App. to— —LESS. Persons raised or exalted to the —LESSLY. same or equal rank or power; one of the three estates of which the English Government consists—the House of Lords or Peers. A Peer or Lord of Parliament.

Fr. Pair; It. Parì; Sp. & L. Par, equal, an equal. Com-

PEEVISH, ad. “A peevish fellow is one -LY, who has some reason in himself for -NESS, being out of humour, or has a natural incapacity for delight, and therefore disturbs all who are happier than himself with pishes and pishaws, or other well-bred interjections, at every thing that is said or done in his presence.”—Spectator.

G. Douglas applies the word as an epithet to Drances—“Sic ane peevische and catius Saule,” for which there appears no equivalent in Virgil; and again to Aruns, “This peevish man of woe,” which he may intend to be a translation of Improbis. The Glossarist says, that among the vulgar in Scotland, peevish is used for siggardly, coercious; and Ray, in his North Country Words, interprets it—silly, subtle. Mr. Stevens says, peevish, in ancient language signifies—foolish, silly, weak. In Jun. it is suggested that Perversa, by the omission of the canine letter r in each syllable, may have become Peeves, and subsequently Peevish. The early usages of the word do not confirm this etym.

PEG, s. v. That which pecketh, pusheth, strieth, holdeth, with a peek or point, with any thing peaked or pointed.

To take or let down a peg lower;—“A skilful musitian can let down his strings a peg lower when the tune requires it.”—Bp. Hall.

Jun. derives from Gr. πηγνυθαι, agere, deagere, to fix down. Sk.—from A.S. Picc, aculea, a little needle or pin. But A.S. Ptic is from the v. Pyc-as, to pick or peck; and by the change of c hard into g, to peg. Un-

PEGM, s. a. A fixable machine or engine; used in theatric exhibitions.—“B. Jonson.

Gr. πηγμα, compactum, conficium, from πηγνυμι, compingo, configo; L. Pegma, confixilis machine.

PELEGRINE, ad. i. e. Peregrine, (qv.) * Berners.

PELF, s. -ISH. Gen.—Riches, money, wealth.

G. Douglas renders Priami imperio Phrygibusque,—“Priamus ring (reign) and all your pelf.”

Old Fr. Pilfer, to pilfer; perhaps app. orig. to wealth or riches acquired by pilfering, by petty scrapings or hoarding.

PELICAN, s. The bird now so called may have received this name from the wounds which it is fabulously said to inflict upon itself.

Fr. Pélican; It. & Sp. ecano; L. Pelecanus; Gr. Πελεκαν. Some suppose the Picus Martius was so called—απὸ τοῦ πελεκαν: h. e. securi cedere, quia rosario arbores cadit et excavat; because it strikes and hollows trees with its beak.

PELL,* or PELE,† s. Speght, and after him Sk. and Hearne, say,—“A house; and Sk. thinks it is from Pellia, a hide, because in rude times made of hides. But see Dr. Jamieson.—“Chaucer. † W. Scott.

PELLET, s. v. A little ball, or round thing, a bullet.

Fr. Pellet; It. Pallotta; Sp. Pelota, a little ball; Fr. Balle; It. Palla; Sp. Palla, which Sk. would derive from L. Pila: but all, more probably, from Boilen, volvare, vertere, rotare, to roll, to turn, to turn round. Boil, any thing round.

PELLICLE, s. A small or thin skin.

Fr. Pellicula; It. Uccella; Sp. icula; L. Pellicula, from Pellis, the skin.

PELL-MELL, av. Meddled, mixed or mingled together; confusedly, disorderly.

Fr. Pelle meile, pell mell, confusedly, hand over head, all on a heap, one with another.—Cod. Nicot derives from Par la meile. For Melle, see MESLEY.

PELLUCID, ad. -ITY. Transparent.

“The rich Tartars sometimes fur their gowns with pelluce or silke shag, which is exceeding soft, light, and warme.”—Hackluyt. Voyages.

L. Pellucidus, i. e. per lucidus, shining through.

PELT, s. PELTRE-WARE. A skin or hide.

Peltries, things as common as the wool or hair of a skin or hide; (perhaps) the refuse of a skin-yard.

A pelt-monger, pellmongery,—a dealer in, a trade in—pelltre-ware.

Fr. Pétre; It. Pelle; Sp. Pillota; L. Pellia, a skin. D. Pelt-ter, -erie; Fr. Pellet-ter, -erie, a trader, a trade—in skins.

PELT, v. s. -ING. To throw or toss at; to aim at by throwing or tossing frequently. Lye suspects to be formed by syncope from Pellet: to throw pellets or little balls at any thing.

PELTING, pt. Pelting, as used by Gardner and others, seems (says Stevens) to be the same as Paltry; and since Gab. Harvey, in a letter to Spenser, writes Paulding, subsequent etymologers decide Paulding to be the proper way of writing the word, and Paltry the undoubted original; nay, farther, that Paltry is from the Su.-Go. Palter, rage, or the Teut. Palt, a scrap; but why these latter words have this application, no attempt is made to explain. Paltry (qv.) must be left to the fate assigned it by Tooke, and Pelting to the “seems” of Stevens, unless we may suppose it to be Peltring (the r omitted), and app. to things as common and worthless as the refuse of a pelt or skin-yard. (See PELT.) “Now popish pelting traditions flourish.”—Bp. Gardner. “A pelting little town.”—North. “A pelting village of barbarous people.”—Id.

PEN, v. s. -NING. To pen, or pin, or posse, (qv.) is—To inclose, to shut up, to confine, to keep or coop up, to incage.

A pen for a sheep, from A.S. Pyndan, includere, to inclose.—Sk.

PEN, s. v. A feather; and then, a feather -N-ER. —prepared for writing.

-ING. To pen,—to write or delineate

-AGE. with a pen. To write, to com-

-ATED. pose.

PEN

PENNANT, s. -NON. A flag or streamer (on which the arms of the owner were painted.) Dryden has preserved the word (Pennon) in his version of Chaucer—

"High on his pointed lance his pennon bore,
His Cretan fight, the conquer'd Minotaur."

Fr. Pen-non; It. -dona; Sp. -don. Men. derives from Penna or penna, a feather; and the Editor, from Pannus, a piece of cloth. Pennant is perhaps from Pendant (by the mere omission of the d.)
See PENDANT.

PENNON. See PINION.

PENNY, s. Among English coins,

-ILESS. twelve pence or pennies equal one
-Y-WISE. shilling in value; it is also app.
-WORTH. gen. to money: and Penniless

PENT-ARCHY, s. A government of five.

Gr. Πέντα, five, and αρχή, rule or government.

PENTA-TEUCH, s. App. specifically to the Five Books of Moses.

"The Greeks (i. e. the Septuagint translators) called the first Genesis, because it treats of the generation of the world, and the origin of man; the second, Exodus, because it contains the history of the going out of the Israelites from Egypt; the third, Leviticus, because a great part of it relates to the Levites and priests; the fourth, Numbers, because it begins by an enumeration of the people; and the fifth, Deuteronomy, because it is a repetition and revival of the law. The whole five together they called the Pentateuch; and these are the names which have been generally adopted by Christians of every communion."—Geddes. Pref. to Translation of the Bible.

Gr. Πεντατευχος, (πεντε, five, and τευχος, a book, a part or section of a book.)

PENTECOST, s. -AL. A Jewish feast: so called, because observed after a week of weeks, or on the fiftieth day after the feast of the Passover.

"When that feast which was observed after seven weeks, and which the Jews call Pentecost, was at hand, its name being taken from the number of the days (from the Passover), an immense number of people got together."—Whiston. Josephus.

Fr. Pestel, pisteau; It. & Sp. Pestello; L. Pistillum, from Pistum, past p. of Pinere, to beat or bruise, quia eo pinatur. — Voss.

PET, or PEAT, s. A little favourite, or

- TISH. fondling, or darling; a little
- TISH-LY. spoiled child; and then app. to
- NESS. — the humour or temper produced in, and manifested by, a child so spoiled; i. e. fretfulness, peevishness, discontentedness.

Sk. suggests L. Impetus, or Fr. Despit; prendre despit, to take pet. Jun. derives from the ad. Petis, and describes a petish person to be one "that falleth out with his friend for petty things, and upon every slight and frivolous occasion." And it does appear to have a common source with our ad. Petis, though it may have been app. first — as above.

PETAL, s. -ism. The leaf of the flower.

"The effect of this law was, that the name of him that aspired to make himself absolute lord of the city [Syracuse], should be written in an olive leaf, which being put into the hand of this lord, without further ceremony it was to tell him that he was banished the city for five years, much after the fashion that is reported of the ostracisme of the Athenians. By means of this petalism, the lords banished one another, so that in the end, the people became lord." — North. Plutarch.

Gr. Πετάλιον; Fr. Pétalement.

PETAR, s. Cot. calls it "an engine

- ARD. (made like a bell or mortar)
- ERARO. wherewith strong gates are burst open." It was so called from the noise of the explosion.

The Peteraro is probably a small piece of ordnance, and the word is — a sono confectum.

Fr. Pélaré; It. & Sp. Petardo; from Fr. Péter, to crack; L. Pedere.

PETER-PENCE, s. "Thys Inas became a monk there, & was the fyrst that clogged the West Saxons wth payment of the Rome shot, or Peter Pens to the Pope." — Bale.

PETITION, s. v. A seeking or asking.
-ARY, ad. (gen. with some degree of earnestness;) a beseeching or request, a solicitation, entreaty, supplication, prayer.—Brewer.
Fr. Pétition, (pétitoire, pétitory, Cot.) It. xidne, -drio; Sp. -ción; L. Petitio, from petere, to seek, to ask.

PETREL, s. PETRONEL. Petrel, or Petrel, is app. to—A breastplate for a horse.
Petronel,—a horseman's piece; and so called because hung to the breast.
Fr. Poictrail; It. Pettorile; from L. Pectus, the breast.

-ESCENT. to cause to be or become. Un-

PETTI-FOG, v. A collector of small
-G-ER. suits; a paltry encourager of liti-
-ERY. gation. See Fog.

In A. S. Fogara, is (says Som.) "a wooer or suitor to have a woman in marriage;" and hence, he thinks, our Fogger in the word Pettifogger. In A. S. Fog-an, is to set, put, or join together; and, cons. to gather, to collect; and Fog, is a gathering or collection; whence, under the word Fog, it has been suggested that a Pettifogger is—as above explained.

PETTI-TOE, s. i. e. Little toes, little feet.
PETTY, or PETIT, ad. -TINESS. Small, little, diminutive.

Petty is gen. used with the force of—mean, shabby, contemptible.

PHAGEDENICAL, ad. -NOUS. "Phagedana, strictly so called, is an ulcer with swelled lips, that eats the flesh and neighbouring parts in the bottom and edges of the ulcer."—Wiseman.

Fr. Phagédiane; Gr. φαγεδαίνα, phayaina, from φαγ-ειν, to eat, to consume.

PHALANX, s. "The Macedonian phalanx is described by Polybius to be a square battail of pikemen, consisting of sixteen in flank, and five hundred in front; the soldiers standing so close together, that the pikes of the fifth rank were extended three foot beyond the front of the battail. The rest, whose pikes were not serviceable by reason of their distance from the front, couched them upon the shoulders of those that stood before them, and so, locking them together in file, press'd forward to support and push on the former ranks, whereby the assault was render'd more violent and irresistible."—Potter.

Gr. Φαλαγξ, of uncertain origin.

PHANE,* i. e. Fane, (qv.) A temple.
**Joye. Browne.* From L. Fanum.

PHEER, s. A fellow, a companion, a mate. See FERE. A.S. Fera, ge-fera.

PHEEZE, v. To do, to do away, to do for; to give a good beating or drubbing.

The commentators on the Taming of the Shrew produce various instances of the use of this word. Sir T. Smith says.—To feize means, in his deduction; Stanyhurst translates, Italia longe disjunctum oris, "We are toun'd and from Italy feaz'd." Fuller says,—"But Bishop Turberville recovered some lost lands, which Bishop Voysey had vezed, and particularly obtained of Queen Mary the restitution of the fair manor of Crediton;" and in the margin he explains, vezed, "driven away, in the dialect of the West."—Fortales of Dorsetshire.

Sk. says,—that feaze, or feag, is to lash, to beat with rods; and derives from Ger. Fegen, to sweep, to cleanse, or from fecken, to rub. It may have descended from the Fr. v. Faire, more immediately from the pt. Faisable, feasible, or that may be done; and hence mean—as above explained. See FISEE.

PHENIX, s. "The bird Phoenix is supposed to have taken that name of this date tree, (called in Greek φωνιξ), for it was assured unto me that the said bird died with the tree, and revived of itself as the tree sprung again."—Holland. Plinie.

Piaculous,—requiring expiation; criminal, sinful.

L. Piaculum, (from pius), an act of pius atonement, or expiation.—Also as the Eng.:—see EXPIATE.

PIAZZA, s. A broad way, a wide street; in Eng. app. to—

A way or footpath under covering; as the Piazza of Covent Garden, above which are habitations, supported at the front by pillars.

From L. Plates: platea, platea, piazza, piazza.—Men.

PICAROON, s. PICKEER, v. A forager, pil-lager, robber, plunderer. And to Pickeer,—To forage, pillage, rob, or plunder.

Fr. Piqueron, from v. Picorer, qd. pecorare, to steal cattle, (pecora.)

PICCADEL, s. -KARDEL. Fr. Peccadilles,—“the several divisions or pieces fastened together about the brim of the collar of a doublet,” &c.—Cht. B. Jonson writes it Picardel; as if he supposed the fashion of wearing it to be derived from Picardy; the term is simply a dim. of Pioca, (Sp. & It.) a spear head, and was given to this article of foppery, from a fancied resemblance of its stiffened plaits to the bristled points of those weapons.”—Gifford.

PICK, v. s. To act or do with any thing -ED. pointed, or sharp at the point; to -EDLY. strike at or into with any thing -EDNESS. pointed; to pick good from bad; -ER. com. to take or choose, to select, -ERY.* to glean, to distinguish.

To pick a quarrel,—to take, sc. any opportunity, choose or seek for any pretence or slight occasion, for quarrelling.

To pick a pocket,—to pick or take (with the fingers) any thing out.

Ypiked,—“full fresh and new her gear ypiked was,” (Chaucer, Prolog. to C. T.) is spoken, (Sk.) if I mistake not, of shoes or boots with sharp pointed peaks, which were the fashion in Chaucer's time. And hence,—

Picked or Piked was app. gen. as an epithet to one smartly, sprucely, foppishly dressed; to a fop or beau.—Holinshed.

Fr. Piquer; D. & Ger. Picken; Dan. Pikke; A. S. Pyc-an, in old writers, To píke. See PECK, POKE, POCK, POCKET. Un-

PICK-APACK, av. -BACK. Pick is, perhaps, pight, piked, i. e. pitched or thrown; and Pick-apack, pick-a-back, pitched on the back; or it may be a reduplication of pack.

PICKLE, v. s. Pickle, (met.)—Dirty, sorry plight or condition. A pickle, or a pickled rogue,—

One seasoned, imbued, impregnated with roguery, mischief, or vicious dispositions.

D. Pekel; perhaps (Sk.) from Fr. Piquer, pungere, from the pungency of the taste. Pennant gives a different history:—“Flanders had the honour of pickling of herrings. One William Beukester of Bierloet, near Sluys, hit on this useful expedient; from him was derived the name Pickle, which we borrow from D. & Ger.”

PICTURE, s. v. Any thing painted, sc.
-ORIAL. in likeness or resemblance;
-UR-AL. a likeness, resemblance, or
-ER. representation; gen. the art,
-ING. the workmanship of painting,
-ESQUE, ad. s. or of the painter.

Picturesque,—It. Pittresco. "Picturesque properly means what is done in the style and with the spirit of a painter; and it was thus, if I am not much mistaken, that the word was commonly employed when it was first adopted in England. . . . [It also] has been frequently employed to denote those combinations, or groups, or attitudes of objects, that are fitted for the purposes of the painter."—Stewart.

Fr. Peint-ure, -urer; It. Pittura, pittùr-a, -dre; Sp. Pint-ura, -or; L. Pictura, from pictum, pass. p. of pingere, to paint, (qv.) De-Im-Over-

PIDDLE, s. v. Piddle, s. is the name of a river which discharges itself into the sea at Pool, formerly "enstiled Trent;" it seems (from Drayton) to have received its name from the small assistant brooks which flow into it.

To piddle is,—to busy or employ, or to be busy or employed about, to attend to, trifling matters; to act or deal in a small way.

Piddling,—minute, trifling, frivolous.

Either (Sk.) from It. Piccolo, small, or the v. To peddle; or Fr. Petite, petty.

PIE, s. A bird.

PIED, Pied,—of different colours, like -NESS. the Pie; party-coloured; varie-
PIEBALD. gated in colour.

Fr. Pie; Sp. Picasso; L. Pica; Gr. Κίονα vel κίττα, from κίειν, to move; from the frequent motion of the tail and body, remarkable in the mag-pie.

PIE, or PYE, s. A portion of paste, with meat or other esculents, covered by or inclosed in it; for baking.

Sk. suggests A. S. Bye-gan, to build, sc. of paste; it is perhaps the name of the paste itself, corrupted from Fr. Pâte.

PIE, s. "The Pie is a table or rule in the old Roman offices, shewing in a technical way, how to find out the service which is to be read upon each day."—Stevens. What was called The Pie, by the Clergy, before the Reformation, was called by the Greeks Πε-πα, or the index; (lit. a plank, met. a painted table or picture;) and because indexes or tables of books were formed into square figures resembling pictures or painters' tables, hung up in a frame, these likewise were called Πίπνες, or being marked only with the first letter of the word, π's or pie.—Ridley.

It is the familiar Eng. name for the Romish Pica, Ordinal or Service Book.

PIECE, v. s. To piece is to patch; to put -LESS. on a part or portion, a frag--MENT, ad. av. ment, a bit; to add, join, or unite a part or portion. A piece is—

A patch; also, gen. a part, whether put on, added, joined; or taken away or dis-joined; a portion, a fragment, a bit; any thing pieced or put together, constructed or composed; as a piece of music, writing, painting; a fowling piece, a piece of ordnance, a piece of cloth.

It is frequently app. by Spenser to signify a castle; as it also is in Speed, quoted by Mr. Todd in a Note on Spenser, b. iil. c. 10. "Of this towne and peece, (the castle of Peniche,) Conde de Fuentes had the command."—Speed, an. 1589.

Piece, (of money,)—a minted piece, sc. of metal, gold, silver, &c.

Fr. Pièce; It. Pizzo; Sp. Piezo; Low L. Pecia. The etymologists scarcely attempt to account for this word; it is probably from the A. S. Pæ-can, pæc-can, (c soft), to patch. See PATCH.

PIE-POUDRE, s. "The lowest, and at the same time the most expeditious, court of justice known to the law of England is the Court of Piepoudre, curia pedis pulverizati: so called from the dusty feet of the suitors; or according to Sir Edward Coke, because justice is there done as speedily as the dust can fall from the foot."—Blackstone.

Fr. Pieds poudreux, dusty feet. Spel. and Sk. give the first etym. stated by Blackstone, (qv.) See also Men.

PIER, s. A structure raised against the violence of the waves in the sea or in rivers. From the L. Petra, or rather the Fr. Pierre, a stone, because usually made of stones; and afterwards app. of whatever material the thing might be made. The foundations upon which the columns that sustain bridges are raised were also called piers, whether made of stone, timber, piles of wood, earth, &c.—Spel.

PIERCE, v. Anciently Perse, Persaunt.

-ABLE. To prick, stick, strike, or bore through; to penetrate, to perforate, to transfix.

-ER. through; to penetrate, to perforate, to transfix.

-ING. to transfix.

-ING-LY. *Chaucer. Spenser. †Drant.

-NESS. Fr. Per-er; It. Augiare, which Men.

PIERSANT. * derives from the L. Perfundere, to beat through; Sk.—from Per, and

-LY.† icere, to strike through; and Mina— from Gr. Πειν-ειν, penetrare, to bore through, to penetrate. Em- En- Trans-

PIG, s. v. An animal. A lump or mass of melted lead or iron is called a sow or pig.

To pig,—is to bring forth pigs; to lie, or do any other thing as pigs do.

The acorn is in old Gloss. cited by Lye, called pic-bred. In D. Bigghe, vigghe, waerken, is porcus. D. Berckken; Ger. Ferkel, ferkel, porcellus; from L. Porcus.—Wach.

PIGEON, s. A bird.

To pigeon,—(met.) to entrap, (as pigeons are, and taken.)

Fr. Pigeon; It. Picciòne; Sp. Pichon; L. Pipio, from Pipire, to peep, or make the noise or cry of young birds.

PIGESNIE, s. The Romans (says Tyrw.) used Oculus as a term of endearment; and perhaps Piggesnie, in vulgar language, only means ocellus; the eyes of that animal

(the pig) being remarkably small. "A. S. Piga, a little maid. We use at this day to call such a little one a pigmy."—Som. Ahd Sk. says, from Piga, puellula; qd. lepidæ puellæ oculus, vel puellarum oculus, i. e. decus.

PIGHT, pt. i. e. Picht, or pitched, (qv.) in Widif,—fixed, transixed, pierced. Em-Under.

PIGMENT, s. "I employ the word pigments to signify such prepared materials (as cochineal, vermilion, orpiment,) as painters, dyers, and other artificers make use of to impart or imitate particular colours."—Boyle.

L. Pigmentum, from Pictum, past p. of Pingere, to paint.

PIGMY, s. ad. —MEAN. App. gen. to—A dwarf, any very short, small, diminutive person or thing.

Fr. Pigme-e; It. & Sp. -o; L. Pigmæus; Gr. Πυγμαίος, from πυγμή, spatium à cubito ad digitos clausos.—Foss.

PIKE,* s. —ED.† Any thing peaked or pointed, or having the point or end sharpened;—a weapon, a tool, &c.

Fr. Pique; It. Pic-co; Sp. -a, from v. To pick; because picked, peaked, or pointed as a picker.

PIKE, s. PICKEREL. A fish: so called (Sk.) either from the likeness of its nose to a pike or spear, or because it moves itself in the water like a spear thrown.

PIKE,* v. i. e. To point the eye, to peep.

PILCH, s. "A fur gown, (a pilch,) a garment of skins with the hair."—Som. Steevens, on Romeo and Juliet, produces examples of Pilch from Nash and Decker. Som. says—Pylce, toga pellicea.

PILCHARDS, s. A fish, so called (Sk.) à cutis levitate, from the smoothness of its skin. See PILCH.

PILE, v. s. A pile or pillar,—raised upon —MENT.* the ground or surface to support —ING. or sustain any thing laid, placed,

PILLAR. reared upon it; also, driven into

—LARED. the ground for the same purpose:

—AST-ER. further, app. to the whole mass

—ERED. (moles, cumulus) heaped, or

PILE,* s. —ED.† The point of a spear or arrow.—*Chapman.

L. Pilum, which Var. derives—à perussula. Voss. prefers Pilum, from Pisillum, a pesile, from Pisium, the past p. of Pisere, to beat or bruise. See PESTLE.

PILE, s. Cot calls it, the pile or under-iron of the stamp, wherein money is stamped; and the pile-side of a piece of money, the opposite whereof is a cross. Fr. Pil-e; It. -a.

PILGRIM, s. v. One from another land, —AGE. or other lands; a wanderer, a —IZE,* v. traveller. "A palmer, opposed to a pilgrim, was one who made it his sole business to visit different holy shrines, travelling incessantly, and subsisting by charity; whereas the pilgrim retired to his usual home and occupations when he had paid his devotions at the particular spot which was the object of his pilgrimage."—Sir W. Scott. B. Jenson.

Fr. Pèlerin, pègrin; It. Pellegrino, peregrino; Sp. Pelerino, from L. Peregrinus, qui peregrin venit; Peregr, i. e. per ager. See PEREGRINE.

PILL, v. To thieve, to rob, to plunder.

—AGE, v. s. To pillfer,—to practise petty —AGER. theft; or to steal small quantities.

—ER.

—ERY. To pill is sometimes written —FER, v. —To peel. See PEEL, and πύλω, denotare, constipare, to stow or pack thick or close; and further, furari, to thieve, to rob, nampe à more furum cum occultare furta student, from the manner or custom of thieves or robbers, when they endeavour to hide their plunder. Un-

PILL, s. App. to—A little ball of drugs;

met. any thing nauseous or disagreeable.

Fr. Pâte; L. Pila, a ball; pilula, a little ball.

PILLORY, s. v. —IZE,* v. A frame, so constructed as to expose the hands, and more esp. the head of the sufferer, to mockery and insult.—*A. Wood.

Fr. Pilori-er; Low L. Pillorium. Sk. thinks

—from Pila, because the place where the sentence of the law was executed, was formerly surrounded by pillars. Spel. suggests Pilleur, a piller, or pilferer; because appropriated to their punishment; and transferred from the criminal to the instrument of punishment.

PILLOW, s. v. —LION. Pillow is, perhaps, the same word as Billow, (qv.)

A case stuffed with some material, to sit, or rest the head, upon.

Pillion is a pillow, used, and suitably made, for riding upon.

PILOT, v. s. —AGE. One to whom the steerage or guidance of a ship is intrusted; met. one who steers, or guides, or directs.

Fr. Pilote, otage; It. ota; Sp. -oto; D. Pilot, or

Piloot; which latter is said to be formed of pili, a plummet line, and loot, lead; or from D. Pylon, pelion, to measure, (sc. the depth of the waters,) and loot, lead, (in Dutch called also Loots-man.) (See Sk. Jun. and Killan.) Others,—from an old Fr. word, Pilk, a ship. See Ménage.

PIN

PIMENT, s. A mixture of wine, honey, and spices.

Fr. Piment; Low L. Pimentum.

PIMP, v. s. A pimp,—one who procures or provides, (sc. to gratify the vices of others) meanly, basely.

Sk. thinks it has some reference to Gr. Παμπύρι, to procure, to obtain. See PUMP.

PIMPLE, s. -ED. A small matter or pustulous swelling; a pustule.

A. S. Pimpel; Fr. Pompele, a pumple or pimple; corrupted (Sk.) from pustula.

PIN, v. s. To inclose, to shut up, to con--NER. fine, to fasten, to keep or coop up,
-FOLD. to incage.

-GLE.* A pin or web in the eye,—because it closes the eye.—Sk.

A measure. See PINT.

Pingle, dim.—a small close or inclosure.

A merry pin,—from the custom of drinking in mugs with a pin fixed, as a measure of the exact quantity to be drunk.

Pinner, or Pindar,—one who pins (the sheep in the fold, cattle, &c. in the pen-fold or pound).—*Holland.

A. S. Pyndan, includere, to pen. See PAN, POND, POUND, BIRM. Un-

PINCERS, s. i. e. Pinchers, which E. Hall writes Pinsons.

of birds; to disable them; to confine (in like manner) the arms of man: gen. to confine or fasten.

Fr. Pignon; L. Piana; a wing.

PINK, v. s. The s. may have been app. to—An eye with the lids somewhat contracted; to a small eye, an eyelet. The s.—
To form or fashion, to work in eyelets or small holes; to cut, to pierce small holes; and gen. to pierce.

Pink, the flower,—Fr. Cillet, a pink; an eyelet.

Pink,—a colour, from its brightness.

Pink,—navis speculatoria, (Killan,)—loots-mans boot; i. e. a pilot's boat, sc. for searching, looking, or spying, taking soundings, &c.

D. Pincken, scintillare, micare, to sparkle, to glitter: pinckon ooghen, connivere, micare, palpebras oculorum alternatim movere;—Pincke, oculus; probably connected with Wincken: A. S. Winc-ian, be-winc-ian, corrupted into Bisc-ian, and thus (by the common change of b into p) D. Pincken, to sparkle, to glitter, as eyes winked. Un-

PINNACE, s. A small ship.

Fr. Pin-asse; It. nazza, accia; Sp. aza; from L. Pinus.—Sk. Men. &c.

PINNACLE, s. The highest turret or
-NACLED. tower; the tip, top, or summit.

-NET.* *W. Scott.

Fr. Pin-acle; It. acole; Sp. -aculo; L. of the Lower Ages, Pinnaculum, from Pinna, a wing; Gr. Πτερόειον, from πτερον, a wing.

PINT, s. A measure of liquids, and also of weight.

Fr. & D. Pinte; Low L. Pinta; and in A. S. Pynte; perhaps from Pynd-an, to pen or pin, to hold. A pin is still used for a small barrel holding four and a half gallons.

PIONEER, s. -N-ING. Kilian gives Spadenieren, or spayenieren, as equivalent to Pionnieren, i. e.—to work with a spade, sc. in making roads, entrenchments, mines, &c.; and thus preparing for the progress, security, or operations of the soldiery.

Fr. Pionnier; Sp. Peonero, from Peon, the foot.—Men. Jun. thinks that Pioniers was orig. Peoniers, itself corrupted from Spayeniers, diggers with a spage or spade.

PIOUS, ad. By common usage Piety is—

-OUSLY. Godliness or goodness, righteousness; religiousness, regard or
-ISM. reverence for God or religious
-IST. duties; for our duties as created beings, towards God; as children, to our parents and brethren.

In our older writers it is sometimes written Piety when used as we now use Pity, and Pity where we now use Piety. "And then himselfe, affrighted as it were with the rigorous cruelty of that punishment, would intercede in these words: 'Permit, my good L L, this to be obtained of your gracious piety, that yee would doe so much favour unto these persons condemned, as they may choose what death they will die.'"—Holland. Suetonius.

PIR

Fr. Pieur, piété; It. Pio, pietà; Sp. Pío, piudad; L. Pius, pietas; of unknown etym. And see PITY. Im-

PIP, or PEP, s. Cot. has "Pépin, a pippin PEPIN, or kernel, the seed of fruit; Pépin-NER, neris, a seed-plot, nursery, nursing orchard, a part of an orchard, wherein the pippins, kernels, or stones of fruit be sown."

Pips,—the spotted characters on cards,—may have been so called from the resemblance between such spots or dots, and separate seeds scattered upon a surface of lighter colour.

Fr. Pépin; Men. refers to L. Pipinna, an infant.—See his Dictionary.

PIP, s. v. The v. To pip or peep, (qv.) L. Pip-are, formed from the sound; and the disease is probably so named because fowls, when suffering it, frequently emit a similar sound.

D. Pippe; Ger. Pipe; Fr. Pépée; It. Pipita; Sp. Pipita, and also, Petela, which induces Men. to believe Pipita to be a corruption of L. Pituita. Palladius describes the Pituita in fowls to be a disease which covers the tip of the tongue with a white pellicle. Martin. gives Pipita.

PIPE, v. s. Pife is app. to the hollow -ER, instrument puffed or blown -LING,* ad. into. Pipe, to—

Any similar shaped tube, whether intended to be blown into or not; a pipe to smoke; the wind-pipe; a pipe to convey water, to contain wine, &c.

To play on the pipe,—to utter or emit, or cause to utter or emit, sounds similar to those of a pipe, when blown or played upon.

Piping hot is equivalent to hissing hot. Pipe-office,—Spel. thinks, so called because the papers were kept in a large pipe or cask.—Phaer.

Dan. Pibe; D. Pyper; Ger. Pfeifer; and (as Hackluyt writes) Eng. Phiph. (See PIFIF, which we now write Pife.) From Ger. Puffen, or puffen, to puff, to blow.

PIPKIN, s. A small pipe or vessel.

PIPPIN, s. An apple said to be so named from the pips, dots, or spots upon its skin or peel.

PIQUE, v. s. To pick or peck, met. with -ANT, sharp words; to vex, to irritate, -ANTLY, to exasperate, to provoke, to in-ANCY, cite, to spur on.

Se piquer,—to be tichy, (touchy,) soon offended, quickly moved; also, to provoke, excite himself unto the doing of a thing, (se piquer à,)—Cot.: and cons. to pride himself upon it.

Fr. Piquer, to pick or peck, qqv. and Peak.

PIRATE, s. v. A be-reaver, robber or -ICAL, plunderer, (by sea;) gen. a rob-ICALLY, ber, a stealer. To pirate,—-OUSLY, To rob or steal. To pirate a book; cons. to print and publish it, surreptitiously, or without consent of the author or his publisher.

PIT

Fr. Pirate; It. Sp. & L. Pirata; Gr. Πειρατής, which Voss. prefers to derive—απο του περιπα-
-ζουσι, quia multa experitur pericula, because he risks many dangers.

PIRRIE. See PERRY.

PISCATION, s. Fishing, or the art of -ATORY, fishing.—**Ray*.

-IVOROUS,* L. Piscatio, piscatorius, from piscis, a fish; perhaps from πει-ειν, to drink. See Voss.; and see FISH.

PISH, s. v. "The ejaculations Pish and Pshaw are—A. S. Pæc, pæca, (see PATCH,) pron. peš and pešha, (a broad;) and are equivalent to the ejaculation—Trumpery! i. e. tromperie, from tromper," to deceive, to trick. See Tooke.

PISS, v. PRIZZLE. To discharge or emit water.

Fr. Piss-er; D. & Ger. -en; Sw. -s; Dan. -er; It. Pisciare; Sp. Pisar: supposed to be formed from the sounds.

PISTIC, ad. "Pistic nard," (Brown,)—Genuine nard, or nard unadulterated and faithfully prepared. See Parkhurst.

Gr. Πιστικός, faithful, from πιστός, faith; and thus—pure, genuine.

PISTILLATION. See PESTLE.

PISTLE, s. i. e. Epistle, (qv.) And as in Chaucer, equivalent to a short lesson or lecture:—

"Then rouned she a pistel in his ere,
And bad him to be glad, and have no fere."

PISTOL, s. v. A small hand-gun. Also—-OLE, a coin.

-OLET. Fr. Pist-ol, -olet; It. -ola; Sp. -ole, -olota. The weapon (Sk. thinks) is—astula; qd. astula ferrea glandifera. But the name is said to have been first given to a small poignard, made at Pistoia, a little village, (a day's journey from Florence,) and subsequently to have been transferred to the small harquebuse; afterwards to the coin. Sk. derives the name of the coin from Pistoria or Pistoia, where it was first coined. Pistole, pistoler, pistolier, pistolet. The editors of Men. and Wach. agree with Sk.

PIT, v. s. -FALL. To pit, is to excavate, to sink into a hollow; and this v. has not been traced to any more ancient language.

A pit is also the area in which cocks fight; hence, To pit one against another,—to place them in the same pit, hole, or hollow place, one against the other, for a contest; to put or place as a match.

A. S. Pit, pytt; D. Put, putte; Ger. Pyg, which Sk. derives from L. Puteus, a well. Fr. Puits, puie; It. Pozzo; Sp. Pozo. Pit, the s. and Pot (Tooke) are the past tense and past p. of the s.

PIT-A-PAT, av. (Also written Apit-pat, qv.) i. e. Pit-pat; to express by a repetition of the word, the frequent recurrence of the thing, the pat.

PITCH, v. s. -Y. "The liquid pitch or tar throughout all Europe is boiled out of the torch tree: and this kind of pitch serveth to calk ships withall, and for many other uses."—Holland. Plinie.

A. S. Pic; D. Pek; Got. Peck; Sw. Bec; Fr. Pois; It. Pice; Sp. Pez. In Lancashire (say Som. and Sk.) still called pick. All from L. Pis, Gr. Πισσα, or πισσα, from πισ, the pine tree; and ισσα, from πισσος, quasi pinguis abundat.—Martin.

PITCH, v. s. To pitch. (which has not with any probability been traced to its origin) seems to have orig. meant—

To throw, to cast, to fling; and hence, to cause to fall or alight; to fall, to alight, to drop, to set or settle; and hence, further, (to set or settle,) to fix upon, to fix; and also to settle, order, or arrange.

Pitch, s.—cast, throw; height or distance thrown or cast; gen.—height, elevation, extent.

PITCHER, s. A cup or mug with a peaked spout.

Fr. Pichier, (Jun.) is ficitile poculum; Sp. Pichel, poculum. It. Bicchiero, a beaker, a beaked or peaked cup, seems to lead to the true etym. See Sk., Wach., and Men., in vv. Beaker, Becker, Pichier, and Bicchiero.

PITH, s. The marrow; met.—strength, -Y. vigour, energy, robustness.

-ILY. A. S. Pitha; D. Pit, pithe: medulla arboris, fructuosa; the marrow of the tree or fruit. Sk. is dissatisfied with Gr. Βύβρις, and L. Pis. It may be that -LESS. which pitheth, holloweth, excavateth, or which we excavate from the wood; though the root seems to subsist in Put.

PITTANCE, s. A dole or portion, an allowance.

Fr. Pittance; Sp. -a; It. Piatanza; Low L. Pitanciarin, pitanciarinus; and Fr. Pitancier. The manciple or distributor of victuals in a monastery.—Cot. Etyma. various. Perhaps from Pietas, the dole of real or pretended piety.—Voss. and see Sk.

PITUITE, s. "The pituite or mucus, -ARY. secreted in the nose, mouth, palate, -OUS. stomach, intestines, and windpipe, is not excrementitious, but a laudable humour, necessary for defending those parts from which it is secreted, from excoriations, as happens in the nose, when the pituite is too thin."—Arbuthnot.

Fr. Pituite; It. Sp. & L. Pituia; which (Voss.) may be from Gr. Πιττα, piz, quasi glutinosolentore pici similis sit; because in its glutinous clamminess it resembles pitch.

PITY, s. v. We now use Eng. Pity, as

-TABLE. Fr. Pitié.
-ABLENESS. "Ruth, compassion, commiseration; charity, kindness, or
-JEDLY. tenderness of disposition;
-IER. also grace, clemency, mercifulness."—Cot.
-FUL. Pitons, (as in Chaucer,)—
-FULNESS. feeling, or causing the feeling
-LESS. of compassion.
-IOUS. Wiclif renders Pietas, pious,
-OUS-LY. pià,—pity, pitous, pitiously.
-NESS. Pitiful,—full of the feeling of pity;
also—of that which causes pity; and thus,

humble, lowly, debased; abject, contemptible.

Fr. Pitté; It. Pia-tà; Sp. -dad; L. Pietas. (See Pious.) G. Douglas writes it Pietie, p. 43:—

"Haue reuth and pietie on sa fell harmes smert,
And tak compassioun in thy gentile hert."

The Glossarist remarks, that L. Pietas signifies "the duty and love that one owes to God, to his parents, and to his country, and frequently used by Lat. authors for clemency or sweetness of temper." Un-

PIVOT, s. The point on which any thing turns or revolves: met.—on which any thing depends: the stay, the support.

Fr. Pivot; dim. of Pieu, a stake, for pieuwot.—Huet.

PIX, s. -ED. A box, (sc.) in which the crucifix was kept; or in which the consecrated wafers, or both crucifix and wafers were kept.

It. Placide; L. Pysis, a box.

PLACABLE, ad. That can or may be -ABLENESS. appeased or pacified; mitigated, -ABILITY. or assuaged.

-ATED. "Placability is properly where a man is by any occasion moved to be angry, and nat withstandynge eyther by his owne reason ingenerate, or by counsaill perswaded, omitteth to be reuenged, and oftentimes receyuethe the transgressoure ones reconseyled, into more fauour."—Sir T. Elyot. "Cudworth."

Fr. & Sp. Placabile; It. -bile; L. Placabilis, from placare, and this (Voss.) from placere, to please. See PLACID. Com-Im-

PLACARD, s. "A tablet wherein laws, orders, &c. are written, and hung up; also a bill or libel stuck upon a post, &c." (Cot.) and hence app. to—

The law, edict, decree, order itself.

In Hall, it is app. to part of the armour for the head: "Some had the helme, the visere, the two bauliers, & the two placardes of the same curiously grauen & conningly costed." See PLACKET.

D. Plac-kaart, -kaet; Fr. Pla-card, -guard, from plague; and plague from Gr. Πλαγ, a broad tablet.—Men.

PLACE, s. v. In common usage, — A -ER. point, a part or portion of space, -FUL. (implying gen. an occupier.)

A place, (sc.) of existence,—a station or situation, rank or order.

A place of abode or dwelling,—a dwelling, residence, seat, mansion.

A place in motion or progression,—precedence or priority; height or elevation.

To place,—to put or move into a place; to put, to set, to lay, to station.

To give place,—to give, to concede, to yield, (sc. place or station.)

To take place,—to take precedence or superiority of place or station; to precede; to be preferred.

To take place,—(sc. in being or existence,)—to be, or happen to be.

"The Stoics, and Epicurus do hold, that there is a difference betweene voidnesse, place, and room: (κενος, τοπος, χωρος): for voidness (say they) is the solitude or vacuity of a body: place, (τοπος δε τοπος) that which is fully occupied and taken up with a body: but rooms or space, that which is occupied but in part; as we may see in a rundlet or barrell of wine.—Holland. Plutarch.

"In our idea of place, we consider the relation of distance betwixt any thing, and any two or more points, which are considered as keeping the same distance one with another, and so considered as at rest. . . . Though it be true, that the word place has sometimes a more confused sense, and stands for that space, which any body takes up, and so the universe is in a place."

—Locke.

"The generality of philosophers, after Aristotle, conceive place to be the immovable and immediately contiguous concave surface of the ambient body, so that it is a kind of vessel, that every way contains the body lodged in it, but with this difference, that a vessel is a kind of moveable place, as when a bottle of wine is carried from the cellar to the table; but place is an immovable vessel, or a vessel considered as immovable."—Boyle.

Fr. Place; It. Piazza; Sp. Plaza; D. Placis; Ger. Platz; Sw. Platz; A. S. Plac, placca, supposed to be cognate with L. Platus; Gr. πλατος, broad, wide; (A. S. Be-hegan, or lag-as, fac-ere, Bita, or Plie, Plac. See LOCAL.) Our word Place is used by metaphysical writers as equivalent to Gr. Toron. Dis-Inter- Mis-Re-Trans- Un-

PLACID, ad. Undisturbed, unmoved by
-ITY. any painful or unpleasant feeling;
-LY. tranquil, quiet, gentle, mild; smoothly and evenly tempered or disposed.

Fr. Placide; It. & Sp. cido; L. Placidus, quia quod hujusmodi est, placet omnibus; because any thing of this kind is pleasing to all, (Voss.) it seems rather to express a state of tranquil pleasure.

PLACIT, s. That which has pleased; a dogma.

L. Placitum, past p. of placere, to please.

PLACKET, s. Perhaps (Sk.) from Fr. Placque, a plate, (see PLACARD, and the quotation from Hall.) or D. Plagghe, a small piece of cloth. Serenius adopts the latter. Florio, in v. Torace, seems to consider it "a stomacher." Others say—"the open part of a woman's petticoat." (Is it not still thus used in Oxon?) Mr. Nares,—"a petticoat, gen. an under-petticoat." Mr. Moor had heard it was used in Norfolk for—a smock.

PLAGES,* s. Extent of land; region, country. L. Plagis.

**Chaucer*; and not unfrequent in the old version of the Bible, 1549.

PLAGIARY, s. ad. -ISM. App.to—One who steals from the books of others; who steals and appropriates to himself the writings, sayings, ideas of others. In Brown, the theft itself—"Plagiarius had not its nativity with printing."

Fr. Plagiat-aire; It. & Sp. -ario; L. Plagiarius; from Plagium, the crime of stealing away and retaining the children of freemen and slaves; from Gr. πλαγιον, quod propriè notat obliquum et oppositur ορθω, met.—doloseum; and then app. to one who pretended himself the author of another man's books.

PLUCK, v. s. -ER. To pull, (sc. so as to sever or separate,)—to pull with a quick and short action or motion; to tear away.

The pluck of an animal is probably so much as is plucked or pulled all together from the inside; separate from the bowels or entrails; sc. the heart, liver, and lights; and hence, Pluck, met.—heart, courage, spirit. "Show your pluck,"—show your courage or spirit. "Pluck up,"—rouse your courage or spirit.

A. S. Plucc-an; D. Plucken, plucken; Ger. Pflocken; Sw. Plucka; Dan. Plukker. Alucan and Upaluccen are used in A. S. for avellere, eradicare, to tear away, to eradicate, or root up. Of Luc-an, with the pref. Be or pe, was formed Pluc-an, plucc-an. The A. S. v. Luccen and Luc-an are the same word. See To CLURC, and To LUG. Un-Up—

PLUG, s. v. That which blocks, closes, or stops up; a stopper; and To plug,—To block or stop up.

D. Plugghe; Ger. Pflock; Sw. Plugg. Perhaps from A. S. Be-lycan, lucan, to block up, to close or stop up; Be-luc, bluc, (by the change of b into p.)—Fluc, plug.

PLUM, s. -KET. A tree; a fruit.

D. Pruyme; Ger. Pflaum; Sw. Plomm, from the L. Pruna. See PRUNE.

PLUM, s. The sum of 100,000*l.* is so called; and though this usage is comparatively modern, no instance has occurred that will explain the origin of it:—but it is perhaps,—a plump or plumper. See PLUMP.

PLUMB, v. s. av. To plumb,—To do any -BER. thing with a plumb or plummet, or -BERY. line with lead affixed to it; to find -MET. the depth of water by a plumb-line.

To fall or drop plumb; i. e. as lead falls, rapidly, quickly; directly, perpendicularly.

Fr. Plomb; It. Piombo; Sp. Plombo; L. Plumbum; Gr. Μολύβος; whence Voca. contrives to form the L.: (thus, μολύβος, by dropping the i, and transposing μο, is λουβος, and by prefixing (more Εολύμ) the β, it becomes βλουμβος; L. Plumbum. See PLUMF. Un—

PLUME, s. v. A feather; a collection of -AGE. feathers; sometimes used as an or-LESS. nament to a helmet, &c.; hence, -ING. met.—a token of pride, ambition, -Y. victory; and further,—pride or ambition.

To plume,—to feather; to dress or cleanse the feather, to adorn or deck with; and also, as Deplume, (qv.) to strip off the feathers; and gen.—to strip.

Fr. "Pocher, to thrust or dig; to poach into or encroach upon another man's employment, practice, or trade."—Cot. To thrust into, sc. another man's ground, another man's property; and, cons., to purloin, to steal, to plunder.

To poach or potch an egg, (pollice elidere; or from pungere, see Mén.) is—to peck or poke, or break by pecking or striking the shell, sc. that we may throw out the yolk. See To POKE.

POCK, s. A purulent disease; usually —Y. followed by pock-holes, or hollow —HOLE. marks (upon the face).

D. Pocke; Ger. Pock; A. S. Poces; perhaps (Sk.) from L. Pustula, a blister. Wach, among other conjectures, thinks that, velut expulsionis naturæ, Ger. Pock may be from the v. Pochen, pulsare, to beat, (to poke;) and Tooke is of opinion—that Pock is so app. as we use it, because, where the pustules have been, the face is usually marked as if it had been picked or pecked. This accounts for one disease, the small pocks or pos; and the other may have received its name from the similarity of the pustules. Fr. Picote, or small pos, is derived by Mén. from the v. Piquer.

POCKET, s. v. A dim. of Poke; that into which anything is poked, pushed, or thrust; a small bag.

To pocket,—to put into the pocket; met.—to put away, to put up.

Pocketing sleeves,—i. e. swelling and hanging, like a bag or poke.

Fr. Poches, pochette.

POCULENT,* ad. That may be drunk.

**Bacon*.

POD, s. That which holds or contains, (the seed,) the case or capsule.

Sk. derives from D. Podē, domuscula, a small house or abode. Pod (Moor, Suffolk Words) is a basket, a panier; it occurs in Ray, and is used by V. K. the Glossarist to Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar.—Nares. Pod, Moor likewise says—is the belly or paunch. Both Pod and Pod are found in Tusser, (Husbandry Furniture, s. 5, 6,) and, though app. by him to different articles, each seems to signify a something which is to hold or contain other things; and in this they agree with the pod of peas, beans, &c.; and all have, probably, a common origin.

POD-AGRICAL, ad. Gouty in the feet.

Gr. Πόδαγρα, ὁ. αἴμα των ποδῶν, captura pedum, sc. by the gout

POEM, s. Modern writers consider making,

-REV. creating, inventing, i. e. invention, (not verse-making,) as
-ST. the characteristic of poetry.
-ESS. "They that make verses, expressyng therby none other
-IC. lernynge, but the crafts of
-ICALLY. versifenge, be not of auncient
-ICS. writers named poetes, but only
-IZE, v. called versifyers."—Sir T. Elyot.
-RES. "Poetry is his [the Poet's] skill
-RY. or craft of making; the very fiction itself, the reason or form of the work. And these three voices differ, as the thing done, the doing, and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning, and the feigner; so the poem, the poesy, and the poet."—B. Jonson. "Because the acts or events of true history have not that magnitude, which satisfieth the mind of man, poesy feigneth acts and events greater and more historical; because true history propoundeth the successes and issues of actions not so agreeable to the merits of virtue and vice, therefore poesy feigns them more just in retribution, and more according to revealed providence; because true history representeth actions and events more ordinary, and less interchanged, therefore poesy endueth them with more rareness, and more unexpected and alternative variations: so it appeareth that poesy serveth and conferreth to magnanimity, morality, and to delectation."—Bacon.

Fr. Poëme, -isme, -ite; It. & Sp. Poe-ma, -ma, -ia; L. Poema, poëta; Gr. Ποιῆμα, from ποιεῖν, to make, sc. verses; or, to make, to create, to invent stories, fables. Utrum autem a veribus, an fabulis faciendis id nomen (Poëta) sit in-deptus, disputamus in commentatione nostra de Arte Poetica.—Voss. See FEIGN, and MAKE. Unaimed at, sought; to a minute object of thought.

Point blank or blanc. Punctum album, (in Ascham called the prick),—to aim or shoot at the point-blanc or to shoot point-blanc, is to aim or shoot straight at it—without allowing for any bias which the wind may cause; and hence, gen., to act or do any thing straight forward, without obliquity or reserve.

A pointer,—dog, that points, sc. his nose towards the game he scenta.—Fox.

Fr. Poincter, or pointer; It. Punt-à-re; Sp. -ar, from punctum, past p. of pungere, aciem in aliquo figere; the L. Pungere, formerly pugere, from Gr. Πηγ-ειν, fig-ere. Counter-Inter-Un-

POKE, v. s. The v.—To thrust, (sub. into POUCH, v. s. a bag, sack, &c.) to thrust, to POKER. push against, (with any thing peaked;) to push out, sc. as feelers or finders; to grope.

The s. cons.—A bag or sack.

Fr. Pocher, to thrust; poché, thrust; poches, s. a pocket, pouch, or poke; also a meal-sack or corn-sack.—Col. In the North, a bag or sack is yet called a poke; and Ray says, it was a general word for all measures. A. S. Poeva, a poke or peck, was probably that wherein any thing was poked or thrust, pushed or pressed. See PECK, POACH, POCK, and POCKET.

POLE, s. App. to—The extremities of the -AL. axis round which the heavens are

-AR-Y. turned.

-ILY. Fr. Pol; It. & Sp. Polo; L. Polus; Gr. -ITY. Πολος, ἀπὸ τοῦ πωλ-ειν, quod est vertere, to turn. (See POLL.) Extrema axis, circa quæ cœlium vertitur.—Voss.

 L. Polllicitatio, from Polllicitari, to promise.

POLLINCTOR,* s. An anointer, or embalmer.—Brown.

L. Pollinctor, from Pollinctum, past p. of Pollingere, to bathe or anoint a dead body.—See VOSE, who writes very largely without satisfying himself.

POLLUTE, v. To dirt, to soil, to file or
-ER. defile, to stain or distain; to vitiate,
-ION. to corrupt.

Fr. Polluer; L. Polluere, which, (Voss.) may seem to be formed from Perluere, to wash or wet through; but he prefers Gr. Φαλλναι, which Heychius interprets—μολυνναι, inquinare. There seems no difficulty in accounting for the usage of Polluere from Perluere: to wet is not necessarily to cleanse; lutum, is—humida terra, wetted earth or mud, mire, dirt; and, cons. Polluere, to pollute. Un-

POLT-FOOT, ad. s. -ED. Splay, or rather club-footed, say the editors; it is probably a polled, poll'd, poll, foot; a foot shear'd or shortened, a short, constricted foot; squeezed into a lump, as a club-foot appears to be.

POLTRON, ad. s. -ERY. Lit.—One maimed in the thumb, or who has maimed his thumb, sc. to avoid military service; (an offence so common as to occasion severe laws against it;) hence, a coward, a dastard, a mean-spirited fellow.

Fr. Pol-tron; It. -trone. Etymologists differ as to the origin of this word.—See in Men and Wach. Pollice irruous, (adopted by Tooke,) seems to be the true one. See PALTRY.

POT-GUN, s. Pot-gun and Pop-gun have been confounded. It is evident, from Hackluyt's Artillerie of the Turkes, that the former was a gun of a very different description from the latter. It may have been so called from the shape or the size of the hollow. Hackluyt says—"there were three sorts of them, whereof the greatest were of six or seven spannes about, and that they were charged with bullets of brasse or copper, full of wild-fire, and that when they were in the aire they flamed forth, and on falling on the ground they brake, and the fire came out, and did some harm."

POTHECARY. See APOTHECARY.

POTHER, or PUDDER, s. Cons.—To be or cause to be as one involved in dust, in a cloud; as one who cannot see his way; to perplex, to puzzle, to confound.

"The ploughman, unless he bend and stoupe forward with his bodie, must needs make slight worke, and leave much undone as it ought to be; a fault which in Latine we call prevarication: and this tearme appropriate unto husbandrie, is borrowed from thence by lawyers, and translated by them into their courts and halls of pleas: if it be then a reprochfull crime for lawyers to abuse their clients by way of collusion, we ought to take heed how wee deceive and mocke the ground where this fault was first found and discovered."—Holland. Plinie.

"There lay an action of prevarication, when the accuser, instead of urging the crime home, seemed rather to hide or extenuate the guilt. Hence, the Civilians define a prevaricator to be one that betrays his cause to the adversary and turns on the criminal's side, whom he ought to prosecute."—Kennett, Rom. Antiquities.

Προίμιον, pro, before, and οἶμν, caustus, can- tiena; a musical prelude.

PRO-FACE, v. An expression of welcome.

Mr. Nares has added to the number of instances of this word collected by the commentators on Shak. Stevens conjectured that the origin of it was to be found in Cot.; who says,—“Pro for Proust; whence, Bon pron leur face, Much good may it do them;” and this Mr. Nares confirms from Rochefort: “Prouface, pronfance: souhait qui veut dire, bien vous fasse: proficiat.” Hence Nares infers that we had the word from the Norman Romance language.

PUD-ENCY,* s. -ICITY.* Bashfulness or shamefacedness; modesty, purity.

**Shak.* †Holland. Howell.

Fr. Pud-ique, -icité; It. -ico, -icizia; Sp. -ico, -icidad; L. Pudens, puclitudo, from Pudere, to be ashamed. Voss is inclined to deduce from Pudere, quis cum pudet mens rem aversatur, ut in putidus. Im-pudent. De-pudorate. In-Re-pudiate.

PUERILE, ad. -ITY. Boyish, childish; weak, trifling, or trivial, as boys or children.

Fr. & Sp. Puer-il; It. -ile; L. Puerilis, from Puer, a boy, (qv.) Var. says they are so called to the fifteenth year, quasi pueros, quod sint impubes.

PUET, or PWEET, s. The lapwing.

Fr. Pietto, from its cry.

PUFF, v. s. To blow; to swell out with—-ER. blowing; to fill with wind; to expire

-ING. and inspire with quickness or diffi-

-Y. culty; to swell as if inflated.

Fr. Bouffer; It. Soffiare; Sp. Soflar; D. Puffen; Ger. Puffen; verbum ab ipso spiritu, dum efflatur, productum.—Wach. Men. derives from Bucca, the cheek. Sk.'s opinion coincides with Wach's.

PUG, s. See Puck. App. endearingly as in Drant,—"And call it pugges and pretye peate;" and to a monkey, from its tricks of mimicry or wantonness; to a flat nose, or flat-nosed dog, from its resemblance to that of the monkey.

PUGGER,* ad. i. e. Puckered, (qv.)
*More.

PUGIL, s. Pugilist, (L. Pugil, a boxer,) -ILISM. and Pugilism are in common use -ILIST. for a boxer or fighter with the -NACIOUS. fists; and for boxing. -NACITY. Pugnacious,—able, disposed to fight or combat.

L. Pugillus, parvus pugnus, a little fist; a handful. It. Pugillo.

PUISNE, ad. s. -y, ad. Cons.—Younger, junior; inferior, small, little. See PUNY, PONY.

Fr. Puisne, from Puis né, i. e. post natus, (Men. Casen. &c.) born afterwards.

PUISSANT, ad. Able, strong, powerful, -ANCE. mighty.

-ANT-LY. Fr. Puissant; (It. Possente; Sp. Pu-

-NESS. janie;) pl. of the v. Puis, possum, I am able. (It. Potere; Sp. -der.)

PUKE, s. Black, with an under tinge of brown or red.—*Drant.

PUKISH,* Pliny, (b. xiv. c. 13,) speaking of grapes, says that the sca picina is the blackest of all; qd. black as pitch, (Picinus, from Pix, picis.) And see Commentators on Shak. 1 Pt. Hen. IV.

PUKE, v. s. -ER. To expel or throw out, sc. from the stomach; to vomit.

Sk. suggests the D. Fuycken, to poke, to thrust, to drive, to expel. It may be so, though it seems as well entitled to be considered a sono fictum, as many whose claims are undisputed.

PULCHRITUDE,* s. L. Pulcher,—Brave, excelling in bravery, in every virtue, in every good quality; and thus,—fair, beautiful, or beautiful.

*Chaucer. E. Hall, &c.

Sp. Pulcritud; L. Pulchritudo, from Pulcher; and Pulcher, the Gr. Πολυχαρ, (πολυ, and χαρ, the hand; ) Roman! qui omnia ponerent in fortitudine, eum demum bonum, et formosum putarent, qui esset fortis.—Scal. De Caus. c. 22.

PULE, v. To cry like a chicken; to make -ING. a fretful, complaining, weak or -INGLY. childish whine.

Fr. Piuler, plauler, to pule or cheep like a little chicken.—Col. Formed from the sound.—See Men. and Sk.

PULL, v. s. To draw or drag; to hale or -ING. haul; to tow or tug. Opposed to -ER, s. —To push.

A. S. Pull-tan; D. Pellen, vellere. Un-

PULLAIL,* s. PULLEN,† Poultry.

*Chaucer. †Berners. Bp. Hall.

Fr. Poule, a hen. See POULT.

PULLET. See POULT.

PULLEY, s. -ED. A pulley,—wherein a cord runneth to draw any thing,—because it pulleth up continually.

Fr. Poulie, from the v. To pull.—Sk. And see Men. and Mins.

PULLULATE,* v. -ION.† To bud or bourgeon; to germinate; to shoot, or spring, or sprout.

*T. Grainger. Warburton. †H. More.

Fr. Pulluler; It. and L. Pullulare: pullos seu stolones emittit, to send forth young shoots. See POULT. Re-

PULMONARY, ad. -NIC, ad. s. Of or pertaining to the lungs.

Fr. Poumon; It. Pulmone; Sp. Pulmon; L. Pulmo, the lungs; by transposition of the letter l, from πνευμων, Att. for πνευμον, from πνε-ειν, to breathe.

PULP, s. In Fr.—"The brawn, or solid -ous. and musculy flesh of the body; also -y. the pith of plants, &c."—Col. Also the soft portion of fruit, &c.

Fr. Pulpe; It. Pulpa; Sp. & L. Pulpa. Voas. prefers,—à palpitatione; quia caro sine ossibus (id enim est pulpa) mollis sit, ac tremula; because the flesh without the bones (for that is the pulp) is soft and tremulous. See To PALPITATE.

PULPIT, s. -ER. A stage, or raised or elevated place or platform; a high or raised desk (for reading, preaching, &c.)

Fr. Poulpitre; It. & Sp. Pulpito; L. Pulpitum,—a raised place, (sc. for speaking, reading, &c. :) which Martin. derives from πυλπος, or βολβος, quia tumet instar bulbi; because it swells or rises like a bulb. See Martin. and Foss. in v. Pulvinar.

PULSE, s. v. The pulse,—that which, -ATION. the motion or action which, drives -ATORY. out, sc. the blood from the heart; -IFIC. that which beats or strikes, as -ION. the blood at every expulsion. And To pulse,—to drive; to beat.

Fr. Pouls, poulser; It. Polsa, pulsare; Sp. Pulsar, -ar; L. Pulsare, from pulsus, past p. of Pellere, to drive; Gr. Πελα-ειν; L. Pulsatio, from pulsare, to drive. Ap. Com. De. Ex. Im. Pro. Re. pulse. Also Com. Dis. Ex. Im. Inter. Pro. Re. pel.

PULSE, s. Plants whose produce is pulled or gathered; opposed to those which are cut, though similar in growth or culture.

Sk. thinks from the v. To pull; because these plants are pulled or plucked, and not mown or cut: and so—legumen, quia legitur, because gathered. But the L. Puls was a pottage made of the produce of leguminous plants; and (though not adopted in the It. or Fr.) may have given in Eng. a name to the plants themselves.

PULTICK. See POULTICE.

PULVERIZE, v. To reduce to dust or -V-ERABLE. to a dry powder.

-AL, s.* v.† Pulvis is app. to a sweet-scented or perfumed powder.

*Gay. †Congreve.

Fr. Pulvériser; It. Polvere, -artizare; Sp. Pulverisar; L. Pulvis, dust.

PUMICE, s. The spume or feces of li-quefied stones.

Fr. Pierre pumice; It. Pomice; Sp. Piedra pumice; L. Pumex; nihil aliud est, quam spuma et fec quædam lapidum liquefactorum, ut scoria metallorum, from Gr. Προ-ειν, σπερει.—Foss.

PUMMEL. See POMMEL.

PUMP, v. s. An engine by which water -ER. or any other fluid is obtained or -ING. procured.

To pump,—to use or work with such engine; to throw out, emit, or eject; to draw out, to extract; to obtain or procure from.

PUN

Fr. Pompe, -er; D. -en, -e; Ger. and Dan. -e; Sw. Pumpa. Men. derives from Gr. Πέμπω, to send forth. And Wach. prefers this to Sk.'s "à sono assurgentis aque actum," which Thre proposes with the alternative, "aut unde nescio." Tooke, —the past p. of the v. To pimp, to procure or obtain.

PUMP, s. A shoe of one sole, (says Sk.) and so called, perhaps, because used in tripudiis pompaticis, which we call masks and balls; or (Th. H.) from the sound they make in dancing; or, it may be added, from the spring of the sole resembling the elasticity of the sucker of the pump.

PUMPION, or PUMPKIN. See POMPION.

PUN,* v. To pound or bruise. See TO POUND.—*A common word in older writers—Hucklyt, Holland, &c. A. S. Pun-ian.

PUN, v. s. "I shall define it (a pun) to be -NING, a conceit arising from the use of -STER, two words that agree in the sound, but differ in the sense."—Spectator.

This word is not to be found in our older lexicographers. Serenius goes to the Isl. Funalogh, frivolous, in a sense transferred from Fune, ashes. Mr. Todd is very much inclined to make Pun of it. Fr. Poinie: discur de pointes,—a punster. And Addison might have described a pun to be,—a conceit or witticism, the point of which arises from the use, &c.

PUNCH, v. s. Punch, s.—Any thing -ER, pointed, a pointed tool or instrument. -EON. To punch, v.—to strike with any thing pointed; to pierce or penetrate, bore or perforate, with a punch or punchion.

Punch,—a mixture of sweet and acid ingredients, e. g. sugar and lemon, with spirituous liquor.

Punchion, the vessel, (Fr. Poinçon,)—perhaps so called from the pointed form of the staves; the vessel belying out in the middle, and tapering towards each end: and hence Punch (i. e. the large belly) became app. as Pepsy records, to any thing thick and short.

Fr. Poinçonner; It. Punz-onare; Sp. -ar; L. Pungere, to pierce; A. S. Pyngan, to punge.

Punch, the liquor, (if the word be of Eng. origin,) so called, perhaps, from the agreeable pungency of its taste.—But it is usually supposed to be an Eastern word. Punch, in Hindostan, is see, and this liquor is said to have been a mixture of see ingredients; and hence its name. See Encyc. Metrop.

PUNCH, s. -INELLO. Punch,—a buffoon in the Italian Drama: of unsettled origin, It. Puclino.

PUNESE, s. Fr. Punaise,—the noisome and stinking worm or vermin, called a puny, or the bed-puny.—Cot.

PUNGE, v. Pungent,—Pricking, piercing, penetrating, sharp, acute, biting, stinging.
-ENT. Puncto,—that which pricks;
-ENCE. the point, the exact point.
-ENCY. Punctual,—that can or may be
-ITIVE.
-ION.

PUP

PUNCT-O. pointed or marked by a point
-ILIO. or points; pertaining or relating to, consisting of, ob-
-ILIOUS. serving or regarding, a point;
-ILIOUSLY. an exact point; exact, accu-

-UALIST. Punctilious.
-UALITY. Punctuate,—a v. in common
-UALLY. use,—to mark or divide by
-UALNESS. points, sc. the different por-
-UATE, v. tions of a sentence. "Punctu-
-UATION. ation is the art of marking in
-ULATE, v. writing the several pauses, or
-URE, s. v. rests, between sentences, and
-ICULAR.* the parts of sentences, according to their proper quantity or proportion, as they are expressed in a just and accurate pronunciation."—Lowth.

Puncture:—"When prick'd by a sharp-pointed weapon, which kind of wound is call'd a puncture," &c.—Wiseman. **Brown*.

Fr. Poinçant, punction, punctual, pointure; It. Pungente, pitto, alone, table, tabra, teggatura; Sp. -to, -tillo, -tuacion, -tual; L. Pungens, p. p. of Pungere; punctum, -to, -ura; A. S. Pyngan, to punge or prick. The old v. To punge, is preserved in the M<sup>s</sup>. version of the N. Testament possessed by Tooke. See POINANT. Con-Dis-Ex-Inter-

PUNIC, ad. L. Punica,—Phœnician; Carthaginian.

PUNISH, v. To pain or cause pain to,
-ABLE. to afflict with pain; to impose,
-ER. inflict, or afflict with pains or
-MENT. penalties, (sc. for acts done, PUNIT-IVE. offences committed.)

-ION.* **Berners*. †Search.
-ORY.† Fr. & Sp. Punir; It. & L. Punire;
A. S. Pin-an; to cause, or to give pain to. Dis-
Un-Also Im-punity.

PUNK, s. -LING. The regular past p. of Pyngan, pungere; and means (subaud. a female) pung or punc, i. e. puncia.

PUNT, s. A game at cards.

Perhaps from Punto, a point. The player was called the Punter.

PUNT, s. Now app. to—A kind of flat-bottomed boat.

A. S. Punt; L. Ponto, navigil genus, quo in traficiendis aquis pontis loco utimur.—Voss.

PUNY, ad. s. Younger, and, cona. less; inferior, weak, small, petty. See PUNINE.

PUPIL, s. -AGE. App. to—A young person under ward or tutorship; also, to the organ of vision.

Fr. Pup-é; It. -llo; Sp. -llo; L. Pupillus; à pupus, hoc est, puer.—Voss. See BOY. Com-

PUPPET, or POPPET, s. Any thing like
-RY. a child or baby; childish or
-ISH. babyish; made in the image of, dressed up like, a child; fondled like a child; a doll; a child-like image.

Fr. Poupée, a baby, a puppet or bawble; from L. Pupus. See PUPIL.

PUPPY, v. s. PUR. A whelp not yet weaned from its mother's milk. The young of certain quadrupeds; app. to men in

22

It. Puppare, (poppare,) lactare. Puppa (poppa) mamma.—Jun. D. & Ger. Puppe; Fr. Poupée, from L. Pupus, an infant.—Sk. See PUPIL.

PUR-CHASE, v. s. In our old writers,

"King William, Queen Mary, and Queen Anne, did not take the crown by hereditary right or descent, but by way of donation or purchase, as the lawyers call it; by which they mean any method of acquiring an estate otherwise than by descent."—Blackstone.

L. Pro-ponere, -positum, is rendered by Wiclif—to purpose, &c.—**Bp. Hall*. Un-

PUR-PRIZE,* s. An inclosure, a close.

*Chaucer. Holland.

Fr. Pourpris, from Pour-prendre, to take wholly, (to comprise, qv.) to contain, to inclose.

PURR, v. A word formed from the sound.

—Lye. The name given to the noise made by a cat.

PURSE, s. v. Gen. a bag, a small bag.

—ER. To purse,—to put into the purse —PRIDE. or bag; also to draw together or contract, as the mouth of a purse when tied.

Purser,—bearer, manager, of the purse or money-bag, of the expenditure.

Purse-pride,—the pride of having a full purse; of being wealthy.

Fr. Bourse; L. Bursa; Gr. Bupan, a hide or skin, the material of which that now called a purse or bursa was made. See BURSA, and POBRY. Un-

PURSELANE, s. A plant so called.

Fr. Pourcelaine; It. Porcellana; L. Portulaca, quia foliis portulacae (little ports) imitatur.—Voss.

PURSUE, v. s. To follow, to continue —ER. following; to go after, to strive —SUIT. or endeavour to overtake, reach,

—SUIVANT. or attain; to follow, as an

—SU-ANT. enemy, or foe; as we now use—

—ANCE. to persecute.

A pursuivant,—a follower or attendant.

Fr. Poursuivre; It. Perseguire; Sp. -uir; L. Persequi, to persecute, (qv.) Un-

PURSY, ad. Bulging, swelling, or puffing out; hence, puffy, short-winded, short-breathed.

Fr. Pousiff; cheval pousif, from Pulsivus, qd. illa pulsans, or illa duccens; Serenius—from Porre, tussis, a cough. The Fr. Bourser, to purse, is also to gather, make bulch, (bulge), or beat out, as a full purse.—Col. And from the v. To purse, in this application, the ad. Purgy is probably formed.

PURTENANCE, s. Any thing pertaining or belonging to. (See To PERTAIN.)

We now use Appurtenance.

PURVEY, v. Purvey,—to provide, or

—ANCE. make provision; to seek, to pro-

—OR. cure—food; or other articles, ne-—VIEW. cessary or convenient.

Purvey,—the view forward; the forecast, the contemplation.

Chaucer attempts a distinction between Providence and Purveyance, rendering prævidentia by the former, and providentia by the latter: but it is evidently because he did not venture to adopt Prævidentia as an English word.

Fr. Pourvoir, from L. Providere, to provide, (qv.) to foresee. Un-

PURULENT, ad. Pus is—A thick, mat-

—ENCY. tery fluid; and Purulent, mattery,

PUSTULE corrupt, foul. Holland places it in his Catalogue of Words of Art, and explains it, "yeelding filth and attyr," (attrity)

Pustula, quia pus continet.—Voss.

Fr. Purulent; L. Purulentus, from Pus; Gr. Pion, from πειν, concrescere, (a notion premedi; see Lennep), to grow together, to thicken.

PUSH, v. s. Written (Chaucer) Possed, and Pushed. To thrust or press against;

to beat or drive against, with continued pressure; to urge, enforce, impel.

A push, cons.—the time, moment, emergence at which a push, effort, or exertion should be made; (in Bacon,) a pustule or pimple, pushing forth or projecting.

Fr. Pousser, pousser; It. Buscare; L. Pulsare. See PULSAR.

PUSILL-ANIMOUS, ad. Having a —OUSLY. little mind; little-minded, mean-

—ITY. spirited, faint-hearted, cowardly, dastardly.

"Pusillanimites,

Whiche is to sale in this langage,

He that hath littell of courage,

And dare no man's werk begyane."—Gower.

Fr. & Sp. Pusillan-ime; (and so written by Fox;) It. -imo; L. Pusillanimitis, from Pusillus, dim. of Pusus for Pupus, (see PUPIL), and animus, the mind. Boyle writes Pusillanimitis.

PUSS, s. App. to—A little fondling; to a cat, also to a hare; from Pusa.—Sk. See PUPIL.

PUSTULE. See PURULENT.

PUT, v. s. Put, a very common word in —TER. our oldest writers, is of very exten-

—TING. sive application to every kind and degree of motion. It has no cognate in the other northern languages; unless it has—and it may have—its origin in A. S. Bid-an, Ger. Beit-en, by the change of b and d into their cognates p and t; and thus mean, to bide or stay, or cause to bide or stay; and thus further—

To move into or out of place; to place, to move, or cause to be in any position, state, station, or situation, in any mode, manner, or condition.

It is used as our derivatives from L. Ponere and its comps. with or without accompanying præ.

To appose,—to put or place to or near to.

To compose,—to put together.

To depose or deposit,—to put down.

To expose,—to put out, to put out before.

To impose,—to put upon.

To interpose,—to put between.

To oppose,—to put against.

To postpone,—to put back, behind; to defer.

To propose or purpose,—to put before; to offer; met. to offer, to present to the mind; to mean.

To repose or reposit,—to put away, to put by, (in a place of rest or security.)

To suppose,—to put under, met.

To transpose,—to put across, to transfer.

Met.—to move, impel, induce; and, used with various other præ. has (met. and cons.) a designation which must be inferred from the context; as—To put on, to assume.

Glanvill writes Put-pin; usually called Push-pin.

Sk. derives from Fr. Bouter, proriam impellere, to bout, (as a ram, qv.) to push or drive forwards, which G. Douglas writes To put.—P. 300. l. 14. And to show that Put was anciently used as equivalent to Push, Dr. Jamieson quotes from Brunsen's Account of the Raising of Stonehenge:—

"Merlyn said, 'Now makes assay
To putte this stones down if ye may.'
And ilk man toke that he mote hent
Ropes to drawe, trees to put,
Thel schoued, thei thrist, &c.
When alle the had put and thrist,
And ilk man don that him list
& left her puttyng manyon
Git stired thei not thee lest ston."

R. Gloucester writes it Pult, which may with as good reason identify Put with Pull: "To hys scaubert he putt ys hond." Under-

PUTATIVE, ad. Fr. "Putatif,"—putative, reputed, imaginary, supposed, esteemed."—Cot. See REPUTE. Ina kind of hawk.

PUTTOCK, s. Sk. derives from L. Buteo,

PUTTY, s. A metallic mixture or composition, used to give a polish, colour, or coating to pots; then app. to a similar composition used in the manufacture of glass; and, subs. (as now most usually,) to a composition used in fixing glass in window frames.

Fr. Potke, potin. Cot. calls Potke, "brass, copper, tin, pewter, &c. burnt or calcinated." Putty or Pottain as Holland, or Pot-brass as Boyle writes, seem all to mean the same thing.

PUZZLE, v. s. To confuse, to perplex, to bewilder, to embarrass, to entangle.

Sk. almost acquiesces in the opinion that Puzzle is qd. Poole, from the v. To pose, to confuse by a difficult question. See To POSE. Em-

PYGMY. See PIGMY

PYRAMID, s. "Towers they be, erected

Q.

JUNIUS is inclined to think, and Lye more decidedly, that the Go. Θ, supposed by some to be equivalent to the L. Q, or A. S. Cw or kw, was merely A. S. Hw, or Eng. Wh. The hw in the A. S. Hwa, what, when, &c. is represented in the correspondent Go. words by Θ; and so in other instances—wheat, warp, white. The Eng. Saxons (says B. Jonson) knew not this halting q with her waiting woman u after her, but exprest Quail by Kuail, &c. &c. After the L. words Quality, Quantity, (for instance,) were introduced into our language, the letter q was allowed to usurp the best of k's possessions in words of native growth. Wilkins observes that, being considered a comp. of c and u, it is in many ancient books written without the u—as qis, qæ, qid. The L. Q has evidently the force of the Gr. K, and the diphthong ou; thus kovam, or cōam, is quam. And see QUADRANT. and QUALITY.

"Qu (says Tooke) being sounded in L. (not as the Eng. but as the Fr. pronounce Qu, that is) as the Gr. K; Kai (by a change of the character, not of the sound) became the L. Que (used only enclitically in Mod. L.) hence Kai otti, became in L. Qu'otti, quoddi, quodde, quod. The Latins, in cutting off e at the end of Que, only followed the example of the Greeks, who did the same by Kai, e. g. K'otti." See WHO.

Q and C were used in common, as in argus or arcus, oculus or oculus, quum or cum, hujusque or hujusce, quotidie or cotidie. And in past p. of verbs, qu is changed into cu; as seguor, secutus.

QUAB, s. An unfledged bird, a nestling; met. any thing in an imperfect, unfinished, state.—Gifford. And see SQUAB.

QUACK, v. D. Quacken, queken; Ger. Queken; to make the noise of frogs, ducks, &c.; formed from the sound, as Gr. Koaf; L. Coasare. In Chaucer ("As he were on the quakke, or on the pose,") Quakke (Tyrrw.) seems to be put for an inarticulate noise, occasioned by any obstruction in the throat. But see QUAKE.

QUACK, v. s. Quack, v.—To make a -ERY. noisy crying or talking; to -ISH. make noisy claims or pre- -SALVER, s. v. tensions.

Quacksalver,—one who cries salves or unguents; one who sells them.

Quackery,—vain, false, presumption, or pretension.

D. Quack-salver; Gr. -salber; Sw. -salves. Properly, (Wach.) unguentarius inconditione et molesté vociferens, from Quacken, to quack, (see ante), and Ger. Salbe; D. Salve; Sw. Salves, salve.

QUADRAGENE, s. "You have with much labour and some charge, purchased to yourself so many quadrages, or lents of pardon; that is, you have bought off the penances of so many times forty days."—Bp. Taylor. See QUARANTINE.

Low L. Quadragesa, quarentena; forty.

QUADRAGESIMAL, ad. Lenten, of or pertaining to Lent. Also app. to those who write the customary verses during the Lent season; the carmina quadragesimalia.

It. Quadragesimale; Fr. & Sp. Quadragesimal, from Quadragesima, the fortieth, sc. day before Easter; and, cons.—first of Lent.

QUADRANGLE, s. -GULAR. A square plot or figure, having four angles (quatuor angulos), and four sides.

Fr. Quadrangle; It. -golo; Sp. -gulo.

QUADRU-PED, ad. s. An animal having four feet, (quatuor pedes.)

Fr. Quadrup-s; It. & Sp. -ede; L. Quadrupes.

QUADRUPLE, s. v. -Y. Fourfold; four times as much.

Fr. Quadrupli-s; It. & Sp. -o; L. Quadruplito, -ples, -plicare; to make fourfold, (plicare, to fold.) Sub-

QUAFF, v. -ING. To swallow or drink in abundant drafts; to drink abundantly or copiously.

Sk. derives from Go off, or rather from A. S. Caf, quick; qd. to drink quickly; but To quaff is—to drink copiously, abundantly. And A. S. Wafan, to wave, with the common pref. Ge, would form Ge-wafan; and by contraction—Gwaf-ian, or Cwaf-ian, to wave or flow in waves, to swallow in waves or gulps, in abundance. Sc. Quaff, is a vessel to drink out of.

QUAFFER, v. Used by Derham, who probably meant,—to quaver, to shake.

QUAG, s. So called from their quaking or -GY. shaking; quailing or sinking; -MIRE. quavering or shaking.

Quag is quake. Quagmire is quake-mire. Gardner writes Qualmire, qd. Qualmire; and see QUAVEMIRE.

QUAID, pt. i. e. Quailed; or, perhaps, Cowed, (qv.)

QUAIL, v. -ING. To quell or kill; to overpower, to subdue, to depress, to deject; to die, to decessare or decay; to sink, to droop, to fall or fail. See TO QUELL. Un-

QUAIL, s. -PIPE. A bird, so called from the noise it makes.

Fr. Caille; It. Quaglia; Sp. Coalla; D. Quackel.

QUAINT, ad. Dressed, decked, trimmed -LY. —neatly or nicely; carefully or -NESS. curiously, artfully, dressed, or -ISE.* decked or trimmed; neat, nice, -ISED.† curious; cunning or artful, subtle; curious or surprising, odd, strange.

*Chaucer. †Gower.

Fr. Coint, cointise, from the L. Comptus, (Men.) part p. of Comere, to dress or deck. Cot. in his explanations, uses the words, Compt, compilly, compiness. R. Gloucester writes it with k and s as well as qu.

QUAKE, v. s. To tremble, to shake, to -ER. totter, (to wag.)

-ERISM. In Holinshed, quake appears to -ERLY. be the ague:—"The smoke in those daies was reputed a far -ING. better medicine to keepe the -INGLY. goodman and his familie from the quake or pose." See QUACK.

A. S. Cwac-ian, (Cwac-ian), tremere, to tremble, to shake.

QUALITY, s. Any thing pertaining or -TIED. belonging to, constituting or -FY, v. forming a constituent part or
-FICATION. portion of, appropriated to; to -PIER. the kind or sort, degree or
-FYING. rank, manner, state, condition,
-FIABLE.* property; and also, emph.—to
-FICATIVE.† high degree or rank, as people of quality.

Qualify,—to bestow or endow with qualities, sc. fit or suitable for the purpose; to fit, suit, or render fit or suitable; to empower; also, to alter or change, to abate or reduce, the force of some qualities by the intixture of others; and thus,—to modify or moderate, to abate, to mitigate.

*Barrow. †Fuller.

Fr. Qualité, -ité; It. -ità, -ità; Sp. Calidad, -idad; L. Qualitas, from Qualis, which Voss. leaves unsettled. Tooke says, "Talis and qualis are compound words; the first part Gr. Te, and kal, both signifying and; te-illus,—kal-illus;
i. e. and of this,—and of that," (Svo. ed.) Qualis,
—of that kind, degree, &c. Be-Dis-Un-

QUALM, s. -ISH. A sinking, drooping, failing or faintness.

A. S. Cwealm, subita segitudo, from cweallan, to quell or quail, (qqv.)

QUANDARY, s. -IED. A puzzle or perplexity; a fear of, or arising from, uncertainty.

From the Fr. Qu's diray-je; L. e. quid agam, quid dicam, quo me vertam, nescio, (Sk.); what I shall do or say, or where turn me, I know not.

QUANTITY, s. App. to—Measurement
-T-ATIVE. of magnitude, of weight; that
-ATIVELY. which, the part or portion which,
-IVE. is measured or weighed; weight or bigness, bulk; emph. a large part or portion.

Quantitates, &c. are found in scholastic Metaphysics, and Divinity.

Fr. Quantité; It. -ità; Sp. Cantidad; L. Quantitas, quantus; i. e. Quantitas, quantus; quam, the accusative of quis, i. e. qui or quod; and tantus, re
de. See QUALITY. De-

QUAPPE,* v. To quaver, shake, quail.
*Chaucer.

QUAR,* s. The place where the stone is
-RY. cut in squares; gen. a stone-pit.
-RIED.† Phaer seems to use Quar for a mass or body, (a squadron.)

*Phaer. B. Jonson. †Chaucer.

Fr. Quarriere; in the L. of the Low. Ages,
Quadrularius was a stone-cutter, a querrour,
(Chaucer.) qui marmora quadrat; and hence
Quarriere, the place where he quadrates or cuts the stone in squares. And see QUARREL.

QUARANTINE, s. Forty, sc. days.

"These forty days, (during which, after his death, she shall remain in her husband's capital mansion house,) are called the widow's quarantine; a term made use of in Law to signify the number of forty days, whether app.
to this occasion or any other. It signifies in particular, the forty days which persons coming from infected countries are obliged to wait before they are permitted to land in England."—Blackstone.

Fr. Quarantaine. See QUADRIGENE.

QUARRE-FOUR,* s. A cross-way;— perhaps a quarre-fare; a quadrivial, (qv.)
*Holland.

QUARREL, v. s. 1. To lay a complaint
-LER. against: to litigate, to contend,
-LING. to wrangle, to disagree, to
-LINGLY. dispute.
2. To contend, to contest, to
-LOUS. dispute, to disagree, to squab-
-SOMENESE. ble, to wrangle.

Fr. Querel-ler; It. -are; Low L. Querelari, querelas effundere, to pour forth complaints;
more especially complaints, accusations in courts of justice.—Voss. De Vitiis, p. 781. And hence the first explanation. But the It. Querel-a, Fr.
-le, are more probably (as the Sp. Guerrilla, a little war, from guerra) diminutives of guerre, guerra, war. And hence the second explanation. Un-

QUARREL, s. or QUARRY. Gen.—A little square thing; a quarrel or boult, for a cross-bow, or an arrow with a four-square head.—Cot.

Fr. Quarreau; It. Quadrèllo; Low L. Quadrellus, quarellus. Also called Quarry, (qv.) In Cartwright, Quarrel is app. to a square of glass.

QUARRY, s. Seems to be—The prey sought, pursued, chased, hunted, aimed at.

"I know not whether from the Fr. Quèrir, L.
Quarere, to seek or search after.—Sk. Lye adds the conjecture of Kennet, from carry, the prey carried off.

QUART, s. A quart or quarter, — a
-AN. fourth part of any thing;
-ER, v. s. a part or division (of the -ERAGE. heavens), or district of
-ERING. a country or town, of a field
-ERLY, ad. av. or encampment; perhaps
-ILE. because formerly divided
-O. into quarters. Hence Quar-
-ATION.* ters, app. to the station or lodgement of soldiers; and—

To live in the same quarters,—to live as fellow-soldiers, sociably, amicably; whence Quarter is further app. to good fellowship or companionship, friendliness, kindness, sympathy, or compassion; and to give quarter, is to give or grant mercy, to spare from slaughter.

This latter usage, is, however, historically accounted for by De Brieux. (See in Mén.) He says that quarter was the portion of pay, promised as ransom by soldiers or officers to their conquerors in battle; but he does not state of pay for what time, whether week, month, or a whole campaign.—Boyle.

Fr. Quart, quart-cire, -ier; It. Quart-a, -iere, quartiere; Sp. Quarta, -a, -es, -eser. See QUA-DRANT, for etym.

QUASH, v. To annul, to annihilate, to put an end to. See QUASH, infra.

See TO CASH or CASHIER. From the L.
Cassus, which signifies vain, useless, good for nothing, has been formed (says Caseneuve) the Bar. L. v. Casso, cassare, cassum reddere; and thence the Fr. Casser, to destroy, to annul.
And see Voss. De Vitiis, lib. iv. c. 3.

QUASH, v. To beat down, to crush, to dash, to squeeze or press down.

"The erthe quook and quashete, as hit quyke were."—Piers Ploughman.

"The eiuvll spirite that tooke him, quashing the childe on the ground."—Udal.

"Hope brings the boll whereon they all must quasse."—Gascolgne.

"A thin and fine membrane strait and closely adhering to keep it [the brain] from quashing and shaking."—Ray.

D. Quasere; Ger. chen; Sw. -s; A. S. Cweasan, to crush, to bruise, to squeeze, (q.) to burst asunder.—Som. Fr. Casser is derived by Caseneuve from quassare, frequentative of quatre, to shake. The L. Quatre and Quassare are (Tooke) from Quacian, to quake. Quash, in Piers Ploughman and Ray, is equivalent to Quassare, i. e. to quake or shake. Quasse, in Gascolgne, seems to be used as Crush, in the expression,—To crush a cup.

QUATERNARY, s. -NITY. Four; containing, consisting of four.

Fr. Quaternaire; L. Quaternarius.

QUATERNION, s. v. A company, of four in number.

L. Quaternio, the number four.

QUATRAINE, s. A stanza of four verses.—Cot. Fr. Quatrain.

QUAVE,* v. To move to and fro, backward,* wards and forwards; to have a -ER, v. s. tremulous motion, to shake.

-ERING. An earth-quave (Sir T. Elyot),—i. e. an earth-quake.

Quave-mire (North),—see QUAGMIRE.

Sir T. Elyot.

Formed, perhaps, as the v. To quaff, (qv.); to wave, to waver, to move to and fro.

QUAY, s. That by which the water is confined and shut out; cons.—a place secured (from sea or river), for goods lading or unlading.

Fr. Quay, from A. S. Cæggian, to shut, fasten, or confine.—Tooke. See WAGES.

QUEACH, s. -Y. Seems to mean—a washy place (like an oziery) set with trees; and Queachy, washy.

A. S. Ge-wasc-an; by contraction gwasco or cwasco-ian, (the c softened,) lavare, to wash. Sk.—dumetum, vepretum, locus arbusculis densis stipatus, a place crowded with young or little trees. Chapman renders Gr. ῥωμηνα πυκνα, thorniest quasches. See QUEASY.

QUEAN, s. The dweller with, mate, QUEEN, s. v. fellow, bedfellow (of a man, his -LY. concubine); a wench, a strumpet. Written Quean. Also—

The married mate, the wife, of a king or sovereign; the female sovereign. Written Queen.

In A. S. Cwen, quena; D. Quene; Ger. Queen; Sw. Kona, kona, quinna; a wife, a woman; formerly (says Som.) a name of honour, now usually app. to women of loose character (meretricibus). It may be formed from A. S. Ge-wæn-ian, ge-wæn-ian; D. Ghe-wonen; Ger. Ge-wönnen, ge-wönnen, manere, habitare, to wone, wont, or be wont. In So, To wone is, still, to dwell, to live. The A. S. Ge-wæn-ian, by contraction gwan-ian or cwan- ian, would give cwan, one who dwells with, lives with, is fellow or mate to, matched with, sc. a man; and thus app. in honour or dishonour, according to the terms upon which the woman dwelt with the man, in a married or unmarried state;—to the fellow or companion of a king, &c. &c.;—to the hæor-cwena, the hired quene, the harlot. In Sw. Quæn-as, in Isl. Quonpast is uxorem ducere, to take a wife, sc. to our home, to dwell or live with us. Wach. derives Queen from Cænan, parere; Jun.—from Gr. ῥωμη. Un—

QUEASY, ad. -INESS. i. e. Queachy, (qv.) or washy, as if floating, sc. on the stomach; rising on the stomach, and hence—

Feeling a tendency to sickness; sickly, nauseating, weak, delicate.

QUEER, ad. Perverse, or not pursuing -LY. any direct course, or doing as -NESS. others do, or would expect to be done; cross-grained, odd.

G. Douglas writes, "Calland the colzeare ane knaif, and coulroun full quere." I. e. "Calling the collier a knave and the cullion full quere;" which (quere) Lye suggests may pertain to our present ad. Queer. Neither Ruddiman nor Dr. Jamieson says any thing about it. Our old authors write, Churn, Querne, in A. S. Cweorne, which is the past p. of Cyrran, ge-cyrran, to turn, vertere, revertere, pervertere—and Cyrr (i. e. perhaps, quer) is perverius. See QUERRE.

QUEINT,* v. To extinguish; to destroy, to allay, to cool.

**Chaucer*. Gower, &c. Spenser.

A. S. Quencad, (quench, quent), past p. of Quenan, extinguere, to quench, (qv.)

QUIP, v. s. Quip (according to Jun.) will

QUIBBLE, v. s. be—To lash, to cut with some -ING. sharp or smart saying, with -ER. some sarcasm; to scoff, to taunt.

"Manes. We cynics are mad fellows; didst thou not find I did quip thee?"

"Pyg. No verily: why, what's a quip?"

"Manes. We great girders call it a short saying of a sharp wit, with a bitter sense in a sweet word."—Lyly. Alexander & Campaspe.

And Quibble, a dim; qd. Quibble, — a sharp or smart play upon words; a quick, sharp, or acute elusion or evasion by verbal subtlety.

Jun. thinks,—from Whip, (A. S. Hwecpas, to whip, to lash.) But Quibble is more probably a corruption of Quiddit, (also corrupted into Quille, qv.); and Quip, as a further corruption of Quibble, is much more satisfactorily accounted for. (See also QUODLIBET.) All these words we seem to owe to the subtle trifling of the schools.

QUIRE, QUAIRE, or QUEARE, s. A square or bundle of squares (of paper).

Fr. Quayer or cayer; D. Qua-dern or -tern, from L. Quaternio. Fr. Quarreau or carreau, a square.

QUIRE, s. v. -ISTER, i. e. Choir, (qv.)

QUIRITATION,* s. A calling or imploring for help.—**Bp. Hall.*

L. Quiritatio, from quiritare. Quiritas clere, to call upon the Quiritas or Romans (for help).

QUIRK, s. -ISH. That which wreasts or twists any thing from its straight course, its right meaning; a twist or turn, an artful or subtle evasion; a subtle conceit, a subtlety.

Sk. suggests Ger. Zwerch, thwarted or swerved, wrested, twisted. Zwerch is A. S. Thweorh, past p. of thweor-ian, to wrest, (also written ge-thweor-ian.)

QUISTRON, s. Tyrw. thinks—A scullion, "un guerçon de cuisine;" perhaps, as Urry supposed, a beggar, from Fr. Quistrer, to ask, to beg. Quistrent,—see Roquefort.

QUIT, v. To clear, free, or deliver, (to QUITE, av. acquit,) to release, to discharge, -LY.*

QUIT-AL. selves, (from debt or obligation, s. v. tion,) to repay, (to requite,) to -URE.† recompense; to fulfil, to perform.

To quit,—to leave or go away from; Law L. Quittare, (Du Cange and Spel.) i. e. to leave quietly, give up peaceable possession; to relinquish, to resign, to forsake. See To LEAVE.

Quite,—clearly, absolutely; wholly.

**Chaucer. †Chapman.*

See ACQUIT, and REQUITE. Fr. Quit-er or -ter, -or -te; It. -ure; Sp. -or; D. Quyt; Ger. Quitt; Low L. Quittare, quietare, (from quietus,) quietem reddere, to render (sc. the debtor or obligor) quiet; and thus, to forgive a debt, to confess it satisfied; and hence the explanation. Ac-Re-

QUIVER, v. ad. -ING. To move to and fro, backwards and forwards; to move tremulously; to tremble, to shake, to quake, (to waver.) See To QUAYER, and To SHIVER.

Quiver, the ad. may be from Quick, nimble, active, lively, animated: "Thy quick and quiver wings."—Twberville. "Of body feeble and impotent, but of soule quiver and lustie."—Udal.

QUIVER, s. -ED. A cover, case, or sheath (for arrows).

In Fr. Carquois; It. -casso; Sp. -cas. In Ger. Ko-cher; D. -ker; Sw. Coger; but our Eng. word seems to come immediately from Fr. Couvrir, to cover, co-operire; est enim phætrea operculamentum quoddam.—Martin. In v. Phætrea.

QUOD-LIBET, s. i. e. A quillet or quid-ICAL. libet,* (qv.) What you please.

-ICALLY. That of which you may make what you please. Proposed at pleasure;

QUONDAM, ad. -SHIP. * Former; at one or some time.

Quondamship,—some former state or condition.—**Latimer*.

L. Quondam; at some time, at some former time.

R A C

QUOTE, v. To note or mark; to copy, -ATION. extract, repeat, a part or portion; to set down, affix, or name -ATIONIST. the quantity, the price, (how much.)

Fr. Quoter, coter; It. Cotare; Sp. Quotar; Low L. Quotare, from Quotus, to note or mark how much, what part or portion. Mis-

QUOTH, v. QUOD. i. e. Said I.

Quod. i. e. Quothed, quothd, quod.

A.S. Cwoth, past tense of Queth-an, to say; Ger. Queden.

QUOTI-DIAN, ad. Daily; coming, happening every day; incessant.

Fr. Quotidi-en; It. & Sp. -ano; L. Quotidianus, from Quotidie, (quotia dies), daily, each or every day.

QUEUE, s. i. e. Cue, (qv. and Queue.)

R.

R. This letter (Wilkins) is called, from the snarling of dogs, litera canina; 'tis made by a quick trepidation of the tip of the tongue being vibrated against the palate; for which they who are disabled, by reason of the natural infirmity of their tongues, which is called Τραυλισμος, balbuties, do commonly pronounce, instead of it, the letter l, which is of a more soft and easie sound.

Rh or hr, the correspondent mute to this, is made by a forcible emission of the breath through the instruments of speech in the same position as for the letter R, but without any vocal sound.

R presents itself as a literal root in the Go. Air, A.S. Ar. See ARE, ER, ERE, OR, HERO, &c.; and RE, the prefix.

RABATO. See REBATO.

RABBIT, v. s. To plane, level, make or lay even; also to smooth.—Cot.

A rabbit-stock is reckoned by Tusser among husbandry furniture.

Fr. Raboter, from L. Rad-ere. See MEN.

RABBI, s. The Heb. Rabbi, from Rab, -BIN-IC. great, excellent, chief, chief master, -ICAL. ter, was equivalent to the Gr. -ICALLY. Διδασκαλος, master, teacher. -IST.

RABBIT, s. An animal.

D. Robb-e, -cken. Sk.—from L. Rapidus, swift; Jun. believes it to have been formerly written Robbet; and, perhaps, corrupted from Rough-set; (D. Rouwoock.) See HARE.

RABBLE, s. v. -MENT. A rabble,—a noisy, confused brawling, a noisy, clamorous profusion of words; also a noisy, tumultuous medley (of people).

D. Rabbelen, præcipitare, sive confundere verba; from L. Rabula, a bawler or brawler,—a rabie dictus. See RABID.

RABID, ad. Virulent, violent, furious;

-NESS. ravening.—**Chaucer*.

-BIATE. * L. Rab-itus, -ies, from Rabere; and this either from Gr. Ράσσειν, corrumpi violentia; or from ρατ-ειν, latrare, to bark, as the word is peculiarly used of dogs.—Voss. A.S. Reaf-ian, to raze, (qv.)?

RACE, s. The root; the origin whence any thing rises or issues; the lineage, family, kindred, breed, or generation; the course or progress, process or procedure. See RACE, s. v. and RACE, RACY.

Race of ginger,—Sp. Raza de gengibre; L. Radix zinziberis.

Fr. Race, racine; It. Razza; Sp. Raza, from L. Radix, a root, from Gr. Ραδις, a branch.—Voss. See RADICATE.

RACE, s. v. -ER. Not improbably the same word as the preceding, app. from the consequential usage,—sc. course, progress, procedure, to—

A course or progress, in contest or rivalry; motion of swiftness or speed; a foot-race, horse-race, boat-race.

Sk.—perhaps from D. Rennen, qd. Rames; others from the Isl. Ras, of a similar meaning.

RACE, s. App. to—A taste or flavour, -Y. savouring of the right vintage, of -INESS. the right kind or sort; showing its root or origin, its soil; peculiar to its kind.

Also a consequential usage of Race, radix. De-En-Un-

RAD

RACEMATION, s. Formation of, or into, bunches or clusters.

L. Racemus, a bunch or cluster. See RAISIN.

RACK, s. A rack of hay, (in which is put) —a quantity of hay, collected, drawn, raked together. See RAKE.

RACK, s. i. e. Rock: the part of the spinning machine covered by the wool that is to be spun. See ROCK.

RACK, v. s. That which is reeked. See REEK.

To rack,—to reack, to move like vapour or smoke.

Rack, s.—vapour, steam, exhalation, fume.

The commentators on Shak. (see their Notes, and Tooke, vol. ii. p. 389 et seq., and Dr. Jamieson, in v. Rak.) have fallen into the common mistake of including a meaning expressed by the context in their explanation of the word; and were thus entirely diverted from its etym. and consequently from its intrinsic signification.

A. S. Ræc, smoke, steam, reack or reek; Ræc-an, to smoke, reæke, or cast forth vapours.

RACK, v. s. To afflict or distress; to —ER. pain, to torture, to torment; to dis-ING. tract, to stretch, to strain; and hence,—to draw off, sc. liquors, or the pure portion from the foul or lees.

D. Racken; Ger. Racken; Go. Wriken; A. S. Wræcan, erican, to wreak, (qv.) exercise, agitare, affligere, infligere, punire; to exercise, constrain, or correct; to afflict or inflict, to punish, to distress or distract.

RACKET, s. v. App. to—A game in which balls are struck or beaten; to the instrument with which they are struck; and further,—to the noise, clamour, bustle of the game. And the v.—

To dash, strike, or beat; to drive about with noise, bustle, confusion.

Fr. Raquette; Sp. -eta; It. Racchetta. Men.—from L. Rete; thus Rete, reticum, retica, reticula, retiquetta, rekettia, rakettia, raquetia: it is more probably a dim. from Wric-an, to rack, affligere, to dash against, to strike or beat against.

RADDLE, s. A raddle hedge is a hedge of pleached or plashed, or turned or wreathed twigs or boughs. See TOOKE.

So pronounced for Wrathel, the dim. of Wrath, i. e. wreathed.

RADIATE, v. To throw forth, eject, or —ANT. emit, to surround or encircle with, —ANTLY. —rays (of light); to shine, en-ANCE. lighten, or illuminate; to brighten, —ATION. give brightness, splendour, brilliant, —OUS. —liancy.—G. Fletcher.

Fr. Rad-teue, —iation; L. & It. Radiares, from Radius; Gr. ῥαδίορ, εἶργα, a rod; first app. to—a measuring rod, to any thing similar, the spokes of a wheel, the bone of the arm, the lines which the sun emits. The Gr. ῥαδίορ, from ῥαδ-ειν, to cut off; for it is a long, slender branch cut from a tree.—Martin. Cor. E-tr.

RAG

RADICAL, ad. s. To root or enroot, to —CALLY. fix, to infix, as the root in the —CALITY. earth, firmly, deeply; to plant, —CATE, v. ad. to implant.

—CATION. Fr. & Sp. Radical; It. -ale; L. —CLE. Radicali, from Rad-ic, —ic, a root; from the Gr. ῥαδίς, a branch, (Voss.); as the upper part of the tree spreads itself in branches, so the lower disperses in fibres through the earth. See RACE. E-

RADISH, s. A plant.

Fr. Radis, from L. Radix, a root. In L. Rophanus; Gr. ῥαφανος, and also ῥαδίς.

RAFF, s. v. Any thing reaved or torn away, (roughly, raggedly, coarsely,) the rough or ragged or coarse parts, the rags; the refuse; a rough, unsorted heap or mass or medley.

To raff up, is—to put up or collect roughly, coarsely, in a disorderly manner.

Carew.

Sk. in v. Riff-raff, (qv.) from the D. Raffen, to rive or reave; and Tooke, immediately from A. S. Ref-ian, reaf-ian, rapere, to rive, reave, or berave, to tear away. See RZAVE, &c.

RAFFLE, v. s. To raffle, is—to rifle, which Sk. derives from A. S. Ræflan, rapere, to reave. See RAFF. Fr. Raffle,—"A game at three dice, wherein he that throws all three alike wins whatsoever is set; also, a rifling. Faire un raffle,—to rifle; to sweep all away before them. Raffler,—to rifle; to sweep all away," (Col.); win all. "Most commonly they use rafle; that is, to throw in with three dice, till duplets and a chance be thrown; and the highest duplets wins, except you throw in and in, which is called rafle; and that wins all."—Dryden.

Dan. Rafter. See RZAVE, &c.

RAFT, s. -ER. That which is raft, raft, torn, or roughly hewn or cut. A raft is formed or framed of pieces of wood or timber so raft.

A rafter,—such or similar piece used in building.

Raft, Sk. thinks, is the L. Ratis. Rafter,—A. S. Ræft-er; D. Ræft-er, lignum, rude. It is the part p. Raf-ed, raft, or raft, of the A. S. Ræft-ian, to rive or reave, to tear away. See RZAVE, &c.

RAG, s. That which is rent or torn, —GED. severed, tattered, a tatter.

—GEDNESS. Ragabash or Raggabash (see —GY. Gross and Brocket) is, perhaps, a corruption of Ragged (or perhaps Rakell) rubbish: but of Ragamuffin, (written in Shak. Rag of muffin, and in P. Plouhman Ragamuffin), the examples found have afforded no clue to trace the origin.

Rag, in Shak. (T. of A., and M. W. of W.) is a very different word: the commentators call it an opprobrious term; it is merely Rogue, (qv.) cheat, impostor; (one having a concealed, covered character. See ROGUE, and RAY.)

Jun.—from the Gr. ῥακος, a torn garment. The A. S. Hracod, Lye says, is Rak-ed, ragged, laceratus; and it may be racked, bracked, or broken, distracted, rent, or torn asunder. See RACE, v.; and BRACK.

RAGE, s. v. To be or feel, or cause to be -ING. or feel, to do or act, ravingly,
-INGLY. rabidly, madly, wildly, wan-
-FUL.* tonly; to be furious, violent;
-IOUS.† to storm, to act furiously, vio-
-IOUSNESS.‡ lently, or vehemently.

"Anger, in the excess of its violence, when it is excited to a degree of phrenzy, so that the mind has totally lost self-command, when it prompts to threats and actions extravagant and atrocious, is termed rage."—Cogan.

Ragerie,—wantonness, (Tyrw.): though it may admit of doubt, whether To rage, in Chaucer (Miller's Tale), may not mean to play the rogue. See RAG.

**Sidney*. †Bp Fisher. ‡Hydras.

Fr. Rage; It. Rab-bia; Sp. -ia, -lor, from L. Rabies. See RABID. En- (or In-) Out-

RAIL, s. v. -ING. Rails,—by which any area, court-yard, or other place is thinly (i. e. not closely, but with small intervals) covered. And also a woman's rail, or night-rail,—a covering, sc. a vest, to cover or throw over her.—Tooke.

A. S. Rag-el is dim. of Rag or Roy, the past tense of Wrig-an, to rig or cover. See RAT. En- In-

RAIL, v. Slightly covered, or cloaked, or -ER. concealed, sc. jesting, or bantering, or satire. And the v. Fr. -INGLY. Railler,—

-LERY. To rally, to joke or jest at or RALLY, v. with, to banter, to satirize gently or slightly. And—

To rail (by usage),—to satirize roughly or coarsely; to abuse, or employ abusive, angry, contumelious or opprobrious language, of or toward—any one.

Railly and Raillery: Fr. Rail-ler, -lerie; D. Railen, reilen, from ridiculeri or ridere. (See in Men. and Sk.) Tooke thinks from Rag-el, the dim. of Rag, or Roy, the past tense of Wrig-an, to cover; (see RAIL, supra;) and this etym. coincides with the usage, viz. Fr. Railler-le, -y, (a word, says Sk. lately introduced.)

RAILE,* v. To spring, gush forth, flow.

**Chaucer*. Spenser. Faeriefax.

I know not (Sk.) whether from Fr. Rouler, to roll. Lye,—to rill, which he derives from D. Rivole, rivulus.

RAIN, s. v. -Y. Rain,—That which (water which) runs, flows, falls, or drops, sc. from the clouds.

To rain, met.—to pour or shower down. Piers Plouhman writes—"In Helles time heauen was closed, that no raïne ne romne."

Rain-bow,—an arch in the heavens formed by reflections and refractions of the rays of light through drops of falling rain. See Bow.

D. Rag-hen, -henen; Ger. -en, -enen; Dan. Regn, rogner; Sw. Regn, regna, pluvia, pluere; Go. Rign, rygnan; A. S. Rin-an, to rain (or, as anciently written, to regne.) Perhaps Go. and A. S. Rinnan, to run, currere, decurrere, defluere, to run or flow down. Be-

RAISE, v. z. To put, place, or set up; to -ER. bear, bring, take up; to rear, to -EDLY. lift, to heave, to erect, to heighten, to exalt, to levy, to elevate, to extol, to excite; to give rise or origin, to train.

Bale and Hackluyt use Raise, s. We now use Rise, (qv.)

Dan. Reiser; D. Ryssen; Go. Reiszen, reiszen, exists in the compo. Urreis-an, Urreisyan, surgere, suscitare, to raise, rise, or cause to rise. See LAY. Jun. thinks it the same word as Rear, (qv.) by a common change of r into s. Mis- Un- Up-

RAISIN, s. A fruit; the grape, dried. So named from their growing in bunches. Fr. Raisins; (Raisins de Corinthe, the Corinth or currant; L. Racemus, a bunch or cluster.)

RAKE, s. v. -ER. A rake,—the tool with which hay, grass, &c. is drawn together.

To rake,—to draw together, to gather, or collect, (into a heap;) and, consa. to draw apart, to examine, to search.

To draw or drag along, to read or tear along or away; to scour. "Such an ungratious couple, a man shall not finde agayne, if he raked all hell for them."—Ascham.

D. Raecke, raecken, raeken; Dan. Rager; Ger. Rechen; A. S. Race, past p. of Racian; Go. Ricyan, congerere, colligere, to collect, to draw together. See RACK, RICK, RICH. Un-

RAKEL, s. A rakel or rake,—A reck-RAKEHELL less, heedless, rash, profligate -LY. person.

RAKE. Rakehell, from Rakel, which seems -SHAME. to be a corruption from Reckless, that is, reckless; and a rake, a still further corruption. See RACK, and see in V. RACK, above, the quotation from Ascham.

RALLY, v. "Fr. Rallier,—to rally, re-assemble, reunite; gather dispersed, close disjoyned things together," (Cot.); to re-collect.

Sk. (also Lye.) qd. Re-alligare; or, as Spenser writes it, Re-allig.

RAM, v. s. To ram is,—to stop, to stop -MER. or block up; to cram, to press -MISE.* close, to drive, push, beat, or otherwise force down; to beat or batter; to butt.

Ram,—an animal, male of the sheep or goat: remarkable for its propensity to ram or butt.

The military engine,—“It is called a ram, eyther because it hath a very hard front, whych pusheth up the wals, or els because, after the manner of rammes, it goeth backe to thentent to stryke wyth greater violence.”—Goldinge. Caesar.

Rammish,—having the qualities or disposition of a ram, its salaciousness, strong smell, &c.—“Chaucer. Joy.

Wach. and Lye write learnedly, but to little purpose. D. Ger. & A. S. Ram, aries. There seems little reason to doubt that A. S. Hrammen, which Lye, Som. and Benson interpret impedire, to impede, to stop, is the true origin of the v. To ram, and that the animal is so called from its action with the head.

RAMAGE, ad. s.† -ious.† Wild, untamed; from Ramage, s. boughs or branches.

*Gower. †Drummond. ‡Chaucer.

Fr. Ramage, from Ramus, (see RAMIFY.) Le ramage d'oiseau, the wood or wild song of a bird, (see Men.); and hence, gen.—as above.

RAMBLE, v. s. To go over small spaces, -ER. to wander over short distances; to -ING. move or go about irregularly.

Sk., among other suggestions, has L. Es-ambulare: it is the dim. of Roam, (qv.)

RAMIFY, v. To branch out, to extend, -IFICATION. to expand separately, as the -ous.* branches from the trunk.

*Newton.

Fr. Ramifier; It. cedere; Sp. car; ramos facere, to form branches or boughs. Voss. suggests various etyms. of L. Ramus. May it not be from A. S. Rym-as, to spread, to extend, to reach out, to branch? See ROAM, RAMBLE.

RAMP, v. s. To climb, to mount, to ascend; to rise or spring up, to -ANCY. leap or jump up or about, to -ALLIAN.* rise, spring, or grow up, (rapidly, wantonly, superabundantly.)

Rampallian may be a ramping or romping wanton person.—*Shak. Beau. & F.

Fr. Ramper, -ant; It. dare, dare; Sp. ar, arse, to climb, to ascend, to mount. Men. derives from L. Rep-ere, to creep. Rampende is given by Lye and Jun. from Elfred's Translation of Gregory, De Cura Pastoral; where the L. is Præcipitatus. Probably akin to A. S. Rym-an, to roam.

RAMPART, s. Something raised or -P-ER, or thrown up, sc. in defence, for pro-IRE, v. s. tectum; a bank, wall, fortress.

Fr. Remp-art, -arer. Men. from Riparo, defence, and Riparo from Ripa: more probably of the same origin as Ramp, signifying to rise or raise.

RANCH, or RAUNCH, v. i. e. To wrench. To wrest, to distort, to strain, to distort, to rend or tear. See BRANCH, CRANCH.

A. S. Wring-as; to torque, distorque, extorque, to wrest, to pull or drag out or aside.

RANCOUR, s. App. to—A feeling that -COROUS. wrings or tortures (the heart); a -CID. feeling of bitter malice, or malign-CIDNESS. nity, or hatred.

Rancid,—a rancid or rank smell or taste, —see RANK.

Fr. Ranc-orur; It. core; Sp. & L. Rancor, from Rancere, perhaps from Gr. Pae-eiv, corrumpere.—Voss. It probably is of the same origin as the Eng. Rank; D. Wranche, wranck, (qv.)

RAND, s. The D. & Ger. Rand is the border or margin, perhaps the round or circumference; and a rand may be a round, sc. lump or piece. Beau. & F.—To cut into rands.

RANDOM, s. ad. App. to—The motion of any thing running, flowing, or falling without a fixed, determined, or confined course or channel; motion or action, at hap or hazard; without guidance or direction, choice or selection.

Fr. Random. The swiftness or force of a strong or violent stream. Randonner, to run swiftly, violently, as fast as he can.—Cot. Some say from donner le rennes. Hickes (Gram. A. S. p. 238),— that it is A. S. Renman, and dan, fluere deorsum; whence—aller à grand randon, to run like a rapid torrent, in a headlong or precipitate course. Hickes gives from an A. Nor. MS.—"Ac furre fleeth into randun."

RANGE, v. s. -ER. To move over or about; to wander, or roam, or rove over; to traverse, to extend or reach over.

To range meal,—cernere seu cribrare; from D. Ranghen, to move, to shake.—Sk.

Perhaps (Sk.) from D. Rannen, to run, or Ranghen, to agitate or shake, to move. It may be A. S. Renna-an, ran-ig-an; D. Rannen, rannen, currere, discurrere, to run or move quickly; to move about. En-

RANGE, v. s. -MENT. To put or place in order, to dispose in an orderly manner; to methodize, to order rightly; to put, to dispose.

Range, in a kitchen,—so called, perhaps, from the ranks or rows of bars.

Dan. Rang-er; Fr. -er, arranger, (from A. S. Ring, bring, a ring or circle,) to order and dispose persons and things, as is usually done at public assemblies, where those who meet generally form themselves into a ring or circle. See RANK. Ar-De-

RANK, v. s. Order, method; disposition in order or method; place in order, station, or degree; place or station, sc. in line or row.

To be in, to put or place in, rank, order, or method; to range, (qv.)

Rank (Dan. Rang) is rang (g hard into k.) En-Over-

RANK, ad. av. A rank smell or taste,—a -LY. sour, harsh, coarse, strong, gross, -NESS. foul, smell or taste. A rank growth, strong, coarse, gross. And, gen., Rank is strong, gross, coarse; inordinately or riotously strong or robust; inordinate, violent.

A. S. Ranc, ranc-lic, -ness; superbia, fecunditas; in D. Wranche, wranck, astringens, austerus, asper gustu, (from wringhen; A. S. Wring-as, to wring, torque, stringere, astringere; astringent, bitter or biting to the taste;) and in Eng. Rank is also app. to the smell.

RANKLE, v. To be or become foul or corrupt; virulent, sore; painfully diseased or distempered; to fester.

A dim. of Rank, foul.

RAN-SACK, v. To seek or search for plunder, booty, pillage; to search carefully, earnestly, eagerly; to plunder, to pillage, to take by violence.

Dan. Ransager; Fr. Sac-cager; It. -cheggidare; Sp. Saguear; to sack, ransack, pillage, rifle, ruin, destroy.—Cot. The Sulo-Goth. Ran sacka, rem furtivam in alienâ domo quærere, to seek plunder in the house of another, is (by common consent, says Ihre) from Ran, rapina, (in A. S. Ran, from rend-an, diripere,) and socka, quærere, (in A. S. Sac-an, to seek.) Un-

RANSOM, s. v. Anciently also written -ER. Ransom.

-LESS. To redeem, (or agenbye, as Wiclif writes,) to repurchase, to regain by purchase.

Fr. Ran-çonner; D. -soen; Ger. -neon, the price of redemption. Orig.—the redemption of plunder or rapine; afterwards transferred to the price of liberty—pro captivo; compounded of Rav, rapine, and re, redemption.—Wach. Ger. Sams; Flem. Soms; Sw. Sons; Go. Sams, are used for the act of reconciliation, or for that which is given to appease the anger of another.—Ihre. Notwithstanding all this, the word Ransom seems more probably to be corrupted from redemptio; Gr. Avropov, quod propriè pretium significat, quò redimuntur captivi, quod Gallè vocant ransomam.—Erasmus. See in Mex. Un-

RANT, v. s. To rend or tear; to rave, to -ER. speak or write tearfully, rav-from rapere, to tear, to force, to hurry away. See RAP.

RAPIER, s. A kind of weapon, so called perhaps from the rapid motions or actions to which it is suited.

Fr. D. & Ger. Rapier. Wach. calls it ensis præ- acutus, and derives it from Schrappen, to scrape
Lacombe and Roquefort call it a long sword. Sk. suggests—A rapiendo vitam.

RAPPAREE s. A robber. (Sc. Rever, reaver, reyffar.) "The Irish formed themselves into many bodies, which, by a new name, were called rapparees; these robbed and burnt houses in many places of the country."—Burnet.

Lye, in Jun.—Reperies, latrones Hibernici,
Irish robbers; A. S. Reperas; and refers to the v.
To rose. A. S. Repera, or Repere, is reafere, a reaver or robber. See To REAVE, and To RAPE.

RAPPORT,* s. Fr. Rapport; a resemblance, correspondence, accord, or agreement between several things.—Cot.

-LY. gate, base, low, depraved person,

-ITY. or set or mob of persons.

-LION. A. S. Rascal,—a lean or worthless deer. Rascallie deer, capreae rejculae.—Jrn.

The Fr. Racaille is derived by Men. from Race;
but though it is difficult to account for the introduction of the letter s, the true origin seems to be the old word Rakel or Rachel, Fr. Racaille.

RASE, or RAZE, v. By some old authors,

-ZING. Race; it is now more com.

-SOR, or written Raze.

-ZOR. To rub plain or smooth, to plain

-SURE, or or smoothen, to scrape or shave,

-ZURE. to scratch; to lay even or level;

-ZORABLE. to level, to lay low or prostrate;

to ruin, to destroy.

facile.—Foss. Ab-rade. E-rase. Un-rase.

RASH, v. To dash, to beat, to bruise, to beat to pieces, to break.

To rash up hastily (in Fox) may be,—to dash, beat, knock up hastily; or, to hurry, to despatch hastily; more immediately from

Rash, ad., infra. "Julus, eke, ravish'd [rash'd] out of his arms."—Surrey. Virgile.

"The second he took in his arms, and rashed him out of the saddle."—History of Arthur. "My former edition of Acts and Monuments, so hastily rashed vp at that present."—Fox. Martyrs.

Dr. Nott says that the printed copy of Surrey reads rashed, (avulsus in Virgil); "an old word

(he adds) evidently formed from Fr. Arracher;"

i. e. to root up, to draw, tear, or pull up. G. Douglas renders impavidus frangit telum, "unabashedly raechand the shaft in sounder." Raschis (fra- gores) the Glossary calls a word formed from the sound. It is more probably A. S. Hryean, Arisean, (see To CRASH.) ruere, corrumpere, collidere, to rush together or against, to dash or beat together.

RASH, ad. Precipitate, headlong, head-

-LY. ing, or acting without foresight or

-NESS. premeditation, caution, or consider-

-FUL.* ation; unforeseeing, unexpected, unwary, or unaware; uncautious, inconsiderate.

Rash, Fr. Rasche,—an eruption, a sudden rushing or breaking out.—* Turberville.

RAT

Rasher, (on the coals,) Fr. Carbonade.
Sk. says—Rasura laridi; more probably so called from the rashness or haste with which the cookery is dispatched.

D. & Ger. Rasch, rapidus; D. Raschen, festinare, properare; from A. S. Hrysan, ruere, pro-ruere, to rush forward, to precipitate.

RASP, s. A plant, the fruit of it; so called
 -AS. (perhaps) from the rasping roughness of the wood. See RASPY, infra. It. Raspo.

RASP, v. s. -ATORY. To rub; to rub off, (sc. the rough parts of the surface;) to file.

Fr. Rasp-e; It. ara; Sp. ar; Sw. a; D. & Ger. Raspen, formerly written Rapen, from Reib-en, fricare, to rub—Reiben, repe-en, raspen, and by a common transposition of the letters pe, raspen. Sk.—from Rad-ere, to scrape.

RAT, s. RATSEANE. A rapacious animal.

Fr. Rat; Sp. Rat-to; Ger. -te, -ne; D. -te; Sw. Ratte; Dan. Røtte; Low. L. Rat-us, -tus. Wach. derives from Ger. Ratsen; A. S. Hreðdan, (to rid,) repere; qd. animal rapax.

RATCH, s. App. to—A dog, that hunts by scent. See BRACH, ante; and Rache, in Jamieson.

Perhaps from the Ger. Riech-en, odorem spirare, et odorem percipere.

 -ABLE. value; fix, or settle the value; to
 -ABLY. estimate, to place to the account;
 -ER. to impute, to lay to the charge; to fix, to settle, to apportion, the quantity or quality, the proportion, the degree.

Rate, s.—Aliquid ratum, past p. of Re-or, ratus; and upon the s. is formed the v. Be- Mis-

RATE, v. -ING. To speak wrathfully to; to scold, to chide.

A. S. Hreth-ian, assere, to scold. See WEATH.

RATH,* or RATHE,* ad. Speedy, quick,
 -LY. soon, early.

-ER. Rather, the ad.—Earlier, sooner,
 -EST. prior, anterior. The av.—Sooner, more promptly, more eagerly, more willingly.

**Very common words from the very earliest periods till Milton.*

A. S. Rath, rather, rathost, celer, velox; D. Rade; Ger. & Sw. Rad; in A. S. also Ræd, or hræde, hræthe, ready. Ræthe, from the v. Hrad-ian, properare, accelerare, to hasten, to accelerate, to be or make ready.

RATH, s. from the context, appears to have been a round hill, made ready or prepared, "strongly trenched and throwne up, and ordained" for assembling.

"There is a great use amongst the Irish, to make great assemblies together upon a rath or hill, there to parlie (as they say) about matters and wrongs betweene township and township, or one privat person and another."—Spenser. View of Ireland.

RATIFY, v. To settle, to affirm or con--FICATION. firm, to establish, to assure or
 -PIER. secure, to warrant.

RAVAGE, v. s. -ER. To reave or rob; to plunder, to despoil, to lay waste.

Fr. Ravager, ravir. See RAP or RAPR, to reave, to tear away. See REAVE, &c.

RAVE, v. -ING, s. To rave is to act as one reaved or bereaved, sc. of his reason or understanding; and thus—To move, act, or talk insanelly, unreasonably, senselessly, madly, furiously, deliriously.

Fr. Raver, rava-ver, -cher; D. Rave-n, -elen, delirare, errare. Men declares it difficult to discover the origin of this word, and writes to little purpose. See REAVE, &c.

RAVEL, v. s. To ravel appears to be a dim. of Reave, and to mean—to tear or pull asunder, sc. any thing complex or complicate; and, thus, to unfold, to disclose. It has also acquired an opposite usage, from the same meaning; (to tear or pull asunder sc. any thing whole or entire—into shreds, into ragged particles; and, hence,) to pull or put into disorder or confusion; to confuse, to perplex, to entangle. See UNRAVEL.

Ravelen, (Hol.) intricare.—Kilian. See REAVE, &c.

RAVEN, v. s. To reave or tear away; to

-ENER. seize by violence, to destroy or devour; to prey upon.

-ENING.

-ENINGLY. Ravenous,—eager for prey or

-ENOUS. plunder; voraciously hungry.

-ENOUSLY. Raven, the bird, (A. S. Hrafn),

-ENOUSNESS. so called from its ravenous disposition.

-IN, or

-INE. Ravine, (Fr. Ravine), i. e. ripen

RE-ASCEND, v. -SCENT, s. To go, to move upwards, again; to climb, to mount again.

REASON, s. v. The power or faculty of thinking; the art of thinking; the cause for which, the principle upon which, any thing is. —-ABLE. —-ABLY. —-ABLENESS. —-ER. or is to be, done; also, that which we think is or ought to be, or be done. “The word reason, in the English language, has different significations: sometimes it is taken for true and clear principles; and sometimes for the cause, and particularly the final cause: but the consideration I shall have of it here is in a signification different from all these, and that is, as it stands for a faculty in man, that faculty whereby man is supposed to be distinguished from beasts, and wherein it is evident he much surpasses them.” —Locke. “The word reason itself is far from being precise in its meaning. In common and popular discourse it denotes that power by which we distinguish truth from falsehood, and right from wrong, and by which we are enabled to combine means for the attainment of particular ends.” —Stewart.

To reason,—to use the power or faculty of thinking,—app. to the use or employment of general terms; to infer or deduce one general proposition from another; also, to give and receive reasons, or to interchange thoughts, to discourse.

Reasonable,—see RATIONAL. "The adjective reasonable, as employed in our language, is not liable to the same ambiguity as the substantive from which it is derived. It denotes a character in which reason (taking it in its largest acceptation) pos-esses a decided ascendant over the temper and passions; and implies no particular propensity to a display of the discursive power, if indeed it does not exclude the idea of such a propensity."—Stewart.

Locke properly distinguishes Remembrance and Recollection: "The perception, or thought, which actually accompanies, and is annexed to any impression on the body, made by an external object, being distinct from all other modifications of thinking, furnishes the mind with a distinct idea, which we call sensation; which is, as it were, the actual entrance of any idea into the understanding by the senses. The same idea when it again recurs without the operation of the like object on the external sensory, is remembrance.
 If it be sought after by the mind, and with pain and endeavour found, and brought again in view, 'tis recollection."

RHABDO-MANCY, s. "The divination or decision from the staff is an augural relique, and the practice thereof is accused by God himself: My people ask counsel of their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them."—Brown.

Gr. ῥαβδομαντεία; ῥαβδος, a rod, and μαντεία, prophecy.

RHAPSODY, s. "Rapsodie, a joyning of
-ICAL. diverse verses together."—Bullockar.

-IST. "An improper collection or confused heaping up of many sentences."—Mins.

"According to the first derivation [a rhapsodist] signifies a poet, author of various songs or poems which are connected together, making one poem of which the different parts may be detached and separately recited. According to the second, it signifies a singer, who holding his branch of laurel, recites either his own compositions or those of some celebrated poet."— Beloe. Herodotus.

Fr. Rapsodie; It. & L. Rapsodia; Gr. ῥαψωδία, contextura carminum, (from ῥαπτειν, suture, to sow, and ᾠδή, a song;) said to have been orig.

app. to the songs of Homer, connected and collected into an entire poem, (or from ῥαβδος, a rod.)

RHETOR, s. A rhetorician, (lit.) is,—a

-ICAL. speaker; hence, one who

-ICALLY. studies, practises, teaches

-ICIAN, ad. s. speaking, as an art.

-IC. Rhetoric was subseq. extend-to speak.

RHEUM, s. Rheum, and Rheumatism,—

-ATIC. a flux, sc. of humours.

-ATISM. Rheumy eyes, (Shak.); rheumatic

-Y. ulcers, (Holland)—flowing, run-—tending to cause rheum. "The sharpe and eager flux of fleam the Greekes call rheumes."—Holland. Plinie. "The flux of humours, the Greekes name rheumatism."

—Id. Ib.

Fr. Reuma, rheuma; It. & Sp. Reuma; L. of Low
Ages, Rheuma; Gr. ῥευμα, from ῥέειν, to flow.

RHINOCEROS, s. "There was shewed a rhinoceros, with one horne and no more,
and the same is in his snout or muzzle."—
Holland. Plinie.

It. & Sp. Rinoceronte; Fr. & L. Rhinoceros;
Gr. ῥινόκερος, from ῥίς, the nose, and κερας, a horn.

RHOMB, s. A quadrilateral figure, having

-IC. equal sides and unequal angles.

-OID. Fr. Rhomb-e; Sp. -o; It. Ròmbò; L.

Rhombus; Gr. ῥόμβος, (αὐτοῦ τοῦ πεν-

-τάγωντος, in gyrum circumagi, to be driven round in a circle,) a reel or whirl.

RHUBARB, s. RHABARBARATE. A plant.

Fr. Rhubarb; It. Rabàrboro; Sp. Ruybarbo; L. Rhabarbarum, i. e. Rha barbaricum. (See Rha in Voss.) Amianus is supposed to allude to it, (l. 23):—"Necna unto this is the river Rha, on the sides whereof groweth a comfortable and holson root, so named, good for many uses in physick."—Holland.

RHYME, v. s. Rhyme is found equivalent

-LESS. to Rhythm, (qv.) but is more com-

-ER. monly used to denote—

-STER. Verses terminating with similar sounds: also, verse or poetry in general.

Fr. Rimer, to rhyme; to write or speak in metre; It. Rim-are; Sp. -ar; all. (Sk.) from the L. Rhythmus; Gr. ῥυθμός, numerus, modus. In

A. S. Rim-craft, ge-rim-craft, is the craft or art of numbering; ge-riman, riman, hriman, numerare; Ger. Reimen; D. Reimen; Sw. Rima.

Wach. and Ihre consider Rhyme or Rime to be of northern origin, and to have been app. to the termination of verses or parts of verses, with words or syllables of similar sounds, by northern poets, long before the practice of rhyming was known by the more southern poets. The word appears in the northern languages to have been app. gen. to numerous or metrical writing, as the Gr. ῥυθμός was; and thence the French and Italian. Tooke has adopted A. S. Hrim-an. Be-

RHYTHM, s. -ICAL. Numerical proportion or harmony.

L. Rhythmus; Gr. ῥυθμός.

RIANT, ad. Laughing, geering, fleering.

—Cot. *Burke.

Fr. Riant, from rire; L. Ridere.

RIB, v. s. A rib seems to be, any thing ripped or torn asunder; and, hence, are so called—The bones which extend separately or asunder from the back-bone; the split boards with which the sides of a ship are covered or strengthened; certain parts of a leaf or stalk; a strip; a shred.

A. S. Rib, ribbe; Ger. Ribbe, ripp; D. & Dan. Ribbe; Sw. Rif, rifben. Wach. derives from Rif, incurvus, pars corporis inflexa. It may be from the A. S. Rypp-an, to rip, to reave, which, in Swedish, is ref-sa, or rif-sa, whence their Rif, ref-ben. The Gr. Δορυς, arabis, from doru, ramus decurvus, is rendered by Chapman rib.

RIBALD, ad. s. Cot. describes a ribaud —RY. to be—"a rogue, ruffian, rascal, —ISH. scoundrel, varlet, filthy fellow." —OUS.† And it is to filthiness, obscenity, —OUSLY.† low and vulgar scurrility, that the —ROUS.† word ribaldry is now usually app.

**Bp. Hall.* †Sir T. More. ‡Prynne.

Fr. Ri-baud; It. -baido; D. Babaud; Low L. Ribaidus. Sk. thinks from re, and Fr. Baud; It. Baido, bold; qd. valde audax, i. e. impudens. lhre,—the Suio-Go. Ribaidar, from the Isl. Hrid, pugna, and balldr, audax. Jun.—from the Gr. Ραββαλεῖν, tumultuari. A ribaud seems to have been a robber, (A. S. Ryppere), rappier or reaver; (see To REAVE); and thence any profligate character was so called. And ribaldry,—all sorts of profligacy and indecency. Chaucer's Ribaud, (Rom. of the Rose), whom Tyrr. calls "a poor labourer," "though to robber he disdainedst," yet "in the taverns all dispendeth," sc. his earnings and his time; this disdain of robbery appears to be a peculiarity to the many, of whom the poet is esp. speaking; and, cons. it may be inferred, the common practice or occupation of the class was rapine.

RIBAND, s. v. RIBBON. A band or fillet of silk, satin, &c.

Fr. Ru-ben, bannier. Men. derives from rubens, red, because the more beautiful ribbons are of that colour. Sk. thinks the French borrowed their word from us, and that riband is re and bind, or bende, vinculum replicatum, fascia replicata, vel quod replicari potest,—a folded or redoubled bandage. Lye suggests rib and band,—a band with which the ribs were girded; perhaps a ripi, stripi band, as if ripi or torn from a broader substance.

RIBIBE, s. A musical instrument. Why Ribibe or Rebeck should be put for an old woman, unless, perhaps, from its shrillness, Tyrr. cannot guess. See REBECK.

RICE, s. "We Italians set most store by rice, whereof (being husked and cleansed) we make grotes, like for all the world to those which other men besides doe make of barley husked. The leaves verily that this grain rice doth beare, be pulpos and fleshie, resembling porret or leekes, but that they be broader: the stem groweth a cubit high, the flower is of purple colour, and the root round like a jem or pearle."—Holland.

Plinie

Fr. Riz; It. Riso; Sp. Arroz; L. Oryza; Gr. Ὄρυζα. The word is said (Martin.) to be Arabic, and to have its name from its constringent or binding qualities, which are indeed ascribed to it from very early times.

RICH, *ad. v.** Riches.—A collection, accu-—ES. mulation, or heap, a great quantity, —ES. a number, sc. of money or coin, lands, —LY. cattle; (met. any moral or mental —NESS. qualities or possessions;) plenty, abundance, wealth; opulence, fruitfulness, fertility; costliness, preciousness.

**Gower. Shak.*

Fr. Riche; It. Ricco; Sp. Rico; Ger. Reich; D. Ryk; Sw. Rik; Dan. Rig; A. S. Ric, richom, from the Go. Ric-jan, congerere, colligere; to collect, to draw together, to rake, (qv.). En-

RICK, or REEK, s. A heap (of hay, corn, &c.) raked or collected together.

D. Rok; Sw. Roek; "A. S. Hreac, a reeke or rick, a stack, a heap," (Som.) from Ric-jan, to rake, (qv.) collect, heap together.

RICKETS, s. A disease (Sk.) among —ET-ISH. infants; the existence of which he —R. declares to be new in his time, and then wholly unknown to the rest of the world; he would derive it from Ger Rackea, to reach, to stretch, to extend, because in this disease the apophyses (natural prominences) of the bones stretch forth and swell out.

Rickety or Ricketish, gen.—unsteady, tottering.

RID, v. —DANCE. To free or set free, to deliver; to clear, to set or get quit of; to disencumber, to disembarass; to drive away or remove.

A. S. Hridd-an. "Ahriddan, to set free, to bring or rid out of, to draw or pull out. Aridan, repellers, to put or rid away."—Som.

RIDDLE, v. s. A riddle or raddle,—any —ER. thing made of twisted or writhed —INGLY. sticks or twigs, wire, &c.

To riddle,—to twist, to wreath, to involve. Also to use a riddle or raddle; to shake or otherwise pass through a riddle; to sift. See RADDLE.

In Spenser, riddling skill,—met. skill in things riddled; cons. in solving or interpreting them. A riddle, met.—any thing twisted, writhed, involved, or perplexed; any thing perplexing or puzzling. Un-

RIDE, v. s. By usage,—To convey or —ER, s. carry, on a horse or other animal, —ING. or in any sort of carriage; to sit upon such animal or in such carriage, whether the motion be slow or fast; to convey or carry; be conveyed, carried, supported, or sustained.

A. S. Rid-an; D. Ryden; Ger. Reiten; Sw. Rida; Dan. Rider. Jun. would derive from Gr. Ἐπεδ-ειν, ingessere; it is, perhaps, from Hred-um, to hasten, to move hastily, quickly, speedily. See RATH. Over-Out-

RIDGE, s. v. —R. Usually app. to—An extended line, raised from or standing above the adjoining surface; as the ridge (or rig) of a mountain, a ridge of land, the ridge of a roof, the ridge of the nose.

A rygge wall, (Bible, 1549, Ezek. xli.)—a row of building.—M. F.

A. S. Hric, hricg, hryge; D. Rugge; Ger. Ruck;

Verstegan derives it from the name of King Rabod 336

Sw. Ryge, the back, from A. S. Hræ-an; D. & Ger. Rücken; Sw. Rycka; to reach, to extend; or, as Wach. suggests, to expand, ob longitudinem et latitudinem ejus;—perhaps merely on account of the length; reaching from the neck to the break or breach of the legs. See BARDEN. EN-UP-

RIDGEL, s. -ING. “A rig, rigel, rigil, or riggie, is a male (horse or other animal) who has escaped with a partial castration, because some portion of his testicle was covered, and so hidden from the operator's view.”—Tooke. See RAY, and ROIL.

RIDICULE, s. v. That which causes or -ER. excites to laughter; which deserves laughter; which excites -OUSLY. or exposes to mockery, jeering, -OUSNESS. or railery.—Chapman. -IZE, v. Fr. ad. Ridic-ule; It. -olo; Sp. -ulo; L. Ridiculus, (from rid-ere, to laugh, which Schelde thinks is so app. à motu oris, see in Lenep), causing or deserving laughter. Un-

RIDING, s. i. e. Trithing, (qv.) “Where a county is divided into three of these intermediate jurisdictions, they are called trithings. These trithings still subsist in the large county of York, where by an easy corruption they are denominated ridings; the north, the east, and the west riding.”—Blackstone. A-

RIDOTTO, s. v. Florio calls it—“A home, a lodging, a withdrawing place; or other place where good companie do meet;” it is also, the company or assembly.

It. Riddoto, past p.; reduced, (reductum), withdrawn, retired; and hence the s.—a place of retirement, a retreat.

RIFE, ad. Cons.—Copious, abundant, -LY. plentiful; frequent, prevalent, pre-NESS. dominant.

D. Ryf; Sw. Rif; A. S. Rif; largus, copiosus, abundans, frequens: large, copious, abundant, frequent; it may be from the A. S. Rip-an, to reap; the harvest, crop, or produce reaped.

RIFF-RAFF, s. A torn, tattered, ragged (worthless) set (of persons or things).

From A. S. Rif-an, reif-tan, to rise or tear away, (to rip.)

RIFLE, v. s. To reave, to ransack, to -ER. spoil, to pillage, to rob, to plunder; -ING. to seize or take away.

Fr. Rifler; D. Rüfelen, to reave, or bereave. See TO RAFFLE. Un-

RIFT, s. v. A tear, rent, or breach; a breach, a disruption, a fissure, or cleft.

Rived, rie'd, rifi, past p. of the v. To rise; A. S. Rif-an, reif-tan, to reave or rise, tear away or asunder.

RIG, s. i. e. Ridge, (qv.)—“A. S. Rig, dorsum, a back of a man or beast; also a ridge.”

Rig-ban,—the back-bone.—Som.

RIG, v. -ING. To cover, to clothe, to dress.

A. S. Wriggan, to cover. See RAY. Un-

RIG, s. -GISH. Perhaps as Rogue is one who has covered, cloaked, or concealed purposes of thievery or deceit, so Rig is one who has cloaked or disguised purposes of wantonness; hence, Rig,—

A wanton; and Riggish, wanton, lewd.

A rig, (Cowper,)—a gamesome, a knavish, trick, a freak.

Reak, in Beau. & F. seems to be the same word: “They play such reaks.”

RIGHT, ad. av. s. v. Right, ad.—Ruled, -EN, v. ordered, commanded, just; -WISE. agreeable or conformable, suitable or adapted, becoming or convenient, fit, proper, or consistent, sc. to or according to the will, purpose, or design of the rector or ruler; of the rule or order; with the good or well-being intended or designed.

-LY. “Goodnesse in actions is like

-NESS. vnto straitnesse; wherefore that which is done well we terme right, for as the straight way is most acceptable to him that traualleth, because by it he commeth soonest to his journeyes end: so in action, that which doth lye the eueneest between us and the end wee desire, must needs be the fittest for our use.”—Hooker.

“So that it necessarily comes to pass, that what promotes the publick happiness, or happiness upon the whole, is agreeable to the fitness of things, to nature, to reason, and to truth; and such (as will appear by and by) is the divine character, that what promotes the general happiness is required by the will of God; and what has all the above properties must needs be right; for right means no more than conformity to the rule we go by, whatever that rule be.”—Paley. Moral Philosophy.

Right, s.—that which is ruled, ordered, commanded, just; justice.

Righteous, (eous corrupted from wise, wis, wus.) A. S. Right-wis; rightly wise; just, pious.—Lye.

Right implies a rector or ruler:—over man as a created being,—God or the laws of God, his creator: over man as a member of a particular state or society,—the law of the land or of the society, according or consistent with those of God.

Right, also, always implies a correlative duty; if there be no such duty, the right or rule is a mere unauthorized order or command. See JUST, and LAW.

L. Rect-us; It. Ritto; D. & Ger. Recht; Sw. Rätt; A. S. Riht; Go. Raiht, garaiht; in Sp. Derecho; Fr. Droit; L. Reg-ere; Go. Raign-on, reik-in-on; A. S. Ric-tan, to rule or reign, command or govern. A. S. Regol, regula, norma, canon. EN-ON-OUT-UN-UP-

RIGID, ad. Stiff, unbending, or inflexible; and, cona. severe, harsh,

-ITY. austere. -NESS. Fr. Rig-ide, neur; It. ido, dra; Sp. ido, or; L. Rigidus, rigor, from Ripere; Gr. Pry-av, to stiffen or be stiff (with cold). Over-

-OUS-LY. -NESS.

RIGMAROLE, s. Whether Rigmarole and Ragmarole be the same word or not, seems still a matter of doubt. The origin of both remains unaccounted for. (See Jamieson, in v. Ragman Role.) Ragman, or Ragman's Role, occurs in Sir T. More, Fox, Skelton, &c.

RIGOL,* s. A circle, say the commentators; and Mr. Malone produces a passage from Naah's Lenten Stuff, in which the word is written, "Ringol," with the addition, "or ringed circle."—Shak.

RILL, s. v. -ET.* A small spring or brook, a small gentle stream.—Drayton.
Sk.—from the L. Rivulus. Lye,—from the D. Rio-ole, -ulus.

A. S. Rima, ora, margo, labrum. Serime, ora maritima, the sea-coast or shore.—Som. Sk. says, the inner rim of the belly is the peritonæum, qd. margo seu ora ventris, i. e. intestinorum quæ, instar fasciæ vel institit, obvolvitur. Tooke—from A. S. Rym-an, to extend. See ROOM, and BATH.

RIME, s. A hole or chink. L. Rima.

RIME, s. -Y. "In a hoar frost, that which we call a rime is a multitude of quadrangular prisms exactly figured, but piled without any order, one over another."—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra.

The author of the Byrth of Mankind calls the early involucre of the seed in the matrix, "a ryme or caul," "a thyn ryme, as of a tender egge under the shell." Also, "the ryme or skyn of the kidneya."

A. S. Hrim; D. Rûm, rûpe; Ger. Reif; Sw. Rim. See CREAM.

RIMPLE, v. To roughen or ruffle slightly; -ING. to move, to run (app. to water)

RIPPLE, v. with an uneven surface.

-ING. The words Rimple and Ripple appear to be the same, with the mere omission of m in the latter. A. S. Hrympelle; D. Rompelen, rugare, to wrinkle or form into wrinkles or small uneven lines. Ge-hrumpelen, rugosus.—Lye. See RUMPLE, and CRIMPLE.

RIND, s. The bark, peel, husk, or skin; the outward coat or covering of trees, fruits, &c.

A. S. Rind, rinda, hrind; Ger. Rinde. Wach. suggests the Ger. Reinen; A. S. Hrin-an, tangere, ut sit quasi margo arboris, or from Reinen; ad-hærere, quasi aliquid arbori adherescens. Jun.—the Gr. Ptyoe. It is more probably Wrin-ed, wrin'd, rind, from A. S. Wrean, wrygon, to cover, to protect.

RING, v. s. To beat or strike, (a metallic -ER. substance,) to produce sound; to -ING. sound or cause to sound, as metal when beaten or struck; gen.—to sound, to resound; to keep up a constant or repeated sound.

A. S. Ring-an, hringan; D. Ringhen; Sw. Ringa; pulsare, to beat. Lye suggests from Ring, annulus, as app. to a metallic instrument of music of that circular form, and which, when beaten, returned—argutum ac streperum sonum. Un-

RING, v. s. -LET. A round or circular line or course; any thing forming a round, circle, or orbit.

A body of persons, formed into a ring or circle, the better to hear their leader or other person presiding or addressing them; and hence, Ring-leader, leader of a number of persons assembled or associated for a common purpose.

A. S. Hring; D. Ringh, rinck; Ger. Sw. & Dan. Ring. Sk. knows not whether from Ger. Lenchen, contorquere; it is more probably from A. S. Wring-an, to wring, to wreath. Wach. says, a ring, proprie est omne id, quod per declinationem lineæ rectæ in se redit. En-In-Out-

RINSE, v. -ING. To cleanse any thing by passing water or other liquid through it, or by passing any thing through water or other liquid: to soak in and press out, water, &c.

Dan. Renser; Fr. Reinser. Sk. derives from (Go. Hraina). A. S. D. & Ger. Rein; Sw. Reen, purus, mundus, à sordibus purgatus; and this word is probably A. S. Rein, ren, raen, rain, from renian, rinnan, pluerè, defluere.

RIOT, v. s. Gen.—A disorderly, tumultuous excess, of mirth, licentiousness, luxury; any indulgence of -ISE,* v. the passions. (See ROUË.) Law- -OUS-LY. writers distinguish thus:—a -NESS. route should be a special kind of unlawful assembly; a riot, the disorderly fact committed gen. by an unlawful assembly. "A riot is where three or more actually do an unlawful act of violence, either with or without a common cause or quarrel; as if they beat a man, or hunt and kill game in another's park, chase, warren, or liberty; or do any other unlawful act with force and violence; or even do a lawful act, as removing a nuisance, in a violent and tumultuous manner."—Blackstone.—Spenser.

Fr. Riot-e, -ter; It. -ta, -tara, which is by some derived from L. Rixa. It is undoubtedly the same word as roué, diff. written, and with some difference also in the application. Un-

RIP, v. s. -PING. To cut or slit; to cut or tear up or open; and, cons. to lay bare.

A. S. Hryp-an, rip-pa, secare, discindere, disuere, (to resp.) to cut, rend, or slit asunder. En-Un-

RIP, s. -IER. They (Sk.) are called Ripiers who convey fish from the sea-shore to the inner parts of the kingdom; qd. L. Riparii, from the bank or shore (ripa) of the sea. Spel. decides for Ripp, the basket in which the fish were carried; and ripp may be so called, because made of ripped or slit willows or osiers.

RIP, s. Any thing worthless, good for nothing. See RIFF-RAFF.

RIPE, v. ad. To be in a state fit for -LY. reaping, cutting, gathering, plucking; to reach or attain their full -EN, v. growth; to mature, to perfect, to -ING. complete.

RIV

A. S. Ripian; D. Rüpen, maturescere, which Sk. thinks is from rippan, metere; because fruits are not reaped till mature. En-Over-Un-

RIPE, * s. The bank or side (of a river).
*Holinshed. Fr. Rive; It. & L. Ripa.

RIPPLE. See RIMPLE.

RISE, v. s. To move (come or go) up or -ER. upwards; to grow; to spring up -ING. wards; and thus, to come into existence, into view or notice; to become elevated, eminent, or conspicuous; to become of greater value or estimation, more valued, prized, or esteemed. See RAISE.
A. S. Arisan, risan; Ger. Reisen; D. Rüsen; Sw. Rasa, surgere, assurgere, erigere. A-Up-

RISIBLE, ad. -BILITY. That may be laughed at; laughable; and also, that can or may laugh.
Fr. & Sp. Ris-ble; It. -bile; L. Ridere, to laugh. See RIDICULE. Ar-De-Ir-ride.

RISK, or RISQUE, v. s. RISKER. To set upon a chance; to set at hazard; to hazard, to emperil, to endanger.

Fr. Risque; It. Rischio; Sp. Riesgo. Men. exhibits some curious attempts at etym. from various writers. The true origin seems to be A. S. Eriscean, vibrare, vacillare, to brandish, to quiver, to shake.

RISSE, * s. A shoot or sprout, twig, bough; rising or springing forth.

*Chaucer.

D. Ris, virga, surculus, à Ryssen, surgere, to arise.—Klütgen.

RITE, s. A custom or customary observ-
-UAL, s. ad. ance; a customary ceremony.

-UALIST. Fr. Rite; It. & Sp. Rito; L. Ritus.
-UALLY. Ritus for consuetudo is manifestly, (Voss.) from Gr. Τρῖβος, by metathesis and the rejection of the letter β; and τρίβος, from τρίβειν, terere, signifies a trodden way or path; and met. a long-followed custom. It is more probably A. S. Riht, an ordinance, custom, ceremony.

RIVAL, s. ad. v. Gen.—A contender, -RY. striver, competitor for the same -SHIP. object with another; one who emu-
-ITY.* lates. It is used by Shak. ("the rivals of my watch,"—Hamlet) for one who has the same duty to perform; a comrade, one of the same rank. See Co-RIVAL.

"Cæsar denied him rivalry," (Ant. & Cleop.) i. e. equality of rank.—*Shak.

Fr. & Sp. Rival; It. Rivale; L. Rivalis, from rivus, a river. Rivales are so called, qd. contenders, strivers, for the use of the same river, of the water of the same river; quia ut agricolæ, riverum habentes communem, de usu aquæ, sæpius contendunt, ita hi certent de eadem amasik.—Voss. ROA

RIVEL, v. s. -ING. To ruffle into wrinkles; to wrinkle; to wither into wrinkles; to shrivel, (qv.)

RIVER, s. A flood or flowing course, a -ERET. current, a stream, of water. A -ULET. river implies a spring or well, whence its water issues.

Fr. Rivière; It. -a; Sp. Rio; L. Rivus, from Gr. ῥέω, to flow. See RIVAL. Cor-rivate. Derive.

RIVET, v. s. To rivet seems to mean,—to fasten or secure by a return, perhaps by beating back; (Fr. Rebattre, It. Ribattere;) to clench, to fasten firmly; to give a last or finishing stroke.

Fr. River; It. Ribadire; Sp. Riveteare. Cot. exp. the Fr. River,—to rivet or clench, to fasten, or clench back the point of a nail, &c.; also to thrust the clothes of a bed in at the sides. Mina. says that rivets (in Armoury) are the joints by which arms are fitted and fastened to the body. Men. derives from Gyrare. Duchat, from the Ger. Reiben, to rub.

ROAD, s. Any place ridden over;—used

-ER. also by old authors as we now

-STER. use Inroad,—incursion, invasion.

-STEAD. Roadster,—a horse fit for the road; a ship in the road or roadstead.

Also anciently written Rode, the past p. of To ride, (qv.) Fr. Rode,—a road, an open harbour for shipping. Road, via equestris.—Sk.

ROAM, v. s. To move over, wander over

-ER. an extent of space, to range or rove -ING. about or abroad; (to ramble, qv.)

Sk.—perhaps from Room. It is, as Room also, from A. S. Ryman; D. Ryumen; Sw. Ryma; D. Römmen; viam aperire, ampliari, dilatari, to extend, to expand, to amplify.

ROAN, s. Yellowish, or of a colour between yellow and grey.—Men. and Sk. The word is not confined by usage to this colour.

Fr. Rouen, rouan, roan, It. (obs.) Roano, ruano; Sp. Ruano, roavus color equestris; and according to Scal. from L. Ravus.

ROAR, v. s. App. to—The loud noise

-ER. made by the lion or other beast; to

-ING. any similar noise or sound. Gen.—to any loud noise or cry of animals, the wind, the sea, &c.

A. S. Rar-an; D. Raeren; Fr. Roer. Out-Up-

ROAST, v. s. To roast (in culinary usage) is,—To dress or cook meat, vegetables, fruits, by placing them to a fire; meat com. being suspended and turned: then, gen. To roast is to heat, to burn, to parch; (met.) to heat or place in a hot situation; to jeer, to banter.

To rule the roast, sc. as king of the feast, orderer, purveyor, president. Or may it be to rule the roast, (qv.)?

Fr. Roast, roster; It. Arrostire. Lye and Som. have Ge-roast-ad. Ger. Roast (Wach.) is crates, a grate; and Roisten, (torrere), to heat or dress by fire upon a grate: he observes, that Gr. ῥέω-ειν is to dry, to burn; and ρᾶσθαι, a grate; and that hence, by metathesis, Roast and Roisten may have been formed. ROB, v. To take away, to deprive of, to -B-ER. plunder, to despoil.
-ERY. "Larceny from the person by open and violent assault is usually called robbery."—Blackstone.

Fr. Rob-er; Sp. -ar; It. Rubbare; D. Rooven; Ger. Rauben; Dan. Røber; A. S. Reaf-an, ryppan; Go. Raub-jan, to rieve, (qv.) to rip, to rob; to tear, to take, away, with force or violence. Be-Un-

ROB, s. The juice of black whortleberries preserved.—Cot. The word is said to be from Ar. v. Raba or Rubaba, concinnare, colligere.—See Men.
It. Robbo; Fr. Rob.

ROBE, v. s. A robe is now—A vestment or clothing thrown over other garments, and usually app. to those worn on ceremonious occasions.

Fr. Robbe; It. Roba; Sp. Ropa; Low L. Roba, randa. In A. S. Hrif is venter, the belly; and reaf is vestimentum, a clothing or covering. In Ger. Raub is vestimentum; and reif, venter. The application of Hrif, Reif, to the trunk of the body, may be because it is rised or severed by the lower limbs; and of Reaf, and Raub, to the clothing, because used to cover the trunk of the body. See BARENESS. Dis-En-Un-

ROBIN, s. -ER. The Redbreast; a bird familiarly called Robin, as other animals are called Tom, Jack, &c.

Low L. Rubecula, a rubedine pectoris, from the redness of his breast.

ROBUST, ad. Strong, hale, hearty; of -NESS. confirmed strength or vigour;
-IOUS.* of rude strength; vigorous,
-IOUSLY.* rudely vigorous.—**Not un-*
-IOUSNESS,† common in old writers. †Sir Ed. Sandys.

ROCK, s. App. to—a mass of stone.
-LESS. Met.—A sure hold, a solid foundation, a security, defence, protection. See Rock, infra.
-SURE.* Rockiness is not uncommon in geological works.—**Udal.*

Fr. Roc, roche, rocher; It. Rocca; Sp. Roca, from pet, a cleft, or petrum, to break.—Sk. But Tooke considers Rock to be the past p. rog, rock, from wrig-an, to cover, and so called, because covered or hidden, sc. by water; though afterwards, from similarity of appearance, when left uncovered by the secession of the waters, masses of a like substance upon the coast, or upon land, received the same name. See RAY.

ROCK, v. s. -ET. A rock (rog, rok,) is the part—covered by the wool—of the machine which spinsters use. Rocket, the dim. of Rock, part of the dress of a bishop, or, as formerly, of women; or that with which a person is covered.—See Tooke. Rokett (in Froissart, "to run with rokettes," ) appears to have been a spear, with its point or head covered, to prevent injury, as the point of a fencing foil now is. A firework, (Dan. Raket,) with the powder closely covered.

To rock, rook, rouk, or ruck,—to cover, to lie covered, to lie close; to take shelter.

"O false murderer, rucking in thy den."—Chaucer. "The shepe that rouketh in the folde."—Id. "But now they rucken in her nest, and resten."—Gower.

A ruck, by which one part covers or overlays another,—commonly used when some part of silk, linen, &c. is folded over or covers some other part, when the whole should lye smooth or even.—Tooke.

Rooky (in Shak. "the rooky wood," ) seems to be merely rooking, i. e. covering, protecting, sheltering.

To rook appears also to signify,—to play the rogue, (qv.) to practise *rogue*ry; and and, cons. to cheat, to rob, to plunder.

See Rock, ante, and RAY.

ROCK, v. To move, to set in motion;
-ER. and further, to move to and fro,
-ING. backwards and forwards; and, cons. to lull to rest.

Fr. Rocquer un enfant, to rock a child. Sk. and Jun. think,—from Ger. Ruck-en; Sw. -a, rugga, cedere, movere, motitare, to set in motion. (A. S. Ræsan, to reach)

ROD, s. A shoot rising or springing (from a tree.) A long, thin shoot or twig; a long stick, used as an emblem of authority; long, slender twigs, collected into a bundle; a long stick to measure with.

D. Roede; Ger. Rut, reis; Sw. Rå. Wach. derives from Rye-en, surgere. quia surgit ex arbore, et crecendo erigitur. See RISSA, RYAN, and REED.

RODOMONT, s. A blusterer, a boaster.
-ADE. Fr. Rhodomantade, from Rodomont, one of Boyardo's and Ariosto's fighting men.
-ADO.

ROE, (of a Fish,) s. The eggs of fish.
The roan or roes of fishes, (ova piscum.) Ger. Rogh-en, D. -er, Sk. derives from L. Rens, the reins; Wach.—from Gr. Πορ-αν, (tumere, to swell.

ROE, s. -BUCK. Ihre thinks this animal (of the Deer kind) is so called from its colour, (sc. roan, qv.; between a yellow and grey,) and adds, that the turtle-dove is in Go. called Hrava-dubo, and, as he conjectures, on the same account.

A. S. & Dan. Raa; D. Roe; Ger. Reh; Sw. Raa.

ROGATION, s. "Supplications with a solemnity for the appeasing of God's wrath, and the averting of publick evils, were of the Greeke church termed litanies; rogations of the Latine."—Hooker.

Fr. Roga-tion; It. -zione; Sp. -ciones; L. Rogation, from rogare, to ask, to beg; Gr. Ορ-ειν. Ab-Ad-De-Inter-Sub-(Sur-) rogare. Pre-rogative. Pro-rogue.

ROGUE, s. v. One who has covered,
-ERY. cloaked, concealed, secret designs or purposes; insidious,
-SHIP. treacherous designs; a dishonest
-Y. person. Very early app. to vagrants or vagabonds, beggars or -ISH. mendicants, from their common
-ISHLY. dishonesty; also app. to a playful knave, an arch fellow; to one who practises insinuating or ingratiating artifices.—**Beau. & F.*

A. S. Wreg-an, to accuse.—See Sk. and Jun. It is the past p. of A. S. v. Wreg-an, to wrine, to wrine, (see Ray), to cover, to cloak.—See Tooke. Cam-

ROIL, v. Chaucer writes the v. To roll, reile, and, according to Jun. roile; and the application of the s. (by Udal and Gascoigne.) seems to be, to—lazy, unwieldy, rolling corpulence,—or it may be a corruption of rigol.

ROIST, v. To act with unruly violence, —ER, s. v. riotously, blusteringly; turbulently, licentiously.

Fr. Rustre; a ruffin, royster, hackster, swaggerer; saucy, paltry, scurvy fellow.—Cot. The Fr. Rustaud, which may be the same word, is explained by Cot. to be—A clown, a boor, a rude, unmannerly clown; and is derived by Vergy (see Men.) from L. Rusticus. Roist seems more probably to descend from Hroos-an, ravan, to rush, ruere, irruere, impetuous saucer; and to be app. gen. to unruly violence. (Hroos-an, reos-ed, roost, or roist.) But see ROTTER.

ROLL, v. s. To wheel or turn round or —ER, about; to turn over, to move or —ING, turn upon its own axis; to revolve, to involve, or enfold, to envelop; to move in rolling masses; to make circuitous movements.

Fr. Rouler, —er; It. Rotolare; Sp. Arollar; D. & Ger. Rollen; Sw. Rulla; Dan. Rulle; Low L. Rotula, rotulare, from L. Rota, a wheel. En-In-Un-Up—

ROMANCE, s. “The Latin tongue —ER, ceased to be spoken in France —NT-IC, about the ninth century, and —ICAL, was succeeded by what was called the Romance tongue, a mixture of the language of the Franks and bad Latin. As the songs of chivalry became the most popular compositions in that language, they were emph. called Romans, or Romants, though this name was at first given to any piece of poetry.”—Percy.

As the old romances were remarkable for the extravagance of their fictions, Romance became app. to—Any wild, extravagant story, or invention of the imagination.

ROMANIZE, v. Romanist,—a professor —ANISM, of the Roman Catholic religion. —ANIST, To romanize,—to adopt, to follow —ISH, Roman or Latin words or idioms of speech; Roman (Catholic) ceremonies or principles of belief.

ROME-SCOT, or ROMESHOT, s. “This Jue was the firste kyng that grauntyd a peny of euery fyre house throwe this realme to be payed to ye court of Rome, which at this day is callyd Rome scote, or Petyr pena.”—Fabyan. “The Romanes planted some of their legions in all places convenient, the which they caused the countrey to maintaine, putting upon every portion of land a reasonable rent, which they called Romescot.”—Spenser.

ROO

ROMP, s. v. —ISHNESS. A name given to—A girl, noisy and boisterous in her play. See To RAMP.

RONDEAU, or —DEL, s. Cot. calls the RONDE-LAY, or rondeau de rime—a rhime or ROUNDELAY. sonnet that ends as it begins.

RONDURE,* s. A round, a circle, a globe.—**Shak.* Fr. Rondeur.

RONT. See RUNT.

ROOD, s. A measure, a measure of land. —BEAM, A cross; usually with pictures of —TREE, our Saviour.

A. S. Rode, crux, a cross, gibbet, or gallows, a rood.—Som. Ger. Rode; Sc. Rude. Rode is the common A. S. for crux in the A. S. version of the New Testament; in Go. Gage, whence our gallows. Jun. derives from Old Isl. Roda, an image; which Dr. Jamieson seems to favour. But the origin may lie more nearly at hand; rode is not only a cross, but a certain measurement of land made by a rod, and the cross may have been rudely formed, in the imagination of the early A. S. converts, of transverse rods. The ornaments of pictures of our Saviour, the Virgin, and Saints, may have been additions of after times.

ROOF, s. v. That which is sustained or —LESS, supported, (sc.) by the sides of the —Y, building; and thence app. to the covering, that which covers, overspreads, is super-imposed; and further, to the whole house or habitation.—**Dryden*.

A. S. Hrof; D. Roef; the past p. of Hraf-san, sustinere.—Tooke. Mina Jun. and Sk. derive it from Gr. Opopon, tectum. The uses of a roof would lead us to suppose that the word meant a covering, a protection; but according to Tooke's etym. it is—as above explained. Un-

ROOK,* s. Reek or rick, i. e. heap.—**Udal*.

ROOK, s. —ERY. A bird, said to be so called from its hoarse (rauca) voice.

A. S. Hrooc; D. Roock, Corvix Frugivora. From the disposition of this bird to theft, Sk. would derive our v. To rook, i. e. to cheat, to steal. See ROOK. The reverse is more probably the fact.

ROOK, v. See ROCK.

ROOM, s. Extent, space, place; app. to —ER, the different spaces inclosed as apartments in a house. Roomed

—INESS, way, (in Udal), extended, spacious. —LESS,

—AGE,* Roomer, (in Hackluyt), with more

—SOME,† room or space; “M. Hawkins

Roomth,‡ and his companie being not able

—Y,‡ to fetch it by night, went roomer

vntill the morning.”

“Roomful house,” (in Donne), a house full of room, abounding in room. In common speech, a roomful is a room—full of, or filled with, people, furniture, &c.

Deut. xxxiii.: “The Room-maker,”—Gad. 2 Sam. xxii.: “Roometh,” i. e. Roomth.—Bible, 1549.

* Wotton. † Warner. ‡ Drayton. § Holinshead.

Go. Runis; D. Rygm; Ger. Raum; A. S. Sw. & Dan. Rum. From Gr. Poun, platea, or upper, latus. (See Sk. and Jun.) It is the past p. of A. S. Ryman; D. Ryumen; Ger. Raumen; Sw. Ryma, to roam, dilatare, amplificare, extendere, (see RUMMAGE), and means—extended, place, space;—extent. See Tooke. Dr. Waterland says,

"Arombe signifies the same with asfar off, or at a distance; from remooce, or the Sax. Ryman," and adds, that "Peacock has this expression—more or lesse, nygher or romber."

ROOST, s. v. or ROUST, s. ROOSTING. The roost is,—The place of rest, of repose, slumber, or sleep.

To rule the roost, is (perhaps,) to rule the roost. "Geate you nowe vp into your pulpites like braggings cockes on the rowst, flappe your whinges, and crow out aloude."—Jewell.

A. S. Hroost, past p. of the v. Hrest-an, rest-an, to rest. D. Roosten, in pertica gallinaria quiescere, sedere, alidere; it is used (Kilian adds) of birds, qd. Eusten,—to rest, to repose, to lie down. Un-

ROOT, s. v. The root of a tree is that—EDLY. from which it grows, which supplies the nourishment of its growth.

—ER. To root,—to infix, as the root in the ground; to establish, to con-

—Y. firm. Also, To root up,—To eradicate or tear up from the roots, from the foundation; to erase, to exterminate.—Chapman.

Sw. Root; Dan. Roed. The A. S. Wrihtian, succrescere, to grow, seems to suggest the true etym. Dis- En- Out- Un- Up-

ROPE, s. v. A rope is, (vinculum, ligamentum.)—That which binds, ties, —Y. fastens; a string, a cord, (of some thickness, greater than string—usually so called, or than cord).

To rope,—to draw out, sc. with adhesive, glutinous, slimy continuity of parts; and Ropy,— Adhering, tenacious, slimy, glutinous.

Go. Raip; A. S. Rape; D. Reep, roop; Sw. Rep, ref; Dan. Reep. The D. Roopen; Sw. Repa, trahere, to draw, seems to present the immediate origin of the respective D. & Sw. as; but A. S. Rap-an, vincire, to bind, is probably the original source.

ROPERY,* s. ROPE-TRICKS.* Rope-tricks we may suppose to mean—tricks, the contriver of which would deserve the rope.—Stevens. It may be added, that the word Gallows is, in vulgar tongue, not unfrequently app. as an epithet to a fellow, rogue, &c., supposed to be worthy of the gallows. **Shak*.

RORAL, ad. Dewy, damp, moist.

—R-ID. **Fairefraz*.

—Y. Fr. Rosée; L. Ros, ror-is, roscidus; dew, Roscid. dewy.

ROSARY, s. "The rosary, otherwise called Virgin's Psalter, is made up of 150 Ave Maries and 15 Paters tacked together with little buttons upon a string."—Brevint.

Fr. Ros-aire; It. & Sp. -ario; Low L. Rosarium, corona rosacea, a garland or chaplet of roses.

ROSE, s. A plant: the flower of it.

—ARY. Rosy, Rosael, Roseate, (Rosen, —EAL. Chaucer,) — bearing a resemblance to the colour, the ruddy —EATE. colour of the rose; to the scent

ROS-EN, ad. or smell, the fragrant scent of —ER, or the rose.

—IER. Roser or Rosary, a plantation of roses. The rose-bush is called by Chaucer, the roser; by Spenser, Rosier.

—INESS. Rosier.

Fr. Rose; It. Sp. & L. Rosa; Gr. Ῥόδον.

ROSIN, s. "Rosin, if it be found in the —ED. firre, is thought a fault in the wood, —Y. whereas the only commoditie of the pitch tree is her rosin."—Holland. Plinie.

Fr. Résine; It. Sp. & L. Resina; Gr. Ῥητινῆ, from Ῥε-ειν, to flow, because it flows from trees, chiefly the fir or pine.

ROS-MARINE, s. ROSEMARY. Voss. suggests various reasons for the name of this plant: Ros, because it is of a dewy nature—because it appears as if sprinkled with dew—or because it is used in aspergills, in sprinklings;—and marinus, either because it thrives best in places near the sea, or because it has a taste like that of sea water.

Fr. Ros-marine; It. -marino; Sp. -maro; L. Rosæ marini.—Virg. Culex, v. 402.

ROSTRAL, ad. —TRATED. Part. app. to the beaks of birds, and transferred, by metaphor, to ships; the sharp or pointed part of the prow.

A rostral or rostrate coronet,—a coronet given for a naval exploit or victory.

It. Rostrale; L. Rostratus, from Rostrum, a Rostrando.

ROT, v. s. —TENNESS. To putrefy, to corrupt, to decay.

A. S. Rot-an, -tan; D. & Ger. -ten; Sw. -s; Dan. Roedner, putrescere, to putrefy, to corrupt. Un-

ROTATION, s. A wheeling, revolving —T-OR. motion; motion or progression —ORY.* round; successive change in such progression.

Rotator, (Fr. Rotateur),—two muscles, a greater and less, which turn about the eye.—Cot. **Paley*.

L. Rota, a wheel; Rotatio, the motion of a wheel. Voss. derives from Ῥοδ-ειν, cum impetu ferri ruere; he adds, the Gr. Ῥοδ-ειν, rota, is from Ῥε-ειν, to run. Circum- Contra-

ROTE, s. A musical instrument.

In old Fr. Rote.—Lacombe, and Requafort. Ritson, (Dissertation on Romance, p. cixv.) explains, in a note, "the Rote to be from Rota, a wheel, in Mod. Fr. Welle, and in vulgar Eng. Hurdy-gurdy, which is seen so frequently, both in Paris and London, in the hands of Savoyards."

ROTE, s. ROUTINE. To say by rote; to say by memory or recollection, with little attention to the meaning. The metaphor is perhaps borrowed from the motion of a wheel, (Rota; see ROTE, ante), which, when once begun, continues with little impulse. Roated, in Shak is, perhaps,—rooted, fixed, infixed, impressed,—no deeper than your tongue: "With such words that are but roated in your tongue."—Coriolanus.

Fr. Routine.

ROU

ROTHER. See RUDDER, and ROUT, v.

ROTUND, ad. -ITY. Circular, globular, orbicular, spherical; having the form of a circle, globe, or sphere.

Fr. Rot-on-dité; It. Ando, -ondità, -ondare; Sp. -ondo, -undidad; L. Rotundus, from Rotā, a wheel. See ROTATION, and ROUND.

ROVE, v. s. A rover is a reaver, a robber, -ER. a pirate; and from his rambling, -ING. wandering mode of life,—a ram-INGLY. bler, a ranger, a wanderer.

To rove,—to ramble, to range, to wander, sc. from one thing to another, changeably, unsteadily; to move about without end or object. To shoot at rovers,—to shoot without aim, at random; to take a random shot.

ROUGH, ad. Having a torn, ragged, un-EN, v. even surface; (lit. and met.) coarse, -ISH. unpolished, harsh, severe, rude, un-LY. civil, unmannerly, boisterous.

-NESS. A. S. Hrūk, rūk; D. Rouw; Ger. Rauh; Sw. Ruggig; Dan. Ruw. Sk. prefers L. Rudis; Jun. Gr. Τρυχόμενος, πίλοςος, hairy. Tooke considers it the past p. of A. S. v. Roaf-ian, to rave, to tear; and app. to the edge or surface of things raff or torn asunder. Un-

ROUNCEVAL, s. A pea, so called from the place whence it was imported—Rou-cesval.

ROUND, or ROUNE, v. ROUNER. To mutter, to whisper; to talk or speak whisperingly, lowly, privately, secretly.

A. S. Rundan; D. Roeren; Ger. Raunen, musitare, susurrare, to mutter, to whisper. In the Glossary to A View of the Lancashire Dialect is found resound,—did whisper. This word is sometimes misused, as if from the v. To round, qd. to speak roundly; without stop, hesitation, or reserve.

ROUND, ad. v. s. Circular, globular, or-ER, s. bicular, spherical, having the form -LY. or shape of a circle, globe, or sphere.

-NESS. It is also used less rigidly. Having -ISH. the even, unbroken motion of a -ER. circle or wheel; having no odd or -LET. uneven parts,—as a round sum, a round number; having no stops or breaks; no secret, unseen lets or hinderances; (met.) no concealed motives or purposes,—as round dealing, round speaking, i. e. fair, open, candid, sincere, hearty.

Rounder, s. (Shak.)—a round or circle.

Fr. Ronde, rotundité. Round is corrupted from the L. Rotundus, (see ROUND, and ROUNDLY), and has the same meaning. A- En- Sur- Un-

ROUSE, s. See CAROUSE.

From Ger. Rausch, semibrietas as Sk., or crapula, as Wach. interprets,—a dizziness of the head. The Ger. v. Rauschen, D. Ruschen, is stridere, crepare, streptum edere; in A. S. Hris-cian, to make a rustling noise. The word is perhaps formed upon the v. To rouse, to arouse, to raise, to excite, to animate.

"This is the wine, which, in former time, Each wise one of the magi

Was wont to arouse in a frolic house,

ROW

ROUSE, v. -ER. To raise, to excite, to stir up, to awake, to make or cause to be alert, to put upon the watch.

A rousing lye, (Sk.)—one that would awake the sleeping.

Rouser,—one who, that which, arouses, awakens, is used by Swift, (Strep. & Chloe.) A- Up-

ROUT,* v. ROTHER, s. To rowt, or rawt, is to low like an ox or cow.—Ray.

*Chaucer. Gower. Sir T. More.

A. S. Hrut-an; D. Roelen, to snort, snore, or rout in sleeping. Hence also A. S. Hruther, boas, a rother-beast.

ROUT, v. s. If from Rupta, the meaning -TIER, or will be—An irruption, a burst-RUTTER. ing or rushing in; then app. to Row, s. v. those who make an irruption, an inroad, an invasion; to the concourse or assembly; to the road, way, path, course, taken by the invaders; to the consequences of such inroad or invasion; the tumult, devastation, defeat, discomfiture, overthrow, (of the invaded.) If from Rota,—

A globe or compact body of men; persons assembled, collected, united together; an assembly or concourse; their acts and deeds; the course taken or pursued by. See RIOT.

A row seems merely a corrupt pronunciation of route. It is used by Gower, who writes:—"The poor route," "the poorest of the routes."

Fr. Route; It. Ròt-ta; Sp. -s; Ger. & Sw. -le; D. Rot. The etymologists are divided between L. Rupta and rota. (See Foss. De Vitulis, lib. II. c. 16; Men. Wach. Spel. and Jun.: and see RIOT.) Un-

ROW, s. A line; things standing, set, put, or placed in a line, in lineal order or succession.

A. S. Rawa; Ger. Reihe, reige; D. Reke; Sw. & Dan. Rad; lines, order, series,—a line, order, or series. A-

ROW, v. s. To row is—to move or steer, -ER. that is, stir, sc. a boat, ship, &c.; -ING. to move or pass along, as if driven -ABLE. or impelled (as usually implied) by oars.

Rowing (Wiclif),—that which rows or is rowed; the boat. "Putte ghe the nett into the right half of the rouwing."

A. S. Row-an, rowan; Ger. Rudern; Dan. Roer; D. Roeden, or roegen; Sw. Ro. All from Ger. Reg-en, to move.—Sk. The D. Roer, roeder, is derived by Kilian from D. Roeren, to move; the ship being guided or steered by the motion of the rudder. (See RUDDER.) The D. Roeren is the Go. Reiran; A. S. Hræran; Ger. Ruren, to move, to rear, to raise. To "rowen out of synne" in Fiers Ploughman, seems to be,—to raise or rouse, move or stir, out of sin.

ROW, v. To smoothen:—perhaps, by rolling.

"Certifie us, whether our set clothes be rowed and shorne."—Hackluyt.

Cloths rowed and unrowed; barbed, rowed, and shorn; unbarbed, unrowed, unshorn. (See Rastell, under the title Drapery; or Stat. 27 Hen. VIII. c. 13.) Sk. doubts whether from the Fr. Rouer, to turn, to wheel, (rola), because cloths are smoothened rola circumducta, by a wheel (or cylinder) drawn over them—rolled over them.

ROWEL, s. v. Any small hoop, circle, ring, or round thing, that's movable in the place which it holds; sc. in the bit of a bridle, in spurs, in armour, in farriery.—Cot.

Fr. Rouelle, from roue, a wheel, (rola.)

ROWEN, ad. s. i. e. Roughings, latter grass, after math. (See Ray; and Moore, Suffolk Words.)

Rowen, or Roughings, is app. to the second growth both of corn and grass.—Holland.

ROYAL, ad. Anciently written Rial, -ALLY. Rialtee, or Realtee; and Realm as -AL-TY. we now write, anciently also -IST. written Royalms.

-IZE, v. Regal or kingly; of or pertaining to a king; convenient or becoming, suitable to or befitting a king; e. g. noble, magnanimous, splendid, illustrious.

Fr. Royal, royaull, royaumes; It. & Sp. Reale, from Fr. Roy; It. Re; Sp. Rey; L. Rex, a king. Un-

ROYNE, or ROIGNE, v. s. t. To gnaw, to -ISH. eat, to corrode.

-OUS.† “A raynous, i. e. roynous, scall RONION (Tooke), is a separation or discontinuity of the skin or flesh, by a gnawing, eating, forward malady.”

The roynish clown,—lit. the clown who has such malady: Ronion, any one who has it: the scabby, scurvy clown, or other person.

**Gower. Spenser. †Chaucer. ‡Shak.*

See AROUT. Fr. Ronger, (to rounge,—Gower), which Men. derives from L. Rodere, to gnaw.

ROYTISH,* ad. Ray says, Rowty is over-rank and strong; spoken of corn or grass land.

Mr. Moore (Suffolk Words), “Rout is—coarse grass, which looks brown and sere in the spring.”—F. Beaumont.

RUB, v. s. To move one thing in close -BER. contact or with pressure against -SING. another; to press hard upon or against, (while in motion;) cons. to cause a stoppage, hinderance, or obstruction, a difficulty, a struggle; to hinder or obstruct; also, to cleanse, to polish.

Rubber is also, cons. app. to a struggle or contest, sc. at some game or play.

Ger. Reib-en; D. Wrieten, terere, conterere, fricare.

RUBBAGE, s. Pieces, fragments, ruins; -BIDGE. unused or useless particles.

-BISH. From the v. To rub, q. that which comes off by rubbing. Baret interprets the L. Ruderatio, a saleng of rubbish, a paving with rubble and like matter tempered with lime.

RUBRIC, ad. s. The s. is app. to certain -AL. portions of books (the Prayer -ATE, v. book, Law book,) written or printed with red ink.

RUG

A. S. Hroosan, hroostian, room-stan; Ger. Reusen; D. Rouwen; ingimiscere, lugere, penitere,—to groan, moan, or lament; to repent.

RUE, s. A plant.

Fr. Rue; Sp. Ruda; It. & L. Ruta; Gr. Ῥῥα, from the v. Ῥῥαίνω, seruare, to serve, quia ut Dioscorides docet, valetudinem conservat.—Voss.

RUFF, s. v. In Fox and Goldinge, Ruff—FLER, v. s. seems to be—elevation, exaltation; ("Antichrist, flourish—ing in his ruffe and securitie;" "Thomyris begyled her enemies nowe being in their chiefe ruffe for theyr new gotten victorie;" in Udal, Ruffe,—the elation, haughtiness; ("Ye see the pompe and ruffling of the euangelicall schole;" in Hall,—a rising, an insurrection, a tumult; ("xx or more persones were aleyne in the ruffe;" and hence, a Ruff or Ruffe is—

Tumult, confusion, disorder, disturbance. And Ruffler,—

A disorderly person, a disturber of peace or good order.

To ruff or ruffle,—to raise, to throw up; to raise a contest or disturbance, to contest.

Ruff or Ruffle,—articles of dress, so called because raised or puffed out or up, or some parts raised or laid over others, sc. in plaits, folds, wrinkles. Ruff and Ruffle are, however, evidently used by some writers as if akin to Rough.

A. S. Hrof, rof, rofe, is the top, the raised, the sustained, the elevated part of any thing. See Roof. Un—

RUM, s. Mr. Thomson says, is “the American name for spirit distilled from sugar. It was called kill devil by sailors, and thence, in cant, signified a parson. It is said, by the annotator on Swift, to be in Ireland ‘a cant word for a poor country clergyman.’” By usage,—a queer, odd, indescribable person or thing.

RUMBLE, v. s. -ING. To make a confused, continued noise, as of any substance heavily rolling.

To reeme (noted by Glosner) is still used in Lancashire. See Gloss. of Lancashire Words, by John Collier.

Ger. Rumpeln; Fr. Rommel-er; D. -en, strepere, from the A. S. Hræman, to cry out, to make a noise. See GRUMBLE.

RUMINATE, v. To ruminate is,—to—-ATION. pass and repass the food to and—-ATOR. from the stomach, to repass it—-ANT, ad. s. for chewing again; and hence, further,—to chew the chew’d or cud; and met.—to revolve, to reflect, to re-examine; to weigh, to ponder, to deliberate, to muse or meditate upon.

Fr. Rum-iner; Sp. -lar; It. & L. Ruminare, from Rumen or Ruma, the gullet, the passage to the stomach, from Ῥύω, the course or passage.

RUMMAGE, v. s. or ROOMAGE, v. To—-ER. fill a room or space; to find room or—-ING. space for; to pack or stow away; and, hence,—to look into, search, examine, the roomage or space into which things are packed or stowed; to search, to toss or tumble about in searching. See Room.

“And that the masters of the ships do looke wel to the romaging, for they might bring away a great deals more then they doe, if they would take paine in the romaging. . . . The master must provide a perfect mariner called a romager, to rounge and bestow all merchandize in such place as is conuenient.”—Hackluyt.

Sk. says,—signifies to remove the goods in the hold of a ship. Hackluyt leaves no doubt as to the meaning.

RUMMER, s. A large (roomy or spacious) vessel; a large glass.

Dan. Rommer, from Dan. Rømmen; D. Ruymer, ampliare, to enlarge.

RUMOUR, s. v. A spreading, circulating -ER.* conveyance of news, indistinct circulous.* lation or report; gen.—report, fame.

*Shak. †Bale.

Fr. Rumeur; It. Romóre; Sp. & L. Rumor, from ŕŕnuo, dictum, or rather from pŕnuo, ŕucus; Rumor being nihil aliud quam sermo in populum emanans. It may have sprung from A. S. Hræmra. See To RUMBLE; a word which seems not unhappily to describe the confused, continued, or repeated sound, in or by which rumours are conveyed; rumour being app.—as above explained.

RUMP, s. "All men gave them (the -ER. Parliament, an. 1659) no other name -ISH. or appellation but the Rump, as the fag end of a carcass long since expired."—Clarendon.

Ger. Rumpf; D. Romp, truncus; Sw. Rampa; Dan. Rumpe, cauda. Wach. derives from L. Rump-ere, quia truncus est pars à toto avulsa. It may be from A. S. Rum, amplius, latus, large, broad.

RUMPLE, v. s. A rumple, a wrinkle.
A. S. Hrympelle. See RIMPLE. Un-

RUN, v. s. To move or pass, come or go, -NEL. forth or forward, swiftly, speedily; -NER. to keep or hold, pursue or follow, -NING. to proceed in, a way or path, -AGATE. course or current, train or tract; -AWAY. to flow, to stream, to glide along, to move as a current of water, as any liquid or fluid; to melt.

To run after,—to pursue, to follow.

To run away,—to flee.

To run over,—to overflow; to pass over:—to move, to go over hastily, cursorily.

To run through,—to pierce, to stab; to go through, look through, hastily, cursorily. Go. & A. S. Rinnan; Ger. Rennen; D. Runnen; Sw. Renna; Dan. Rinder. In A. S. it was also written ŕnman, arnan: in old Eng. Renne, currere, fluere; always app. to swift motion, whether of animate or inanimate things,—as, the horse runs, the stream runs, (met.) time runs, i. e. moves or passes along, swiftly, speedily. RUNDLE, s. -ET. In Chapman, "his rundled target" is—his rounded target.
Rundlet, i. e. a roundlet, from its shape.—Sk.

RUNNET, s. Also written, and more properly, Rennet, (qv.) An apple.

RUNNET, s. Also written Rennet, (qv.) In Gloucestershire it is called Running.—Grose.

RUNT, or RONT, s. A Scotch or Welch runt. Oxen, (says Lye), of a much smaller size than others. Also app. to trees of a stunted growth; to a withered old woman.

In D. Rind, rund, is bos; in Ger. Rind is also bos. Wach. derives from Rennen, co-ire; the word being properly app. to cattle reserved for breeding; but this does not account for the application of the word to stunted trees, &c. unless we suppose it to have been first restricted to dwarfish kine, and thence extended to trees, &c. But see Jamieson, and Moore's Suffolk Words.

RUPTION, s. -TURE, s. v. A break or breach, a burst or bursting.

Rupture, s. & v. are common terms in surgical books.

Fr. Rup-tion, -ture; It. Rottura; Sp. Rotura; L. Ruptura, from rupsum, past p. of Rump-ere, to break. Ab- Cor- Dis- Inter-rupt. E- In- Pro-ruption.

RURAL, ad. s. Rural, ad.—Of or pertaining to the country; having the -IST. qualities or properties of country, as opposed to town; suited or adapted to the country.

Rurals, s.—Countrymen, clowns.

Fr. Rural; It. -rŕle; L. Ruralis, from rus; Gr. Apocœpa, precisely a, (Voss.) The Gr. Apocœpa (says Lennep) denotes—aptum et utilem facere, unde arandi notio. His editor is inclined to derive Rus from an obsolete theme ŕ-e-ŕ, rumpere; Rus being—quod rumpitur, laceratur aratro, that which is broken, torn asunder by the plough; thus making Rus mean earth, which is from A. S. ŕ-ŕan, and is considered by Tooke to have given the L. ŕ-ŕra. May not Rus have had the same primal origin?

RUSH, v. s. To move with force and -ER. haste; to push or press on rapidly, -ING. violently.

A. S. Hreos-an, ruere, corruiere, cadere, decidere; to fall, to fall together; to move with the force and quickness of any thing falling. Ger. Rauschen; D. Ruschchen. Out-

A.S. Ryge, ryge; Ger. Rocken; D. Rogge; Sw. Rogh; Dan. Rug. Sk. thinks from Hrige, the ridge, qd. ridged with prickles or spikes. Wach. thinks otherwise: see in him v. Rocken.

S.

S presents itself as a literal root in the A.S. (articles) As and Se, and in the correspondent L. Is, and Gr. Os. See As, Es, and the vv. To SEE, To SAY, To SEI-ZE, &c.

S (says B. Jonson) is a most easy and gentle letter, and softly hisseth against the teeth in prolation. It is called the serpent's letter. It varieth the powers much in our pronunciation. It sometimes inclineth to x, as in mass, wise. So after the liquids, as bells, germs, wens, burs. Where the vowel sets hard, it is commonly doubled. Bp. Wilkins observes, that it is framed by an appulse of the tongue towards the upper teeth or gums, and then forcing out the breath from betwixt the tongue and the upper teeth. The disability of pronouncing this letter is called lisping, when it is corruptly sounded th. It is of the same affinity with x, as p with b, t with d, c with g.

SABBATH, s. App. cons. to—A time -LESS.* of rest; a cessation from

-BATIC. toil, trouble, or any affliction.—**Bacon*.

-ARIAN, ad. s. Fr. Sab-ath; It. -bato; Sp. -ado. -ARIANISM. Fr. Sabatizer, to rest, or keep holy the sabbath day; L. Sabbatum; Gr. Σαββατον; Heb. שַׁבָּת, quiet, rest.

SABLE, s. ad. -ED. A skin, (Wach.) imported from Siberia, and hence the name of Sibellina for Siberina.

Fr. Sable; It. Sibellino; Sp. Cobellinas; Ger. Sabel; Sw. Sabel. For various conjectures see MEN in vv. Ermine, and Marte Sublime.

SABRE, s. v.* A kind of sword.—**Burke*. Ger. D. & Sw. Sabel; Fr. Sabre. From the Ar. Sef, gladius. See Wach. and Ihre.

SACCHARINE, s. -RIZE, v. Sugary; having the properties of, or resembling those of sugar.

Fr. Saccharin; It. Zaccherino; L. Saccharum; which, (Voss.) is in the Ar. Saccar. Pliny calls it a kind of honey, gathered and candied in certain canes. (See SUGAR.) Voss. adds, that the name Saccharum was given (to sugar), because it resembled this kind of honey so gathered from canes.

SACERDOTAL, ad. -DOTE, **v.* Priestly; of or pertaining to a priest or a minister of religion.—**Beau. & F.* (in contempt.)

Fr. Sacerd-ot, -otal; It. -ote, -otale; Sp. -ote, -otal; L. Sacerdos; one who administers, presides over, sacred things, sacred rites or ceremonies; a priest.

SACHEL, s. A small sack or bag.

L. Sacculus; Ger. Seckel; dim. of Sack.

SACK, s. v. Com.—A large bag (for corn, -FUL, s. flour, coals, &c.); a large loose -CLOTHED.* robe.—**Bp. Hall*.

A.S. Sacc; Fr. Sac; It. Sacco; Sp. Saca; Dan. Sæk; L. Saccus; Gr. Σακκis, a word, (Sk.) common to all languages,—a relic, as it is believed, of the antediluvian tongue; and hence, the v. To sack, saccos expilare. (See SACK, infra.) Voss. derives the Gr. from the Heb.

SACK, v. s. To pillage, to plunder, to -ING. rifle, to ransack.

-FUL,* ad. **Chapman*. †Holland.

SACCAGE.† Saccos expilare, to plunder, bag and baggage. Lye thinks it is from Secce, bellum; also written Sacce, from Sac-an, certare, contendere. See SACK, ante. Un-

SACK, s. A large bag, containing three or more bushels.

L. Saccare—is to strain through a sack or bag; and in Low L. Saccare, per saccum colare et expimere; and saccadum, liquor aquæ feci vini admixtus, succo expressus.—Du Cange. For the

-NESS. Saltern,—the salt works.

Fr. Sel; It. Sèle; Sp. & L. Sal. Ab αλς, est salis, et per aphæresin, sal.—Voss. Pliny remarks that “all cometh either of an humour congealed or else dried,” and the Gr. Αλς, sal, is derived by Lennep from αλ-ειν, coacervare, so named, a natura ad coagulandum proclivi; further, that the sea is so called, ob *salis*edinem aquæ, from the salt taste of the water. His editor, Scheideus, deduces the word—a notion essendi, subaudi; it being the nature of sal to leap and explode when thrown upon fire: (of course it must have been thrown upon the fire before it received this name.)

SALT,* s. A leap, jump, spring, or bound.

-ANT. **B. Jonson.*

Also the name of a fish, probably so called from the island of Sardinia.

Fr. Sard-oine; It. -onico; Sp. -onica; L. Sard-onyx; Gr. Σαρδονις.

SARDONIAN, ad. "Sardinia is free -DON-IC. from all kinds of poisonous and -ICAN. deadly herbs, excepting one herb, which resembles parsley, and which, they say, causes those who eat it to die laughing. From this circumstance, Homer first, and others after him, call laughter, which conceals some noxious design, Sardonian."—Taylor. Pausanias. Descrip. of Greece.

Fr. Sardon-ien; It. -ico; L. Sardonius. Sardonian laugh, (γελῶν Σαρδονίος), a bitter laugh.

SARK, s. A shirt; or, as the female covering is called, a shift.

A. S. Syric, syre; Sw. Scerh, said to be from Gr. Σπικόν, sericum, silk, of which sarks were first made.—See Ihre and Jamieson. Sark is a common Sc. word. But A. S. Syric, also written (Ihre) Syric, is probably scired, sceri, (i. e. shiri), from the v. Seiran, to cut, to shear.

SARPLIER, s. A piece of canvass, cloth, or other stuff, to wrap or pack up wares in.—Cot. Fr. Sarpillière.

SASH, s. -ED. A case (casse), sc. for a pane or more panes of glass. Fr. Chassis.

SASH, s. -ED. A belt, girdle, band, ribband.

Sk. writes it Shash, and calls it—a tiara, or Turkish cap. It is also so written (as a known Eng. word) by Sir Thomas Herbert, and is supposed, by Mr. Thomson, to have been adopted during the crusades: but when was this name given to the girdle worn by the Christian, in imitation, probably, of the Jewish priest? Sk. upon the authority of T. H., gives an It. word, Sezza, a kind of shaggy cloth, with the folds of which the Turks adorn their caps.

SATAN, s. The word is Heb., meaning, -IC. as Milton interprets it—The -ICAL. enemy, the arch-enemy. -ICALLY. The enemy; the devil. Satanic, -ISM.* —devilish; diabolical. -IST.† **Elegy on Donne.* †Granger.

SATE, v. To have or give enough; to -LESS. suffice, to content; to give -IATE, ad. v. or take till the desire of re- -IETY. ceiving is over; to glut. -IATION.* **Whitaker.*

Fr. Sa-tiêlé; It. -zio, -ziare, -zieta; L. Satiare, to suffice, to content, to give enough, from satis; perhaps Gr. Σατρεύω to stuff or stow closely. See SAD, SATISFY. In-Un-

SATELLITE, s. -IOUS. "Besides the moon which moves about the earth, four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, which are called their satellites."—Locke.

Fr. & It. Satellite; L. Satelles. Voss. thinks from a Syriac word, meaning satwa, and app. to one who attended the side, upon the person, of another.

SATIRE, s. Dryden calls it—An in- -IC. vective poem; i. e. a poem in -ICAL. which the vices and follies of -ICALLY. men are inveighed against, -ICALNESS. exposed, and held out to ridi- -IST. cule or contempt.

-IZE, v. Fr. Sat-ire, -yric; It. -ira, -irico; Sp. -yra, -yrico; L. Sat-ira, -yra, -ura. The origin of this word has been the subject of much dispute.—See Dryden's Pref. to the Translation of Juvenal.

SATIS-FY, v. To do enough, as much -FACTION. as may be sought or wished; -FACTORY. to content, to fulfil, to please -FACTORILY. fully; to give or pay enough, -FACTORINESS. as much as may be due or -FIER. required; to content, to ap- -FACTIVE.* pease; to remove all wish for more, all need of more.—**Brown.*

Fr. Satis-faire; Sp. -facer; It. -fare, soddisfare; L. Satisfacere, to do enough. See SATIS. Dis-In-Un-

SATIVE, ad. That can or may sow; fit for sowing.

L. Sativus, from Satus, past p. of Serere, to sow.

SATRAP, s. -Y. A governor of a province.

Fr. Satrap-e; It. -o; Sp. & L. Satrapa; Gr. Σατραπης, a Persian word.

SATURATE, v. ad. To give enough; -ATION. as much as is wanted, as much -ABLE.* as can be received or taken; to -ITY.† fill to excess.—**Grew.* †Warner. Fr. Saturer; It. -o, -ita; L. Satur, from Satis. See SATE.

SATURDAY, s. "The day unto which we yet give the name of Saterday, did first receive by being unto him [the idol Seater] celebrated, the same appellation."—Verstegan.

A. S. Sæternes dæg; Saturni dies.

SATURNAL, ad. Saturnalian,—of or -ALIAN. pertaining to the Saturnalia, feasts -IAN. of Saturn; and, cons. insubordi- -INE. pate, licentious. -IST. Saturnine,—sad, grave, sedate, gloomy: so app. because those born under the planet Saturn were said by astrologers to be distinguished by disposition, sad, grave, &c.

Saturnist,—one of a saturnine disposition.

Fr. Saturn-ales, -ien; It. -ali, -ino; Sp. -ales, -ino; L. Saturn-alla, -inus.

SATYR, s. "Among the western moun- taines of India the satyres haunt, creatures of all others most swift in footmanship: which one whiles run with all foure; other- whiles upon two feet onely like men: but so light-footed they are, that unless they be very old or sicke, they can never be taken."—Holland. Plinie.

Fr. Sat-yro; It. -bro; Sp. -iro; L. Satyrus.

SAVAGE, ad. s. v. Wild, untamed—as -LY. birds or beasts; brutal, ferocious, -NESS. cruel.—**Shak.*

-ERY.* Fr. Savage; It. Sav-aggio, -atico; Sp. -age; Low L. Savaticus pro silvaticus, in the woods, (silva), wild, untamed.

SAVANNAH, s. In the West Indies, (says Delpino,) Savana signifies a plain. But Savana in Sp. (Delpino also says,) is a large sheet for a bed; and sometimes used for a large linen cloth.

"Savannahs are clear pieces of land without woods; not because more barren than the wood-land, for they are frequently

SAY, s. A kind of stuff, so called because (Sk.) very suitable for making military cloaks, (saga.)

Fr. Sage; It. Sàia. Men. and Sk. derive from L. Sagum, a military cloak. Fr. Sage, It. Sàia, Sp. Sago—is a sagum, or cassock.

SCAB, s. A dry, hard portion of skin, -ED. peeling or separating from the con-
-BY. tinuous surface of the skin, usually covering a sore, and formed from the matter of it.

In L. as well as Eng. app. (met.) to—a shabby fellow; a mean, dirty fellow.

It. Scabbia; D. Scabbe; Sw. Skabbe; L. Scabies, from scabere, scarrere, fodere, to dig. Perhaps from D. & Ger. Scabben, A. S. Scaf-an, to shave, radere, tondere; to rub or scrape off; to peel off.

SCABBARD, s. The sheath or case in which a sword or other instrument is inclosed, and from which it is drawn.

D. Schabbe. Schobbe vetus. Operculum.—Kilian. In D. & Ger. Scheide, or Scheyde, a sheath, (qv.) from A. S. Scad-an, separare, segregare, dividere; to separate, to dispart. Scabbard, (Scawberd, in R. Gloucester) seems to form more readily from A. S. Scaf-an. See SCAS.

SCABROUS,* ad. -BREDITT.† Rough, rugged, harsh, uneven, halting.

B. Jonson. Dryden. †Burton.
Fr. Scabrous; It. Asco; Sp. Escabroso; L. Scabrosus, scaber, from Scabies. See SCAB.

SCAFFOLD, s. App. to—A fabric raised, -AGE. a stage for a temporary purpose; -ING. from which something is to be seen, or on which some spectacle is to be exhibited: or any other structure to be formed, or work to be performed, by builders, painters, or other artists. Formerly, a tower for warlike purposes.

Fr. Scaffaut, -auder, -audage; D. Schavot. Some (Sk.) derive from Ger. Schawhauzen; and this from the v. Schawen, spectare, and hauzen, a house: or from the same Schawen, and out, a vessel, or any thing that can hold or contain, ac. spectators; qd. a place to look or see from. Sk. himself prefers Ger. Schaffen, efficere, formare, to make, to frame, to shape; fabrica tumultuaria, a fabric hastily raised. Lye refers to the A. S. Sceylf, a shelf.

SCALADO, s. -ARY. The assault of a city per scalas, (Sk.) by ladders.

From Sp. Escalada, scalada; Fr. Escalade; It. Scalata. See SCALE. E-

SCALE, v. s. "We have scale, a ladder;

SCALES. and thence, scale of a besieged

SCALL. place; a pair of scales; a scale

SCALED. of degrees; a scale of a fish or

SCALD, v. s. of our diseased skin; scale of a

SCAL-ING. bone, or (he might have added)

-LESS. of any other substance; scall,

-Y. and scaled or scald head; in all of which one common meaning presents itself, viz. divided, separated."—Tooke.

Scale, (L. Scala),—a ladder, so called from the separations between step and step, or of the separate stepping-pieces of which it consists. See ESCALADE.

Scale of a besieged place,—cons. because effected by mounting or ascending by a scale or ladder. And To scale, to mount, to ascend, to climb.

Scale,—a measure divided, separated, into degrees or other parts.

Scall or scald, because the skin, or a portion (of the skin) is separated from the flesh by the heat; and hence, scalding hot, is hot enough to take off the skin; burning hot—excessively hot. "Than shall all these scalde and scabbed peeces scale cleave of."—Sir T. More.

In Meas. for Meas. "the corrupt deputy was scaled, by separating from him, or stripping off, his covering of hypocrisy." The tale of Menenius (in Coriolanus) was "scaled a little more," by being divided more into particulars and degrees; more circumstantially or at length. "Scaling his present bearing with the past," (also in Coriolanus,) looking separately at each, and, thence, comparing them.

"An old seck is aye skailing," (Ray's Scottish Proverbs,) i. e. parting, dividing, separating, breaking. The shedding or spilling of the grain is the consequence.

"Scale,—to spread, as manure, gravel, or other loose materials, (North.) Skale or skail,—to scatter and throw abroad, as mole hills are when levelled, (North.)"—Grose. (See also Brocket, and Jamieson, Nares, and the Commentators on Shak.) Jamieson supplies some peculiar Scottish usages, all tending to establish the etym. of Tooke; and our old English authors would furnish abundance in further confirmation of it.

D. Schaal; Sw. & Dan. Skæl, lanx. D. Schaal; Dan. Skæl,—of fish. Sw. Skalla; Dan. Skolder, to scald. Sk. says,—To scale, from Sp. Escalar. Fr. caler, -cheller; It. Scalare, per scalas ascendere, to mount or ascend by ladders. Scalce (of fish), from Fr. Escaltes; It. Scaglia. Scalce (of balance), from A. S. Secale, lanx, trutina. To scald, from Fr. Eschauder, from It. Scaldare, calida urere, qd. ex-calidare, to burn with hot (water). Scald head (he thinks), may be—caput ustulatum, or scaled head: in this latter he agrees with Tooke, who derives all these words and many others, (see SCOWL, SCULL, SHELL, SHOAL, SHILLING, SHOULDER, SKILL, SLATE,) from the A. S. Sceyl-an, to divide, to separate, to make a difference, to discern, to skill. Un-

SCALLOP, or SCOLLOP, v. -ED. To scallop is—to form or shape in likeness to the edge of the shell of the scallop; i. e. with segments of circles.

Sk. believes, from A. S. Scala, scata, shell; and that it signifies a shell gen., and also a kind of shell fish, ostreum, pisces testaceus, καὶ ὀστρεαί. Es-

SCALP, s. v. The scalp, is that which is shaled, or scaled, or stripped (the skin, hair, &c.) from the scull.

Sk. derives the scalp of the head, (in It. Scalpo della testa), from D. Shelpe, a shell; and a scalping iron, that which takes off the skin of the head, Chirurgorum scalprum, & scalpendo.

SCAMBLE, v. See Todd, who gives it -ING. among the words considered by -ER. Tooke as false Eng. Yet it is common in our old writers.

Sk. hesitates to derive from Gr. Σκαμνός, oblique, incurvate, writhing. Dr. Percy thinks Scamble to be so written for Scramble, (qv.) Gifford, in his note upon Ford, says, "Scambling appears to be used for obtaining by impudent importunity, by false pretences, &c.; in a word, much in the sense of Skelder, as we have in Jonson, Dekker, and others."

SCAMPER, v. To run with the speed and disorder of those who are pursued by an enemy.

The It. Scampare, Fr. Escamp-er, Sp. -ar, to escape, are derived by Men. from Campus, thus.—Escampus, escampo, scampo; to run from the field, ex campo eire. See To ESCAPE, and SCAPE.

SCAN, v. -SION. To measure and number the feet of a verse; to examine it; and thus, gen.—to examine, to balance, to ponder, to weigh.

Fr. Scandre un vers; It. Scandere un verso; L. Scandere versus—sic enim (Sk.) ab uno digito ad alterum quasi per gradus ascendimus. Un- Also Ad- De- Trans-scend.

SCANDAL, s. v. Scandal is,—A cause -IZE, v. or occasion of sin; also, a charge -OUS, or imputation of sin or evil, of -OUS-LY, guilt or criminality; (falsely, is -NESS, usually implied or understood.)

Scandal, is also app. to things scandalous, opprobrious, or infamous.

Fr. Scandale; It. -alo; Sp. Escandalo; Low L. Scandalum. The Gr. Σκανδαλον, εκανδαλιζω, are only to be found apud ecclesiam scriptores. Voss. de Vitia:—he derives Σκανδαλον, with Scapula, from εκατ-ειν, to halt, to trip, to stumble; and explains it to be any thing laid in the way, that may cause the passenger, who strikes his foot against it, to stumble or fall. And hence, in the New Test. εκανδαλιζ-ειν is (met.) to cause one to fall into, to ensnare into, sin and ruin. See Parkhurst.

SCANT, ad. s. v. Curt, short; deficient, -Y, scarce, sparing, parsimonious, -ILY, penurious, -INESS, Scantlet,—a short or small piece -LY, or portion; a portion or proportion, -NESS, -LE, v. To scantle,—to shear or divide; -LET, to reduce to small pieces or portions; to diminish, to lessen, to -LING, to be deficient, to fail or fall, -ITY,* **Holished.*

Jun. has some suspicion that Scant may be from A.S. Scam-an, frangere, comminuere; to break, to reduce to small pieces. Sk. says,—Scant, to which any thing is wanting; any thing cut or shorn close: from which the cantles or corners are cut or shorn away. See CANTLE, CANTON. Un-

SCAPE, v. s. -THRIFT.* i. e. 'Scape or escape, (qv.)

To go away, get away, sc. out of the reach of danger, out of difficulty, out of sight, out of notice; to avoid or evade.

SCAPULAR, or -LARY, ad. s. Of or pertaining to the shoulder blades.

A scapulary, (Fr. Scapuli-aire; It. -dre; Sp. Escapulario), so called, because thrown over the shoulders. "The badge it gives, which is call'd the holy scapulary, is made of two small pieces of woollen stuff, about the extent of a hand, hanging by two little laces down from the neck, upon both the back and the breast of the devout person who wears it."—Brevint. "The king was in a scopelary mantel."—Hall, H. VIII. an. 6.

L. Scapulae, the shoulder-blades; from Scap-ecchi, to be hollow: externally they project, internally they are hollow.—Voss.

SCAR, s. v. A scar is any—Cliff, cleft, or -LESS, division or separation—in the skin, -RY, in a bank, hill, or any thing else; the mark left by a cut or wound.

Fr. Eschar; Ger. Schar, vulnus, vel incisio, (Wach.) from Ger. Scheer-en, secare, to shear or shear, to cut, (see SEAR;) and Seren, derives from Sw. Schara, to cut:—and in Sw. Skeer (liver) is a rock divided from the land; and Tooke considers it (scar) to be the past p. of the A. S. Sceyr-an, to shear, to cut, to divide, to separate. Camden says,—Scarr is a craggy, stony hill: and Ray,—a scarre, the cliff of a rock, and a naked rock on the dry land, from the Sax. Carre, cautes. Pot-scarre, (he adds,) pot-schard, or broken pieces of pots; and Scar, in Scarborough, is the same word. Un-

SCARAB, s. -IE. An insect.

L. Scarab-aeus; It. -bo; Gr. Καραβος.

SCARAMOUCHE, s. A buffoon, so called, from the skirmishing antics he performs.

It. Scaramuccia; Fr. Escarmoucheur, a skirmisher.

SCARCE, ad. av. Cons.—Deficient, want- -LY, ing, sparing; parsimonious, penu- -NESS, rious; and also,—rare, unfrequent. -ITY,* **Liddgate.*

-HEAD.* Fr. Escars; Sp. -asso; It. Schero; D. Schaers. Men. forms It. Schero, from Esparcus; Wach.—from Ger. Karg; D. Kerig. Tooke thinks it may have a northern origin, but proposes nothing. In D. Schaers, is a shears, from Scheer-en, A. S. Sceyr-an, to shear. May not Schaers, parcus, be from the same source, sheared or short, (see SHORT;) and thus mean short.

SCARE, v. To disperse, or put to flight; and hence, app. to—the feeling which causes or attends the flight. To terrify, to affright or frighten.

Sk. gives a preference to It. Scorare, to discourage—animos seu cor adimere. To scare seems to be, to cause to be separate, or to disperse, (A. S. Sceyr-an, see SCAR.) We have the expression—To shear off,—app. when it appears dangerous or disagreeable to stay any longer. And see To FEAR. Un-

SCARF, s. v. Also written Scarp.

Scarf is app. to—A loose piece, sc. of silk, gauze, &c. used as an article of dress, or (the purpose mentioned by Sk.) to support a disabled limb.

Scarf or Scarp, (Fr. Escarpe,) Cot. calls "a little wall without the main rampier of a fort," i. e. separated from it.

To scarf,—to piece or put parts or pieces together.

Fr. Escharp; Ger. Scherpe. Sk. derives from the Ger. Scherf, segmen, or rather from the A. S. Scearp, clothing, apparel. In A. S. Scarf is a fragment, probably from the v. Sceyr-an, to shear, to separate: and a scarf, fascia, quæ latus brachium suspenditur, semper ex latiori sericeo vel linteo descenditur.—Sk.

SCARI-FY, v. -FICATION. Slightly to open or make incision into.—Cot.

Fr. Scarifier; It. & L. Scarificare. But Voss. thinks Scarifo the true L. word. Gr. Σκαρίφω, scalpere, radere, superficialiter scindere. The A. S. Scyr-an, to cut, (see SCAR), still presents itself as the root.

SCARLET, ad. s. Scarlet is used by Chaucer, Spenser, &c. as an epithet to red; thus, "Hosen of scarlet rede."—Chaucer. "Robe of scarlet red."—Spenser.

Fr. Escarlat-e; Sp. -a; It. Scarlàtto; Ger. Scharlach; Low L. Scarietum. Of unknown origin. See Scharlach, in Wach.; Escarlate in Men.; Scariatum in Du Cange.

SCARMOGE. See SKIRMISH.

SCARP. See SCARP.

SCATHE, v. s. To separate, to sever, sc.-FUL,* parts constituting one whole; what -LESS,† appertains or belongs to another; -LY,‡ and, thus, to harm or injure; also, to sever, to split, to rend asunder, to destroy.

*Not uncommon from Chaucer to Shak.
†Chaucer.

Go. Skath-jan, ga-shath-jan; A. S. Scath-an, -ian; Ger. Schaden; D. Schaden; Sw. Skad-a; Dan. -er. A. S. Scad-ian, scad-an, dividere. separate, to divide, to sever (see SHADE), appears to give the origin. Scath-ian is, to take away, to steal; and hence—"to harm, hurt, or do scath, or mischief." To scathe may thus be—as above explained. Un-

SCATTER, v. To disperse, to dissipate; -EDLY, to throw about, to drop, to fall, to -ER, shed in small scanty parts, or portions.

-INGLY. A. S. Scad-ian; D. Sheiden, sheyden; -LING. Schetteren; Ger. Sheiden; to divide, to separate, to disperse. See SCATHE, and SHED. Be-Dis-Un-

SCAVENGER, s. App. to—Those who scrape and clear away the filth from public streets, or other places.

A. S. Scaf-an; D. & Ger. Schaben, to shave, to scrape.

SCELESTIC,* ad. Wicked.—**Feltham*. L. Scelustus, wicked, from scelus, wickedness; Fr. Scélître, scélatrat.

SCENE, s. The shaded part of a theatre -ERY, assigned to the actors; the dramatic action, part or parts of -IC, the dramatic action represented -ICAL, the painting before which the actors perform their parts; any view or spectacle; a combination of objects viewed, or presenting themselves to the view or sight. Sceno-graphy,—Gr. Σκηνη, and γραφειν, to describe.

Fr. Scène; It. Sp. & L. Scena; Gr. Σκηνη, com. derived from σκιο, i. e. umbra,—quia scena proprie ait umbraculum seu tabernaculum; the word being first app. to the shaded part of a theatre.

SCENT, s. v. Formerly also written Sent. -FUL. To feel (by the sense of smell), -LESS, to smell; to cause to smell, or -INGLY, to emit a smell. And the s.—

Smell, that which smells or causes the sensation of smelling; an odour, a perfume.

Fr. Sentir; It. & L. Sentire, to feel: usually restricted in Eng. to the feeling or sense of smell.

SCEPTRE, s. -ED. App. gen. to—The ensign of authority; to royal or imperial authority or power.

Fr. Sceptre; It. Scettro; Sp. Cetro; L. Sceptrum; Gr. Σκαπτρον, baculus, quo quis insinitur; from σκαπτειν, insili, a staff, on which any one leans.

SCERN,* v. i. e. Discern.—**Spenser*.

SCHEDULE, s. Also anciently written Cedule, (qv.)

"A scrawl, hand-writing, or private instrument in writing; an addition or scrawl, annexed unto a testament or other deed."—Cot. Also—a list, a catalogue.

Fr. Schède, échédule, cédule; It. Céd-ola; Sp. -ula; L. Schedula, schedæ; Gr. Σχῆδῃ or σχῆδῃ, a sheet (of paper), from σχιζειν, to divide, to cleave. En-

SCHEME, s. v. The form, or frame, fabric, construction, contrivance; the -ER,* plan or plot, the design or purpose.

-ATISM,† *Common in Speech. †Boyle. †Swift. -ATIST,‡ Gr. Σχημα, habitus, from σχηζειν, habere, the habit, form. Our application of this word seems to be modern, and peculiar to our own language.

SCHIRROUS, SKIRROUS, or SCHIR-ROUS, ad. A hard and almost insensibility. sible swelling; a kernel, bred between the flesh and skin, by cold;—or of thick and clammy flegm.—Cot.

Fr. Scirre, squirre; It. Scirro; L. Scirrurus; Gr. Σκιρρ-ος, tumor durus; a hard swelling, from σκιρπειν, indurare, to harden. See SCAR.

SCHISM, s. A division, a separation.

-ATIC. "Schism is nothing else but -ATICAL, a separation made in the -ATICALITY, communion of the church, -ATICALNESS, upon account of something -LESS,* in divine worship, or ecclesiastical discipline, that is not any necessary part of it."—Locke.

Fr. Schismatizer,—to schismatize it, to play the schismatic.—Cot. **Milton*.

Fr. Scism-e; It. -o; Sp. Cisma; Low L. Scisma; Gr. Σχισμα, from σχιζειν, to divide or sever.

SCHOLY, s. v.† A scholy, or scholium, -IAST, seems to have been—a note, re- -IASTIC, mark, or observation, to explain -IAZE,‡ v. or illustrate, written without -ICAL,§ much labour. See SCHOOL.

SCHOOL, s. v. The common modern

-ERY, application is to—the place, -ING, the house in which persons are taught, instructed, educated, disciplined, trained; -ARSHIP, then, to the system or peculiar doctrines of different -ASTIC, ad. s. sects, teachers or instructors; limitedly,—to certain teachers or writers, -ALLY, and their doctrines; the Realists, Nominalists, &c.—**B. Jonson*.

Fr. Echola, escolo, scholarité; It. Scuola; Sp. Escuela; L. Schola; Gr. Σχολή, otium; inhibito operis, from σκη-ειν, otium inhibere; as app.—to retirement from active labours; and, cons. leisure for study, for literary or philosophical speculations; to the place where literary or philosophical men assembled. See SCHOLAR. Un-

SCIA-GRAPHY, s. A description or -TERIC-AL. delineation of shade or shadow; -ALLY. the art of shadowing, of delineating.

Sciaterical (Gr. Σκιατικός),—that can or may shade or shadow, or form shades or shadows.

Gr. Σκιαγραφία, from σκία, a shadow, and γραφ-ειν, scribere, describere: to describe, to delineate.

Fr. Isiatique, sciattique; It. & Sp. Sciatica; L. Sciaticus, ischiadicus; Gr. ισχιαδικος, from ισχίς, lumbus.

SCIENCE, s. Science is gen. used as -ENTIAL. equivalent to — knowledge; -ENTIFIC. emph. not imperfect or -ENTIFIC-AL. perficial:—not of individual -ALLY. facts; but of general, theo-
SCIENCED.* retic, laws or principles.

Science may be thus briefly distinguished from art: Science is knowledge; art,—power or skill in the use of it; and thus, logic is a science, and also an art: the art is the practical use of the science; of the principles of the science. Painting, music, &c. are arts; and the best artist is he who uses the science, the principles of the science, with the greatest practical skill and dexterity.

Shuyren, to shove, seems to present the true origin. Som. exp. the A. S. A-scofoan,—to shut out or exclude, to explode, to drive or hiss out. To scoff, then, may mean,—as above explained.

SCONCE, v. s. A bulwark or defence; then, the head.—Sk.

To sconce,—to put, to impose upon the head, sc. a charge, a fine; and, hence, to fine,—a usage which appears to be modern. In Lancashire, a lantern is called a Scoance, and the name in other parts is not uncommon for a utensil to hold a candle. In the North, Grose says, a fixed seat by the side of a fire-place is so called; perhaps from its snugness and security.

Ger. Schantz; D. Schantz; Sw. Skans, munitum. Wach. writes learnedly and elaborately, but not satisfactorily. Ibre thinks the opinion of Jun. more probable, that Schantz, in D. formerly signified the branches of cut trees tied together in bundles, that these bundles of branches were used in forming ramparts, and that hence the name schantz was extended to the rampart or fortification itself. And he derives from A. S. Scorn-an, frangere, comminere, to break, to separate into small parts. En-In-

SCOOP, s. v. SCOPPET, v. A scoop,—any thing, something formed (in contradistinction to a flat instrument or tool) to dig out with, to hollow, to excavate with.

To scoop,—to hollow, to excavate; to draw or take out in a scoop, to lade.

D. Schoepe, schuppe, a shovel. Shoop-en, Ger. Schöpfen, to draw out. The origin may be A. S. Scypp-an, to frame, form or fashion, to shape, (qv.)

SCOPE, s. That which is viewed or observed; the mark, aim, intention, design, purpose; the space or extent viewed; gen.—space, room, extent, enlargement.

It. Scopo; L. Scopus; Gr. Σκοπος, that which is looked at, viewed, aimed at, from σκοπεσθαι, to view, to observe. Epi-scopal.

D. & Sw. have sprung from L.; and that L. may have been formed from D. Scherpte, acrimonia; and he calls it a disease arising from acrimony of blood.

SCORCH, v. -ING. To burn the outward part, the skin, the surface; to burn superficially or slightly; to parch, to dry with heat, to shrivel.

Holland writes, "Those who are scorched or singed by nipping cold."

Sk.—from Fr. Escorcher; It. Scorticare; L. Escorticare, i. e. cortice exuere, because the skin, which is as it were the bark of the body, falls off when scorched. Lye has found two instances of scorched, ustus, (parched.) Serenius has no doubt that Old Go. Skior, ignis, is the origin. Sk.'s opinion seems rational. Or it may be from A. S. Scyr-an, to scar, (qv.); (Scyr-ig-an, the g softened into ch.) And see SCALD, SCALIFY, SCORE. Un-

SCORE, v. s. Score, s. (Dan. Skaar, a cut, an incision,)—an account or reckoning by divisions, marks, or notches, cut in pieces of stick or wood; gen. an account.

Scores,—for the number twenty,—our ancestors are supposed, that they might avoid the embarrassment of large numbers, when they had made twice ten notches, to have cut off the piece or talley (taglie) containing them, and afterwards to have counted the scores or pieces cut off, and reckoned by the number of separate pieces, or by scores.—See TOOKE.

Score, v.—To cut, to make an incision, to mark by a line cut; to set a mark upon, to charge or set it to the account.

Sk. resorts to L. Escorticare. (See SCORCH.) It is from A. S. Scyr-an, to shear, (qv.) to cut, to divide, to separate.

SCORIOUS, ad. "The gross substance cast up from the pot or vessel and swimming aloft (whether it be the dross comming of gold thus tried, by heat of the furnace, or any other metall) is named scoria."—Holland. Plinie.

L. Scoria; Gr. Σκορπια, from σκαπ, stercus, qd. metalli stercus.

SCORN, v. s. Cons.—To deface, to dis-

-FUL. favour, of respect or honour: to -FULLY. disrespect, to dishonour, to disdain; to contemn; to treat disdainfully or contemptuously.

D. Schern-en; It. -ira; Fr. Escorner; Sp. -arneler. It. Scôrno, -are, Men. derives from Schernir. Fr. Escorner, It. Scornare, mean—to strip off the horns, (cornu.) Be-

SCORPION, s. App. (met.) from the sting of the animal to—A severe lash or scourge.

Fr. & It. Scorpione; Sp. Escorpion; L. Scorpio; Gr. Σκορπιος. Of uncertain etym. Some suggest Gr. Σκορπιε-ειν, to scatter, to cast.

SCORSE, v. s.† To exchange, to barter, to deal.

A horse-courser, or corser, or, (as Lye thinks,) a horse-coer, is—a horse-dealer.

Grose says,—Scorse or seorse, in the Exmore dialect, is to exchange: in Sc. Cose or Cose has the same signification. Lye thinks Scorse is a corrupt writing of Cose, which he derives from hiosa, eligere, to choose or choose. The A. S. Cose-an, had before been given by the Gloss. to G. Douglas; and this reason added, that an exchange is a mutual or alternate election or choosing, (or taking, for that is the literal meaning.) See CROOZ.

SCORSED,* ad. i. e. Coursed, chased; from It. Scôrso, past p. of scorere, (currere,) to run.—Spenser.

SCOT, s. Scot, or Shot,—is a cast, so much cast or thrown down, sc. as a share of the reckoning of the whole sum to be paid. See SHOOT.

Fr. Escot, écot; It. Soldito; Sp. Escote; A. S. Scyt-an, to throw, to cast.—Tooke. E.

SCOTCH, v. s. Cons. to strike; to cut, to give or make a cut, or incision.

In Macbeth, the first folio reads scorch'd; in the other examples, scotched, and scotches. In the Scottish, they have To scutch, which Jamieson says, means—to beat, to drub; in scutching lint, he adds, the flax is beat with a switch, and he thinks Scutch and Switch may be radically the same. Our older lexicographers have not the word. To lash—is to throw or cast out, to strike with anything thrown out, to cut with it. To scutch may have a similar meaning; from A. S. Scyt-an, to shoot or throw out; (Scyt-ig-an, g softened into ch.)

SCOTOMY, s. Gen. app. to—The dimness accompanying a dizziness.

It. Scotomia; L. Scotoma; Gr. Σκοτία, from σκοτος; σκοτος, darkness, dimness.

SCOUNDREL, s. One shunned, because infamous; and hence—

An infamous fellow; a base villain, or rascal.

The Fr. Maraude, a scoundrel; Maraudaille, scoundrellism.—Cot. Sk. says, either from Ger. & D. Skande, ignominy, qd. an ignominious or infamous man; or from It. Scandalo, from scandere (abscondere), to hide; a hider, and thus, a rogue, (qv.) The instances of the usage of this word are so modern, that it seems difficult to connect it with an A. S. origin; otherwise the first etym. of Sk. seems plausible. Ger. & D. Schande; A. S. Scanda; from Scunian, ascunian, to shun; to avoid, to fly from, to detest, to eschew.—Som. Scoundrel would then mean—as above.

SCOUR, v. 1. To clear off or away (by rubbing).—ER. bing); to cleanse, to purify, to purge;—ING. to clear away forcibly by rapid motion.

2. To move rapidly; to run, to range swiftly. Go. Scauron, Ger. Scheuren; D. Shueren; Sw. Skura; Dan. -er; Fr. Ecurer; It. Scurare, fricare, defricare, mundare, purgare friando, to rub, to cleanse, to clear of foulness by rubbing. The A. S. Scurr-an, tondere, to shear; radere, to clear away by scraping or rubbing, seems to be the original word. In the latter applications the It. Scurrere, (L. Curvere), to run, to overrun, is considered by Thomson to be the root. See Scua, Scuar. Un—

SCOURGE, s. v. A thong, a lash, a whip—ER. (sc. of strips of leather, cords, &c.);—ING. a chastisement, a punishment, an affliction.

Fr. Escourge, a scourge or whip; It. Scorgi-gia, from Curium—corigia, coreggia, scoreggia.—Men. L. Scutica; It. Scorazza, quo quis escoritur, aut escorrigitur, ut ita dicam.—Martin. The Fr. Escourge, and L. Corrigia, a thong, a latchet.

SCOUT, s. v. One sent out before an army, to collect intelligence by any means.

To scout,—to throw or cast away; to reject; to act as a scout, or as one sent out as a spy; to go out or about as a spy.

To scout, met.—to reject, to repel, or repulse.

Fr. Escoute, a spy, eaves dropper, prying companion: also a scout, scout-watch, or sentinel: the discoverer or forerunner of an army.—Cot. Sk. derives from Escouter (auscultare.) to listen. Jun. gives the D. Schowia, speculatores, from Schowen, speculari; and derives from Gr. of Later Ages Σκουλαί, auscultatores, listeners. Tooke says,—a scout means (suband. some one, any one) sent out, (used in old Eng. as equivalent to,—thrown or cast; and is past p. of Scyt-an, to throw, to cast forth, to throw out.) See Scroor.

SCOWL, s. v. A scowl, (of the eyes)—is a look or cast of the eyes (with contracted brows) indifferently, sideways or straight-forwards: a frowning look of anger or discontent. To scowl, formed upon the s. is—

To look frowningly, with anger or discontent, gloom or sullenness.

A. S. Scowl-tag; Ger. Shiel, shiel. Wach derives from Gr. Ελ-ειν, vertere, contorquere, to turn, to twist. Tooke thinks Scowl is the past p. of Scyllan, to separate: that Scowl-tag, are separated eyes, or eyes looking different ways; and he produces this very early usage.—“Than scripture scorned me and a skile looked.”—Vision of Piers Ploughman, p. 53. See SCALE.

SCRABBLE,* v. To scrape,—of which word, (Scrape.) Scrabble is the dim., with the mere change of p into b.—**Bible*, 1 Sam. D. Schraepen, schrabben, schraeffen, schraeffelen.

SCRAG, s. Any thing ragged, cleft, -G-ED. cracked, or broken; any thing bare, -Y. or meagre, spare, or lean.

Scrag appears to be formed from Crab; and in G. Douglas, crabs are called scrabbis. See CRAB and CRACK.

SCRALLING,* ad. Perhaps Scrabbling or Scrambling.—**Holinshed*.

SCRAMBLE, v. s. -ER. Gen.—To strive or struggle, disorderly, indiscriminately; to seize, or get possession of all or any portion of a common prize.

Scramble, certatim arripere,—either from the D. Krabbelen, to tear with the nails, or from scrap-an; D. Schreffen, radere, scalpere, qd. corrader, to scrape together.—Sk. In the North it is called a scraffe. In the Lancashire dialect, a striving to catch things on the hands and knees on the floor is called a scramble, scrabble, or scrattle.

SCRANNEL, ad. Harsh, shrill, shrieking; sharp, meagre, spare.

Scrannil, a meagre or lean person.—Gloss. of Lanc. Words. The word seems connected with, if not the same as Cranny, a small chink or fissure; and app. by Milton to pipes, as if not sound or air-tight. And hence—as above.

SCRAP, or SCRAPE, s. A scrap (of food). A small, a minute portion.

The past p. of A. S. Scrap-an, any thing something scraped off.—Tooke. Quod & cibo abrasum.—Sk.

SCRAPE, v. s. To draw one thing (usually, -ER, s. something edged, an edged tool or -ING. instrument) over the surface, of another thing or substance, (to rub); to draw or get together by scrap, by bits or small portions, by parsimonious earnings or savings. Scrape, s. met.—

A state of difficulty; gen. the effect of heedlessness or mischievousness.

A. S. Scrap-an; D. Schrabben, schrapen; Ger. Schrappen; Sw. Skrapa; Dan. Skraber, radere, corrader, scalpere; to raise, to scrap, (qv.)

SCREAM, v. s. or SCREECH, v. SCHREECH. Also written To shriek, (qv.)

A screech or shriek is,—the cry of terror, or passion; perhaps it may be called, sharper and harsher than a scream; but, in human beings esp. scarcely to be distinguished from it. In Lancashire, they use Reak, and also Ream. And see CRACK and CREAK, which appear to differ from Scream only in degree.

SCREAM, v. s. Scream is esp. app. to—The cry of terror uttered by females; of children in pain or passion;—though not confined to these.

See SCRAK. In Lancashire,—To ream, (see RUMBLE,) from A. S. Hræman, plorare, clamare, ejulare, to weep, to cry, to weep with crying and bewailing.—Som. In Sw Skrems is,—terrefacere; in D. Schroom, horror; Schroomen, horrere, horrescere.—Ihre and Kilian.

SCREEN, v. s. or SKEEN, s. A screen is—Any thing that covers, hides, conceals, protects.

Fr. Ecran, -ene, serene; Low L. Screona, screuna. In some places,—the holes or caverns dug in the earth, and covered with heaps of dirt (of which Tacitus speaks as being usual among the ancient Germans, Ger. c. 16,) are at this day called Ecranens. See Du Cange, Foss. (de Vit. lib. ii. c. 17,) and Men. The editor of Men. derives from the Ger. Schrein, arca; and this (Wach. says) is Low L. Screona, from Scrinium. See SHRINE. Sk. thinks—from Ger. Schirmen, tegere, protegere, to cover, to protect, to defend. Be-

SCREEN, s. v. To sift, to scrern, (qv.)

Perhaps, cona. from Screen, supra; which, being sometimes made of twigs at some distance apart, would serve as a sifter. Some say—from Bar. L. Secerniculum, from Se-cernere.

SCREW, v. s. To screw, met. is—To twist close, to distort.

To twist close, to pinch hard; to squeeze tight. "The screw is described to be a kind of wedge that is multiplied, or continued by a helical (spiral) revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vectis (a bar) at one end of it."—Wilkins.

Fr. Escrone; D. Schroef; Ger. Schraube; Dan. Skrue. Sk. derives the Fr. from Ez, and roue; because it is turned round like a wheel. Wach.—from Ger. which (he says) is the genuine word, and Germanic in its origin. Un-

SCRIBE, s. Scribe,—a writer. "Scribe

*Chaucer. †Barrow.

Fr. Scribe, scribo, -ains, -atilde; It. Scriba; Sp. Escriba; L. Scrib-ere. Becan (see Foss.) derives from the D. Schribben, (to scrape,) because a line or stroke in writing is formed by scraping or drawing (sc. a style, a pen,) over the surface (of paper, parchment, or other substance). Scribble would then be Scrabble, with the mere difference of the vowel. Voss. thinks Scrib-ere is manifestly from Gr. γραφειν,—changed into c. The origin of all is probably the same. See GRAVE. Scribe is not used un-compounded as a v. See SCRIPT. SCRUB, v. s. A scrub,—one who scrubs or scrapes together; any one, any thing mean.

To scrub is,—to scrape, by the change of the vowel a into u, and the p into b. (See SCRAPE.) The difference of usage now depends upon that with which the act is performed: thus,—the butcher scrapes his block with a knife, and scrubs or rubs it with a brush.

SCRUPLE, s. v. Met.—A difficulty, a hesitation, a doubt, a fear, an apprehension; a nicety, a delicacy. -OUSLY. A weight equalling twenty -OUSNESS. grains, or the third part of a -OSITY. dram: any small portion. -IZE,* v. **R. Mountagu.*

SCRUZE,* v. -ING.† For squeeze, to compress, or press close together. It seems, (Lye adds,) to be formed from Screw. Phillips, in his New World of Words, says—the obsolete v. "Scruse", is to crowd or press hard: through heedless pronunciation corrupted by Londoners to Scrouge.—Johnson and Pegge. It is probably from—To crush.—**Spenser.* †Bp. Hall.

SCRY, s. i. e. Ascry, (qv.)

SCRYDE, pt. i. e. Descried, (qv.)

SCUD, s. v. -ING. To shoot along, run, flee, or flit along; move speedily or rapidly.

Ger. Schiessen, celeriter moveri; schielen, fugere; Sw. Skutta, cursitare, to move quickly, to fly; to run; from A.S. Scyt-an, to shoot, (qv.)

SCUFFLE, v. s. Sk. thinks it to be Shuffle, (qv.) with the change of h into c, and to mean—A confused and tumultuous contest or fight. See CUFF?

SCULK, or SKULK, v. To move or go under covert, secretly, sily.

To go secretly, or concealedly; to go, or move into, be, or stay in secret places; to secrete; to conceal, to lurk.

In Gower, "he skulketh as a hare."

Dan. Skulker; D. Schuyten; Sw. Skyla, and Scholka, are—latitare, occultare, to lie hidden, to hide, to conceal. The origin seems to be A.S. Scyl-an, (Scylt-g-an, g into k or c hard), to separate, to secrete.

SCULL, or SKULL, s. App. to the separated bone of the head; also to a division, or portion of fish divided or separated from the main body; i. e. to shoals of fish.

Sk. says,—the shell of the head, but why so used he does not explain. Scull, Tooke considers to be—the past p. of Scyl-an, to divide, to separate. See SCALE.

SCULL, s. -ER. A kind of boat. (See SHALLOP, and SLOOP.) Also of oar.

Mina. derives from the hollowness of a boat like a shell or scull; or it may be, (Sk. adds), from Fr. Escuelle, L. Scutula, from some resemblance to a platter or charger. G. Douglas uses the word skul for a vessel to contain liquids—"We keet on mony a skul of warme milk."—P. 29, v. 20. "In flakoun (flagon) and in skul."—P. 210, v. 3. The Glossarist declares for the etym. of Mina. See Ihre in v. Skool; and Jamieson.

SCULLION, s. The servant whose duty -IONLY. it is to clean the plates and dishes, -ERY. or other kitchen utensils. And hence app. to—any thing low, and mean.

Old Fr. Scullier,—"Officier qui a soin de la vaisselle, des plats, et des assiettes."—Roquefort. Fr. Escuelle, a platter; qd. Scullion, a washer of plates and dishes.—Sk. L. Scutula.

SCULPTOR, s. A graver or engraver, -URE, v. s. a cutter or carver, sc. into form -ILE,* or shape.—Brown. †Sandys.

SCULPT.† Fr. Sculpteur; It. -tore; Sp. Escultor; -pidor; L. Sculptor, from sculpere, to cut, to grave, which (Voss.) differs from Scalpere only in usage; and he derives from Gr. Σκαλπω, with the holic prefix, σκαλπω, σκαλπω. In—

SCUPPER, s. Holes in the deck, through which the water drains off.

Skupper holes (Sk.) are holes in the benches of a ship (in transitis) through which the water flows; from Ger. Schopfen, haurire, because through them the water is drawn or drained off.

SCUR,* v. i. e. Scour; to move rapidly, to -R-ER.† clear the ground swiftly. See -Y.† HURRY-SCURRY.

**Beau. & F. †Berners. †North.*

SCURF, s. A thin scale or flake; a dry, -Y. scaly excrescence on the surface of the skin.

-IN-ESS. -RV-Y, s. ad. Scurvy seems no other than -ILY. Scurfy, (see ROYNE;) and (met.) is—

Shabby, mean, vile, worthless; despicable, contemptible.

D. Schurft, schorftig, scurf, scurfy; Dan. Skure; A. S. Scorf-a, from scorfan, rodere, mandere, to gnaw, to bite, (Sk.); with whom Lye coincides,—quod in morbum istum adacem optime quadrat. Scurvie, or Scorbie, (says Jun.)—is the disease which is com. called Scorbute. He and Sk. give to the word Scorbie or Scorbute the same origin. See SCORBUTE.

SCURRILE, ad. Jesting or scoffing, -ITY. like a vulgar buffoon; with vul-
-OUS. gar, low calumny or scandal; low,
-OUSLY. vulgar, indecent or unbecoming.

Fr. Scurritill-é; It. -à; L. Scurritille, from scurra, a jester, a scoffer. Of uncertain etym.; perhaps from Scyr-an. (See SCURA.) The ad. is app. from the lowest uses of jesting or scoffing.

SCUSE,* i. e. Excuse.—Shak.

SCUT, s. That which shoots up, sc. like the short, erect tail of a hare.

Lye suggests Go. Skaut, fimbria, the edge or border: perhaps from A. S. Scyt-an, to shoot.

SCUTE, s. Scutcheon, (Scocoon, Chaucer, -AGE. Fr. Escusson),—a small target or -CHEON. shield.

"This pecuniary satisfaction (in lieu of personal attendance, scutifer, bearing a shield) at last came to be levied by assessment at so much for every knight's fee under the name of scutage."—Blackstone.

Low L. Scutagium, from L. Scutum, a shield. Gr. Σκυτόν, corium, pellicula, from κν-ειν, turgere. Hemistherius connects it with εσκόλος, thence with εσκόλας, quater, and concludes εσκόλος to mean pellem quasiendo detractam. The root is probably Northern—A. S. Scyt-an, to shoot, to throw out, to throw off. See ESCUAEN, ESCUZCHEON.

SCUTTLE, s. v. The scuttles in the deck of a ship,—the opening through which goods, &c. are shot into the hold.

A coal-scuttle:—to shoot coals, into the cellar is a common expression; from the scuttle they are shot or thrown upon the fire.

To scuttle off or away, is—to scud or scuddle off.

To scuttle a ship,—to make openings or holes.

Fr. Esc-outilles; Sp. -otilla; It. Soodella. Sk. thinks may be from D. Schuyte, a boat, or from schutlet, scutella, a kind of dish or platter: it is more probably from A. S. Scyt-an, to shoot. See SCURE.

SCUTTLE,* s. Scull is a Sc. name for a basket of a semicircular form.—Jamieson. It is perhaps the same word as the preceding.—Tusser. Hakewell.

D. Schotel; Fr. Escuelle; It. Scodilla; Sp. Escudilla; L. Scutilla, scutula, a dish, a platter, from scutum, (Voss.) because the scutella was formed like an oblong shield.

SCYTH. See SITHE.

SDAIN, or SDEIGN,* s. SDEIGNFUL.† i. e. Disdain; Disdainful.

**Spenser. Milton. †Beau. & F.*

SE, pref. is used separatiōe, equivalent to Dis, (which comprises it—di-se.) When proposed to some word signifying division or partition, it affirms or augments the force of the meaning, e. g. se-cede, se-clude; when proposed to words signifying wholeness or entirety, it reverses or negatives it, e. g. se-join, se-gregate. In the northern languages S, or Se, is a common prefix to consonants, with which it readily unites in pronunciation: as crag, scrag; creak, screak, &c. Its force in such instances appears to be augmentative. See letter S.

SEA, s. Sea is opposed (geographically) to land, to rivers, lakes, &c.; it is app. to the great mass of salt waters, or different portions of it,—to any large quantity, liquid or fluid; to any thing stormy or distinguished by other qualities of the sea.

Sea is very much used pref.

Go. Sæw; A. S. Sæ; D. & Ger. See; Sw. Sjö; Dan. Sø, from Gr. Ξε-ειν, fervere, bullire, to seethe, (see δ'ωωπ, bulliebat aqua. Homer, Iliad, 21, v. 365.) say the etymologists; but the Gr. has no name for the sea derived from that v. Over-

SEAL, s. A sea calf. "In their sleepe, they seeme to low or blea, and thereupon they be called sea-calves."—Holland. Plinius.

A. S. Sela, seol; Sw. Sjal; D. Zeekond.

SEAL, v. s. -ER. To set a sign or mark, sc. in token of assent, affirmance, assurance; to affirm, or confirm, to assure, to secure; and also—(from the effect of sealing) to fasten, to fix; to fasten together closely, to close, to shut.

Fr. Sael, seer; It. Sig-illo; Sp. -ilo; L. Sigillum; D. Seghel; Ger. Siegel; Sw. Sigill; Dan. Segl; A. S. Sigel, sigel-an; Go. Sigiljan, ga-sigiljan, signare, to sign, to set or make a sign or mark. And see SEEL. En-In-Un-

SEAR, v. -CLOTH, i. e. Cere, Cerecloth, (qv.)

SEARCE, v. s. -ER.* To sift, to bould.

**Holland.*

Fr. Sasser, to sift or searce; from Squassare, for secussare, to shake out, or from Selacium, because made of hair. (sela.)—See in Men. Casca. Searce and Search, (qv.) have probably the same origin.

SEARCH, v. s. To look after or about, -ER. seek, or inquire; to pry into, to -ING. investigate, to examine; to explore, -LESS. to try.

Seek is more emph. than See, and Search than Seek.

Fr. Chercher; It. Cercare; qd. Cercare, i. e. circumscire dispoicere, ubi lateat quod investigamus; to look around, cast our eyes around, to discover where that may lay, which we seek to find.—Jun. And see also Men. En-In-Over-Re-Up-

SEASON, s. v. App. to—The four divisions of the year; to a fit or proper, convenient or suitable, time; a portion of time.

-ING. To season,—to do any thing at a fit or proper time; to prepare for fit or proper use; to prepare by time; to mature; to give a taste or savour; to savour, to qualify, to temper.—South.

Fr. Saison; It. Stagione; Sp. Sazon, which some derive from Satio, the time for sowing, setting, planting; and hence extended to the different periods for the different labours of husbandry, the different times of the year: others from Statio, qd. (Sk.) temporis statio.—See Men. Sk. and Jwn. To season, (Fr. Assaisonner.) Sk. derives from Ger. Salzen, salire, sale condire, to preserve with salt. Jwn. thinks the latter merely a met. use of the former:—to preserve or prepare meats for keeping at proper times. Over-Un

SEAT, s. v. That on which we set or sit, put or place any thing; in which we reside or dwell; place or position.

SEDULOUS, ad. Keeping closely, -OUSLY. earnestly employed; studiously, -OUSNESS. actively, diligent, industrious; -ITY. taking much pains or labour.

Fr. Séduité; L. Sedulus, -us, from Sedes, (as Assiduus, from Assidue, to sit to;) sitting to, keeping close to, closely employed upon. See ASSIDUOUS.

SEE, s. A seat, sc. of power; of episcopal power, or jurisdiction.

Fr. Siege; It. Sede, -ia; Sp. -e; L. Sedes, a seat. See SIOZE.

SEE, v. To see is,—To take; to receive -ER. sensations or feelings—by the eye; -ING. to keep or hold—before the eye; to look at, to behold, to observe: gen. to perceive, to conceive, to discern, to distinguish, to detect.

Seer,—one who sees; sees into the future, foresees. See SEEK, SEEM, SEIZE.

Go. Sathuan; A.S. Seon; D. Sien; Ger. Sehen; Sw. Se; Dan. Seer. Jun. and Sk. derive from the Gr. Seopon, by the change of θ into o. Wach.—from Aug. ock, the eye, by prefixing the sibilant s, quia verba sensuum derivari solent ab organis. Se in A.S. was the article, equivalent to The, by which it has been supplanted. SEED, s. v. App. gen. to—The origin, -LING. first principle, source, as—the -NESS.* cause; also, to the product, off- -Y.† spring, progeny, race, as—the effect. To seed,—to bear or produce seed.

*Udal. Shak. †Chapman.

D. Seed; Ger. Sat, saat; A.S. Sw & Dan. Sed; which thre derives from Soa, serere. The A.S. Sæd is also the past p. of A.S. v. Saw-an, (saw-ed, saw-ed, sæd), that which is sowed or sown. Un-

SEEK, v. -ER. To look for or after; to search, to inquire, to try or endeavour; to find or discover, to get or gain.

Go. Soc-yan; A.S. Se-an, (i. e. se-ic-an;) D. Soek-an; Ger. Suchen; Sw. Soeka, from the v. To seek, (Sk.) because they who seek any thing, see or look for it. Be- Mis-

SEEL,* v. s. To seel a ship, a nautical term, (Sk.) when a ship leans, yields, gives —to one side; perhaps from Syllan, to give. See To SELL.—*Raleigh. Sandys.

SEEL, s. Seems to be the same word as Sæl, in Sæl-d. See SELDOM. Ray says,—Seel or Seal, time or season: "It is a fair seel for you to come at:" i. e. a fair time or season: spoken ironically to them that come late, (Essex, from A.S. Sæl, time.) See also Moore, Suffolk Words.

SEEL, v. To close, to shut, to hoodwink; to sew up closely.

Fr. Siller les yeux; to close the eyes of the dead, of a hawk: Fr. Seeler, to seel, (qv.) and coms. to fasten together, to close, to shut.

SEELY. See SILLY.

SEEM, v. To seem, is,—To look, to present to the sight; to appear or present the appearance.

-INGLY. It seemeth,—appears to be an elliptical expression; qd. it -LESS. seemeth as it should or ought;

-LY. i. e. to see or look or appear fit;

-LINESS. becoming, convenient, suitable;

-LIHED.* proper; it is good or well looking, it looks well; is good or pleasing or agreeable to see or look at: it is specious; specious or plausible in appearance, at first sight: it appears or looks as if it were really so.—Chaucer. Spenser.

Sk.—from Ger. Stemen, decere, and this from Ger. Schen; D. Sien; because pleasing to the eyes or sight. Mis- Un-

SEE-SAW, s. v. Perhaps Saw-saw, a reduplication of Saw, and intended to express the motion to and fro, backwards and forwards, in the act of sawing.

Fr. Sacune, seine; It. & L. Saguna; Gr. Σαγύνη.

SE-JOIN, v. To separate, to sever.

-JUNCTION. L. Se-jungere, to separate things

-JUNGIBLE. joined.

SEIZE, v. To take, to take hold or possess. -IN. session of; to take or keep hold, -URE. fast hold; to fasten, to fix.

Fr. Saisir; Low L. Saisire, which signifies—vel occupare, manum injicere, invadere: vel aliter possidendum tradere, (Voss. de Vit. lib. II. c. 25.) from Sessione, or the Gr. ἵστασις, sacuum εὑρίλαρε. (See Men. Sk. Du Cange.) It is perhaps merely the v. To choose—A.S. Cese-an, ese-an, to take. Dis- Re- Un-

SEL-COUTH, ad. -LY. Seldom or rarely known; rare, strange, unusual.

"That much people saved of selcough sores."—Piers Ploukman, speaking of Christ's miraculous cures. In A.S. Selcouth, comp. of Seld, seldom, rarely, and cuth, known.

SELDOM, ad. av. —ness. Rare, unusual, uncommon: and the av.—

Rarely, unusually, uncommonly, scarcely.

Sel in A. S. is—well, very well, enough, and Sel-d is—rare, unusual.—Som. A. S. Seld, seldon; D. Sel-den; Ger. -ten; Dan. Sælder; Wach. leads back to A. S. Syllio, settle, mirabilia, dignus: and this may be from the A. S. v. Sell-an, syllan, to sell. (See SILLY, and SERL.) In Chaucer's Clerkes Tale, it is used adjectively—selden time; and Tuke remarks,—that the Dutch have also the ad. Selden, sellen; the Ger. Selten; Dan. Seldsom; Sw. Sällsyna.

SELECT, v. ad. To choose out of; to -ION. take in preference, or because pre--OR. ferred, to others.

It. Sepliere; L. Selegere, select-um, to choose, to take out or apart from others.

SELF, pro. The force of the word seems SELVE. always to be—to confirm or

SELFISH. strengthen the sameness, iden--ISHLY. tity or individuality of some -ISHNESS. person or thing.

Self-ish,—pertaining to self; partial to, subservient to self; the interests or pleasures of self.—Sidney. Ld. Brooke.

Go. Silbo, or silbo; A. S. Sylf, or syfa; D. Self; Ger. Selb; Dan. Sete. B. Jonson calls Self a pronoun signifying reciprocation. Wallis declares it to be a noun substantive, to which the L. has scarcely any substantive that corresponds; the word Persona or Propria persona approaches nearest: thus—my self, thy self, our selves, your selves (ego ipse, &c.) are mea persona, tua persona, nostra persona, &c. Himself, itself, themselves, (he says), are used for his-self, its-self, their-selves; and (by introducing own) his own self, its own self, their own selves, are ipsius propria persona, illorum propria persona. Tyrw. has shown (from Hecles) that Sylf in A. S. was declined like other adjectives, and joined in construction with pronouns personal, and substantives, just as ipse in Latin: and he thinks that a custom was gradually introduced of annexing self to pronouns in the sing. number only, and selves to those in the plural; and this he imagines was one cause of the mistake grammarians have committed in considering self to be a substantive. Self is undoubtedly prefixed to nouns substantive—adjectively; and annexed to pronouns—substantively. Could the original meaning of the word be discovered, the various usages, and their progress, might be accounted for;—it may sometimes be supplied by same; as in Chaucer and North, selve or "self place," same place;—by own, as by "any self industry," in Sidney, any industry of its own.

SELL, s. A seat; a seat on horseback; a saddle.

Fr. Selle; It. & L. Sella, a seat, a saddle.

SELL, v. Verstegan says: "Syle, or Seale, -ER, s. to pay or to give; Siling, paying

SALE, s. or giving. We now use the word -ABLE. Selling for ought that is given or delivered for the value thereof."

It is used where something is given or delivered in exchange for money or security for money; and thus (as Buy also is) distinguished from bartering or exchanging goods for goods, wares for wares. As opposed to Buy,—

To give or deliver, part with or dispose of, for something paid and received as equivalent.

SELV-EDGE, s. From D. it is plain that Selv-edge is a compound word, the latter portion of which is edge. May it not be the self or selve-edge; emph. its own proper edge; the final edge of the piece; that which finishes or confines it?

In D. Self-egge, -end, -hant; ora panni vel telæ; extremitates panni aut lintei,—Kilian; who says, that in Sax. Self, sulf, is extremitas et extremitas; but this does not account for closing the edge. Sk. thinks Selvaeg to be—q. salvage; quia, ac. vestem conservat, roborat, efficitque ut dulus duret. Mr. Thomson conjectures that the D. (where it is also written self-veg) is formed of seel, a cord, and veege, a joining.—Zeel (in A. S. Sæl) is from A. S. v. Sæl-an, D. Sæit-on, ligare, vincire, to bind, to fasten. Zeel or sæl will not give self or self; otherwise selve-edge might be—the fastened edge, the closed edge.

SEND, v. -ER. To throw or cast, to shoot; to cause to go or move; to convey by agency of another; to confer.

It is used with correspondent Eng. prs. as equivalent to the compounds of L. Mittere; to emit or send forth, to immit, to dismiss, to transmit, &c.

D. Seynden, send-en; Ger. -en; A. S. -an; Sw. Sända, jacere, jaculari, emittere, mittere, (facere ut eat,) to cast or throw. In Luke xxi. 1, "They castiden her gifts," is in A. S. Sendan. In Mark xii. 44, "Alle kisten of that thing," is in A. S. Sendon. And in the old Eng. version quoted by Tooke, (Mark xii. 41,) the word is Cast, (to cast money,) and in the three remaining verses it is Sent: "She sent two minuts; this pore widewe sent: all senten:"—Send and Cast being thus equivalent terms.

"In his right hand he held a trembling dart, Whose fellow he before had sent apart."

Sensual,—relating to, acting upon—the senses, or bodily feelings.

A sensual person, or sensualist,—one whose thoughts, feelings, are confined to his bodily feelings or sensations; who is addicted, devoted to their gratification.

Sensuous is used by Milton as equivalent to Senseful, full of sense or feeling (bodily or corporeal); and he converts Sensible into a noun s. "Originally all conceptions proceed from the action of the thing itself, whereof it is the conception: Now when the action is present, the conception it produceth is called, Sense: and the thing by whose action the same is produced, is called the object of the sense."—Hobbs. *Hum. ## SEW this number is so called, is mere matter of conjecture. See Wack. in v. Sieb-en, and Lennep in v. Extra.

SEVER, v. To be or cause to be alone;
-ALITY. to disunite, to disjoin, to dispart,
-ALTY. to divide, to distinguish.
-ALLY. Holinshead. †Bp. Hall.
-ANCE. Old Fr. Severer; It. Severare, severare; from L. Separare, or Fr. Séparer; It. Separare, to separate.
-ALIZE, † v. Dis-Un

SEVERE, ad. Rigid or rigorous; exact,
-LY. austere, coerced, strict, straitened,
-ITY. constrained; distressing; confined to strict rules, to method, or order, within bounds; strict, methodical, concise. See ASSEVER.

Fr. Sevère; It. & Sp. -o; L. Severus, from the Gr. ἱερός, i. e. venerari, and equivalent to severus, venerabilis: such, adds Voss, are they who regulate their lives, severè, (so as to deserve reverence.) Un-

SEW, s. -ER. Sewer,—a sayer or assayer, a taster.

Sew,—the viand tasted; viands of high taste or flavour.

Spel. describes the office of Sewer to be—to taste, and place in order, the dishes at a feast; and he adopts the opinion of Cowel, that the word is derived from Fr. Assoir, disponere, collocare, to put or place in order. Tyrw. says,—Seues are dishes, from the same v. Assoir. Cowel asserts, that he had seen the word written Assour; and in Law L. of Fleta, this officer is called assessor; i. e. ordinator, collocator, disposer. In Leland's Collectanea, we have accounts of the feasts given at the respective inthronizations of Archbpa. Neville and Warham. Among the different officers employed, the sewer stands conspicuous: it appears that he at certain different times was to go to the dresser, and there take say or assay of every dish: the manner of so doing is described, and it appears to have been a very important business, and clearly his (the sewer's) principal duty; namely, to say or assay the meats (not only at the dresser, but also, in presence, at the table,) as it was that of the cup-bearer to taste or assay the drinks. At the feast given by Warham to Henry VIII. and Charles V. on their way through Canterbury from Dover, the Duke of Buckingham, as sewer, (we are told) rode upon a white hobby before the banqueting dishes, and after some ceremonies he rode to the table, when he delivered his hobby, and sewed, kneeling at the table where the emperor was. All this seems at variance with the common etym.

What can sewed here mean? Probably, sayed, assayed or tasted. The Fr. Essayeur is one that tastes, or takes an assay:—essayeur, is to take a taste, make a trial of;—essay, is the taste or essay of a prince's meat or drink, and also the vessel whereof, or piece whereof, it is taken, (see Col.) Sewer then may be from Essayeur, sayer. To sew,—from the v. Essayeur, sayer; and the s. from the Fr. s. app. as we now use God's, or Hadi-god's, to dishes or viands of high taste or flavour.

The Fr. have also their Escuyer trenchant, a carver or squire of the mouth; also, a taster; (for he that carves to a prince, ever tastes of what he carves, before his master touch it.—Col.) And from this Escuyer, our Sewer is by some thought to have sprung; but the carver, or carving equire, has his share in the tasting.

SEW, or Sow, v. To join together, by the
-ER. intervention of string, thread, silk,
-STER. &c.; by needle and thread, silk, &c. or other material, prepared in like manner.

Go. Suifan; A. S. Siwian; Sw. Sy; Dan. Syer. In L. Swere; Gr. Σειν, (κατασειν, for κατασειν, shows that σειν once existed.) Be-

SEW, v. -ER. To sew a pond is,—to flow or cause the waters to flow or issue forth; and cons.—to drain the pond.

Sewers (called Shores)—are courses, canals, through which water, &c. issues, runs off.

See Suz. Fr. Suivre, to follow; issir, to issue, to go or depart out, to flow forth.—Col.

SEX, s. The division or distribution into -UAL. male and female kind; as distinguished into male or female.

Sexual, is a common, though modern word. Fr. Sex-e; Sp. -o; It. Sexuo; L. Sexus, or secur, from the old supine Sexum, for Seatum, because (per securum) animal is cut (seatur) or divided into male and female.—Voss. Un-

SEXAGENARY, ad. -GESIMAL. Sixty, six tens, or threescore.

Sexagesimal, (L. Sexagesimus),—the sixtieth.

Fr. Sexagén-aire; Sp. -ario; It. Sexantino.

SEX-ANGULAR, ad. -LY. Having six angles, (sex angulos.)

SEX-ENNIAL, ad. At every sixth year, or lasting six years. (Sex annos.)

SEXTANT, s. -TILE. A sextant is an astronomical instrument measuring 60 deg. or the 6th part of 360, the circle.

Sextile, in Astrology, at the same 6th distant; or two signs, 30 deg. each.

Fr. Sext-ant, -ile; Sp. -il; It. Sest-ante, -ile; L. Sext-ans, -ilis, from Sex, six. We have the words, but not their particular usage, from the L.

SEXTON, s. Spel. says he was called by -RY. our ancestors—Segerstane; and -SHIP. that he was rerum sacrarum custos, the guardian or keeper of sacred things:—His principal duty is to prepare graves.

Fr. Sacrist-ain; Sp. -an; It. Sagrestano; Low L. Sacristarius; A sacro loco quem custodit; from the sacred place of which he has the care.

SEXTUPLE, ad. Six times, six-fold. Sub-

SHABBY, ad. To shab is in vulgar use, -ILY. and seems to mean,—to shove, (shuv, -INESS. shub, shab?) to shab or shove off, put off, evade—meanly, dirtily. Lye is inclined to think Shabby (e.g. a fellow, homo pannis obsitus, a man clothed in rags) is formed from Scabby.

SHACK,* s. App. gen. to—Feed among stubble.—Homilies. Tusser.

Perhaps Shake. The grain shaken from the ripe ear, and which hogs were turned out to find and feed upon.

SHACKLE, v. To fetter, to manacle, to -ES, s. chain; to impede, embarrass or -LOCK.* restrain—free action or motion.

**W. Browne*.

A. S. Seacul; D. Schackel; Jun. thinks may be from A. S. Seac-an, to shake, because a prisoner in shackles cannot move without shaking them. Sk.—from v. Shaecklen, to involve, to in-fold; and this from Shacken, rapere, because robbers deserve a chain of the kind called shackles. Un-

SHAD, s. Gesner says, the fish called by Pliny (ix. 43) Glanis, is the Ger. Schad; so named from Shade, (see SCATHE,) & damno quod infert.

SHADE, s. v. Cons.—Obscureness, darkness; cloudiness, gloominess; -FUL.* coolness, shelter; a retired or -OW, s. v. sheltered place; that which shelters, obscures.

-Y. Shade, or Shadow,—the representation of form or figure, separating or obstructing light.

To shadow,—to darken, obscure, protect, cover; also, to represent obscurely, darkly, imperfectly; to sketch, delineate or describe imperfectly, in an unfinished style.

**Drayton*. †Hooker.

D. Schad-e, -uwe, -wesen; Ger. Schatten. In Sw. Skugga, skugga; A. S. Scade, scadewan; Go. Scadus, which Jun. thinks has a manifest affinity with the Gr. Σκία, umbra. Tooke says, they are the past tense and pt. of A. S. Scad-an, Go. Skaid-an, (D. Scheyd-en, Ger. Schelden.) separate, segregare, dividere, and mean (something, anything) secluded, retired; or something by which we are separated from the weather, sun, &c. See SHED. Be-Dis-In-Over-Un-

SHAFT, s. -MENT. App. to—Any missile weapon; an arrow, (sc. cast, thrown, shot from a bow;) to that by which a cart or other carriage is shoved or forced along.

Shaft of a mine,—the opening shoved or shovelled into it.

Shaft of a pillar,—perhaps from the shape resembling the round arrow or missile weapon.

Som. in v. "Scaefes-byrg, Shaftes-bury,—so called happily (saith Mr. Camden) from the churches spire-steeple, such as the Saxons called shafts. Rather (I take it) from the fashion of the hill, being round and smooth, shaft-like, and giving name to the place before any church there erected."

Dan. Skafi; Ger. Schaft, sagitta, et omne telum missile; A. S. Scaft, scraft, from Ger. Schaffin, A. S. Scraf-an, scraf-an, scraf-an, to shove; in D. Schuiwen. The A. S. Scraf-an, be-scraf-an, Som. interprets,—to thrust, cast, hurt, throw or shove. And Tooke concurs, that Shaft means, that which is shov'd.

SHAG, ad. s. v. Bushy, rough, rugged; -G-ED. uncombed, unsmoothed, unpo-

-EDNESS. lished.

-Y. Pope uses the v. almost literally; -INESS. i. e. shaken, shattered, bruised: "So the rough rock had shagg'd Ulysses hands."

A. S. Shacca, coma, a bush of hair; also the boughs, branches, and leaves of trees or berris. also flames like hairs. Hereof our Shagg for cloth of an high nap: as also our Shock, for a shaggy, or shagged dogg.—Som. Shock is shoke, the past p. of Shake, and written by Harrison Shacked, shack'd. Shag, may be Shaked, shak'd, shog, meaning any thing shaked—in the bushy, rough, confused state of hair, leaves, shaked.

SHAGREEN, s. A leather made of the skin of the wild ass; also of some fishes; from the Persian Sághri, or sághir, denoting the rump of a quadruped, and the leather prepared from the skin.—Ency. Met.
Fr. Chagrin; It. Zigrino.

SHAKE, v. s. To move or cause any -ER. thing to move, to and from, (quickly,) -ING. backwards and forwards; to cause it to quake or tremble, or totter; to agitate or act upon with sudden and repeated motion; to move from; and cons. to weaken or disturb the steadiness or steadfastness, the firmness or fixedness.

Shakes, s. in Byron, ("It can be no great shakes,") is a vulgarism, which may be traced to the custom of shaking hands; the shake being estimated according to the value set upon the person giving it, and hence app. to the person.

D. Shocken; Ger. Schocken; Sw. Shaka; Fr. Chocquer; A. S. Seac-an, quater, concutere, agitare. See SHAQ, SHOCK. Over- Un-

SHALDER, v. Perhaps to scale or shale from the contiguous mass, and so fall towards each other.—Holinshed.

SHALE, s. i. e. Shell, (qv. and SCALE.)

SHALL, v. SHOULD. A. S. Seal. Shall, (says Jun.) debere, to owe. "By the faith I shall to God," (Chaucer,) per fidem, quam debeo Deo. A. S. Scyl-an; Ger. Scol-en, sollen; Sw. Skola, debere; D. Schuld, debitum; schuldigh, debens. In A. S. it is also written Seal-an. Seal, (says Lye,) joined to an infinitive, has the force of the future; as, Hwæt seal ic singan? What shall I sing, or What shall or owe I to sing? Thu secalst hatan, Thou shalt call, or Thou shalt or owest to call; Nu secal he sylf faran, Now he himself shall go, or Now he himself shall or owes to go (ought to go). Wach. says that the Ger. Sollen, debere, embraces within itself not only those duties which we owe to ourselves and others, but also pecuniary debts, and even those penalties which we owe to the laws, and, in fine, all those future circumstances (futuros casus) which ought to be, or become, or be done (feri). And he adds, that no one has discovered the origin of the word. Lye thinks the application to future time is to be deduced from the meaning owe, since that which any one owes to do, is still to be done; is still a duty, a debt to be performed. But this does not reach the difficulty felt by Wach. Whence Scyl-an, scolen, de-bere, to owe? It is at least worth a conjecture. The A. S. Scyl-an, in D. Scheel-en, Ger. Scheelen, (see SKILL), means, to divide, to distinguish; met. to discern, to see distinctly, the separate and distinct qualities of things; to see, to view or survey, to perceive, what is; to see, to ken, to know; and hence its application to right and duty. In Chaucer, the duty "I shall to God," is,

I know to be God's, I acknowledge to God. The distinction between Shall and Will, in their application to future time, is founded upon their meaning: Shall, upon fore-sight, fore-knowledge, of what is to do or be done; Will, upon the wish or desire, the willingness to do what is to do or to be done; though in usage now transferred to instances where no wish or willingness can be supposed.

Should, or Shulde, is contracted from Shulded; and Would, or Wolde, from Wolled.

SHALLOP, s. The Fr. Coquille, a shell, is also a boat, or any open vessel fashioned like a bason or scallop shell.—Cot.

Fr. Chaloupe; which Duchat derives from Ger. Schale. See SCALLOP and SCULL.

SHALLOW, ad. s. v. Shallow seems -LY. consequential, and to be only applicative. cable to the shoals or shelves, or separate and distinct ridges, banks, or masses, rising from the main bed near to the surface. Met.—A shallow fellow, is—one whose depth or bottom is soon fathomed, reached, found; superficial; opposed to profound, or deep; shortsighted, simple.

Shallow, Shelve or Shelf, and Shoal, seem to be the same word differently written. Shoals, (brevibus vadis,) in Dryden's Virgil, is, in G. Douglas, Skellies and undecips, (i. e. undeepe.) The glossarist says,—that Skellies are fine blue slates, (see SLATE, anciently written Sclate and Scale;) and he thinks the word may be from A. S. Secale, whence the Eng. Scale and Shell, and perhaps, he adds, the Eng. Shelf, Shelves, and Shallow. To shelve, (Scotch, see Jamieson), is—to separate in lamina. Shelvey rocks,—those which appear in a variety of lamina; also, those which form the bed of a shallow river.

SHALM, or SHAWM, s. A musical pipe. Fr. Chalem-in-elle. A little pipe made of a reed, or of a wheaten or oaten straw. Men. says —Chalumeau, from Calamellus, dim. of Calamus, a straw, a reed, a pipe. Gower writes Shaimels.

SHAM, ad. s. v. To play false, to deceive, to make sport of.

Jun. and Sk. do not notice this word. Lye derives it from the Welsh Skemmi, and explains it —fallere, decipere, ludificare.

SHAMBLES, s. A bench, a form, a footstool.

A. S. Scamol. Hence our modern word Shambles, used as for the forms, stalls, or benches whereon butchers expose their meat.—Som. In Sc. Skemyll.

SHAMBLING, ad. s. † See SCAMBLE.

**Smith.* †Dryden.

SHAME, s. v. To shame, lit. may mean—
-ER. To blush, to redden; to blush
-ING. at; to feel disgraced by; to
-FACED. cause the feeling or sensation
-FACEDNESS. of shame. "Shame causeth
-FUL. blushing, and casting down
-FULLY. of the eyes. Blushing is the -FULNESS. resort of bloud to the face;
-LESS. which in the passion of shame,
-LESS-LY. is the part that laboureth
-NESS. most."—Bacon. "For shame, which is an uneasiness of the mind upon the thought of having done something which is indecent, or will lessen the valued esteem which others have for us, has not always blushing accompanying it."—Locke.

"The truth is shameless," (Gower); i. e. free from shame; has no cause for shame. A shameless man we now call—one who has no shame or sense of shame.

Shameful,—full of shame or cause of shame; indecent or unbecoming; disgraceful, degrading, ignominious, infamous.

Go. Skama mic, pudet me, erubescio; A. S. Scam-an, scamian; D. & Ger. Schamen; Sw. Skamm, skamma; Dan. Skam, skammer. What we now write Shame-faced, is in A. S. Scam-fast, scam-fæstnesse, which Som. interprets—shamefast, shamefastnesse; as, stedfast, stedfastnesse. It is also found so written in old authors; the source of the change is obviously from the effect of shame in many cases upon the face. Gower says, "She somdele redde became for shame." The L. Vulgate, "Qui enim erubuerit me et meos sermones, hunc filius hominis erubescet," is in Wiclif, "For whoso schameth me and my wordis: mannes sone schal schame him whanne," &c. To shame, (Wiclif), is, in the Bible 1551, and our present version, to be ashamed. A. Un-

SHANK, s. App. to—The leg, from knee to ankle; the leg; the support, as the leg to the body; the leg or arm, the long limb or member.

A. S. Scanca, scanca; Ger. Schink; D. Schenkel; Sw. & Dan. Skank, the shank or leg; Earm scanca, the arm-bone.—Som. See SHIN.

SHANTY,<sup>a</sup> ad. i. e. Jaunty.—Warton.

SHAPE, s. To form or frame, to make, -LESS. to bring, or reduce, to a form or -LY. figure, an image or representation; to fashion; to prepare, to adapt; to make suitable, or becoming or proportioned to.

D. Schap-en, shop-en; Ger. Schaffen; Sw. Skapa; A. S. Scopþian, scippan, scypþan: to form, to form, or frame. See SHIP, SHOP. For Mis-Trans-Un-

SHARD, s. -ED. Any thing separated or divided; a part or partition, a fragment or division; a scale, or shell, (qqv.)

Sharded,—covered with, incased, inclosed in, protected by shards, or scales, or shells.

"Shard-borne beetle" is—the beetle borne along the air by its shards or scaly wings.—Steevens.

Shard, shar'd, shard. See SHEAR.

SHARE, v. s. To cut, to slip, to separate, -ER. to divide; to part, to portion, to -ING. partake.

Share, or Shearer,—that which cuts or divides, as the plough-share or shearer; (contracted, share thinks, to avoid the repetition of er, cr.)

Share-bone,—where the body is separated or divided.

To share, or shear, (qv.) is from A. S. Scear-an, scyr-an, scyr-tan, to cut. Un-

SHARK, s. v. -ER. App. to the fish, from its voracity; and to the person, from his similar qualities—seizing and devouring eagerly, greedily.

Steevens says,—I believe, To shark up, means to pick up without distinction, as the shark-fish collects his prey. To shark, gen. is—

To prey upon another, by fraud or rapine; to cheat, to trick, to rob, to plunder.

Sk. says,—perhaps from the A. S. Scear-an, to shear, to cut; i. e. Scear-ig-an, and (g into c;) Scear or Shear-ic-an, shearc, or shark.

SHARP, ad. s. v. Sharp, ad.—Cutting -EN, v. or piercing, sc. quickly, easily; -ER. having an edge or point, that will -LY. cut or pierce, quickly, easily. Met.—-NESS. Acute, quick—of apprehension or invention; piercing, penetrating, keen, eager; pungent or poignant, painful; causing or inflicting pain: biting, bitter, acrid: also, biting, sour, acid, tart.

A sharper, (met.)—one who practises sharpness, sc. in cheating, defrauding, gaining any advantages; and To sharp, met. to act the sharper.—Cowper.

D. Scherp, scharp, scherven; Ger. Scharf, scharfen; Sw. Scharpa; Dan. Skarp, skærpe; A. S. Scearp-an, scyrpan, scindere, scare, acutere, acuminare; to cut, to bring to an edge or point that will cut or pierce, sc. quickly, easily, keenly. Sk. refers to A. S. Scyr-an, to shear or share.

SHATTER, v. s. -Y. i. e. To scatter, (qv.) to divide, or cause to divide or separate.

To separate, to disperse, to dissipate; to sever (by breaking) into parts or pieces.

Shatter-brained,—one whose brains or thoughts are dispersed, not collected. Un-

SHAVE, v. To cut, sc. from the surface, -LING. superficially, in thin portions; to -ER, z. cut closely, smoothly; to plain, to -ING. move or keep in motion, close to the surface.

Shaveling,—a shaven priest or other person.

D. Shave, shauen; Ger. Schaben; Sw. Skaf-va; A. S. Scaf-an, scaf-an, tondere, radere, polire: to shave, to polish, to make smooth or fine.—Som. Un-

SHAW,<sup>a</sup> s. A shade, a shady place, natural or artificial.—Chaucer. Gower.

A. S. Scua, a shadow; D. Schawe.

SHAWL, s. App. to—A mantle or tunic, (spread, sc. over the shoulders;) also, a carpet, spread, sc. on the floor. Pers. & Hind. Shâi; Sans. Shâla.

SHAWLM. See SHALM.

SHE, pro. Grammatically termed,—A personal pronoun of the third person and feminine gender.

Heo, in R. Gloucester, ("Sire," quod heo, "bi hye Godes,") is Cordelia.

D. Su; Ger. Sie; A. S. Shoo, heo; Go. Sî, illa, ipsa. Versteegan, (c. 7.) says, "Heo, shoo—in some places of England, they yet say heo or hee, instead of she." See Hæ, and Ir.

SHEAF, s. Any number or quantity -Y. shoo'd together, pushed, put together.

SHEAVED. ther: app. to stalks of corn, reeds, arrows, put together, collected.

D. Schoof, schoove; A. S. Scsaf, the past p. Scsaf, or Scsaf-od, from Scuf-tan, to shove; that which is shoo'd together.

SHEAR, v. ad. s. or SKEER, v. (and also

-ER. SHORE, by Tindale.) To cut, to divide, to separate or sever.

-LY. Shear, Sheer, or (as Beau. & F.

SHEARD, or write it) Shear, means—separated or severed.

"Sheer ignorance,—ignorance separated from any the smallest mixture of information.

"Shot sheer away,—so separated as to leave not the smallest particle behind."—Tooke.

"Fountain's here," (in Spenser,)—separated from all intermixture or pollution; unmingled, and, cons.—pure.

To shear or sheer off,—to part or separate from; move off or away.

Shearh, s. in the singular, is not now usual. D. Scheeren; Ger. Scheren, scherem; A. S. Scear-an, scir-an, to cut. See SCAN, SCORE, SHARE, SHORE, SHORT, SHOWEN, SHARD, SHIRT, SKIET.

SHEATH, v. s. Sheath,—that which

-ING. shades, secludes; and cons. covers,

-LESS.† To sheath,—to inclose, to incase, to cover, to protect.

* Brown. † Eusden.

D. Scheyde, scheede; Ger. Scheide; Dan. Skeede; A. S. Sceathe, sceathe; from D. Scheyden; Ger. Scheiden; A. S. Scead-ian; to separate,—non quia à gladio facile separatur, sed quia gladium condit et separare facit.—Wack. And Tooke pronounces Sheathe to be the third person of Scead-an, to to separate, to seclude. Dis-In-Mis-Un-

SHED, v. s. To disperse, to throw; to

-D-ER. cast dispersedly; gen.—to spill, -ING. to drop.

A shed,—a place for seclusion, retirement, retreat.

"No shed,—no difference between things; to shed, (Lancashire,)—to distinguish, from A. S. Scead-an, to distinguish, disjoin, divide or sever."—Ray.

-LING.‡ tily, paltrily.

* Dyer. † Sir P. Sidney. ‡ W. Browne.

A. S. Sceap, sceop; D. Schaep; Ger. Schaf. The etymologists resort to Gr. Xaiv-ai, tegere, because it is itself covered with much wool, and also covers us with its wool; but the Gr. has no name for this animal from this v.; and if our northern ancestors wished to call it from the qualities above ascribed, they had words of their own for the purpose. Gr. Προβατον, pecus, is said to be so called, κατα το προβα-ειν τη βοει, because driven or forced to go before by the shepherd. Eng. Sheep, Ger. Schaf, may have a similar origin. Ger. Schaff-en, also written Shieten, is—agere, pellere, (A. S. Scof-an, scof-an, to shove,) to drive. Schaf, sceap, or sceop, sheep, may have been merely a drows, as sheep drivers on the way (sc. to market) are still called: they were the earliest objects of care to mankind, and for pasture were driven from place to place in numbers, by their owners; and from this circumstance, perhaps, their names.

SHEET, s. v. The sheet of a bed,—linen

-ING. or other substance thrown over a

-Y. bed. A sheet of paper,—as much as is thrown off at once. Sheet of lightning, —lightning thrown out, spread out. Sheet

Scandula pro Scandula, from Scindere, to split.

SHINGLES, s. Holland (in a marginal note on Plinie, b. xxx. c. 13), calls the Gr.
Erys, (a disease so named—quia serpit), the shingles; and Sk. says it is a kind of erysipelas, which, if it surrounds the whole body, causes death; and derives from the L. Cingulum, a girdle. This disease was also called Zona.

SHIP, term. D. Schap, schape, from A. S.
Scipp-an, to shape, to form or fashion, or
wrote Land-scape), is Land-shape, the form

SHOP, s. -PING. Something shope or shopen, (in contradistinction from a stall.)

for the purpose of containing merchandise for sale, protected from the weather. And see SHIP.

To go shopping,—to go to different shops;—cheapening, bargaining, buying.

Shop-lifter:—to lift is to take up, to thief: a shop-lifter, one who thieves from shops (usually pretending to be a customer).

Fr. Eschoppé, échoppé. Jun.—from shape, formare, because in it artists give form or shape, (formam) to their commodities. Tooke thinks Shop (Shape, past p. of Shape, qv.) to be—alliquid formatum.

SHORE, s. v. "Shore, (Tooke,) as the -LESS. sea-shore, shore of a river, is the -Y.* place where the continuity of the land is interrupted, or separated by the sea or the river"—the bound, the limit.

Shore, the v. (formed upon the s.) is—to set, to place, to bring to, to go to the shore or to the land; to land, to set firmly, as on land. "And set him where his heart would haue bene shor'd."—Chapman.

**Burnet*.

A. S. Scora; D. Schorre, schoore, pars rupta aut scissa; also Schorre, ripa, (Killan; who considers them to be different words.) Shore is the past p. of the v. To shear, (qv.) A-

SHORE, s. v. -ER. The s.—A piece of wood, separated, divided from the main bulk or trunk, and used as a prop or support; and hence To shore, cons.—to prop, to support.

D. Schore, fulemen; schoren, shooren, sufuldre, to prop up, to support. P. Plouhman says,—“It had three shorers to shove it up three shides, of one length.” (i. e. three sections, deals, cut or divided timber, see SHRAK and SHRDS;) whence it may be inferred that Shore is—as above.

SHORT, ad. av. v. To short, or shorten, -EN, v. is—To cut off, to lop off, to curtail, (sc. part.) and, cons. to lessen, to diminish, to abridge, or -NESS. abbreviate, be or cause to be brief; to take from the dimensions or extent; to reduce, to contract, to confine;—to diminish or reduce the distance, the duration or continuance; to bring near; to approximate, to take from the efficiency; to fail or cause to fail; to be or become deficient or imperfect, inadequate or unequal to.

D. Schort-s, -en; Ger. -en, deficere. A. S. Scort, in Ger. Kurtz, curt, (qv.) Wach. traces both Curt and Short through the D. Scheuten, rumpere, to break, to the Ger. Scheren, to shear, (qv.) to divide. Shored, or Shorn, is the past p. of Shear, (A. S. Scegran.) “Shored, shor'd, short, means—cut off, and is opposed to long, which means—extended.”—Tooke To short (the v.) is formed upon the past p. :—we now use Shorten. Fore-

SHOVE, v. s. To push, to thrust; to press -ING. against.

-EL, s. v. Shovel, (dim. of Shove, i. e. shoovel,) that which shoves or pushes.

SHOWER, s. v. (Clouds) “broken, divided, separated;” and, cons. fall -Y. ing in drops; met.—any thing falling, like rain, or hail, or snow, from the clouds.

A. S. Scar, scyr; D. Scheure; Ger. Schur; Sw. Saur. Jun. Sk. and Wach. agree, that a shower consists of drops of water broken from the clouds; Tooke,—the past p. of Scyr-an, to shour, (qv.)

SHRAG, s. “The ends of sticks—of the birchen twigs in a broom, or of whins or furze.” “Yar brum ow! ta ha’ fine shrags.” This was said to a man about to dress recently thrashed barley for market. The clipping of live fences.”—Moor, Suffolk Words. It is probably Scrag: any thing rough, sharp, craggy, prickly.

SHREAD, s. v. SHREDDING. A cut, or piece cut, separated or severed, broken or torn; a section or segment, a fragment.

A. S. Sceanda, scread-an. Sk. suggests from To shear. It is Shered, shred.—Tooke.

SHREW, or SCHREW, s. ad. v. A Shrew:—SHREWD. "One who vexes or molests;"

-LY. —a vexatious, mischievous,

-NESS. vicious, evil, person; and (ac-

SHREW-ISH. cording to modern usage)—a

-ISH-LY. woman who vexes, or molests,

-NESS. annoys, aggrieves—with her tongue or temper.

Shrewed, or Shrewed,—vexed, troubled, provoked, and, cons., angry, ill-tempered; bitter or biting, cutting; and hence, keen, cunning, penetrating, sagacious.

Tyrw. explains the v. in Chaucer,—To curse, i. e. to imprecate upon us—trouble, vexation, sorrow, (qv.) "Nay then, quod she, I shrewe us bothe two." . . . "Yet was he to me the moste shrew." . . . "A labbing shrewe is she."—Chaucer.

Wach. and Sk. agree that a Shrew is—mulier clamosa, from Ger. Schreien, to cry out; Sk. adds—or rather from Beschreyen, to defame, to calumniate. Schreud, the ad. he derives either from Ger. Beschreyen, to fascinate, qd. bewitched; or from L. Crudus, qd. crudelis. A shrew was male as well as female; and in Chaucer's translation from Boethius, Pessim!, Improb!, are interpreted shrews. Tookes (who evidently considers A. S. Syr-wian, suri-gan, sorghian, to be the same word diff. written and app.) thinks Syrwud, syrewed, the past p. of Syrwan, syrewan, to vex, to molest, to cause mischief to, is our modern Shrewed or Shrew; and that Syrwe, syrewe, is our modern Shrewe or Shrew, and means—as above explained. See SOKE. Be-

SHRIEK, v. s. App. to the cry, and the

-ER. feeling of fear or terror it causes.

-ING. See SCREAM.

SHRIGHT. Either (Sk.) from Dan. Skriger, to cry; or from D. Schrecken, to tremble, schriek, tremour; or from Ger. Schreyen, to cry, schrecken, to terrify, schreck, terror; all of them (he adds) formed from the sound: they (and Sw. Skreks) appear all the same word.

SHRIEVE. See SHERIFF.

SHRIFT, s. By usage To Shrive—"To

SHRIVE, v. hear confessions and enjoin

-ER. penance." A necessary portion

-ING. of the duty of those who had

SHROV-ING. the cure of souls.

-TIDE. Shrove-tide,—the tide or time when people are shrived or shriven.

Shrift, is—Shried, shri'd, shrift; Dan. Skrift-e, -er; Sw. -a, skrift; which (Thre thinks) they received from the early Eng. preachers of the gospel. The word is common in the A. S. ecclesiastical writing.—Scrif-an, to hear confessions (says Som.) and enjoin penance. Scrift-boe, a confessional. Thre adopts the derivation from L. Scris-ere, to write, because the penance required was given in writing; Sk. also from Scris-ere, because the names of those confessing were written down. Neither of these reasons have introduced the word into the It. or Fr. Lye quotes three instances from A. S. version of Boethius, where L. Curare is rendered scrif-an, (apparently a cognate of Scroop-an); and to shrive trees, (Som. tells us.) is to prune them; putare, amputare, resecare. Un-

SHRILL, ad. v. App. to a sound that is

-LY. Harsh,—grating; piercing harshly

-NESS. upon the ear.

Shrill, is—Shriekel, (dim. of Shriek), or Shrigle, shrill, anciently written also Shriele. G. Douglas renders vociferans "with shkritis and with shrekis."

SHRIMP, s. -ED. App. met. to—Any thing dim.; contracted in its growth.

Scrimp, as ad. and v. are common words in Scottish writers. See Jamieson.

In A. S. Sarim-m-an, is arescere, to dry, to wither, and, cons., to contract. Sk. doubts whether the fish, be so called from Ger. Schrump, a wrinkle, from the wrinkles on the back. Jun. thinks—from Ger. Krimpen, to crimp or cramp, to draw together, because when boiled it draws into a gibbous shape, &c. its lower half under its upper.

SHRINE, s. v. We apply the word to—That which contains or holds, in which is placed or deposited, any thing consecrated, sacred, holy, adored, loved.

D. Schryns; Ger. Schrein; Sw. Skryna; Fr. Sacrin-e; Sp. -o; It. Scrigno; L. Scrinium, a basket or chest in which books, writings, or other secret things were deposited. En- in-

SHRINK, v. s. To wither; to diminish,

A. S. Scrud, vestitus, clothed, from scrydan, vestire, to clothe.—Sk. This past p. was formerly a general term for any kind of covering, or clothing.—Tooke. En- Un-

SHRUB, s. Bushy trees of low growth

-B-ED. are called shrubs, and the word

-Y. may have been orig. app. to the

-ERT. bushes which sprung up in grounds where the trees had been scrubbed (or shrubbed) up. A. S. Scrobbe, scrybe. Un-

SHRUB, s. A spirituous liquor, with a mixture of acid, sweetened.

By an easy corruption of g to h, Syrop becomes Shrop, shrup, shrub.—Tooke. But see STAV.

SHRUG, v. s. -G-ING. App. to—A motion or action of the shoulders, by drawing or raising them towards the ears, (in expression of different feelings.)

Sk.—from Schreck, timor; Wach.—from the same source as Shriek, (qv.) which is also anciently written Shright, very nearly approaching to Holland's Shrigged, by which he renders L. Constricta.

SHUDDER, v. s. To quake, to shake, to tremble, (with fear, horror.)

D. Schudd-en, -eren; Ger. Schütt-en, -ern, quare, tremere. Plainly enough (Sk.) from It. Scuolere, L. Excultare, to shake off. Wach.—from Quatere.

SHUFFLE, v. s. To shove, or push, (sc. -ER. the feet,) to move at low, short steps; to move at short distances; -INGLY. to move about, to and fro, disorderly, confusedly, irregularly; to move from, push out of the direct course, to evade; to move or push together, irregularly, hastily, (sc. to escape notice or detection; and hence)—fraudulently. The dim. of Shove. A. S. Scuf-ian, to shove, to push. See SCUFFLE.

SHUN, v. -LESS. To fly from, move out of the way, avoid; to evade.—Shak. A. S. Scun-ian, ascunian, onscunian, to fly, fly from or avoid. See ASKAUNT, ESCHEW. Un-

SHUT, v. s. To cast or throw to, sc. the -T-ING. door; to throw it close, to close -ER. it; to close in, to inclose, to include; to exclude, to close against; to close, to conclude.

To get shut of any thing,—to get it thrown or cast off or away, clear away; to get clear of, rid, or free.

Very variously written by our old authors:—"Jesus cam while the ghatia weren schit."—Wiclif. "The gailer shette the dores of the toure."—Chaucer. "My windowes weren shitt echone."—Id. "Sir Thomas More was shitt vp so close in prison."—Sir T. More, Workes.

Sæpe enim spiritus in S ablit. Perhaps from A. S. Sæg-an, to singe, (qv.) As-Con-De-En-Re-Sub-Un-sign. In-Un-significant. Ob-signate. Pre-signify.*

SIGNIOR. See SENIOR.

SIKER. See SECURE.

SILE,* v. s. SILT,† To sile is,—to strain, to purify, (Sw. Syla.)

A sile is—a sieve or strainer.

Silt may be—that which is strained or left by straining; the soil, the sediment.

**Still common in northern counties.*

†Brown. Hale.

Sw. Sylla, lutum, (Ihre); perhaps from A. S. Syl-ian, to soil.

SILENT, ad. Silence consists in—Ab--ENCE, s. v. sence of any sound; and is —ENCING. used as equivalent to stillness, —ENTLY. secrecy, cessation, discontinu-—ENTIARY. ance of speech, or sound, or noise; oblivion, muteness, taciturnity.

Silentiary,—one who observes, preserves silence.

Fr. Sil-ence; It. -dre, -ente, -ento; Sp. -encio; Silens, p. p. of Silere, which, with the Gr. Σιγαν, the etymologists consider to be formed from the sound: the note of silence, both with Greeks and Latins, they remark, was st. They distinguish Silere, to discontinue speaking, from Tacere, to abstain from speaking. See Voss.

SILICIOUS,* ad. Made of cilicium, i. e. goat's hair; a kind of clothing first used in Cilicia.—**Brown*.

À Soribus, from the Seres, who (Pliny) were "famous for the fine silks that their woods did yield;" but it is supposed that the people took their name from the worm (Ser) which produces the silk.—See Ency. Met.

SILL, s. The base or foundation. A door-sill, a window-sill,—upon which the side posts or pillars rest.

A. S. Syl; basis, columna. Heracles syla, Hercules' pillars.—Som. D. Syle; Sw. Sylla; Ger. Saul, which Sk. derives from L. Solum. Lye thinks it more probably from Go. Sulfan, furdare, to found or lay a foundation. See GAOUNDSELL.

SILLABUB, s. A mixture of wine, beer or cider, with milk, sugar, spices, &c.

Sk. says, is in Lancashire called Sillibauck; and Th. H. derives from D. Sulle, sille, canals, and Bupch, venter, and supposes the thing to be so called from the form and size of the vessel out of which it was usually drunk; but it is not likely that a name should be comp. of two Dutch words for that which was of home manufacture.

SILLY, ad. Sely, or Silly,—simple, harmless; less; i. e. good, unsuspecting or -INESS. unsuspecting, guileless, harmless, simple; and further, foolish.

A great selly, is—a great fooly.—Ritson. "She sight sely sore," (if Ellis and Jamieson are right,) is wonderfully sore; and is a consequential usage from Sellie, bonus, dignus, moratus, mirabilis.

Sk. thinks Silly, (stultus, evanescens) written by Chaucer Sely, is from Ger. Selig, beatus, sanctus, plus; holy men being for the most part evanescens, i. e. simple; because, as the common lexicons say, they judge of others from themselves; they themselves being evanescens, men of good morals, pure minds. The Ger. Selig, is A. S. Selig, sellie, ge-selig; and it may be that these are but consequential usages of A. S. Selig, datus, donatus, condonatus, præditus; beatus, felix, bonus, from the s. Sell-an, to give; given or endowed with gifts; blessed, happy, good. It has already appeared that our own word Happy, from Hap, is by usage restricted to good hap, and that Fortunate and Prosperous owe their present restricted application to usage also. In Chaucer, Seliness, Mr. Tyrw. interprets happiness, that is, the possession of much given, many gifts, many blessings. (See UNSELY.) See Wack., Ihre, Ruddiman's Gloss. to G. Douglas, and Jamieson. Un-

SILLY-HOW, s. In Sw. Seger-hufva, Hufva, is in Eng. Howe, (qv.) a hood; and Silly, A. S. Selig, happy, prosperous. "In Scotland the women call a Haly or Sily-how, (i. e. holy or fortunate cap or hood), a film or membrane stretched over the heads of children new born."—Ruddiman, Gloss to G. Douglas in v. How. And see Dr. Jamieson.

SILT. See SILE.

SILVAN, or SYLVAN, ad. Of or pertaining to, consisting of, woods or groves; woody.

It. Silvano; L. Sylvanus, sylva; Gr. ὕλη, wood.

SILVER, s. v. Silver,—a metal. The ad. -LY. met.—Having the whiteness, the -LING. pallid whiteness of the colour of silver; white, whitish; having the -LESS. softness, gentleness of sound, which -EN.* that metal has; soft, gentle, dulcet. —**Wicklif*.

Go. Siluba; A. S. Scofser, sulfer; D. Sil-ver; Ger. -ber; Sw. fleur; Dan. Silva. Jun. derives from Gr. ἄργεον, to shine. Wack. (because according to Tacitus, silver was either unknown or disregarded by the ancient Germans,) also resorts to a Gr. origin, and prefers Gr. ἄλφος, white, (s prefixed,) taking its name (as aurum, gold, also does) from its colour. Sk. suggests, —Sol, bone, multum, and -fer, to fare; to fare well, to prosper; because much or plenty of this metal, efficit beatus. Not one of these is satisfactory. Be-

SIMULTANEOUS, ad. -LY. Being, or acting at the same time, in unison.

The Bar. L. Simultaneus, is Simulatus. (See SIMULATE.) Our own word and the Mod. Fr. Simultane, are from L. Simul.

SIMULTY, s. App. to—The feeling of envy or hate, that arises between those who have similar pursuits, or objects of rivalry.

*B. Johnson.

Fr. Simulté; L. Simultas, from Simultas, or Simultitas.

SIN, s. v. To go or do wrong; to act in -FUL. disobedience, in opposition—to -FULLY. the laws of God; to violate -FULNESS. them, to offend against them, -LESS. to neglect or disregard them. -LESSNESS. It is usually app. to offences -NER, s. v. against the laws of religion or morality, as distinguished from those of the state.

To sinner, (Pope,)—to act the sinner. See SAINT.

"All crimes are indeed sins, but not all sins crimes. A sin may be in the thought or secret purpose of a man, of which neither a judge, nor a witness, nor any man can take notice; but a crime is such a sin as consists in an action against the law, of which action he can be accused, and tried by a judge, and be convicted or cleared by witnesses. Farther, that which is no sin in itself, but indifferent, may be made sin by a positive law."—Hobbs.

To sin seems to signify,—to go or do wrong, (qv.) to err, to go astray; and may be allied to A.S. v. Syndrian, to go apart or asunder. Un-

SINCE, pr. co. av. Tooke has written upon SEN, pr. these words in his best manner. STH. "Since is a very corrupt abbreviation. -ENCE. ation, confounding together different words and different combinations of words; and is therefore in Mod. Eng. made (like But) to serve purposes which no one word in any other language can answer; because the same accidental corruptions, arising from similarity of sound, have not happened in the correspondent words of any other language.

"Where we now employ Since, was formerly, according to its respective signification, used, Sometimes,—1. Seoththan, sioththan, setthan, siththan, siththen,—sithen, sithence, sithens, sithnes, sithas: Sometimes,—2. Syne, sine, sene, sen, syn, sin: Sometimes,—3. Seand,—seeing, seeing that, seeing as, sene, sense, sence: Sometimes,—4. Sithe, sith; sithe, sith,—seen that, seen as, sene, sense, sence.

"Accordingly, Since, in Mod. Eng. is used four ways; two as a preposition connecting (or rather affecting) words, and two as a conjunction, affecting sentences. It is also used adverbially, as, when we say,—It is a year since; i. e. a year seen.

"When used as a preposition, it has always the signification, either of the past p. Seen joined to thence, (that is, seen, and, thence-forward;) or else it has the signification of the past p. Seen only.

"When used as a conjunction, it has sometimes the signification of the p. p. Seeing, or Seeing that; and sometimes the signification of the past p. Seen, or Seen that. As a preposition,—1. Since, (for Siththan, sithence, or seen and thence-forward,) as,—'Such a system of government as the present, has not been ventured upon by any king since the expulsion of James the Second.' 2. Since, (for Syne, sene, or seen,) as,—'Did George the Third reign before or since that example?' As a conjunction,—3. Since, (for Seand, seeing, seeing as, or seeing that,) as,—'If I should labour for any other satisfaction, but that of my own mind, it would be an effect of phrenzy in me, not of hope; since it is not truth, but opinion, that can travel the world without a passport.' 4. Since, (for Sithe, sith, seen as, seen that,) as,—'Since death in the end takes from all, whatsoever fortune or force takes from any one; it were a foolish madness in the shipwreck of worldly things, where all sinks but the sorrow, to save that.'

"Sithence and Sith, though now obsolete, continued in good use down even to the time of the Stuarts.

"Hooker, in his writings, uses—Sithence, Sith, Seeing, and Since. The two former he always properly distinguishes, using Sithence for the true import of the A. S. Siththan, and Sith for the true import of the A. S. Siththe; which is the more extraordinary, because authors of the first credit had, very long before Hooker's time, confounded them together, and thereby led the way for the present indiscriminate and corrupt use of Since in all the four cases mentioned.

"Seeing, Hooker uses sometimes, perhaps, (for it will admit a doubt,) improperly. And Since, (according to the corrupt custom which has now universally prevailed in the language,) he uses indifferently either for Sithence, Seen, Seeing, or Sith.

"Such is the doubtful use of it by Shak. in the following passage:—

'Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come.'

For it may either be resolved thus:—It seems strange that men, seeing that death will come when it will come, should fear;—or, —Strange that men should fear; it being seen that death will come when it will come."

† Sithe—app. to time, seems so used with a subaud. of time; time sith or seen—time past; time, generally.

SIR, s. SIRE. App. first to—Seniors or elders,—then as a title of rank, of respect, gen. Sire (Sk. adds) is naturally the master (dominus) of the family; it is the elder of a family or race, the progenitor, the parent. Sir is the title of knight or baronet, and formerly of priest.

Fr. Sieur, sire; It. Ser, sere, dominus, contracted (Sk.) from Fr. Seigneur; It. Signore; L. Senior. See SENIOR.

SIREN, ad. Met.—Enchanting, bewitching, alluring.

L. Siren; Gr. Σειρηνες, from σιρ-ειν, nectere, vincire, because they bind or hold fast listeners to their song; or from σειρην, trahere, because they attract them.

SIROCCO, s. A wind blowing from Syria, which lies south-east of Italy.

It. Siròcco, scirocco; Fr. Sirocco, siroch. Men. from Eurus. Sk thinks it may be ventus Syriacus. Libeccio (Milton) is Lybian, or African.

SIRRAH, s. The writing of this word by Holland, Sirr-ha, seems to confirm the etym. of Mina: Sir ha!—adopted by Sk. and Jun.

SIRT, s. Mina.—Sirtes, sandy places in the extreme parts of Africa, where the sands are moved in waves. "When the sea begins to swell, and to be agitated by the winds, the waves roll along with them slime, sand, and stones of a prodigious size; so that as the wind shifts, the bed of the waters changes; and from this quality of dragging their channel they derive their name syrtis."—Rose. Sallust.

SISTER, s. v. Females by the same pa-HOOD. rents are sisters; males and females, -LY. so related, are brothers and sisters. More extensively app. to female relations; females of the same kin or kind; of the same society or association.

A. S. Swesc-ter, -lor; Go. Stistlar; D. Suster; Ger. Schwester; Sw. Systter; Dan. Soster. Ihre thinks the labours of etymologists upon the origin of this word have been hitherto in vain. See them in Wack. Swes, is suus, proprius; swescere may, proprius cognatus; swescere suus, proprium filium. Swescstra, or swescster, may be a female born of his or her own parents, of the same parents as those of her- or him-self, of his or her own blood; i. e. of any one so related.

SIT, v. Tyrw. says,—To become, to suit with; and it may be that Suit is the word intended, though written without the u.

To sit as a garment,—easily, becomingly, gracefully; and hence, to fit or befit, to besecm, is the usual explanation.

The Fr. Il sied, quoted by Todd in his Note on Spenser, countenances this, though Cot. (ed. 1673.) writes,—This garment becomes, besecms, befits or fits him well. To this may be added that Chaucer writes sate in the past tense, ("It sate her wonder well to sing.")

SIT, v. To sit, (or To set),—to place or -TER. put, to be or cause to be, in any -TING. place, position, or posture, in any state, situation, or condition. App. to a state of rest,—to be at rest; to continue at rest; to reside, to dwell, to abide. App. to a posture of rest, as distinguished from standing or kneeling,—to place or put, to be or cause to be, in a seat; in a seat of power or authority.

Set and Sit differ in usage only. (See LIT.) Set that down, Sit down, (sc. yourself.) The usage of Sit is more restricted than that of Set; it is more commonly app. to the posture of the body.

It seems more easily (considering its meaning) to be formed from the obsolete past p. of Sistere—sistum, sistum, sium.

SITHE. See SINCE.

SITHE, s. -ED, or SCYTHE. That which severs, cuts, mows, hews.

A. S. Sithe; and although written without the c, it may be from A. S. Scead-an, to sever or separate; or otherwise, from A. S. Sig-an, Sw. -a, prociudere, (sec-are.)

SIX, ad. App. to—The number one more SIXTH. than six, i. e. than the number SIX-TEEN. of fingers on the hand; or to -TY. the first unit added from the second hand to the number five already counted on the first.

Six-teen,—six and ten. Six-ty,—six tens, or six times ten.

Fr. Six; It. Six; Sp. Six; L. Ses; Gr. ἑξ, undoubtedly (Lennep) from exere, though the cause of signification is not plain. Scheldius conjectures that it is ex, or ex, beyond, in addition to, (from an obsolete v. signifying cedere, excedere; the root is probably the v. ic-an, to eke, to add.)

SIZE, v. s. -AR. i. e. To assize, to cense or assess; to impose a tax or rate at an assize or session; gen.—to impose a tax, a rate; to rate the measure, weight, quantity, portion.

A size, at Cambridge, is a portion of bread or drink, (sized, ceased, assessed or allotted,) which scholars (sizars) have at the buttery.

To size, is to set down how much they take on their names in the buttery book.—Mins. As-Sub-

SIZE, s. v. -ABLE. (See SIZE, ante.) Size, as app. to bulk, seems to be (see Sk.)—

A measured, rated, apportioned, proportioned, bulk, bigness, largeness, (magnitude or quantity,) proportioned to some standard—of usual growth, or stature,—as a man of good size, a tree of good size.

To size,—to apportion, to arrange or rank according to bulk; to give bulk or bigness to.

Sizes, in Shak. ("to scant my sizes,"—Lear,) is apportioned, settled, measure or quantity.

The Act "for wood and coal to keep the full size," spoken of in Fabyan, is called in Rastal, "An acte for assize of fuel;" and it fixes the quantity of coals to a sack, and the dimensions of different sorts of fire-wood, shides, billets, faggots, &c. -LES. 1582.) A jeer or jibe thrown or cast out. See Tooke.

Skittish: a skittish horse,—one that throws or casts itself out of its course; unsteady, giddy. Gen.—unsteady, uncertain.

Skittle, (skit-dais) dim. of Skit,—the bowl cast or thrown; the pins, thrown at.

From A. S. Scyt-an, to throw out, to shoot, (qv.)

SKREEN. See SCREEN.

SKRIES.* See ASCRY.—**Berners*.

SKUD. See SCUD. SKUE. See SKEW

SKULK. See SCULK.

SKULL. See SCULL.

SKY, s. A shade, or shadow, a cloud;

-EY, and thence app. to the region of the

-ISH, clouds, the heavens.

-ED. Gr. Xiva. But G. Douglas renders—per umbram, (Æn. il. 732.) throw the sky; A. S. Scua, scua, umbra; Sw. Sky; D. Schey, and so used by Chaucer and Gower, as shade, a cloud; and is probably from A. S. Scead-ian. See SHADE,

SLAB, s. Slab, is any thing slippery;

-BER, v. s. slime; wetted, slopped, earth, stone, &c.

SLOBBER, or

SLUBBER, Slabber, or Slaver,—the slimy moisture that comes (slips or SLAVER, s. v. slides) from the mouth or lips.

SLABBER-ING. To slabber, or slaver,—to produce, to drip or drivel, to cover with, such slimy moisture. Also—

To sup up in a slabbering, sloppy manner, i. e. so as to wet or slap the lips with the pottage.

A slab, sc. of timber, stone, &c.,—a slip: in Tusser, said to be the outermost piece (i. e. slip) cut off by the sawyer.

From A. S. Slip-an, to slip, to be or cause to be slippy, slippery, sloppy, or slabby.—Slab is, in D. Slabb, slabber, limus: slipperigh, limosus et lubricus, muddy, slimy, slippery; D. Slabb-en, -eren, sorbire. Be.

SLACK, ad. s. v. Slack, ad.—Slow, tardy, -EN, v. inactive; relaxed, loose, remiss, -ING. abated, diminished, weakened. -LY. To slack,—to be or cause to be -NESS. slow; to relax, to abate.

Slake, in Norfolk, is leisure.—Grose. In the North, very small coals, to damp or abate the burning of the larger, are called slake, slack, or sleck: and To slake, (Dan. Sleckker) is,—to abate, to quench, (sc. the thirst, the flames, &c.)

See LACK. D. Slack; Ger. Schlack; Sw. Slak; A. S. Slæc, slæac, from the v. Slæc-ian, -gian, (se-leac-ian), tardare, remittere, relaxare, pigrescere; to be, or cause to be, slow; to retard, to remit, to relax or loosen; to be, or cause to be or become, sluggish, inert, or inactive. See SLOUCH, SLOUGH, SLOW, SLOW, SLOVEN, SLOW, SLUG. A-For-UN-

The slade of a hill, Bible, 1549, 1 Sam. xxv.—the covert of a hill.—M. V.

**Drayton.*

A. S. Slæd, slæde, a valley.—Som. Perhaps from A. S. Hlud-an, to hide, to cover. (Thus formed—Se-hlud-an, se-lade, slæde.) See GLADE.

SLAG, s. The inert, heavy dross or sediment, the refuse, or recement: gen.—the sediment, the sludge.

Grose says—in Gloucestershire, the copper dross: it is perhaps A. S. Slog, slough, (qv.) Holinshed writes it Slack.

SLAM, v. To slam one (in the North) is to beat or cuff one strenuously, to push violently.—Grose. It is also so used in Suffolk: to slam the door,—to push it violently, to bang it. Lye says, To slam is,—

To beat or bang, to conquer, to defeat:—Slampan, in North, ("meaning to give Casander a slampan and blurt;") and Slampaine in Holinshed, ("that one rascal in such scornfull wise should giue them the slampaine,"") seem to denote,—a hit, a knock, a cuff. See LAMM.

SLANDER, s. v. A defamation, de--ER. traction, unjust imputation.—Cot. -OUS. Scandal, calumny. "To speak -OUSLY. evil of a man behind his back is mean and base, and that which we properly call slander or backbiting."—Tillotson.

Fr. Esclandre, which (Ihre observes) is used in the same sense as Sw. Klander, i. e. pro infamia.—

The Fr. Esclandre, for Esclandre, from L. Scandalum. (See MEN. and SCANDAL.) Jun. suggests A. S. Slæ-an, to beat, to strike; cona. to wound by the tongue: and it is worthy of remark, that the Fr. Esclandre also denoted slaughter; but Jun. concludes, nevertheless, that the French is from the Latin. Dis-

SLANT, ad. v. Oblique; leaning; being -ING. or moving at any angle less than -WISE. a right angle.

Slant, the s. is common in speech; as, It lies on a slant.

Sk. derives from D. Slanghe, Ger. Schlange, serpens; (Ger. Schlingen; D. Slinghen; A. S. Slinc-an, reperere, serpere.) The Ger. Schling-en; D. Slinghen; Dan. Syngne, are also the A. S. Slinc-an, torquere, to sling, (qv.) Wach. observes—Serpit autem animal, dum corpus per humum trahit flexu sinuoso. He might have said toruoso. See in him, Schling-en, -ken, schling-en. The A. S. Slinc-an with the prefix Se- is probably the root. See To LEAN; also SLING, SLINK. A-

SLAP, v. s. -DASH. To come down slap, i. e. as if slipped off the feet, (on the ice, &c.) To slap down or throw down slap,—as if slipped out of the hold or hand. To slap,—to throw a blow, as if with the slip or fall of the hand—unclosed—before it is closed.

Ger. Schlopps, colaphus, ictus in vultum; in Eng. Slap, from L. Alaphe, s pref (Wach.): perhaps from A. S. Slip-an, labi; to slip, to fall.

SLASH, v. s. To strike with a lash, or any thing thrown out; to strike or cut at.

Slash-slash, i. e. slash-slash.

D. Slaphen; Ger. Schlagen; A. S. Slag-an, percudere, cadere, to strike, whether with the hand, sword, &c.—Wach.

SLATE, s. v. A kind of stone, so called -ER. because easily scaled or separated.

-Y. Slater is common.

"Lapis scissilis."—Sk. And Jun. derives from the v. To slit. Tooke from A. S. Seht-an, to scale, to separate; and traces it thus:—Skatt, sklat, sklate, slate. In Go. Skafjos; D. Schalten; Sc. Skellys; and Old Eng writers, Slates: "And by the scatlatts thel letten him down."—Wiclif. "He covered it with platys of syluer instede of scates or leade."—Fabyan. See SCALE. In-

SLATTER, v. To be sluggishly, lazily, -T-ERN, s. ad. idly, carelessly, inattentive -ERNLY, ad. av. to order, neatness, cleanliness; to idle; to move, to act, idly, lazily, carelessly.

Lye refers to Slut, (qv.); and Slatter does seem formed from that word, and to express the effort of laxiness or sluttishness. Dryden distinguishes a Slattern from a Slut in degree only. Ray, in his North Country Words, explains a Dewyos, or Dawkin, to be a dirty or slattering woman.

SLAVE, s. v.* One reduced to captivity, -ERY. to servitude, to bondage; who is -ISH. bound or compelled to serve, -ISH-LY. labour, or toil for, obey, another. -NESS. "The national appellation of the slaves has been degraded by chance or malice from the signification of glory to that of servitude."—Gibbon.

To slave,—to reduce to servitude or bondage; to treat as a slave, to subject, to make subservient.—**Shak.*

Ger. Schlew; Sw. Slaf; Dan. Slaf, slave; Fr. Esclav-e; Sp. -o; It. Schiavo; Low L. Sclavus. The word in its present application, is from the Slavi or Sclavi, reduced to servitude by the Germans. In the Slavonian tongue, Slava or slawa, laus, gloria, is a word (says Gibbon) of familiar use in different dialects, and forms the term of the most illustrious names. Be-En-In-

SLAY, v. To strike or beat (sc. to death);
-ER. to kill or quell; to put to death.
-ING.

SLAUGHTER, s. v. Sleer, (Chaucer,) i.e. Slayer.
-ER. This word and the past
-OUS. tense and past p. are very variously written: Slay, slaw, slaught; Slec, slew, sleen, slen, slayne, slain; Slo, slough, sloug, slouven.

Slaughter is formed upon the past p. Slawghed, slawgh'd, slaught. The Go. Slahan; A. S. Slaw; D. Slagen; Ger. Schlagen; Dan. Slaaer, to strike, to beat, to smite; and cons. to quell or kill. See SLAY, and SLAUGHT, SLY, SLIGHT. On-Un-

SLEAVE, v. s. Thomson says, To sleave, is—to untwist thread for placing it in the slay or reed. Nares,—that sleaved and seid silk are the same. See SLAY.

SLED, or SLIDGE, s. SLEDDER. A carriage that slides, that moves or is drawn without wheels.

D. Slodde, slidde; Ger. Schlitten; Sw. Släda; Dan. Slæde. Wach. Ihre, and Sk. concur to derive from A. S. Slidan, Ger. Schlitten, to slide; and if this etym. be right, the proper way of writing the word will be Slid.

SLIDGE, s. A tool to strike (to slay) with; a heavy hammer.

D. Slaghet, slaghet; Sw. Slagga; A. S. Slæg, from the v. Slag-an, to strike; A. S. Slægcle, any thing to strike with. See SLAY.

SLEEK, or SLICK, ad. v. Cons.—Smooth,
-LY. plain; having a glossy smoothness;
-NESS. having the smoothness of an oily,
-Y. greasy, substance; smooth with fatness.

D. Slæcht; Ger. Sticht; Sw. Slät; A. S. Slith; Go. Slahite, levis, smooth; D. Slæchten; Ger. Schlichten, to smoothen, to polish; perhaps from A. S. Slæg-an, slie-an; Go. Slahan, to beat, to beat flat, level, plain.

SLEEP, v. s. To sleep, opposed to Wake.

-ER. Sleep is,—inertness; inactivity,
-Y. laziness; drowsiness, stupor,
-ILY. of bodily and mental faculties.
-INESS. *W. Scott (1635).
-ING. D. Slaepan; Ger. Schlaffen; A. S. Slap-an, slap-an; Go. Slæp-an, dormire. Wach. and Kilian derive from Slap, laxus, remissus, languidus;
-LESSNESS. D. Slappen; Ger. Schlaf-an, laxare, torpere, dormire: perhaps from A. S. Slaw-ian, pi-grescere; Go. Slaw-an, slere, tacere, to be slow or sluggish, still, silent. Cot. says, Fr. Dormir is,—to slug it. A-Out-Un-

SLEET, s. -Y. Something, that which (between snow and rain) is cast forth, so. from the clouds.

A. S. Slith, a shower. We call what is between snow and rain, sleet.—Som. It is (Tooke) the past p. of Slie-an, projicere, to cast forth. Slie-ed, sleet. See SLIGHT.

SLEEVE, s. -LESS. A cover or clothing for the arm.

To laugh in the sleeve,—to laugh covertly.

Sleeveless, (met.) means,—without a cover or pretence.—Tooke.

Sk. derives from D. Sloove, tegmen; A. S. Slif, (slaf), formerly called Earm-slife, that with which the arm is covered; the past p. of Slief-an, (D. Slooven), indure, to put on, clothe, or cover.

SLEIGHT. See SLIGHT.

SLENDER, s. Small in bulk or dimensions, in girth or circumference;
-LY. sions, in girth or circumference;
-NESS. small, thin, slight, weak.

D. Slinder, tennis, exilis, is app. to any thing easily broken or bent; of small substance: and may be of the same origin as Slant, to bend out of a right line.

SLENT, v. s. Should perhaps be written as in Brockett,—Slant; meaning—

To alope or bend, (sc. out of a right line); to bend or curve, go or deal, crookedly.

"A pleasaunt conceited man, and that could slent finely."—North. "He was as pleasant a man to give a fine slent in discourse, as could be."—Id.

"Slanta,—sly jokes or petty lies. 'He slants a good deal,' he is given to lying."—Brockett.

SLEY, s. Or more properly Slay. Thomson says, a Slay is—

SLEID. A weaver's reed fastened in a frame, which beats the woof close in the web.

A. S. Slæ, pecten tectoris, the slay of a weaver's loom.—Som. Perhaps (Sk.) from A. S. Slæg-an, slæan, to strike, to beat:—Percussio ferient insecti pectine dentes.—Ovid, Metam. lib. vi. v. 58. See SLAY and SLAVE.

SLICE, v. s. To divide, to cut; usually, to cut into pieces broad and flat. The s.—

Any thing so formed as to cut into such pieces; the piece or part so cut.

Jun. writes—Scilicet: and derives from A. S. Slit-an, to slit; Ger. Schleissen, scindere, findere, to slit, to split.

SLICK. See SLEEK.

SLIDE, s. v. To move in a continuous,

-ER, s. ad. uninterrupted motion; without
-DER. step, or rotation: to move or
-INGNESS. pass along smoothly, silently,
-GROTE, s. secretly, stilly; also, without firmness of step; without resistance.

Slide-grote, or Shuffleboard,—a game, mentioned in Holinshed.

A. S. Slid-an, slider-ian; D. Slidderen, sladderem, labi, dilabi. See GLIDE. Over-

SLIGHT, ad. v. s. or SLIGHT, ad. To slight

-EN, v. is—To cast or throw down, to overthrow, to destroy, to demolish. "They slighted and demolished all the works of

-LY, ad. av. that garrison."—Clarendon.

-NESS. To cast down or away; to reject, to abject, sc. as of little worth; to contemn, to neglect, to disregard.

Falstaff was slighted, (M. W. W.) i.e. thrown into the river.

The letters of Cassius were slighted off, (Shak. Jul. Cæsar,) i.e. thrown off or aside; disregarded.

The maid puts him off, slights him, (Win. Tale,) i. e. throws him aside; the dreadful laws were loosely slighted, (2 Pt. H. IV.) i. e. thrown or put aside, disregarded, contemned. And thus Slight, the ad. is,— Abject or cast aside, sc. of little value, of little force or strength; and thus further, inconsiderable, inefficient, weak, feeble, small, slender.

Slight of hand,—an adroit, dextrous cast or motion of the hand; adroitness, dexterity. To cast, (qv.) was used cons. as equivalent to—To forecast or project, to contrive. And Sleight, (met.) is a dexterous trick or contrivance; an act of sty-ness; a subtle manœuvre. Slightly, (Chaucer: Tr. & Cr.) is Slightly or Slily. See SLY, and SLEY.

Our word seems formed thus—Slay or sley, sloped, sley'd, stelt, or sleight. Sc. Slight; Dan. Slet; D. Stechten, stichten; Ger. Schlichten, destruere, dirimere, evertere, from A. S. Slakan, percussere, cadere, decidere, dejiere, (to slay.) to strike or beat, to strike, to fall or cause to fall; to cast down. See Sk. Jun. and also Jamieson. Over—

SLIKE, ad. i. e. Like; —so-like. See SWILKE.

SLIM, ad. In the North, Slim is—wicked, mischievous, perverse; and is also used in the same sense with Sly, (qv.); it also signifies,—slender-bodied, and thinly-clothed.—Gross. "That was a slim excuse." —Barrow.

A word of very common use in Lincolnshire, says Sk.—from the D. Slim; Ger. Schlamm, which Kilian interprets to have anciently signified slime, of little worth.

SLIME, s. An adhesive substance; hold-
-Y. ing, binding fast; viscous, glu-
-INESS. tinous.

D. & Dan. Slym; Ger. Schlamm; Sw. Slam, sordes, cluvies. A. S. Slim, slimus, cernum, slime, mud. Ithre suggests Lim, Lime, (qv.) Be-

SLING, v. s. -ER. To throw around; usually from something hanging, or pendulous; to move along or convey upon something (a rope, cord, strap, &c.) hanging loosely. "The manner of slinging was by whirling it twice about the head, and so casting out the bullet."—Potter.

D. Slinghe; Ger. Schlingen; Sw. Situnga; Dan. Slynger; A. S. Sling-an, circumagere, torquere, concitare, vibrare, jaculari, to throw or hurl around, to cast, to dart. See SLANG and SLINK.

SLINK, v. ad. To creep or crawl away; to go off or away, as if ashamed or afraid; to sneak, or steal off privily.

To slink her foal (Mortimer) is, perhaps, to sling, i. e. to cast it.

D. Slinghen; Ger. Schlingen; A. S. Sling-an, to crawl or creep. "Slings, to go creepingly away, as if ashamed; to sneak. Hence a slink—a sneak or sneaker."—Brockett. Sling-an and Sling-an seem the same word, with the mere difference of e and g, app. somewhat differently. See SLIKE, and SLANG.

SLIP, s. v. By the word Slide we express
-F-ER, ad. s. a continuous motion, without
-ERED. step or rotation. By Slip,—
-ERY. motion by which a state of
-ERINESS. firmness, entireness, security,
-ING. uprightness, directness, equi-
-Y. poise, is lost; a motion,
-NESS. involuntary, sudden, unexpected, unnoticed, without effort. It is also used as equivalent to Slide, (qv.)

A slip,—a small part easily removed from the main body; any thing (see SLOW) easily put on or off. A small narrow portion. Also, counterfeit pieces of money—of brass, and covered over with silver, were by the common people called Slips.

Slippery, (Dan. Stribig,)—smooth, too smooth to stand or move upon, to hold or keep; infirm, unsteady, unsure.

Slubber sauce (Tyndall)—slippery or slabby sauce.

**Sir T. More*. Byrth of Mankynd.

D. Slipper; Ger. Schlappen; Sw. Slip-s; A. S. -as, lahi, diabl. See SLOW, SLOWE. A-Over-Ua-

SLIT, s. v. The s.—Any cleft or fissure.
-TING. The u.—To separate; to pull or Slot, s. tear asunder, to cut.

A. S. Slit-an, to divide. Slot (of a deer,)—the cleft, (assura cervini pedis.)

SLIVE, v. -ER. To cleave, to split, to slit or alide, to divide.

A. S. Slif-an, findere, to cleave, to slive, to sliver. The word is thus recognised by Som. as of common use. Moor has preserved it in his Suffolk Words. And Gosse says, to slive is to sneak, in Lincolnshire. See also Ray and Brockett.

SLOE, s. A sloe,—so called happily from its slowness in the passage through the belly.—Som.

Dan. Slaas; A. S. Sla, prunum sylvestre.

SLOOP, s. Contracted from shallop, (qv.)
D. Sloope. And see SCULL.

SLOP, s. v. -FY. A slop,—liquid, &c. that slips or has slipped.

Slops worn by sailors, labourers,—that slip on easily without dragging.

To slop,—to spill liquids. Sloppy,—wet with slops.

Sk. has three different etyms. for what he thinks are three different words. Jun. thinks Slop (a pair of slops) has the same origin as Slores. Tooke—that Slop gen. is the past p. of slip. And see SLOWE.

SLOPE, s. v. Cons.—That which, the sur--NESS. face of ground, &c. which, we slip
-INGLY. along, slip down; which lies on
-Y. an inclined plane; on a declivity;
obliquely to the horizon.

Sk. derives from D. Slop, laxus, remissus,—loose, slack, from the line formed by a rope hanging loosely. Tooke—the past p. of the v. To slip.

SLOTH, s. v. That which sloweth, or
-FUL. maketh one slow.

-FULNESS. Laziness, idleness, tardiness.

Sloth,—the animal, so called from its sloth.

Rather, (Sk.) from our v. To slow, and then more properly written Slowth: and Jun.—Slow and Slothful, piger, inert. Tooke—third pers. sing. of Slow, (qv.)—sloweth, slowth, or sloth, sloth. See SLACK.

SLOUCH, s. v. -ING, ad. App. to—A slow pace; one who moves a slow pace.

A lazy, idle fellow; one who moves—lazily, idly, heavily; too lazy to move upright; with a bend or stoop,—a lazy, stooping, louting position or gait.

Sk. derives Slowch from the Dan. Slæg, hebes; Ger. Schlau, negligens. Tooke thinks it A. S. Slace, (ch for k) from the v. Slace-lan, (to slack, qv.) to slow, or cause to be slow.

SLOVEN, s. One who is too slow, lazy, -LY. idle—to do any thing carefully, -LINESS. to dress properly, neatly.—*Shak.

-LY.* Slowen, slowen, sloven, (and Slut, qv. from Slowed.) past p. of the v. To slow, (qv.) & c. to make slow or cause to be slow, (qv.)

SLOUGH, s. -v. Slow (water); sluggish water; water, mire, that stays, does not drain off.

Slough, of an animal (serpent); the skin cast; probably so called from the sluggish state of the animal during this process of nature; or because the skin cast (like the slough of a wound) is an old skin—succeeded by a new.

Slough of a wound or sore,—the inert, senseless skin, or matter, that separates or comes from it.

Jun.—A. S. Slog, a hollow filled with mud or mire. Tooke,—the past p. of Slace-lan, (a broad,) to slack, (qv.) to slow, (qv.)

SLOW, *ad. s.* v.** Tardy, delaying, dilatory; -LY. lingering, loitering, dull, heavy; -NESS. inert, inactive, unread.

Slow-worm,—A. S. Slaw-wyrme.

A slowe,—a sloth or sluggard.

*Chaucer. †Holinshed. Shak.

A. S. Slac-lan, (a broad,) slaw-lan, tardare, to retard, to delay; to move a short space in a long time. See SLACK, SLOTH. For Over-

SLUBBER-DE-GULLION, s. Perhaps, a slubbering glutton,—Fr. Goulin, gluttonous. Goullement,—like a gully-gut.

SLUDGE, s. A word common in vulgar speech; written by Holinshed, Slawke. See SLOUGH.

SLUG, s. v. A slow reptile; any thing -GARD. slow, lazy, dull, heavy, lumpish,

-ARDIKE, v. drowsy, dronish.

-ISH. To slug,—to be or cause to be lazy, dull, inert.—*Gower.

Sk. and Jun. have nothing at all satisfactory to themselves. Tooke,

-Y. —that Slug, A. S. Slög, is slow (i. e.

-ARDY.* reptile.) See SLACK.

SLUICE, s. v. -Y. A place in which water is closed or inclosed; a dam.

To sluice, (or To unsluice, qv.)—to open that which closes—the gate; to issue forth, so. in or like floods of water; to wet or waste abundantly; to overwhelm.

Fr. Ecluse; Sp. -a; It. Sciua; D. Sluyse; Dan. Sluse;—from L. Clauus, closed or dammed up. Slussa,—locus ubi concluduntur aquæ. Un-

SLUMBER, v. s. Also written Slomer.

-ER. To be sleepy, drowsy, inert; to com--ING. pose, to still, to quiet; to repose.

-OUS. D. Sluyen-en, -eren; Ger. Schlum-mern;

-Y. A. S. Slum-moran, niotare, dormitare, to wial, to be inclined or disposed to sleep.

SLUR, s. s. SLURT,* v. To do any thing lazily, carelessly, dirtily; to smear, to soil, to tarnish, to pollute; to cast a soil or spot upon; to pass slightly (with a view to escape notice); to cheat.

To slirt or slurt away,—to throw away carelessly.—*B. Jonson.

Perhaps a corruption of Slutter,—to do as the slut does, (slovenly or slothfully.) Slirt, from Slurred, slur'd, slurt. Be-

SLUT, s. One who is too slow, lazy, idle,—

-T-ERY. to do any thing carefully, cleanly;

-ISH. to dress properly, neatly; a lazy,

-ISH-LY. uncleanly, dirty person.

-NESS. Slut, or (as Gower writes it) Slout, is the past p. of the v. Slaw-lan, to slow, (qv.) i. e. to make slow, or cause to be slow, and formed thus,—Slowed, slow'd, sloud, slout, slut. Slut formerly, as Slowen now, was app. to males as well as females. See Tooke; and see SLACK.

SLY, ad. Acting with forecast; fore-

-LY, or casting or projecting; cautious,

SLILY. circumspect; cunning, crafty,

SLYNES. subtle.

"Substance sly," in Spenser, is substance slight or slender. Milton, Comus, v. 155, —"To cheat the eye with blear illusion," had been, in the MS. examined by Mr.

Todd,—"with sleight illusion."

Also written Sleigh and Sleighly. (Chaucer,) and is the same word as Sleigh, qv. (i. e. sleyed, sley'd, sly'd, the final d omitted.)

SMACK, s. v. -ING. App. to—The sound of the lips, separated from compression;

to—a similar sound, as of a whip; of the hand upon the face; to—a taste, a savour, a relish.

D. Smacken, sapere, gustare; Ger. Schmaech, gustus et sapor; Sw. Smaka; Dan. Smager; A. S. Smæ-can, to taste, to have or take a smack or savour of.—Cot. Ithre is inclined to believe the s. formed from the sound of the lips in eating eagerly, and thence appropriated to the taste.

SMALL, ad. s. In old writers, Smale.

-LY. Minute, thin, slender; opposed to

-NESS. large or great. Delicate, gentle;

-LISH. opposed to gross.

D. & Sw. Smal; Ger. Schmal; Dan. Smæe; A. S. Smæl, smæl, smæl. Smallunge, minutio, diminutio, a diminishing; a making small, thin, of slender. See MALL.

SMALT,* s. i. e. Smelt, (qv.)—*Peacham.

SMARAGD, s. A precious stone.

D. & Ger. Schmaragd; L. Smaragdus; Gr. Σμαραγδος, from σμάραγμα, or μαραγμα, to shine. See EMERALD.

SMART, ad. s. v. The s. is gen. app. to—

-LY. An acute, quick, pungent, cutting

-NESS. pain.

Smart, ad.—Acute, sharp, quick, lively, active, brisk; trim, spruce.

D. Smerie; Ger. Schmerz; Sw. Smärta; Dan. Smerter; A. S. Smorrt-an, dolore, cruciare, to pain. Ihre supposes the word to have been primarily app. to the punishments of the martyrs, and is inclined to derive from Martyrus: he thinks that the preposition of the letter s is the principal objection. Perhaps from A. S. Merr-an, to mar, (qv.)

SMASH,* s. v. (See MASH.)

*A word very common in speech.

SMATCH, v.* s. i. e. Smack, (qv.) by the common change of ch into tch. Smaught (Chaucer) the past tense.

*Banister (1578).

SMATTER, s. v. To smack, to taste, to -ER. savour; to have a mere taste, a -ING. slight taste or savour; to act, to employ, slightly or superficially.

Sk. thinks—so written qd. Smacker, (rather Sma'cher—See SMATCH.) He that has a smattering of learning, qui primoribus tantum labilis literas degustavit.

SMEAR, v. s. -Y. To cover or rub over with any greasy, slimy, dirty matter. To soil, to daub. Smear, s. is not unusual.

Smergh, in Sc. is marrow; and A. S. Smere, any kind of fat, greasy substance.—See Jamieson. D. Smeeren; Ger. Schmierens; Sw. Smörja; A. S. Smer-an, ungere, linere, illinere. Be-

SMELL, v. s. To smell,—to have or cause -ER. to have sensations or feelings by -ING. the nose, through the medium of air. To have or cause to have an odour, a scent.

To scent, to savour; to scent, to trace, discern by the scent.

"Smelling is another sense, that seems to be wrought on by bodies at a distance; though that which immediately affects the organ, and produces in us the sensation of any smell, are effluvia, or invisible particles, that coming from bodies at a distance, immediately affect the olfactory nerves."—Locke.

This word has not been satisfactorily traced to its origin. In A. S. Smell, the sense of smelling, is Swæc, a word which also denoted taste. Mins. derived it from Ger. Schmecken, A. S. Smæc-an, to smack; and he did so, rashly as Sk. thought, and as he (Mins.) thought himself, it may be supposed, from the omission in his second edition. If may, however, be remarked, that Ger. Schmecken denotes both taste and smell: that taste is not the mere touch of the organs of tasting, nor smell of the organs of smelling; and that, from this coincidence, the word app. to the one may have owed its appropriation to the other. It is only to suppose smæc-han, or smægian, a dim. of smæc-an, and the word—by dropping the guttural—is formed.

SMELT, s. A fish, so called from its pleasant smell.—Sk.

A. S. Smelt; Dan. Smelte.

SMELT, v. -ER. To reduce to a liquid or fluid state: usually app. to the melting of ores.

D. Schmelten; Ger. Schmelzen; Sw. Smälta; Dan. Smelte; A. S. Melt-an, mitl-an, to melt.

SMERK, or SMIRK, v. s. ad. To smile sweetly, and with a gentle or slight murmur—affectedly, conceitedly;—as if to gain or show favour or admiration.

A. S. Smere-an, subridere, arridere, to smile; to smerk.—Som. (See MERR.) Suaviter et cum leni susurro ridere.—Jen.

SMICKER,* ad. Gifford says, "Smickly -ERING. is—finically, effeminately." We -LY.* should now perhaps say—Smugly.

Smickering, (Dryden: "He seem'd to have a smickering to our young lady,") seems—a smack, or taste for.—Ford.

A. S. Smiere, elegant, trim, gallant, pretty, smug; well or cunningly wrought or contrived.—Som.

SMIDDY, s. i. e. Smithy. See SMITH.

SMIGHT. See SMITE.

SMILE, v. s. To move, to contract the -ER. features, about the mouth espe- -ING-LY. cially, from some feelings of -NESS. pleasure or self-satisfaction; to look favourably or kindly; to favour, be favourable or propitious to.

D. Smuglen; Ger. Schmollen; Sw. Smäla; Dan. Smiler; A. S. Smelt or smyll, tenuis, mitis, blandus, serenus. Smelt or smolt wæder, (D. Smol wæder), weather when the sky is clear and without wind.—Som. See SMERK.

SMILT. See SMELT.

SMIRCH, v. is, perhaps, Smutch't or Smudg'd. Be- Un-

SMITE, v. To strike; to beat, to give a -ER. blow; to afflict.

-ING. D. Smyten; Ger. Schmeissen; Sw. Smitta; A. S. Smitan, ferire, percutere, (mitl-ere). See SMITE. Un-

SMITH, s. v. One who smitheth (sc. metals). -ERY. A forger, a wright.

-Y, or Chaucer celebrates Dan Gerreis, SMIDDY, a smith, "that in his forge smithed plow-harneia."

A. S. Smith, smith-lan; D. Smid; Ger. Schmid, schmid-an; Sw. Smid, smed-a; Dan. Smid, smider, one who smit-eth, sc. with a hammer, &c. Tooke observes that this name was given to all who smote with the hammer.—See CARPENTER; and Tooke, ii. 414, 8vo. ed. Note by the Editor. In Isaiah xli. 7, our version has—"The carpenter encouraged the goldsmith;" the Bible, 1551, reads—"The smythe comforted the moulder." It is now app. more gen. in Composition.

SMOCK, s. -LESS.* App. to the under garment of females, and to the upper of males: in the latter case usually called a smock-frock.—Chaucer.

A. S. Smoc,—now app. (though not exclusively) to the simple under-dress of a female,—seems formerly to have been an article of more importance, and may be from A. S. Smiers; D. Smock; Ger. Schmuck; Sw. Smuck, ornatus, dressed, adorned. P. Ploughman opposes it to hair, (i. e. a hair-shirt.) Chaucer speaks of it as wrought with silk. See SXUG.

SMOKE, v. s. To evaporate, to exhale,

-ER. to reek; to cause an exhalation, a -LESS. cloud, a fume; to fume, to fumi-

-ING. gate; and, cons. app. to express a

-Y. rapidity of motion; causing the exhalation of heat; a discovery, a perception of first symptoms, (as smoke of latent fire.)

To smoke a person, is nearly equivalent to—To see his hidden purposes; also to—To roast him.

Smoker is a common word.

D. Smooch, smuyck, smoken, smook-en, smuyck-en; A. S. Smic-an, fum-are, evaporare. Un-

SMOOR,* or SMORE. See SMOULDER.

*Sir T. More.

D. Smoores; A. S. Smoran, to smother.

SMOOT. See SMUT.

SMOOTH, v. s. ad. To make plain or

-EN, v. even, to flatten, to level, to polish;

-ER, to move evenly, to glide, to flow;

-LY, to level or remove roughness,

-NESS, harshness, difficulty; to ease, to mitigate, to mollify.

A. S. Smooth, from smeth-tan, planare, square; to make plain or even—perhaps by smiling, or beating flat. "He that smootheth with the hammer, encouraged him that smote the anvil."—Bible. Isaiah. Be-Un-

SMOTHER, v. s. To suffocate, to stifle; to choke; to keep or restrain from issuing forth; to suppress.

D. Smoores; A. S. Smoran, to smudder or smother.

SMOULDER, v. s. -DRY. Seems now com. app. to—The smother of smoke arising from any thing heated or on fire.

Sir T. More writes Smoulder; Jewell, Smooder; Holland, Smudder.

Smoulder, smoulder, smooder, smudder, smother, seem to be merely different ways of writing the same word; from A. S. Smoran, to smoor or smore, (qv.)

SMUDGE, v. To smear or stain with SMUTCH, v. dirt or filth.

-IN. Smutchin,—for the nose—(in Howell,) so called from its dirtiness.

Formed upon the s. Smut, (qv.)

SMUG, *s. v.** -LY. Studiously nice or neat; studiously or carefully dressed.

*Burton. Chapman.

D. Smuck, smucken; Ger. Schmuck, schmucken; Sw. Smuck, smucka, ornatus, ornare. "Smug is the past p. of Smag-an, smag-an, deliberare, studere, considerare. App. to the person or to dress, it means studied; that on which care and attention have been bestowed."—Tooke.

SMUGGLE, v. To creep in, to steal in;

-ER, to act by stealth; slyly or insidiously,

-ING, with a view to escape detection.

D. Smukket-en, -sar, from A. S. Smug-an, serpere, to creep by little and little.—Som.

SMUT, v. s. To defile, to dirty, to smear

-T-ING, or stain with dirt or filth; to pol-

-UTE, to contaminate.

-ILY. Smut in corn,—a disease showing

-INESS, itself by a dirty blackness.

D. Smelten, besmetten; Ger. Schmitten; Sw. Smitta; A. S. Smittan, besmittan, polluere, maculare, inficere. Be-

SNACK, s. i. e. Snatch; so much as is taken at a snatch,—a part or portion; a share.

SNAFFLE, v. s. A bridle, so called. To snaffle, (gen.)—to bridle, to manage, to guide.

D. Snavel; Ger. Schnebbe, the nose; that which sniffs or snaffles. Dryden renders L. Capistrum, (a head stall,) by our Eng. Snaffle.

SNAG, s. -GY. A short projection.

Snaggy, in the North, Grose says, is—tetchy, peevish. It is probably Snatchy,—apt to snatch or catch at.

Perhaps Snack, or Sneek,—that which we may snatch, catch or seize hold of; any thing jutting or projecting. Prior applies the word to the teeth.

SNAIL, v. s. Met.—Any creeping, slow, or sluggish being.

Dan. Snegl; A. S. Snæg-el, (or Snakel), the dim. of Snake, the past p. of A. S. Snac-an, to creep.

SNAKE, s. -Y. The s. is equivalent to the L. Serpens,—a serpent. See SNEAK.

Dan. Snag; A. S. Snaca; D. Snake; from A. S. Snac-an, serpere, to creep. Snac-ende wyrm, reptile, a creeping worm, or the like.—Som.

SNAP, v. s. To catch or snatch at; to try

-F-ER, to catch or seize; to try or en-

-ISH, deavour to bite; to be bitter or

-ISH-LY, sharp. To snap is also,—to make

-NESS, a sharp sound or noise.

To snap or knapp (qv.) asunder is,—to sunder sharply, shortly; to break sharply asunder.

Snap-share (Udal),—a share snapt or snatcht.

Ger. Schnappen; D. Snapp-en; Sw. -a; Dan. Shapper; captare, rapere, arripere, raptim prehendere. Wach. derives from Schnebbe, the beak of a bird, with which it snaps or seizes its prey. See SNAFFLE.

SNAP-HANCE, or -HAUNCE,* s. A kind of fire-lock. A robber, a plunderer, armed with such weapon. Gen.—a highwayman, a thief.—**Holmshed. Beau. & F.*

Ger. Schnap-han; D. Snapp-haen.

SNAP-SACK. See KNAPSACK.

SNAR,* v. i. e. Snarl, (qv.)—**Spenser*.

SNARE, s. v. To catch or take by guile;

-ER, to take in a net or noose; to allure,

-Y, to seduce, to inveigle, to entrap, to surround or entangle by treachery or guile, by allurements or enticements.

D. Snoeren; Ger. Schnuren; Sw. Snärja, vin circ, legula vel laqueo constringere; and thus, irritare, illaqueare. En-In-

SNARL,* v. Snarl seems to be a dim. of Snar,—To ensnare; to entangle.

Spenser uses Ensnarle, (qv.) to ensnare.

**Cranmer. Spenser*.

SNARL, s. v. -ER. App. to—The angry nasal noise or sound of a dog.

The D. Snarrer is,—premure, murmurare, strepere. Snarl and Gnarr (Sk. thinks,) are both formed from the sound.

SNAST,* s. The snout of a candle.

**Bacon. Brown*.

Ger. Schnautse, schnautze.

SNATCH, v. s. -ER. To catch or take, or try or attempt to catch or take, by quick, sudden motion or action; hastily, sharply; eagerly.

A snatch,—a part or portion snatched, or caught or taken—hastily, sharply, eagerly; a catch.

D. Snacken, capture, captitare. See SNACK, SNAB.

SNATHE,* or SNEED, s. SNATTOCK.† A cutting; a cutting of wood (formed into a hold or handle)—J. Scott. †Gayton.

A. S. Snaed, snide, snith-an; D. Sneede, incisio, segmentum: A. S. v. Said-an, to hew, to polish, to make smooth.—Som.

SNEAK, v. s. To creep—covertly.
-ER. meanly, servilely; to move or
-ING-LY. act with creeping servility,
-NESS. covertly, concealedly.

SNEAKSBY, s.* Barrow.

Dan. Sniger: A. S. Snic-an, repere, to creep, to go softly or easily. Hence, perhaps, (Som.) our Sneak. To sneak out or away, t. clanculo propere se. See SNACK.

SNEAP, v. SNEEP, s. To sneap is—to snap or snub, snib or snub, (qqv.) Grose says, To snaps or sneaps,—to check; as, children easily sneaped; herbs and fruits sneaped (nipped) with cold weather. It is a general word used all over England.

SNEB, or SNIB, v. To catch or snap at—angrily, chidingly; to check forbiddingly; to repress; to nip, to pinch.

D. Snabben, snappen, capture, raptare, to snatch or seize, to snap, (qv.) See SNUB.

SNECK, or SNICK, s. A sneck or snick of a door is the catch or latch; that which snatches or catches hold. To sneak-up, or snick-up, is supposed to be equivalent to—"Go hang yourself:" qd. Snick-up, catch-up, latch-up, the noose or cord.—Shak. T. N.; and Beau. & F.

SNEED.* See SNATHE.—Evelyn.

SNEER, v. s. To turn up the nose—ER. contemptuously—scornfully, or -FUL.* scoffingly; to speak or act with a slight emotion of scorn or scoffing; of disparagement or derision.—Shenstone.

Not of very long date in our language. It is app. to a turn of the nose similar to that of a snarling dog.

SNEEZE, v. s. -ING. "Looking against the sun, doth induce sneezing. The cause is, not the heating of the nostrils; for then the holding up of the nostrils against the sunne, though one winke, would do it, but the drawing downe the moisture of the brain: for it will make the eyes run with water; and the drawing of moisture to the eyes, doth draw it to the nostrils, by motion of consent; and so followeth sneezing."—Bacon.

Sneez'd in Pope, (Ody. b. 18.) is Neeking in Chapman.

D. Nies-en; Ger. -sen; Sw. Nysa, nissa; A. S. Nies-an, sternutare, to sneeze, or sneaze, (Som.;) A. S. Narse, the nose. See NEEZE.

SNICK-AND-SNEE,* s. Snick is perhaps, Snack or Snatch; and Snee,—Snead, a cutting. See SNATHE.—Howell. Dryden.

SNIFF, v. s. SNIFT, v. To draw the air or breath strongly up the nose. (Ger. Schnobbel.)

The dim. is—To snivel, (qv.)

D. Snaffen, snaffen, snappen, snaffeten; Ger. Schnaufen, schnaffeln; Sw. Snuf-wa. To Snuff, (qv.)

SNIGGLE, v. To pursue, to take, sneakingly, i. e. covertly, creepingly.

Sk. says—a word well known to anglers. It seems to be dim. of Sneak.

SNIP, v. s. To cut.

-FER. To go snips, is to go shares; each

-FER. to take his cut, or share, or division.

D. Snippen; Ger. Schnippen, secare, to cut. Wach. derives from A. S. Cniþ, a knife:—probably, Snep, (to snep), to break off, sever, separate shortly, (to nip.)

SNIP, s. SNITE. A woodcock. Snipe, or snite, (Som.) perhaps so called from the peculiar length of its bill or snout.

A. S. Snite; Dan. Sneppe.

SNITE, v. To wipe; to wipe the nose; SNOR. To cleanse it. And hence, to snite a -TY. candle,—cleanse or clear away.

Snit (Dan. Snof),—that which is snited or wiped away. See SNOUT.

D. Snuyten; Ger. Schnutzen; Sw. Snyta; A. S. Snit-an, to wipe. Candel-snypela.

SNIVEL, v. -LER. To make a sniffing or snuffing; to have a running at the nose; to cry, weep or fret as children do.

The dim. of Sniff—as Snuffle is of Snuff.

SNORE, v. s. To snore,—to breathe -ING. loudly through the nose.

SNORT, v. To snort,—to sound, or utter a -ING. strong sound (as horses do) through the nose.

To snort,—to sound, or utter a strong sound (as horses do) through the nose.

D. Snorchen; Dan. Snorker; Ger. Snorchen, snarchlen. In A. S. Snora, sternutatio. Snora, snored, snor'd,—snort.

SNOUT, v. s. -Y. That which is snited or wiped. The nose, or nose.

D. Snuyte; Dan. Snude; Ger. Schnute. Snout is the past p. of Snite, (qv.)

SNOW, v. s. To snow, met.—To fall -Y. plentifully.

-ISH. "Snow is the small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops."—Locke.

A. S. Snow, snow-an; D. Snee-an, -uwen; Dan. Snee; Ger. Schnee, schneyen; Go. Snowis. Jun. —from the Gr. Nip-ev; Sk. —from the It. Néve. Be-Over-

SNUB, v. s. To check; to scold, to rebuke, to reprove, to chide—pettishly. See SNEAP, and SNEB.

SNUDGE,* s. -ING, ad.† i. e. Snug, or Snuc; one who has sneaked, or who sneaks.

A sneaking, mean, miserly person.

* Gascoigne. Ascham. †Holinshed.

SNUFF, v. s. To draw the air or breath

-ER. up the nose; to smell, by action

-ING. of the nostrils; to move or turn

-INGLY. up the nose, sc. in scorn, or derision; in anger, in indignation.

-LIE, v. Also, to take away or remove the -LING. snuff, or nose—of a candle.

To take a thing in snuff, was a common expression—in scorn, anger, indignation, affront.

Snuffle, dim. of Snuff.

Dan. Suffer. Snuff is the past p. of To snuff, (qv.) that which is snuffed. To snuff, the v. is formed upon the past p. Be.

SNUG, ad. v. -NESS. Close, covert, sheltered, secreted—comfortably so.

**Sir P. Sidney*.

A.S. Snece, the past p. of Snie-on, to sneak, to creep: a sneug spot,—a spot into which any one has sneaked, has gone, creepingly, covertly, closely.

SO, av. Dan. Saa. Sk. says,—from A.S. Swa; D. Soo; Ger. So; and Jun. thinks So is the Gr. Ωs, reversed. Tooke affirms—that “the Ger. So, the Eng. So, (though in one language it is called an adverb or conjunction, and in the other an article or pronoun,) are yet both of them derived from the Go. art. So, so; and have in both languages retained their original meaning, viz. it or that.” Tooke has shown that It, (qv. or, as it was anciently written, Hit), means said, and That—taken. From the manner in which he has traced these words to their meaning, it seemed pretty plain that he would conclude So (for Sa) to be the past p. of the A.S. v. Sag-an, to say; “so, in the said manner;” and this is one of the additions from his papers. (See the Svo. ed. vol. ii. p. 351. See As, and SUCH.) It is worthy of remark, that in Ger. Es is also an article or pronoun, and in Eng. As is an adverb or conjunction. The various usages of So, may be explained by substituting it or that, and supplying the ellipses, of cause or case, state or condition, sort or kind, &c.

SOAK, or SOKE, v. To wet or moisten —ER. thoroughly; to keep in any liquid —ING. till thoroughly wetted, or drenched.

To drench, to drink, to imbibe copiously.

A.S. Soc-tan, macerare, humectare.

SOAP, or SOPE, s. v. -Y. “Sope is an invention derived by the French for to colour the hair of the head yellow; made it is of tallow and ashes: the best of all other is that which they make of beech-wood ashes, and goats sewet; and the same after two manner of wayes; either thicke and hard, or else liquid and soft; but the one as well as the other is verie much used in Germanie, and a great deale more indeed by men than women.”—Holland. Pitane.

A.S. Sape, sap-an; D. Seepe, seepen; Ger. Seif, selzen; Sw. Säpa; Dan. Såbe; L. Sapo. Wach. derives from Ger. Suben, (still existing in Saubern, seubern), to cleanse. Sk.—from the A.S. Sippan, to sop. Pliny says that Soap, L. Sapo, was made ex sedo, (or sevo), &c.

SOAR, s. s. -ING. Also written Sore. To mount, to rise, along or upon, the air; to rise on high, to reach or attain great height or elevation.

Fr. Esorer; It. Sorare, per auras volitare.—Mén. Gr. Sop-aiw, trahere.—Jun. It is perhaps sor (saw) aire; sor (sopra) aria; upon the air; mounting upon the air.

SOB, v. s. -ING. “Sighing is caused by the drawing in of a greater quantity of breath to refresh the heart that labourereth like a great draught when one is thirsty. Sobbing is the same thing stronger.”—Bacon.

To sob, is also to sop, to soak: “A tree being sobbed and wet swells.”—Mortimer.

Som. says, perhaps from A.S. Seof-ian, lugere, queri, to mourn, to lament, to complain, to make moan: but Sob seems to express a physical action, probably supping up strongly, convulsively, the breath.

SOBER, ad. v. Abstinent, or abstaining —LY. from drunkenness or ebriety; —NESS. from any thing intoxicating, —BRIETY. any excess; temperate, moderate, —BERIZE, v. rate, well regulated; regular, steady, collected, unimpassioned, sedate, serious.

Fr. Sobri-e; It. & Sp. -io; L. Sobrius, opposed to Ebrius, qui multas haurit brias, one who drinks many cups. Bria, a kind of cup, from Gr. Bpυ-eiv, scatere, abundare. Sobrius, i. e., -i. e. sine bria. —Poss. As—En—Un—

SOC, s. Som. describes Soc to be, the —AGE. power, authority, or liberty to SOKEMAN. minister justice, and execute —RY. laws; (he should have added, among his followers or associates, vassals, tenants;) also the shire, circuit, or territory, wherein such power is exercised by him that is endowed with such a privilege or liberty. Whence our Law L. word of Soca, for a seignory or lordship enfranchised by the king with the liberty of holding or keeping a court of his socmen or socagers, i. e. his tenants, whose tenure is hence called Socagium, in Eng. Socage.

A.S. Soc, soca; sequela, secta, se. *Homagium*um, from the s. Soc-an, soc-as, adire, sequi, to follow, to attend upon.

SOCIABLE, ad. That may be followed, —ABLY. accompanied; accessible, converseable; —ABLENESS. versible; that seeks followers —ABILITY. or companions; is desirous of —AL. them; friendly; seeking or —ALITY. pursuing, uniting for, the common weal or good, the weal —ETY. —ATE, ad. **v.*† of the community; the advantage, happiness, pleasures, of others.

**Udal*. †Shetford.

SOMBRE, ad. -ous. Shady, dark, gloomy.
 Fr. Sombre; Sp. -a, a shade or shadow; L. Umbra, a shade.

SOME, ad. Some always implies—more: from which one, a few, or many (of the same number or quantity) is or are taken.

All and some is equivalent to—One and all: what Chaucer elsewhere calls “the somme and singularities,” summam et singula. Some is usually pref. to time, where, what, &c.

Go. Sum; A. S. Sum, eume; Dan. Somme; D. Som, sommegh, aliquis, quidam; from A. S. Sam-tan, to bring together, to assemble.

SOME, term. D. Saem; Ger. Sam. It denotes (Sk.) the quality, aliquid, qd. aliquantum tali qualitate imbutum. And Wach.—“In compositis adjectivatur a socio, similemque ei, cui annectitur, significat, sive substantivum sit, sive adjectivum;” and he instances,—Selstam, insolitus, raro similis; heilsam, (wholesale,) salutaris, saluti similis. And Some is same, and as a term. denotes the sameness or similarity, the coincidence or agreement; having some quality or degree, as venture-some, troublesome; similar to, like to, one who ventures, one who, that which, troubles.

SOMER, s. A sumpter-horse, (qv.)
**Berners. Holinshed. Fr. Sommer.*

SOMERSET, s. A leap, (accompanied by a turn over of the body.)

Sopra salto, which the Fr. have corrupted to Soubresaut, and the Eng. to Somersault, somersolt, summersaut, and then to Somersol.—Tooke. Cot. (In v. Sobresaut) writes it also Sobresault. In It. also called Salto mortale.

SOMNOLENCE, s. Somnolence,—sleepi-
-NIFEROUS. ness, disposition to sleep.
-NAMEUL-ISM. (Sluggish slumbering, Chau-
-IST. cer calls it.)

-ORIFIC. sonus; Gr. Tono-eu, intendere, to stretch or draw out (esp.) the voice

-IFEROUS. or sound, (qv.) Ab-Con-Dis-Re-sonant.

SOON, av. ad. Readily, quickly, speedily, early, in a short time; without delay, without stop or stay.
 Go. Suna; A. S. Sona; D. Seam; in Ger. Schwind, which directs us to Go. Swinthoon, A. S. Swithian, (dropping the n), valere, whence Swithe, valde, or valde, promptly, ocyus, promptly, readily, quickly. (See SWITH.) Soonly, (see in Dr. J.) is a misprint for so only.

SOOP, v. To sweep off or away; to clear out or away; to move with full sweep or away, like the train of stately robes,—like the course of wind or water.

**Beau. & F. Camden. Bp. Hall.*

A. S. Sweep-an, to sweep, or sweep, verre, ex-haurire.

SOOT, s. Soot may be smoke, sed or -Y. sodden together; condensed.

-IED. “When wood being burned in a chimney is dissipated by the fire into smoke and ashes, that smoke composes soot, which is so far from being any one of the principles of the wood, that you may, by a further analysis, separate five or six distinct substances from it.”—Boyle.

Sooty is (cons.) black.

Fr. Suye; D. Soet; Dan. Sood; A. S. Soot, sooth, which Sk. derives from A. S. Soth-an, Ger. & D. Sied-en, to boil, to seethe; but his reason is too remote.

SOOTE, ad. i. e. Sweet, (qv.)—**Chaucer, &c.*

SOOTH, or SOth, ad. s. v. Truth is that

-LY. which a man trooth or think-
-NESS. eth; and Soth or Sooth may be

-FAST. that which a man sayeth, af-
-FASTNESS. firmeth, assureth; surely be-
-SAW. lievea.

-SAY, s. Sothed, (Chaucer,)—verified.

-SAY-ER. Soth- or Soet-fast,—fast or firm
-ING. in truth.

To sooth-say, is—to tell or say the truth, to foretell or predict (the truth); gen. to foretell.—**Chaucer.*

A. S. Soth, true; sooth-ian, to affirm, to prove, to verify, or aver.—Som. Un-

SOOTHE, v. To assent to, to please,

SOOTH, s. flatter by assenting; to flatter;

-FUL.
-FULLY.

SOR

SORROW-FULNESS, distressing, afflicting.

-ING. Sore, the av.—Painfully,
-RY. distressingly, excessively.
-RILY. Sorrow,—Painfulness of
-RINESS. mental suffering; anguish, distress, affliction; vexation, painful regret.

"Sorrow is the direct opposite of joy. It expresses a mental suffering, under the privation of some good we actually possessed, or concerning which we entertained a pleasing expectation."—Cogan.

Spenser forms upon the ad. or past p. the v. To sore,—

To cause to be sore; also, to vex, to trouble.

Sorry,—Grievous, mischievous, causing grief or mischief; causing pain or regret; regretting; vexatious, troublesome; not worth the trouble, or pains; worthless, mean, poor.—Holland.

Sorrow, sorrowful,—A. S. Sor-ga, -falt; D. -he, -hewldigh; Ger. & Sw. Sorg; Dan. Sorrig. Sk. says of Sore, ad.—from A. S. Swar, suar; Dan. Suar; Dut. Swar; Ger. Schwer, gravis, molestus, difficilis: all, I believe, contracted from the L. Sorvus. Sore, the s. and Sore, the av. he refers to the ad.—Jun. has three Gr. origins, σῶρος, cumulus, ψαρά, scabula, or crispin, trahere.—Under the words Sorrow and Sorry, Sk. refers to A. S. sv. Sarian, sorgian, dolere, sorgian, curare, and to D. & Ger. Synonyma, but concludes all to be from the ad. Sore. Tooke thinks sorrow, sorry, sore, are one word, with one meaning, and by change of the characteristic y to e, are the past p. of A. S. Syrw-an, syrgwen, syrg-wien, to vex, to molest, to cause mischief. (See SHREW, SHREW.) In A. SORITES, s. "The word sorites denotes an heaping up together; the syllogism that bears this name contains, as it were, a heap of premisses, ranged in such a manner, that the attribute of the preceding becomes always the subject of the following, till the conclusion is formed, of the subject of the first of the premisses, and the attribute of the last of them reciprocally."—Crousaz.

Gr. Σορῆτις, from σῶρος, a heap, which Cicero considered to be equivalent to L. Acervalls, from acervus, a heap.

SORREL, s. A herb, so called from the sourness of its taste.

Fr. Sorel, sorelle; A. S. Sure, sower.—Sk.

SORT,* v. To issue, to come or bear, to direct, to an issue or event; to the issue or event, aimed at or expected to succeed; to tend.—Hollinshed, Drayton, &c.

Fr. Sortir, to issue, come or go forth. (See Men.) Probably a cons. usage of Sort, infra.

Sort, s. v. Lot, allotment, fortune, fate;
-ABLE. "Let Ajax draw the sort to
-AL. fight," (Shak. Tr. & Cr.) state
-ER. or condition, allotted or as-

-ILEGY.‡ which it is arranged, ranked,
-ILEGIOUS.‡ placed or classed; class or kind; degree, manner, form, or fashion.
To sort,—to have or take or give by lot;
to allot, to happen or befall.

To sort, or assort, (Fr. Sortir)—to arrange, separate, dispose, or distribute into destined classes or kinds, into orders; into their proper or peculiar kinds or species;
to adapt, to accommodate, to suit.

"Sortal from sort, as general from genus."—Locke.

wise, —one sod or sodden with drink,
drenched; an habitual drunkard.—Gower.
The Go. Sauht; A. S. Suht; D. & Ger. Sucht, a disease, a sickness; seuche, from siechen, aggrate. (See Sick.) Lye cites from P. T. v. 493,
"And therewith he caught a cardiale and a cold sot." Sotte (Fr. Sottise) in Gower, sotted priest, in Chaucer, &c., approach so close to a disease of the mind—a diseased or disabled state of mind—as to afford a conjecture that Eng. Sot, Fr. Sot, in their common application, have no other origin than
A. S. Suht,—unless we owe them to the A. S. Soothtan, the past p. of which is Sod. Men. derives from stollo. Sk. from exoticus, and Jun. from the

Chaucer.

Sk.—Swough, expon. Sound from A. S. Sweg-an, sonare. In Be. It. Souch or Swouch, and Sough.

SOUL,* s. All kinds of meats, besides bread and drink. Lanc. Soule.—Som.

*Warner. A. S. Suf, Sufte, Sufol.

SOUL, s. v. -LESS. Sufte, as equivalent to—the spirit, the breath of life; the animating or vital principle or power; an animated, intellectual or intelligent being.

Soul-sot (A. S. Sauwel-sceat, sauwl-sceat), confirm or amend.

Fr. Soulder; It. Saldare; Sp. Soldar, (to solder metal, q. solidar, to make solid.)

SOUND, s. v. Anciently written Somme.

-ING. "That which is conveyed into the -LESS. brain by the ear is called sound; though, in truth, till it come to reach and affect the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion. The motion, which produces in us the perception of sound, is a vibration of the air, caused by an exceeding short, but quick, tremulous motion of the body, from which it is propagated; and therefore we consider and denominate them as bodies sounding."—Locke.

As far as soundeth unto honestee,—as far as harmonizeth with, is in unison or concord with—honesty.—Chaucer.

To sound, sc. as a signal or token,—to direct, to betoken, to tend.

Fr. Son, sonner; It. Suono, sonare; Sp. Son,
sonar; L. Sonus. See SONOROUS. Mis-Re-Out-Un-

SOUND, v. s. To prove, try, feel, search

-ER. —the depth or bottom of.
-ING. Sound,—a bay or firth (sinus), the -LESS. Gloss. to G. Douglas says, "is any great indraught of the sea betwix two headlands, where there is no passage through, as the entrance into the Baltic between Denmark and Norway is eminently called." (Between two head-lands,
i. e. dividing, separating them.) Wach rejects this etym. without reason.

Sound of a fish,—the swimming bladder.
A. S. Sund, natatio, is probably from the
A. S. v. Swimman. The pool of Siloa (natatoria) is in the Go. version, Swumma.

A soud, (Fr. Sonde), is also—a probe.
A. S. & Dan. Sund, mare, fretum, vadum. Fr.
Sond-e, -er; Sp. -ar,—to prove, try, feel, search the depth or bottom of. A. S. Sundrian, sundrian, (to sunder) is to separate, to divide, to distinguish;
and, cons. to discriminate, to investigate, to examine; and hence (as Cot.)—as above.

SOUND, ad. Whole, wholesome; healed

-LY. or healthy; robust, strong; fixed
-NESS. or fast. Sound is also used as equivalent to sane;—wise, judicious.

A. S. & Ger. Sund, gesund; D. Gesund; Sw.
& Dan. Sund. Wach. refers to Gr. Σω, and L.
Sanus. Ihre to L. Sanus only. In A. S. it is also
Sund-full, gesund-full, integer, sanus, prosperus.
It may be from A. S. Sunder, divisus, distinctus, divided, distinct or separate, sc. from all other;
and, cons. entire, whole. Un-

SOUR, ad. v. To trouble, to distress; to
-ISH. be or cause to be—harsh, unpleas-
-LY. sing, unkind; morose, severe.
-NESS. Sour, app. to the taste, is equivalent to acid; and L. Tristis is so used.

Dan. Sour; A. S. Sur. Sour is probably the same word as Sors. (See Tooke, 8vo. ed.) A. S.
Sorgian, tristare, constistare. Be-Inter- Un-

SOURCE, s. That from which any thing rises or springs, takes its origin; the origin or beginning, the spring or fountain;
the rise. See SOURCE, infra.

Fr. Sources, sources.—Men. thinks from Sourgir, (L. Surgere.) to arise. It has probably proceeded immediately from It. Sors or sors, pret. per. of Sorgere, to arise, to spring. Re-

SOURDE, v. -en, † v. To arise, to raise; to spring, to issue; to have or take its source.—Chaucer. †Fabyan.

Fr. Sourde, from sourgir, L. Surgere, to arise.

SOUSE, v. s. Also written Soss.

To salt, or immerge, steep, sink, or soak in salt water; to immerge, plunge, throw into any liquid.

To souse, (Ger. Sausen),—strepitum edere, from the sound of wind, or of falling water, (Wach.); it may be of any thing falling, plunging, splashing, into water; and thus,—

To dash against, to plunge or make a plunge; to throw or fall precipitately.

SOUTH, s. ad. South, geographically,—
-ERN. the point at which the sun is

-ERLY, or seen by us at mid-day.

-ERNLY. Southing sun, (Dryden),—ap-

-LY. proaching the south, i. e. mid-

-WARD. day.

Sieden, metuare, fervere; A. S. South-an, to soothe.
This is adopted in the Dict. of Men.; and Tooke considers South to be the past p. of A. S. v.
South-an.

SOUVENANCE, s. Recollection, remembrance, memory.—Spenser.

Fr. Souven-ir, -ance; It. Irre, to remind or remember. Men. derives from sub-venire, to suc-cure, to occur, to come into, sc. the mind or memory.

SOW, s. An animal. See SWINE.

SOWLE, v. To sowle one by the ears, (Lincolnshire),—to pull by the ears as dogs pull swine.—Grose. The word is common in Nottingham, and other parts northerly, as well as in Suffolk.—See Moor's Suffolk Words. I believe (says Sk.) from sow, to seize and pull by the ears, as dogs do (sowen) swine. This Ray adopts.

SOY, s. "I have been told that soy is made partly with a fishy composition, and it seems most likely from the taste: tho' a gentleman of my acquaintance, who was very intimate with one that sailed often from Tonquin to Japan, from whence the true soy comes, told me, that it was made only with wheat, and a sort of beans mixt with water and salt."—Dampier.

See EPAULET. Fr. Epaule; It. Spalla.

SPALT,* ad. Spales, or epalls, are chips; and spalt, (Ger. Spalten), is split,—easily split, split, or severed, into small parts. See SPLIT and SPILL.—Holinshead.

SPAN, s. v. A span is usually restricted SPANKE, v. to—a short extent (of space or —ER. time).

To span, (formed upon the s.) is to stretch or draw out, to extend, to expand; to measure—by extension, sc. of the hand; to mete or measure; to stretch round, to embrace.

Span-newe,—see SPICK AND SPAN.

Spank, v., Spanker, s.—common words in the north of England. To move with long spans or strides,—at a rapid pace.

D. & Ger. Spann-e, —en; It. —a; Sw. Spana; Dan. Spand; Fr. Epan; A. S. Span, spannan, to measure by spans, i. e. by the hand extended from the thumb to the little finger.—Som. Also, he adds,—to stretch out, to knit or tie straight; whence our spanning of an house, as also of a cart wheel. Sk. suggests, doubtfully, Ger. v. Spannen, tendere, extendere; and Tooke thinks a Span is merely the past tense, and therefore the past p. of A. S. Spin-an, to spin, to extend, or stretch out; to draw out.

SPANG, s. SPANGLE, s. v. Any thing shining, sparkling, glittering, (small bits of bright, shining, metal.)

A. S. Spange, ge-spang; D. Spanghe; Ger. Spange; Sw. Spann,—all explained to mean—fibula, a button (of metal). D. Spenghel, spanghe, emblem; and derived from span, to stretch, to draw. But Tooke asserts spange (see SPICK AND SPAN) to mean any thing shining, though he produces no authority; we certainly so use it. Be—

SPANIEL, s. v. A kind of Dog, introduced from Spain.

A Spanish dog, or breed of dogs; very docile and fond;—hence, Spaniel is used for a fawning, obsequious person.

It. Can di Spagna; Fr. Espagnuel.

SPAR, s. v. To stop, close or shut up, to make fast.

A spar,—that which fastens; usually a bar, or beam.

to punish, hurt or injure; or from the severity of punishment, to forgive.

Spare, ad.—abstinent, scanty, lean, poor.

Spare time, &c.—time to spare; i. e. to withhold or withdraw from one purpose, and bestow upon another.—Holland. †Sidney.

A. S. Spar-lea; Ger. —en; Sw. —a; Dan. —er; D. Sparren. Itre and Sk. from Parcare; Wach. prefers Waren, to guard. It is probably a consequential application of Spar-as, to shut up, to keep fast or safe. Un—

SPARK, v. s. To scatter, to spread, to —ISH. throw about; to throw out, to —FUL. shoot out, to eject or emit, to —LE, v. s. disperse, sc. small particles of —LER. light; any bright particles, as

—LET. of wine, &c. Hence, to glitter, —LINESS. to shine, brightly, brilliantly;

—LING-LY. in bright or brilliant lustre,

—NESS. met. with animation or vivacity.

Sparkle, (spark-dat),—the dim. of Spark.

To sparkle,—to spread, to scatter, (sc. a navy or army, a rumour or report,) is of common occurrence in old writings, from Fabyan to Beau. & F.: “The Danes prepared a navy, but it was sparkled,” “Serle, yoman of the robys to King Richard, sparkled rumora.”—Leland. “He gaderid (the Saxons) that were sparkled abroad.”—Fabyan. “All his forces sparkled.”—Beau. & F.

A spark, met. — a glittering, showy, person.

A. S. Spars, sparsc; D. Sparch, sperschelen, spargers, dispersers; to scatter, to disperse. See SPEAK.

SPARROW, s. A bird.

Go. Sparus; A. S. Spearus; D. Sparre; Ger. Spar; Sw. Sparf; Dan. Spur. In Fr. Espervier; It. Sparviero; Low L. Sparvrisse, is a Spar-hawk, or Sparrow-hawk. The L. (Voss. de Vit. lib. II.) derives from Ger. Sparier, and this so called, as of Spar-er; that is, spreading its wings far, procul spargens pennas. Sparrow, anciently written Sparus, A. S. Spearus, may be from A. S. Spyr-ian, to search after, from the active disposition of the bird.

SPARSE,* v. To scatter, to spread.

SPAVIN, s. v. A disease in a horse.

Fr. Epaucen, (spavin); It. Spavino, -ino. Sk. thinks from L. Sparmus. See SPASM.

SPAW, s. A mineral water, so called from Spe, in Germany.

SPAWL, v. s. -ING. To throw out, (sc. the moisture of the mouth.)

From D. Spewen; Ger. Speyen, spuere, (Sk.); or from A.S. Spætlan, dim. of Spæt-an, to spit, (qv.)

SPAWN, or SPEAN, v. s. -ER. To throw forth, to eject.

Spean,—that which ejects or emits, sc. milk, nourishment.

Spawn,—that which is thrown forth, ejected or emitted. App. met. contemptuously, revilingly.

The eggs (Sk.) of fishes; from D. Spene, succus, lac muliebre. A.S. Spæne, the teats or spænes of females, esp. a cow.—Som. To spæne a child, (Ray), is to wean it; that is, keep it from the spæne or breast. Spæne is perhaps from A.S. Spæman; D. Spærmen; Ger. Speyen, to spew.

SPAY, v. s. A spay,—the young male of the red deer in its third year is so called by Holinshed.

Castrare feminam, (Sk.) from L. Spado; Gr. ἔραβη, from ερα, trahere, to extract or draw out. See TO SPAY.

SPEAK, v. To utter, sc. sounds; to utter, to enounce or pronounce articulate sounds,—the tongue language.

SPEECH. To talk, to discourse, to converse; to address in words or language, to accost; to announce, to make known, to declare, to proclaim, to pronounce.

Speakable,—that may be spoken (Ascham); that can or may speak (Milton).

Holinshed. A.S. Spæcan, and also spæc-an; D. Spreek-en; Ger. Sprecken; Sw. Sprika, fari dicere. Some etymologists have supposed from Bræchen, rumper, to break or burst forth. It has, perhaps, the same origin as A.S. Spærce, spærce, a spark; D. Spærce-elen, to throw forth. Be-For-En-Mis-Over-Out-Re-Un-

SPEAR, s. v. The A.S. Speare, D. Spærre, is a stake, (sudes,) and seems to be merely a spar, a stake or bar, first -y, ad. used to spar or shut up with, then formed into a weapon of defence or offence, and for that purpose sharpened at the point, (sudes præcutæ.)

To spear,—to pierce or strike with a spear, or lance.

Speares, i.e. spears-men, or men armed with spears.—Holinshed.

A.S. Spærre; D. Spærre, spærre; Ger. Sper; Dan. Spar; L. Sparus; Low L. Sparro, which Festus calls—a javelin of very small size, so named quod spargitur. Servius describes it to be—telum rusticum in modo pedis recurvum. Roquefort has the Old Fr. Spare, a sort of dart.

SPICK AND SPAN NEW. “In D. they say,—Spickspelder nieuws. And Spyker means a warehouse or magazine. Spit or Spel means a spindle; Schiet-spoel, the shuttle-thrower. In D. therefore, Spickspelder-nieuws, means new from the warehouse and the loom. In Ger. they say,—Span-nieu, and Funchel neu. Spange means any thing shining; as Funchel means to glitter or sparkle. In Dan. Funchelinge; in Sw.

Spitt, spangande ny. In Eng. we say,—Spick and span new, Fire new, Brand new. The two last speak for themselves; Spick and span new meaning, shining new from the warehouse." So far Tooke. They also say Brand-new and Vier new in Dutch. The Ger. etymologist Wach. and the Sw. Ihre, give a different account. Wach. is fanciful enough; he says—Span means novus; and, deriving it from Spenen, to milk, he thinks Span-new may be—new, like the first milk after calving. Ihre,—that Spangande is from Spaan, a segment; and that the expression means—as new as a chip just cut. Jun. thought the expression borrowed from the fuller's art—unfolding, extending, and smoothing his clothes on a machine.

SPRAWL, v. -ING. To spread about; to move with the limbs spreading, or thrown out; to throw or toss about, widely.

Sprawl, the dim. of Spread, (qv.):—spraddle, spraddle, sprawl.

SPRAY, s. App. to—The little twigs or shoots at the extent of a branch or bough; also,—to small drops of water scattered or dispersed, by the wind or the dashing of the waves.

As Stray and Straggle (corrupted into Stroll) are of the same origin with Straw or Strew, so Spray and Sprawl (corrupted from Spraddle) may have one origin, viz. the v. Spradan, to spread.

SPREAD, v. s. To extend or stretch out, -ER. to expand or lay open; to broaden -ING. or widen; to lay over, stretch -INGLY. over, a wider or broader space; to pass or move over, a wide or extended surface; to dilate, to diffuse; to divulge, to publish.

D. Spreden, spreyden; Ger. Spreden; Sw. Spida; Dan. Spred-er; A. S. -æn, extendere, expandere. Be-De-Over-

SPRENT,* ad. Sprinkled; scattered.

**Wiclif* to Spenser.

Sprenged, sprengd, spreynd, sprent. See SPRING, and SPRINKLE. Be-

SPRIG, s. A small shoot, sc. of a tree: it is also used as L. Stolo, (see STOLIDITY), and as the Eng. Imp.

A. S. Spec, a twig, a branch, a spring.—Som. Spec seems clearly from A. S. Spec-an, to utter or put out. See SPROUT.

SPRING, s. v. To rise, or arise, or raise; -ER. to come forth, as water or seed from the ground; to proceed or cause to proceed, to produce; -Y. to have or give their source, origin or beginning; to issue

SPRINGE, s. v. or shoot forth, as water from a fountain or jet; to start, to leap.

-LET.† Spring, s. (as the v.) also—the time or season when general vegetation begins; the vernal season; each shoot of vegetation, a plant shooting or germinating.

Springe,—a springle, a springing snare or gin; a snare.

Sprenging, (Wiclif: "By obedience and sprenging of the blood of Jesus Crist," 1 Pet.) is in the Vulgate,—Aspersio. See SPRINKLE.

A spring is also app. to—any thing elastic, i. e. to any thing which, when stretched or pressed, rises or returns again; to an elastic body, an elastic force or power.

Springal, met.—a shoot; a youth. Also, —an engine of war for shooting by force of a spring. Fr. Espringalle.

Carew. †W. Scott.

D. Springhen; Ger. -gen; Sw. -ga; Dan. -ger; A. S. Sprungan. Over-Out-Up-

SPRINKLE, v. s. -ING. To throw forth in small particles, in drops; to cover with small particles or drops; to scatter, to asperse.

D. Sprenghen, ghelen, halen; Ger. -gen, -ken; Sw. -ga; A. S. Spwang-an, besprangan, spargere; spwang-an, minutim spargere:—merely a consequential usage of Spwang-an, to spring, to throw or shoot forth; to throw or cast upon, to spurt forth upon. Be-

SPRIT, v. i. e. Spirit, to sprout, to throw out.

SPRITE, s. v. Also written Spright, -FUL. Sprightful, &c.

-FULLY. Sprite is — a contraction of

-FULNESS. Spirit. It has been common

-LESS. to write Spriteful, and not

-LY. Spiritful,—full of spirit, life,

-LINESS. animation, vivacity, ardour,

-ING.* vigour. Sprightly also belongs to this contracted form:—Lively, animated, brisk, active, ardent, vigorous.

Sprited,—haunted as by a sprite.—Stevens. **Shak*.

SPROUT, s. v. To shoot out, to cast forth, (to spurt, qv.)

Sprouts, in Gardening, are the shoots from the stem of the vegetable after the head is cut off; then app. to—

Young plants before they have headed.

D. Spriut-e, -en; Ger. Sprou, spriessen; A. S. Sprouit, spraut, past p. of Spryt-an.

SPRUCE, ad. v. Smart, trim; smartly -LY. or trimly decked or dressed.

-NESS. Sk.—from Fr. Prous; and Prous from L. Probus, or Probatius. Jun. says, the well-fed and strong are called—spruce and lusty young fellows, from A. S. v. Sprytan, to grow, to spread. Mins.—from L. Parus.

It was the custom of our ancestors, on especial occasions, to dress after the manner of particular countries. Certain gentlemen, who adopted that of Prussia or Spruce, seem, from the description of it in Hall, to have been arrayed in a style, to which the epithet Spruce, according to our modern usage, might have been app. with perfect propriety. "They were apperilyed after the fashion of Prussia or Spruce."—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 1. Prussian leather, (corium Prusianum), is called, in Baret, by the familiar name of Spree.

SPRUNT, *ad.* v.† -LY.†* Sprunt, the ad.—sharp, keen; hard and short as a spur.

To sprunt,—to throw out spurns, or spurs; to spring forwards or outwards.

Spruntly,—sharply, like any thing sharp, brisk, trim, smart.

**H. More*. †Somerville. ‡B. Jonson.

Sprunt is probably, by mere transposition of the r, spurn'd, spurnt. A spurn in Holland (or as it is now more usually written—a spur) is any sharp, hard, projection. See BRUAN.

SPUD, s. is (probably) a small spade. See SPIT.

SPUME, s. v. The foam or froth, spit or -KOUS. thrown up (to the surface), by -OUS. liquids, fluids, &c.

-Y. It. Spuma, -dre; Sp. Espuma, -ar; Fr. Ecume, -er. Ecumer is mer,—to pour, as a fleet of warlike ships, the sea. Our v. in all the examples found, is written, Spoom. L. Spuma, from spuere, to spit or spew (A. S. Spewian). De-

SPUNGE. See SPONGE.

SPUNK,* s. Any thing shining, fiery, easily kindled or inflamed; fierceness, spirit, mettle.—**Brown*.

Spunk, or Spunk, is a common Sc. word,—also used in the northern parts of England. The expression—"He has some spunk in him," is equivalent to "He has some mettle or spirit in him." The opinion of Dr. Jamieson is far from satisfactory: he supposes the first letter of the D. Foncke, a spark, to be changed into p, and then the letter s to be pref. The D. Spanghe, Ger. Spange, A. S. Spenge, spong, and Eng. Spang, are nearer in their form, and as near in their signification.

SPUR, s. v. A goad, a prick; met. that -RIER. which goads, incites, stimulates; -RING. an incitement, a stimulant: also -LESS. app. to any sharp, hard, stiff or sturdy, projection.

Spur-royal, or -ryal,—a gold coin. D. Spur-e, -en; Dan. -e, -er; Ger. Sporn, spornen; A. S. Spors, from A. S. Spir-tan, to search after, to follow, to pursue; and, cons. to urge on, goad on, the pursuit. See SPURN, SPRUXT.

SPURGE, s. -ING. A Plant.

Spurging,—clearing out; cleansing. Fr. Esपुरge,—a plant of purgative qualities; Spurger, L. Purgare, to purge or cleanse out; D. Spurgie.

SPURIOUS, ad. Of unknown, unsettled -LY. parentage or origin; illegitimate, -NESS. counterfeit.

It. & Sp. Spurio; L. Spurius, perhaps from Gr. Ξυρπος, spurio seminis.

SPURN, s. v. To kick; to strike at, knock or dash; to push against; to push away; to reject, cast or throw off or away,—indignantly, contemptuously, scornfully.

Spurn, s.—see SPRUNT: "Many small strings and petio spurns shoot out of the sides."—Holland. Plinia.

A. S. Sporn-an, spurnan, seems formed from sporn, past p. of Spir-tan, (see SPURN); Sporn-en, sporn, or spurn, and to be app. cons.—as above. Up.

SPUTATION, s. -TIVE. Sputative,—that can or may spit; disposed or inclined to spit, (qv.) L. Sputum, spit or spittle.

SPUTTER, v. To throw as if spitting. See SPATTER.

SPY, v. s. SPIAL. To search; to look, to keep a look out, to observe; to see, to discover, to detect.

Dan. Spelder; D. Splen, spouren; Ger. Spacher, spewren; A. S. Spyr-tan, to search or seek. A. Es. Un-

SQUAB, s. -BISH. The application appears to be—Any thing full fed, unwieldy, inert, lumpish—as a quab, or squab.

Squab, or Quab, (qv.) is an unfledged bird, a nestling; and may be so called from its quavering action, when fed by the parent.

SQUABBLE, s. v. A noisy, clamorous, squalling, strife or contention; a contentious, quarrelsome, wrangle, brawl or brabble. See SQUALL.

SQUADRON, s. v. A number of men, ships, &c. arranged in a square. Now app. to—a number, a division of men or ships, without reference to the form.

Fr. Escuadré, -on; Sp. -a; It. Squadroné. All (Sk.) from L. Acies quadrata, a square troop.

SQUALID, ad. -LOD. Covered, over-spread, over-grown, with filth or dirt, with foulness; filthy, dirty, foul.

It. Squallido, -ore; L. Squalidus, -or; Squalus, either from the Gr. Κηλίς, macula, or from εὐάλ-λος, dry, (scaly, qv.) because (Voss.) dryness causes roughness.

SQUALL, v. s. -Y. To utter a harsh, shrill noise, clamour or cry.

A squall of wind,—a howling, roaring, (rush or gust of) wind. See GALE; from which a squall differs in the suddenness of its beginning and shortness of its continuance.

A squall seems to be a cry at full stretch; and Squalling in Fuller ("Going out squalling with his feet,")—stretching or sprawling out.

D. Schella; Ger. Schall, schallen; Sw. Squalla; from A. S. Gielan, to yell, ululate, stridere, fremere. See SQUALE.

SQUAME, s. -OUS. Scaly; or covered with scales.

*Chaucer. It. Squam-a, -deo; L. Squama.

SQUANDER, v. -ER. To dissipate or disperse; to scatter, to spend.

To diminish wastefully, profusely; to lavish.

Sk. suggests Ger. Verackwenden, disipare: Schwenden, schwinden, deficiere, perdere—it may be from A. S. Wan-tan, to diminish, be or cause to be less, to wane.

SQUARE, v. s. Sometimes written Squire.

-NESS. Square is—A space enclosed within -ER. four sides; four equal sides at right angles to each other: then app. to—equality; equal portion or proportion, equal measurement; regularity, rule, conformity or adaptation to rule. To square, (met.)—

To admeasure, to apportion, to regulate; to conform, to adapt, to accommodate, to suit.

To square is also, cons. to broaden; to set out broadly, in a position or attitude of offence or defence, (see quarrer), of defiance; to put on, to take or assume a hostile position or appearance; to confront hostilely; to oppose, resist, withstand.

Fr. Esquierre, a square mile; Fr. Esquarré, -er; It. Squadrato, -raro; Sp. Esquadrado, -rar; L. Quadrare, from Quatuor. See QUADRANT. Un-

SQUASH, s. v. -ER. i. e. Quash, (qv.) Squash, by Shak. (W. Tale,) is app. (met.) to a soft, infirm being, easily squeezed, compressed, crushed: by Boyle—to a pom-pion of the same nature: by Swift—to the noise made by falling into water; the dash or splash.

"Ecraseur,—a crusher, squasher, or beater of things flat by hard pressing them."—Col.

Fr. Quasneur, a squasher. See SQUERE.

SQUAT, v. s. Cowering, stooping; gen. app. to the posture of sitting with the legs drawn under the body—on the heels. Cons.—short, broad.

It. Quatto, squatto,—hush, close, still, lurking. Acquattare, to hide or squat as a hare doth.—Florio. Perhaps (Sk.) from L. Quietus. Men.—from L. Captare, borrowed from the cowering posture of bird-catchers. Sk. thinks Squat app. to any thing short, broad, sturdy, is squared, from Quadratus. There seems little occasion for two words.

SQUEAK, v. s. -ING. To utter a sharp, shrill sound.

To squeak, and to quack, (like a duck,) and also the It. Squittire, to squeak or cry as a parrot, Sk. thinks are all formed from the sound. The Sw. Squacka, Ibre suggests may be from the A. S. Sweg-an, sonare, tinnire.

SQUEAL, s. Squeal seems app. to a noise or cry less loud than squall, (qv.)

SQUEAMISH, ad. i. e. Qualmish, (qv.)

-ISHLY. *Chaucer.

-ISHNESS. -OUS. *

SQUEASY, **ad.* -INESS,† i. e. Queasy, (qv.)—*Dryden. †Hammond.

SQUEEZE, v. s. -ING. To press, to compress; to oppress, to bear heavily or oppressively upon.

A. S. Cweosan, terere, conterere, contundere, premere, elidere, to crush, to bruise, to squeeze, to burst asunder.—Som. Un-

SQUELCH, *v.* s.†* To subdue, to beat down, to crush.—*Beau. & F. †Hudibras. Perhaps formed upon A. S. Cweall-an, to quell.

SQUENCH, v. i. e. Quench.

SQUIB, s. Any thing thrown; a missile firework; any thing emitted or projected; a flash, a spark; (met.) a flash of humour; a lampoon, a slight satire (a quip); a flashy person, one of mere noise.

Squibs, ignes misiles, from Ger. Schieben, to shove, to thrust or force forward, to propel, to project.—Sk. (See SHARP.) Wach. says—the s. Scheibe is app. to various things that may be easily moved.

SQUILL, s. -ITIC. "Squilles or sea-onyons."—Holland.

Fr. Squille-s; It. -s; L. Scilla; Gr. Σύλλα.

SQUINANCY, **s.* A disease, also written -ANCE,† Quinsy, (qv.)

-SIE,‡ *Holland. †North. ‡Bp. Taylor.

Fr. Squin-ance; It. -anzia; Sp. Esquinancia; L. Synanche; Gr. Συναγχή, (syn, and αγχή, to strangle.)

SQUINT, v. ad. Looking in one line of

-ER. direction, and going in another,

-ING. as if wishing to shun; looking

SQUINY, **v.* indirectly, awry, obliquely.

Squint, s. is in common use.—Shak.

Squint and Aquint are perhaps the same word as Astant, awkward, of which Tooke says,—“Probably the pis. Archimed. acchini; in D. Schwin, wry, oblique; Schwinen, to cut awry; Schwinne, sloping, wry, not straight.” A. S. Scuntian, ascuntian, to shun, is probably the root of all.

SQUIRE, s. v. A shield bearer or wearer:

-Y. —bearer, in the service of baron or

-LY. knight;—wearer, in distinction of his own rank.

See ESQUIRE. Fr. Escu-ier; Sp. -ero; It. Scudiero; L. Scutiger, or scutifer, from scutum, a shield, and gerere, or ferre, to wear or bear.

SQUIRR, **v.* To squir, is to scur,—to cut SQUIRT, s. v. along, to cause to cut along: -ER. to move as any thing cutting through the air; (to shoot, sheer away.)

Squirt (squirmed, squird, squirt)—is that which is scurred or sent cutting along. To squirt, (formed upon the s.)—

To send, to cast, to eject,—(cutting through, dividing the air.)

A squirt, (the instrument,)—that which casts, ejects, &c.—*Spectator.

A. S. Scyr-an, to cut, to divide. See SHIRE, SHERR, SCUR.

SQUIRREL, s. “A goodly broad bushy tail they have, where with they cover their whole body.”—Holland. Plinius.

Fr. Escarieu, escureuil, from L. Sciurulus, dim. of sciurus; Gr. Σκουρορ, from σκια, a shade, and ορρα, the tail.

SQUITTER-BREACH, **s.* A dim., formed from A. S. Scyt-an, to shoot, to throw.—*Beau. & F.

STAB, v. s. -D-ER. A stab seems to be—

The wound inflicted (by a staff-sword or) by a short, piercing, weapon or instrument; a keen, piercing, blow or wound.

Sk.—perhaps from D. Staven, to fix, or from Ger Stab, baculus, (a staff or staff.) A. S. Staf-sword, D. Staf-sweerd, stion-dolon, a staff with a sword within it; a staff-sword, as Verstegan renders it,—saying, that it was a short spear or javelin, the iron whereof was long, and somewhat after the manner of a blade.—Som.

STABLE, ad. s. That can or may stand,

-BLENESS. or stay; steady or steadfast;

-BLISH,* v. strong to stand; standing;

-BLISHMENT,† holding, keeping fast or firm;

-BIL-IMENT,‡ ly; confirmed, fixed, settled.

-ITY. *Chaucer. Gower. †Sir T.

More. ‡Bp. Taylor.

Fr. Sta-ble; It. -bile; Sp. Estable; L. Stabilis, from stare, to stand, (the passive term. used actively.) In-Un-stable. E-establish.

STABLE, s. v. A standing or station for -ING. cattle, &c., or a place where cattle -RESS. stand. See STALL.

Fr. Establ-s; Sp. -ta; It. Stalla; L. Stabulum, a stando.

STACK, s. v. Any thing or things raised

-AGE,* s. or set up, heaped or piled up; e.g.

-ING. stack of hay, wood, chimnies.

From the D. & Ger. Stacken, to stich, (Sk.) past p. of the v. Stig-an, to stye, (qv.) to raise.—Tooke.

STADDLE, s. v. That on which any thing stands or has stood; the bottom, the foundation; any thing that remains standing, as young trees left uncut, and (Spenser) a staff cut from such trees.

A. S. Stath-ol, (stad-dal), stads, a place, a standing place.

STAD-HOLDER, s. -SHIP. The Stad-holders were stewards or vicegerents to the various princes who possessed the sovereignty.

D. Stad-houder, locum tenens, one holding the stead or place (sc. of another).

STAFF, s. A staff is—Any thing stiff,
STAVE, s. v. strong or firm—a prop or sup-
STAFF-ISH. port; a stick used to walk with;
 -IER.*
 used as a badge of office. See TIP-STAFF.

A staff of officers,—a set or established number.

A staff or stave, in Poetry or Music,—a set, established, regular series or succession of verse or lines.

To stave,—to do any thing with staves;
 to make with staves, to part or fence off (with staves); to strike with, to break or separate, to burst through—the staves.

Hudibras.

D. Staf, stave; Ger. Stab; Sw. Staf; Dan. Stav;
 A. S. Stæfe. Wach. thinks they may be formed from Batten, to beat, or from Stappen, to step, to go. It may be from A. S. Stif-an, rigere, to be or cause to be stiff. Stefanus, institutore, to institute, to ordain, to establish, to set, or fix.

STAG, s. An animal.

Sk. suggests Stig-an, to stick, pungere, from the sharp horns. Jun.—the Gr. Σταγ-ειν, to go in order. Tooke believes it to be "the past p. of
 A. S. Stig-an, to raise: the raised and lofty head of the animal being the most striking circumstance at the first sight of him." "Mighty herds, with high point'd heads."—Drayton. "The stag bore up his branching head."—Milton. See STY.

STAGE, s. We apply Stage—1. To any
 -ED, ad. elevated place; to scaffoldings or
 -LY, buildings raised for various pur-
 -ER, poses: 2. To corporeal progress,
 -ERY.* as, At this stage of my journey; At this stage of the business; At this stage of life: 3. To degrees of mental advancement in or toward any knowledge, talent, or excellence; and formerly also as we now use story (of a house).—Tooke.

Stager,—one accustomed to act a part on the stage; an experienced performer or person.

Staged man, (Holinshed),—a performer on a stage.—Milton.

Stage, scena, Sk. thinks, may be from A. S.
Stig-an, ascendere, to climb, to rise or raise. Stage, in travelling, from L. Statio. And Tooke thinks both are the past p. of Stig-an, to stige, (qv.)

STAGGER, v. To stick, or cause to
 -ING, stick or hesitate—in the pro-
 -INGLY.* gress; to stay or stop; to shock,

STAGGERS, s. to shake the firmness of the step or standing; to interrupt, to break; to destroy the steadiness, constancy, uprightness, confidence; to move unsteadily, in-constantly; uncertainly, totteringly.

**Brown*.

D. Staggeren, to stagger, or, as written by Chancer and Froissart, to stakker, may be formed from Stach, past p. of Stick, hærere, hæitare.

STAGNANT, ad. Held or retained from

-ANCY, motion; still, calm, motionless,
 -ANTLY, inert.

-ATE, v. Fr. Stag-nant; It. stagnante; L. Stag- naus, from Stagnare, which Voss. derives from Gr. ερευνω, and this from ερευνω, continere, non sinere elabi, to hold or keep in; to stay, to prevent from flowing or moving. Re-

STAIN, v. s. To tinge, to dye, to sully;
 -ER. (met.) to sully with disgrace, disho-
 -LESS, nour, infamy; to disgrace, to dishonour.

**Stain* is formed from Distain, as 'Sdain from Diadain. See DISTAIN. Be- Un-

STAIR, s. Stair, (or, as Chaucer and Fabian write, Steyer), means—An ascender, —that which or that by which we ascend, go or come up, climb, mount. Also, "the stayres of stone," (Ezek. xxxviii.) steep places.—M. V.

D. Stig-ha, her; Ger. & Sw. Steg; A. S. Stig-er, from D. Stephan; Ger. Steigen; A. S. Stig-an, to stige, (qv.) to go up, to ascend.—Sk. And see Tooke.

STAKE, s. v. A stake in a hedge, stack or stuck there, to which beasts are fastened to be baited; i. e. any thing stuck or fixed in the ground for that purpose; a deposit, paid down or fixed to answer the event.
 Met.—a risk; any thing fixed or engaged to answer an event. To stake, formed upon the s.—

To do any thing with stakes; met. to pledge, to risk.

Stake, sudex; and Stake, pignus depositum, (Sk.)
 from To stick.—D. & Ger. Stehen; A. S. Stican; and Tooke,—the past p. of Stick, (qv.)

STALACTICAL,* ad. App. to—Dropping or dripping water—congealed; an icicle.—Derham.

Gr. Σταλακτικον, from σταλατ-ειν, stillare, to drop.

STALE, s. i. e. Stalled or ejected in the stall or stable.

D. & Ger. Stall-en; It. -àre, from Stabulum, quia quum recenter ventum in stabulum, quod stallum vocant Germani, tunc fere urinam solent emittere.—Scal. Jun. thinks D. Stel bier, vetus cerevisia et defæcata; Eng. Stale beer, originates from this source: but see STALE, infra.

STALE, ad. s. v. Exposed (sc.) till seen
 -LY, by every one; till become a common
 -NESS, sight or spectacle; till it has lost its youth, novelty or freshness; and hence,
 —old or aged, obsolete.

Stale, s.—any thing exposed, held out or offered, (sc. as a lure or enticement; a decoy, Fr. Estalon), any thing exposed to wear; much used or worn.

To stale,—to expose, to make public or common, old or obsolete; to wear out.

D. & Ger. Stal; A. S. Stal, stal, is a place,—a place in which things are exposed for sale. The D. Stallen, stallien; Fr. Estaler, la,—to set upon a stall, to expose unto the view (as Cot. expresses) of all passengers, comers, or customers.

STALK, v. s. -r. To move or go warily, or creepingly; to go with or behind (a horse painted on cloth, used to conceal and deceive, and called) a stalking horse; to walk as if on stilts, with lofty, stately steps.

Stalk, s.—the rising (stem of plants).

A. S. Stælc-an, to go warily, fairly, and softly; to stalk as fowls do: also,—to go on stilts.—
See. From Drayton, it appears that walking on stilts over ditches was the common practice, in pursuit of moor-fowl. G. Douglas uses Stalker for pastor agens telis.—Æn. 4. The A.S. v. Stale-an seems to have been formed upon the v. Stal an, (stal-ig-an, stal-g- or stale-an), to steal or creep upon; and the modern application to—lofty, stately walking, to have been derived from walking upon stilts. Stalk, s. Tooke thinks should be written Stawk, and that the l may have been introduced (sc. in Chaucer) for the sake of the rhyme to baikes; he concludes it to be the past p. of Stig-an, (to stye, qv.) to ascend, to climb. We now apply it only to plants; Chaucer, to the rounds, steps or stairs of a ladder.

STALL, v. s. Place, station; the place in -ING. which any thing stands, (horses, -ON. cattle;) any thing on or in which -AGE.* wares are placed, laid, spread for -ATION.† sale.

A stall is—part of the stable—each division in which an animal may stand: also, —the seat appropriated in the choir to certain ranks of the clergy.

To stall, gen. is—to place, to station, to stand. See INSTALL. And—

To stall, in Lincolnshire, (Sk.) and in other northern parts of England, is—to saltate; a met. from cattle fed in a stall.

Stallion (Holinshed) seems to be—a scion, a cutting, to be grafted or planted.

*A. Smith. †State Trials, 1529.

A. S. Stall, stal, appears to be the dim. of Go. Stads, A. S. Stad, (stad-dæl) and to be app. gen. to any place; so are D. & Ger. Stal, including L. Stabulum, a stable, (qv.) Fr. Stal is the stall of a shop or booth. D. & Ger. Stallen; A. S. Styllan, stabulare, in stabulo locare, to stall or stable, to stall oxen, or put them into a stall or stable; to feed, to fatten them. En-For- In-

STALLION, s. An entire horse.

Fr. Estalone; It. Stallone, quasi stabuli dominus, lord of the stable or stall, says Sk.; but Jun. and Ihre derive from A. S. Stal-an, salire, saltare.—Ihre, in v. Besprings.

STALWORTH,* ad. Cons.—Redoubted, brave or bold, strong, daring, violent, vehement.

R. Gloucester.—Stalward, -ly, -hed.

*Fabyan. Fairefax.

Sc. Stalwart. See Jamieson. A. S. Stalweorthe, or wyrthe, capiti dignus; worth the taking (stalc-ing) or seizing.—Som. See STAL.

STAMINA, s. App. to—The thread spun -ATED. by the Fates; the thread of life; -Eous. and hence perhaps our application to—the first principles of life; the threads or filaments of plants.

L. Stamen, à Stando, quod eo stat omne in tela velamentum.—Var.

STAMMEL,* ad. Whalley says,—“Stamel is a kind of red, inferior both in quality and price to scarlet;”—an interpretation evidently constructed to suit the passage in Jonson.

It may be Stamin, Fr. Estamine, from Stamen, (qv.)—a kind of woollen stuff.

*Beau. & P. B. Jonson.

STAMMER, v. To stumble, (sc. in -ER, s. speech.)—to speak lamely, with -ING. hindered or obstructed utterance or articulation.

Dan. Stam-mær; D. -sten, -ern; Ger. -maie, -maen; Go. Stamma, balbus, balbutiens; A. S. Stamer, stom-er, -etan, balbutire, titubare, vacillare lingua; also, mutire, to speak imperfectly, mutteringly.

STAMP, v. s. To strike down firmly with -ER. the foot, to impress or mark; to make -ING. or fix a mark, sign or impression; to press, force or beat down, to imprint; to form or fashion, (as metal stamp,) to designate or denote (a value—as to coin—for currency).

Fr. Estamp-er; Sp. -a; It. & Sw. Stamp-a; D. -en; Ger. -fen; Dan. -er. Benson has A. S. Stampe, pilum. Ihre suggests from A. S. Stapp-an, to step; to fix or set down the step; firmly, strongly, so as to impress or make an impression. En- In-

STANCH, v. ad. s. or STAUNCH, v. To -ING. stay or stop the current; to cease -ION. from flowing. Gen. to stay, to -NESS. stop; and hence the ad. stopped -LESS.* or stayed; steady, steadfast; firm, fixed, inflexible.

Stanchion, (Fr. Estanson.)—a prop or stay.—*Shak.

Fr. Estanc-her; Sp. -ar; It. Stagnare, from L. Stagnare, to stay, to stand, or stop from flowing. (sc. the blood, instar stagni.) Fr. Estancer, to stop or stay, to prop or uphold. See STAGNARY. Un-

STAND, v. App. to the position of the -ARD. human body.

-ER. To stand,—to be, to rest upon the -ING. feet in an erect position; distin- -ISH. guished from to lie, to sit, to kneel. -EL.* To be, or cause to be or become, in an erect, upright posture; to rest, to remain, to abide, to continue erect, firm, fixed—motionless—firm, secure; to stop, stay, cease, or cause to stop or stay, or cease from motion, from falling; to halt; to be or cause to be, to put or place, to stay, remain in, hold or keep, any place, position, state or condition; any way or path, course or direction.

Stand, used with prs., has various consequential applications: as, To stand by, or stand up, as assistant, friend, advocate, defender, coadjutor, —to assist, to befriend, to aid or abet.

To stand out, sc. in opposition or resistance, —to persist. It is also thus used as equivalent to other comps. of L. Stare. —To assist, to consist, to insist, to persist, to resist.

Standard, —a standard tree, (distinguished from a dwarf,) one that stands upon a tall trunk.—Standel, a dim.

A standard,—around which soldiers or others stand or place themselves.

A standard, (of measure, of fineness, &c.) —that by which quantity or quality is fixed or regulated, rated, estimated, valued.

Standish,—for pens to stand in.—*Fuller. Go. & A. S. Stand-an; D. -en, stæn; Ger. Stehen; Sw. Stas; Dan. Staan; L. Stare; Gr. ἵστημι; A. S. Stand-ard; D. -ard; Ger. -ard; Sw. -ar; Fr. Estand-ard; Sp. -arte; It. Standerda. Over-Out-Up. Also Circum-stance. In-stant.

STANG,* s. A pole, a long bar, post, shaft of cart, &c.; and (as Pole also is) app. to a measure of length.—Swift.

A. S. Stang, stang; D. Stanghe; Ger. Stang, a pole. It. Stänge, a bar or post, from A. S. Stang-an, to push into, to sting, (pungere), as L. Confus, from Gr. Kerain, pungere.

STANK,* ad. is probably a consequential usage of Stanch, as the Fr. Estanche,—stanchèd, slaked, quenched, quailed.—Cot.

"I am so stiffe and so stanck."—Spenser.

STANK, s. Fr. Etang,—a great pond, pool or standing water.—Cot. G. Douglas also uses this word, and the Gloss. derives it from L. Stagnum.

Ray calls it—"A dam, or bank to stop water." See STANCH, and STANK, supra.

STANNARY, ad. "They are termed stannery courts, of the Latine stannum, in English tyne; and hold plea of whatsoever action of debt or trespass whereto any one dealing with blacke or white tyne, either as plaintife or defendant, is a party."—Carew.

L. Stannum; Fr. Estain, tin, (qv.)

STANYEL, s. The first folio of Shak. (Twelfth Night) reads Stallion; Haumer changed it into Stanyel, the common stone-hawk, which inhabits old buildings and rocks. In the North called Stanchil.—Steevens. Holland calls it a Kestrill or Stannell; and Pliny says, "It scareth and terrifieth all other hawks."

STANZA, s. A pause or stay; a staff or stave, or set number of lines, at the end of which the metrical versification stays or stops, and resumes or recurs again.

Fr. Stance, a staff of verses, (Cot.); It. Stanza; Sp. Estancia; a staying place, dwelling place.

STAPLE, ad. s. -ER. A staple market,—an established market or port; a market or port established by law or ordinance; gen. a mart or market, an emporium, a place of resort.

A staple commodity,—a commodity, the trade in, or manufacture of which, is in any place (more than other) established, settled, regular, and, cons. there the principal or chief. Also, a commodity subject to the king's staple, or place established for paying imports.

From the old statute it appears that Staple was app. to a district; as, the Staple of Westminster, extending from Temple Bar to Tothill.—See Rastell. Hence the Staple granted to the Abbies. "He also graunted libertie of coyning to certayne cities and abbeies, allowing them one staple, and two puncheons at a rate, with certayne restrictions."—Camden.

Fr. Etape; D. Ger. & Sw. Stapel; the staple of a door, &c.; a staple mart or market. A. S. Step-el, -el, -ul, the staple of a door, &c. so called (Sk.) quia ostium stabilis et fulcit, because it props the door, and renders it stable, fixed, firm. Staple in all its other applications seems to have the same origin; i. e. stable, established. (D. Stapelen, stabilire.)

STAR, s. "Luminous bodies are such as
-RED. give light of themselves:
-LESS. such are the sun, and the -LIKE. fixt stars: they are called
-LIGHT, ad. s. fixt because they always -LIT, ad. keep the same distance one
-BY. from another."—Locke.

Star-lit is a modern refinement. See MOONLIGHT.

Go. Stairn; A. S. Stearra; D. Sterre; Ger. Stern; Sw. Sterna; Dan. Sterna; Gr. Astron. Wach. supposes from Ger. Steuern, to rule, (to steer), from the influence attributed to the stars in the government of human affairs. The A. S. Stir-an, to steer, to stir, to move, (Ger. Steuern), is probably the origin of our word Star; and the name may have been given to the glittering luminaries of the sky from their apparent perpetual motion or twinkling. Kilian says, (upon the authority of Becan,) that Sterre is the continual, the perpetual quivering (vibratio) which is peculiar to the stars, especially to those which, on account of their remote distance, are perceived continually to glitter. In-

STAR-BOARD, s. Som. calls it—The right hand or side of the ship. Kilian adds to this—quod nauclerus occupat, locus naucleri,—which the steersman occupies; the place or station of the steers-man or sterns-man.

A. S. Stearbord; D. Ster-boord, stuyr-boord.

STARCH, ad. s. v. i. e. Stark, (qv.)—h
-EDNESS. into ch.
-ER. Strong; firm, stiff. Starch, the
-LY. s.—That which strengthens, or
-NESS. stiffens. Starch, ad. (met.) is—stiff, formal, precise.

Starchness is not an uncommon word.

STAR-CHAMBER, s. A chamber com. so called, "eyther because it is full of windows, or because at the first all the roofe thereof was decked with images of starres gilted."—Smith. But Blackstone suggests that starr, in our ancient records, is a corruption of the Heb. word Shetar, a covenant; and that this chamber was appointed for the registry of "the starres or mortgages made to Jews."

STARE, s. v. -ER. To look or gaze eagerly or earnestly; with eyes thrown out or projected; cons. to throw out or up, to project; stand forth prominently to view, before the eye.

Go. Staurran; A. S. Starian; D. Sterrende ooghen, oculi regentes. Sterren, Ger. Starren, regere, dirigere, axis oculis intueri. Sw. Stir-ra, -na; Dan. -rer. Sterrende ooghen are probably stern eyes; i. e. moved, eyes moved or thrown open, or thrown earnestly upon the object. In Mir. for Mag. it is written "His cap borne up with staring of his heare." See STERN. Over-Out-

STARE, s. STARLING. A bird.

A. S. Star; D. Sterre, starre; Ger. Staar; Fr. Estorn-rus; Sp. -ino; It. Stordillo; L. Starnus, from Gr. Zrop-ain, sternere, quia se magna vi sternit humi ex alto.

STARK, ad. Strong; firm, confirmed, -LY. established,—to the utmost degree. -NESS. See STARCH.

A. S. Starc, steare; Ger. Stark; D. Stark; Sw. Stark. Wach. thinks Ger. Stark is from starren, rigere, to stiffen, (qd. starrig, stark.) Ihre and Kilian consider D. and Sw. to be equivalent to Eng. And see STURDY.

STARLING. See STERLING.

START, s. v. A start,—a motion or emotion; usually app. to a short, -ING. sudden, motion or emotion; -INGLY. short, sudden, actions; interrupted, returning at intervals; -LE, v. s. contraction, convulsion.

To get the start,—the first motion; to gain an advance or advantage.

To start,—to move or cause to move; to rouse, raise, or excite; to move suddenly, with contraction, convulsion, agitation, alarm.

Startle, the dim. of Start, is com. used when the motion arises from surprise, alarm, affright.

Sk. thinks it may be from A. S. Styr-an, move, commovere, (to stir, qv.) to move. Tooke,—the past p. Stirred, stir'd, stirt, stert, start, or start. G. Douglas writes Sturt; our old authors, Stert. A. Up-

STARVE, v. -LING, s. ad. To kill, to slay, to destroy: it is now com. restricted to—To destroy, to perish, with hunger or cold; to withhold or refuse nourishment or support.

D. Starven; Ger. -ben; A. S. Stearf-an, to die, or cause to die; to kill, to slay; to perish.

STATARY, ad. Steady, regular, or well -IAN. regulated; keeping rank; well -IANLY. disciplined.

L. Statarius, stationary, having or keeping their station or standing place.

STATE, v. s. App. to—All or any circumstances under which any thing stands, exists or subsists, or by which it may be affected; -EDLY. more esp. to—the rank or condition; the possessions or property; also to the general establishment of government; -ING. to persons of rank, of noble -IST. rank; the place or station, -ISTIC. the seat; the dress or ornament; the canopy. -ISTICAL. -ISM. STATESMAN. -SHIP.

Stately,—according to state or condition, rank or quality; to high rank, nobility, or majesty; hence—grand, pompous, majestic, magnificent.

To state,—to set forth the condition or circumstances under which any thing stands, exists or subsists; to set or place in order; to settle, arrange, regulate.

Statistic, (Fr. Statistique), is a word for which we are said to be indebted to a (lately) living writer. Statistics is app. to every thing that pertains to a state,—its population, soil, produce, &c.—*South.

Fr. Etat; It. Stato; Sp. -do, from L. Statum, past p. of Stare, to stand. See ETATE. En-In-

STATION, s. v. A stand or standing, a -ARY, ad. s. place, or position, situation, -ER. condition; stated place, or position. From the custom of standing at prayer, by the ancient usage of the Church, prayer-meetings were called stations.—Hooker.

Stationary,—pertaining to place or station; remaining, abiding, continuing in a place or station. Also pertaining to a Stationer, or seller of books, paper, and other articles used for writing, &c.

Sk. thinks Stationers are so called because they had their shops in one station or place; and cites St. Paul's Church-yard as an instance confirming his conjecture. It is not improbable that the name may have been given to the sellers of books, paper, &c. from the stalls or stations kept by them, esp. at fairs, as is still the case at Leipzig, Frankfurt, and other towns in Germany. Sheldon speaks of standing stationers and assistants at miracle markets, and miracle forges.—Miracles of Antichrist, p. 175. (And see Pegge's Anecdotes of the Eng. Lang.)

Fr. Station; It. -zione; Sp. Estacion; L. Statio, a station, a place to stand in. Stationer, (Sp. Estacionero), is the old name for a bookseller.—Dodgson.

STATUE, s. Statue, formerly also written -ED. and pronounced Statua, is app. -UARY, ad. s. to—an image, form or figure (of metal, stone, &c.) set up. -URE, s. of up. -URED.* Statue,—to the height of any one standing.—*Fuller.

Fr. Statue, -ure; Sp. Estatua, -ura; It. & L. Statua, -ura, from Statuere, and that from Statum, past p. of Stare, to stand.

STATUMINATE,* v. To set up, as a support, a prop; to support, to establish. *B. Jonson. Hale.

L. Statuminare, from Statuere, to set up.

STATUTE, s. A fixed or established— -ABLE. law, decree, judgment. -ABLY. In England, the written or statute -ORY. law is distinguished from the unwritten or common law.

Fr. Statut; It. -uto; Sp. Estatuto; L. Statutum, from Statuere, (from Statum, p. p. of Stare.) to set up, fix, establish. Con-De-In-Pro-Re-Substitute. And Un-statutable.

STEP, v. s. -PING. Step, the motion in walking, is—The (stying or) rising motion of one foot to pass before the other, over or above the other, backward or forward. Gen. (the v.)—

To move, to walk, to go; to ascend, to descend. And the s.—

Motion, path or passage; that upon which we step or set the foot; the distance moved at one time by stepping; gradation or degree; progress.

A. S. Steppan, steppan; D. Steppen, stippen; Ger. Stappen, -fen, gradi. Mis- Over-a corruption of Sted, when pre-MOTHER. fixed to a child, mother, &c. In Dan. are still written—"Sted-fader, sted-moder, sted-broder, sted-soster, sted-barn, sted-son, sted-dotter";—i. e. vice, loco, in the place of, in stead of, a father, a mother, a brother, &c. The A. S. Steop-child, Som. calls a fatherless child, an orphan; and Lye adduces various instances of Steop-child, which he interprets—orbus parente; and hence, it seems to have been inferred, that A. S. Step-an signified—orbare; but a child must be orphaned or deprived of one parent, before it can be in stead or in place of a child to another person. In Dan. it is also written Stief-moder, -fader, &c.; and in D. it is Stief-moder; Ger. Stieff-mutter; Sw. Styf-moder, which the etymologists have in general considered to be a stiff or harsh mother, father, &c.; and to meet the objection, that a stepson cannot be so called for the same reason, Thre supposes Stief to have been first app. to the mother, &c. and thence transferred to the children. Wach. thinks Ger. Stief and A. S. Steop to be both formed from A. S. Stow, locus:—and adds,—"Vide annon Stief-vater, sit vice-pater; stief-mater, vice-mater. Stief-son, vice-filius, sc. representatione aut substitutione." And so far he anticipates Tooke. And see Jamieson, in v. Gudsonne.

STEP, pref. Tooke considers Step to be -SON.

STER, term. The term. "Ster, unless I mistake, (Som.) in our words—Webster, Maulster, Seamster, Spinster, Gamester, Brewster, Drugster, plainly denotes (magisterium) mastery;" and he derives from A. S. Steor-an, to rule, to govern, to order, to direct,—in which Lye appears to concur. But the manner in which Som. has written these words, is a contracted form:—e. g. webster for webbester; spinster for spinnester; drugster for drugester, (now druggist), whence it may be suggested, that Ster is—Ester or Ister, and that it is compounded of—Es, ed, or et, and er, (es-et-er, contr. ester.) See ER, and YSTER.

STERCORATION, s. -ACEOUS. Of "ster-coration,—the sheeps-dung is one of the best; and next, the dung of kine; and thirdly, that of horses, which is held to be somewhat too hot, unless it be mingled. That of pigeons for a garden, or a small quantity of ground, excelleth."—Bacon.

Fr. Stercorin; L. Stercor-eus, -atlo, from stercus, dung, manure.

STERILE, ad. Barren; that cannot -ITY. bear or bring forth; opposed to -IZE,* v. fertile.—**Savage.*

Fr. Stéril-e; It -a, -ità; Sp. Estéril; L. Særitus, or Sterilis. Voss suggests that the ancient Latins may have had the v. Stereo, from Gr. Stereo, privare, and that thence Sterilis may have been formed. It may have come from Gr. Stereos, solidus, hard, solid, and thus be equivalent to the Eng. Barren, (qv.)

STERLING, ad. s. Sterling, met. in.—Of genuine standard; pure, unadulterated, unalloyed; of pure intrinsic goodness or value.

The sterlings of (the old) London-bridge may owe their name to the source ascribed to the word by Som. And, Pennant says, they were "designed for the preservation of the foundation pile;" i. e. to guide, direct, or steer the force of the current or other damage from them.

Som. derives from A. S. Steor-an, regere, gubernare, dirigere. Sterling money,—nostratum intellectu,—he asserts, is—nummus probus et legalis, good and legal; according to law, as fixed by law. Camden assigns a very different origin:—"In the time of his sonne King Richard the First, monie coined in the east parts of Germanie began to be of especial request in England for the puritie thereof, and was called Easterling monie, as all the inhabitants of those parts were called Easterlings, and shortly after, some of that countrie, skillfull in mint matters and allates, were sent for into this realme to bring the colne to perfection; which since that time was called of them sterling, for Easterling."

STERN, s. "That which is ster-en, ster'n, -AGE. stirred, i. e. the moved part of STERNSMAN, the ship, or that by which the ship is moved" (Tooke) or steered. See STIR, STEER, and STERN, infra.

Also app. to—the hinder part of any thing; the tail.

Holinshead uses Sterne as a v.: "Directing them which way to stern (i. e. to steer) their ships."

A. S. Stearna, steor-rather; D. Slier, stier-roer; Ger. Steur, steur-ruder. A-Pro-

STERN, ad. may be explained,—Moved, -LY. excited, roused, from a calm or -NESS. placid state; and, cons. fixed into a severe, harsh, forbidding aspect.

A. S. Sterne, sharp, severe, austere, cruel, stern. herce—Som. SK. derives from To stare; Jun.—from the Gr.; Serenius also refers to the v. To stare, (qv.) Tooke, that—a stern countenance is a moved countenance; moved by some passion. (See STERN, ante.) Wicli renders L. Austerus, (see AUSTERE), a stern man.

STERNUTATION, s. -TORY.* A sneezing medicine, or powder.—Col. **Brown.* L. Sternutare, to sneeze; Fr. Sternutatoire.

STERQUILINOUS,* ad. Dungy, dirty. **Howell.* L. Sterculinus, from stercus. See STERCO-RATION.

STERT, STERVE. See START, STARVE.

STEVEN, s. Instituted, announced or appointed time; hence, appointment. Unset steven, (Chaucer),—appointment not being made or set. Steven (in Singing,) is probably the more modern Stave or Staff; app. gen. to sound, musical or otherwise. In Spenser, noise, cry, clamour.

Lye says,—A. S. Stefn, or Stema, signifies—institutum tempus; it appears to signify aliquid institutum; from stefn-ian, (formed upon Stiff-ian: see STAFF), instituire, indicare, edicere, mandare; to any thing instituted, declared, announced, commanded, proclaimed, (any thing fixed.) See STERN.

STEW, v. s. To warm or heat, to seethe, -HOLDER. —in water, in vapour; to put -ISH.* into, to keep,—in a moist heat, in a state of evaporation or steam. To be in a stew, met.—to be in a heat,—warmer, hotter than need be.

A stew,—a stove, a hot or heated place; a bagnio, a brothel; one who frequents brothels.—**Bp. Hall.*

Fr. Estuver, to stew, soak, bathe; also, to warm; s'estuver, to sweat in a hot-house, to wash himself in hot waters: estuves, stews; also, stoves or hot-houses.—Col. It. Stufa, stuf-are; Sp. Estufa, -ar. In A. S. Stof-a, a bath, a baine, a stove; D. Stove; Ger. Stube; Sw. Stuf-wa; Low L. Stuba. Etymologists have various opinions on the origin of this word; they may be used as aids though not as guides. See Mæn. Wach. Foss. (de Vitulis, lib. II. c. 7.) The A. S. Stow is,—a place; emph. (perhaps) a fire-place; the importance of which in northern regions is recorded by Tacitus: the Germans, he tells us, lie whole days before the fire—juxta focum aque ignem. From focus it was extended to hypo-caustum,—the store (ignis sub-acensus) in baths for heating the water; the hot or warm water baths themselves; the vapour baths (vaporaria). Hence, To stew,—as above.

STEW,* s. A pond, or store-pond for fish; a cupboard, or closet.—**Chaucer. Holland.* A stew or stowing place (from A. S. Stow. See STAW, ante.)

STEWARD, s. -RY. Steward, anciently Stede-ward. As in our ancient language stow is our word for place, so also stede, and stede-ward, (which for easiness of sound, the first d being omitted, is become steward;) is as much to say, as—the keeper of the place; which in the modern Teutonic is called star-houer, that is, stede-holder, or place-keeper; the same that lieutenant is in French, which, corruptly, in Eng. we call lifenant.—Verstegan.

STICK, s. v. To pierce, to transpierce, -Y. to penetrate, or transfix; to fix STUCK, s. or set, to stay or remain fixed or fast; to fasten, to adhere; to be or remain fixed, at a stand; to hesitate.

Stick (formerly written Stock),—carried in the hand, or otherwise, but sufficiently slender to be stuck or thrust into the ground or other soft substance. Stick,—a thrust.—Tooke. The latter, Shak. writes Stuck.

D. Stiken, staken; Ger. Sticken; Sw. Sticka; Dan. Stikker; A. S. Stic-an, pungere, infingere, transgere, to pierce, to infix, to transfix; and, cons. to fix, or set fast. See Stock, Stake, Streak, Stitch. Be-

STICKLE, v. To stickle may be,—to -ER. interpose, to place himself on the -BAG. side or party of; to stand up for, contend or contest.

To hesitate; to stand hesitatingly; to act indecisively.—Dryden.

To stickle, now appears to be gen. used as the dim. of—

To stick,—to adhere; to adhere to the side or cause, or defence of; to contend pertinaciously.

A stickler, was one who stood by to part the combatants when victory could be determined without bloodshed. "They were called sticklers, from carrying sticks or staves in their hands, with which they interposed between the duellists."—See the commentators on Shak. and B. Jonson.

STIFF, ad. Stark, strong, rigid; hard or -EN, v. hardy, opposed to soft, pliant,
-LY. flexible; hard, inflexible, un-
-NESS. pliant, unyielding; rigorous,
-ENING. stubborn, obstinate: —harsh, constrained.

A. S. Stifian; Dan. Stile; D. Styven; Sw. Styf, styfna, rigere, rigescere, rigidum aut firmum facere,—to be or become rigid.

STIFLE, v. To stuff, to stop up by stuffing; to suppress, to smother, to suffocate, to choke.

The edition of Brewer's Lingua, (A. i. a. 1.) 1657, reads Stiflements; the edition of the Ancient British Drama adopts Stiflements, Fr. i. e. whistlings. "Uttering nought else but idle stiflements."

Dim. of Stuff. Fr. Estoffer, to stuff; and estouffer, to stifle. Un-

STIGMA, s. The v.—to pierce, to stamp,
-T-IZE, v. to brand; to fix or set a mark
-IC, ad. s. (sc. of infamy, or disgrace).
-IC-AL. Fr. Stigmatizer; It. Stigmatizzare;
-ALLY. L. Stigma; Gr. Στιγμα, a puncture, from στίζειν, pungere, to pierce.

STILE. See STYLE.

STILETTO, s. v. A small, round, pointed dagger.

It. Stilet, pugionis genus; dim. of Stile, a little stick; L. Stylus.

STILL, v. s. To fall in drops; to separate, s. rate drop by drop; to fall or
-ICIDE,* descend in small portions or
-ICIDIOUS,† particles, by slow degrees; to fall, come down or come forth, as in liquid drops.

STILL, v. s. ad. av. To compose, to calm,
-Y. to appease, to tranquillize, to
-NESS. quiet, to set or put at rest; to be or cause to be low or gentle in sound; to be silent, to silence. Still, av. must, upon Tooke's etym., be explained to mean—Pone, put or place; or hoc posito, this being put, placed, supposed, proposed, assumed, granted.

A. S. Stil-an; D. & Ger. len; Sw. la; Dan. ler, seem the same words diff. written, as A. S. Stell-an, or Steall-an; Ger. & D. Stellen; Sw. Ställa, ponere; and to mean, cons. componere, compescere, sedare, quietum reddere, quiescere.

Still, the av.—Sk. knows not whether from Til, with the mere prefix s. Tooke—the imperative of Stell-an, ponere, to put or place; and to be in effect equivalent to Set, (qv.) Be-

STILT, s. v. Any thing put or placed, sc. to uphold, support, raise, elevate.

The stilts or rising roots are compared by Dampier to artificial stakes, supporting one trunk.

D. Stel-len; Ger. -ize; Sw. Styllt-a; Dan. -er. Wach. derives from the v. Stellen, ponere. See STILL.

STIMULATE, v. To prick, to instigate,
-ATION. to goad, to incite, to excite, to
-ANT, ad. s. spur.

Fr. Stimuler; It. -olere; Sp. Estimular; L. Stimulus, from Gr. Στιζειν, to prick. Ex- Un-

STING, v. s. To prick or penetrate, to
-ING. pierce (with pain); to pain.
-INGLY. A stinger (in common speech) is -LESS. one who, that which, stings or
-O. pierces, (acutely, deeply.)

Stinge,—a strong beer, pungent to the palate or stomach.

A. S. Styng-an; Sw. Sting-a; Dan. -er, pungere, to prick or pierce.

STINGY, ad. -INESS. A stingy fellow,—one who lays up, sc. in store; hoards, fears to use; and hence—

Sparing, covetous, niggardly.

Not a very old v. A. S. Sting-an, to sting, is immittere, imponere punctum; and then gen. imponere, then farther, reponere, to lay up; and, cons., to hoard.

STINK, v. s. To smell, or cause a smell
-ARD. or odour (good or bad); now
-ER. an offensive, an ill smell. See
-INGLY. STENCH.

A. S. Stenc-an or Stinc-an; D. Stinken; Dan. Stink, or A. S. Sting-an, pungere, is perhaps the root, qd. to cause a pungent sensation.

STINT, or STENT, v. s. To blunt; to
-ER. stop, to restrain, to confine, to limit,
-ING. to apportion; to stop, or cause to stop; to cease, to desist.

A. S. Stint-an, hebetare, to make dull or blunt; to qualle or assuage.—Som. See STUNT.

STIPEND, s. -IARY, ad. s. "Moreover the under treasurers of warre, or paymasters in the campe, were in auncient time named Libripendes, for weighing out unto the souldiours their wages; and their verie pay therefore was called stipendium, from whence cometh stipend, a word commonly received."—Holland. Plinie.

Fr. Stipend-ier; It. -dre; Sp. Estipendio; L. Stipendium, from stips, a piece of money, (tham stipare, to store or pack up,) and pondere, to weight.

STIPULATE, v. -ION. To contract, to bargain; to ask or require terms or conditions; to covenant or agree.

Fr. Stipuler; It. -dre; Sp. Estipular; L. Stipulare, from stipula, a reed or straw; because, in contracts or bargains respecting land, the parties held a straw in their hands, which represented the whole land.—Foss. A- Re-by them nourished in the beginning.”—

Holland. Plinie.

D. Dan. & Sw. Stork; Ger. Storch; A.S. Storc.
Though the L. name of this bird is Ciconia, and the Gr. Πελαγος, the etymologists are almost unanimous in deriving our northern word from the Gr. Storpn, because of the noted piety of this bird towards its aged parents.

SULTAN, s. Gibbon says, the title of -A. Sultan was first invented for Mah-
-ESS. mood, who reigned in the eastern
-RY. provinces of Persia, 1000 years after the birth of Christ, by the ambassador of the caliph of Bagdad, who employed an Arabian and Chaldaic word, that signifies Lord and Master.—D'Herbelot, p. 825. See SOLDAN.

SULTRY, ad. Burning :—hot (from weight or density of air).

Sultriness is common in speech.

A. B. Sweat-an, to sweat, to burn. See To SWEAT or SWATE, and SWELT.

SUM, s. v. The whole, the total; all collected together; the whole
-LESS.
-MARY, ad. s. amount, quantity or number;
-ABLY. the aggregate; the diverse or
-INO. scattered parts collected, and
-IST. comprehended; a compend.

To sum,—to bring together; to count, to collect particulars into an aggregate, a total; to perfect, to complete.

Sumless,—countless.

Fr. Somme, -e, -aire, -iste; It. -a, -ario, -ità; Sp. Sum-a, -ario; L. Summa, which Scaliger thinks is—A sumendo. Voss.—"eo summam dici, quia vera summus est is numerus, quo colligitur totum: that number in which the whole or total is collected." A. S. Sam-tan, to bring together, to collect, is probably the root. See SAME, and SUMMON. Over-Un. Also Con-summate.

SUMMER, s. v. -LINESS. * To summer,—to spend or pass the summer season; to give the heat or warmth of summer.

**Fuller.*

A. S. Summer; D. Somer; Ger. Sommer; Sw. -ar. Becan thinks Somer is Samar, i. e. cooperator, because in that season are collected (into the same store,) those things necessary for food; and Wach, that it may be derived from Sammen, colligere, because it is the season for harvest, or for reaping the produce of the earth.

SUMMER, s. The large beam that sustains the whole fabric.—Sk.

Fr. Sommier; trabe summaria, i. e. principua.

SUMMERSET. See SOMERSET:

Fr. Somm-et, -ile; It. Sum-mila; Sp. -idad; L. Summitas, from summus, contracted from supermus, the highest. See SUPREME.

SUMMON, v. To warn or give notice, -MONA. (ac. to be or appear at a certain -MONER. place, at a certain time;) to call SOMPNOUR. * upon or require to come; to cite.

**Chaucer.*

Fr. Semondre, from sub-monere, to warn under hand.—Men. Th. H. derives the s. Summons immediately from Fr. Semonce, thus accounting for the final s. Mr. Pegge thinks we owe it to the legal process called a writ of summoneas. The A. S. Samnian; Ger. Sammen; D. Samen, is—to collect, to bring together, to assemble; to bring to the same place; and our old Fr. and L. law writers may have early corrupted it into a form which gives it so apparent an affinity with the L. v. Sub-monere. But see Sub-monere in Du Cange. As—Un.

SUMPTER, s. That which (an animal which) bears the baggage; carries burthens.

Fr. Somme, a (horse) load or burden. Sommier, a sumpter horse, and gen. any tolling and load-carrying drudge, or groom.—Cot. It. Som-a, -aro; Low L. Summa, sagma; L. Sagma, a pack-saddle. Gr. Zayua, from zarr-av, onerare, to load or burden. Som. and Lyc. derive the A. S. Samn, D. Somme, Ger. Samn, a burden, from the Gr. Zayua. See Men. in v. Sommer; Voss. de Vitis, lib. iii. c. 46:—Sagma, qd. Sagmaris equus, c. 44.

Fr. Sompituaire; It. Sunuario; Sp. Sumptuario; L. Sumptuarius, from sumptus, past p. of sumere (sub and emere), to buy or purchase, lay out or expend.

SUN, s. v. Described by astronomers to -LESS. be—an immense globe of fire,
-LIKE. placed near the common centre,
-NISH. or rather in the lower focus of the -NY. orbits of all the planets and -SHINE. comets; and turning round his
-SHINY. axis in 25 days, 6 hours, as appears from the motion of the spots seen on his surface.

To sun,—to put or place in, to expose to, the sun; to the heat or light of the sun.

Chaucer uses sunniſh hairs, i. e. golden, like the sun, or beams of the sun.

Go. Sunn-o; A. S. -a, -o; D. Son; Ger. Sonne. In A. S. Sun is of the feminine gender; and, as it is so in some northern languages, Wach. is influenced by this circumstance, among others, to conclude that our ancestors brought the word with them from the East; and that its origin is the A. S. Sana, to shine. Voss. observes that Ger. Son denotes aliquid singulare, as in Sonder, asonder. The A. S. Son, to see, has also been suggested, because the sun is the light of the world, by which we are enabled to see. Un-

SUNDAY, s. The day of the week consecrated to the sun.

A. S. Sunnan day, dies solis; D. Zondag; Ger. Sonntag.

SUTTLE, s. One who deals in small or mean things,—(virtuals and liquors in a camp.)

D. Soeteler; Ger. Sudler, from D. Soetelen, Ger.
Sudein, sordida et villa officia obire, to do mean and dirty offices; from Ger. Sui-en, to soil, (qv.)

SWAB, or SWOB, v. -ER. To sweep;
gen.—to cleanse with a mop.

To swab the deck, is a common nautical phrase.

A.S. Swebban, or Sweop-an, verrere, to sweep.

SWAD,* s. To swaddle,—to bind; to lash
-DLE, s. v. with a band or strap; to lash, to
-DLING. flog, to beat.

Swad,—perhaps one swathed, or as clumsy, lumpish, or inactive, as one swathed; as a child swaddled.

Swad, in the north of England, is still the common name for the pod or shell of peas: the case or inclosure.

*Gascoigne. Holinshed.

A.S. Swathil; D. Swathel, swadel; from A.S.
Swethan, to swaddle, swathe, (qv.) or bind.

SWAG, v. -GY. To weigh down; to sink or depress by weight or heaviness. See SWAY.

Perhaps the A.S. Wag-an, (Se- pref.) to weigh, (qv.) and see SPEND.

SWAGE. See SUAGE.

SWAGGER, v. s. App. to the bulk, the -ER. strut of a swaggy man; and then to
-ING. the—

Bluster; the bragging; the noisy bullying.
“A ruffian is the same with a swaggerer, so called because endeavouring to make that side to swag or weigh down, whereon he ingageth.”—Fuller.

Sk.—from the D. Swadderen, strepere, to make a noise; or from A.S. Sweop-an, sonare, to sound; each formed from the sound. It may be from Swag, to weigh. Be-Un-

SWAIN, s. Gen.—A labourer; a country
-MOT. labourer; one employed in hus-
-ISH.* bandry, in rustic or pastoral labours; a rustic, a pastoral, a clownish youth; a youth.—*Milton.

Swain (Spel. in v. Swainmote.) is A.S. Swang, operarius, minister; and Swang is from Swing-an,
or Swinc-an, to labour, to work.

SWALE, or SWEALE, v. To kindle, to set on fire, to burn.—Som. We say the candle
swale, when it blazes or burns too fast.

A.S. Swat-an; Ger. Schwalen, accendere, in-flammaré.

SWALLOW, s. A bird. Perhaps so called from its mode of feeding. "He never feedeth but flying, and so doth no other bird beside."—Holland. Plinia.

D. Swalawe, swallow; Ger. Schwalbe; Sw. Swal-a; A. S. -was. Wach. derives from Swaite, atrium, porticus; quia est avis atriarum, et in vestibulis nidificans. Jun.—from Swaioth,ustus, the third pers. sing. of Swaia-an, urere, (to swale, qv.) quia caloris aestivi nuntia sit. Sk.—from A. S. Swerþ, cœlum, quia altum volat; or from Sweo-an, sonare, from the loudness of its cry.

SWALLOW, v. s. To swallow, seems to imply—To take in and sink; to receive and submerge; to absorb; to engulf, to englut, to receive or take in, and pass down, (the throat); to seize voraciously or greedily; to devour, to consume; to take down as food, (met.) as truth.

D. Swelgen; Dan. Swælger; Ger. Schwelgen; Sw. Swälja; A. S. Swelgan, vorare, devorare, glutire, deglutire.

SWAMP, s. v. -Y. A swamp,—any place saturated with water; a quaggy, boggy place; a bog.

To swamp, (a very common word,) to sink, submerge, swallow, (met. as in swampy ground.)

Go. Swammis; A. S. Swam, fungus; D. Swamme; Ger. Schwamm; Sw. Swamp; a fungus, a sponge,—are considered by Lye to have given us our word. "Swamp, a swampy place, locus spungiosus seu fungosus." It may not improbably have originated in the v. To swim,—a place swimmied, swammed, or swamt; i. e. floated or overflown with water.

SWAN, s. A bird. Swannish, like to a -NET.* swan; to the form, the colour, the -NISH.† down of the swan.

*Daniel. †Drayton.

A. S. & Sw. Swan; D. Swaan; Ger. Schwan; Dan. Swane. Wach. from the Cel. Gwynn, albus; others from A. S. Scia-an, to shine; others again from Swim-an, to swim.

SWAP, or SWOP, v. s. To swap, or swoop, is—To sweep; to do any thing sweepingly, with a sweeping, swooping, action or motion all at once; to strike, to throw, to descend, to fall; to rush hastily, violently.

"A swoop between two persons, is where, by the consent of the parties, without any delay, any reckoning or counting, or other adjustment of proportion, something is swept off by each of them."—Tooke.

Sk. suggests Zwo, two, and fahen, to take. Lye,—A. S. Ceap-an, to cheap, to buy. See SWAN and SWEEP, also SWOOP.

SWARD, s. Sward (both as app. to the animal, the hog, and to the earth) seems to denote—the outside; the surface; the exterior covering.

A. S. Sward; D. Swaerde; Ger. Schwarte; cutis porcina, pelle suina vel suilla; the skin or sword of pork.—Som. Sk. derives from Swarth, black; because the blackest part of the animal. Wach.—from Warren, (sc. with Se- pref.) to guard, to protect.

SWARM, v. s. To be or cause to be, to move—in multitudes or great numbers; to crowd, cluster, assemble, or aggregate—together; to throng, press, or compress—together.

A. S. Swarm, swarm-ian; D. Swarm, swarmen; Ger. Schwarm, schwärmen; Sw. Swärma; Dan. Swærmer, errare; to wander; to wander in flocks, herds, in great numbers. Up—

SWART, ad. v. To swart is—To blacken, -Y. to darken.

-ISH.* *Chaucer. Bullein, 1579.

SWARTH, ad. Go. Swarte; A. S. Swæart; D. Swart, swart; Ger. Schwarz; Sw. Swark; -Y, ad. v. Som. explains:—"Ater, pullus, fulvus, luridus, niger; black, dark, dusky, russet brown, pale, wan, black and blew." Holland renders lividor, Swert. Cowley uses To swarthy, (A. S. Swærtian, to blacken)

SWARTH. See SWATHE.

SWARVE. See SWERVE.

SWASH, v. s. To swash may be, cons.—ER. To dash; to make a confused noise; -ING. to dash or strike (upon bucklers). A swash-buckler,—one who makes a noise by dashing on his buckler; bragging and bullying about.

Swasher,—a bragger, a bully.

A swashing blow, is also called a washing blow.

Jun. and Sk. suggest—formed from the sound. A great swash of water, the latter says, is a large torrent of water falling with much violence. It may be,—a wash, (S pref.) or collection of waters. Tyndall applies Swash to such kind of liquids as it is not uncommon to call wash: hog's wash. Holinshed calls a poor drink of honicombe and water—Swish-wash.

SWATCH, or SWACHE. See SWITCH.

SWATHE, v. s. To bind; to surround; to tie up in bands or fillets.

A swathe,—a band or bandage; also written Swarth, and app. to the rows of reaped or cut corn.

A. S. Swæthian, be-swæthan, to bind. See SWAD-DLE. Un—

SWAY, v. s. -FUL.* To poise, to balance; to poise, to hold or keep in equipoise; to wield, to weigh down, to incline, to influence; to guide, to rule.—**Fawkes*.

Sk. thinks,—To sway, regere, imperare, gubernare, is from the Ger. Schweben, to move. It is, probably, the v. To weigh. See SWAG. Over—Un—

SWEAL. See SWALE.

SWEAR, v. To speak, to utter, to declare, -ER. to affirm, sc. upon oath; i. e. by at-ING. testing or calling to witness; to attest, or obtest, ac. to the truth of what is spoken; to impose an oath, to pledge or bind upon oath.

SWEAT, v. s. Sweat is—The moisture -Y. that exudes or evaporates, or is -ING. emitted from material bodies; the -ER. perspiration. That which causes sweat; labour, toil.

D. Sweten; Ger. Schweissen, schwitzen; Sw. Swett; A. S. Swet-an, sudare; perhaps from A. S. v. Wet-an, (S pref.) to wet. For—Out—Un—

SWEEP, v. s. To rub away (usually in -ER. numbers, in quantities); to wipe or -ING. clean away (every thing, indiscriminately); to move, to pass, to touch, with a sweeping action; with a waving, steady action, over a broad surface.

D. Sweepen; Ger. Schweifen; Sw. Sopa; A. S. Sweobban, sweoban, vertere, (tergere, to wipe. A. S. Wip-an,—S pref.) See To SWAN. Un-

SWEET, ad. s. Anciently written Sote, -EN, v. Soots.

-ENER. Sweet, lit. is more esp. app. to -ING. the taste and smell: e. g. the -ISH. taste of honey, and the smell -ISHNESS. of the violet:—then extended -LY. to the hearing, the sight.

-NESS. Sweet, as app.—1. To the taste, is opposed to—sour or bitter. 2. To the smell, to—what we call stinking; or smelling fetidly, foully.

It is thus used, as equivalent to—

Fragrant; melodious or mellifluous; gen.—

Pleasing, agreeable, delicious or delightful; grateful; assuaging; mollifying, soothing.

As app. to the taste, we have no equivalent, except the old word Dulce, from L. Dulcis.

To sweeten, or make sweet, is also to remove sourness or bitterness, acidity or acerbity; and also—any thing ungrateful or unpleasing.

Wiclif writes—Sutely, and also Suete.

D. Soet, suet; Ger. Suss; Sw. Soot; Dan. Soot; A. S. Swaet, suavis, dulcis. Sk. thinks we have our word from the L. Suavis; they may have had a common origin. See SOOT. Out-Un-

SWELL, v. s. -ING. To extend (as a bladder with air), to enlarge, (by a solution of the continuity of parts;) to be or become, or cause to be or become, turbid or tumid; to puff or blow out; gen.—

To extend, to expand, to enlarge, to augment, to amplify.

D. Swellen, swellen; Ger. Schwellen; Dan. Swolmer; A. S. Swellan, tumere, turgere. Perhaps from the A. S. Swell-an, (S pref.) to rise. Over-Un-

SWELTER, v. -RY. ad. To swelt or swelter,—to burn, to bear or suffer, to fume with, heat.

To faint with heat; to sink under heat; under the oppression of heat.

A. S. Swæli-an, swelt-an, (formed upon the past tense of Swæli-an, to burn, to be hot) See SULTAY.

SWERD. See SWARD.

SWERVE, or SWARVE, v. SWERVING. To roam, or ramble; to wander; to go from the straight path, out of a straight line; to deviate, to incline, to bend; to give way; to move on an inclined or bending line; or any thing that bends, yields, or gives way.

D. Swerven, errare, de-errare, vagari, fluctare, fluctuare.—Kilian. Sw. Swärf-va, circumagere.

—Ihre. It is, probably, A. S. Hworfian, (to warp,—S pref.) which Burn. thus widely interprets, —vertere, convertere, redire, mutare, errare, fluctuare, librare,—to turn, to convert, to return, to change, to wander, to float about, to hover or fly about.

SWEVEN, s. v. * A dream. "Your eldris schulen dreme swewenya."—Wiclif.

*Wiclif. Chaucer.

Dan. Soen; A. S. Swefa-lan, sopire, dormire, somnare, to lull, to rest or sleep, to be asleep, to dream. Jun. (says Lye) thinks the Go. v. Swefan, cessare, may be the original word. See Junius's Goth. Glossary, in v. Swatth. A-

SWICHE, pro. i. e. Such. See SWILKE.

SWIFT, ad. s. Quick, rapid, speedy; -LY. moving with velocity or fleetness, -NESS. with celerity, with alacrity or eagerness; fleet, nimble, eager, prompt.

A. S. Swift, celer, alacer. Sk. thinks,—from Ger. Schweben, movere, motitare. Ihre thinks Sw. Swæfwa, motitare, to move often, may have some connexion with Eng. Swift, which we apply to frequent motion, sc. of a bird's wings in flight, of feet in running. "The swiftness of motion is measured by distance of place and length of time wherein it is performed"—Locke. Over-

SWIG, v. To swill, (qv.); to make a deep draught.

SWILL, v. s. To swill (usually app. to large draughts),—to swallow largely; to drink, to drench, to wash, to soak.

Swill or Swilling,—the large quantities of liquid food given to swine are so called.

Dan. Swælg; A. S. Swelgan, swilgan, to swallow or swill. Un-

SWIM, v. s. To move, to stay or remain, -M-ER, s. upon the surface of the water; to -ING. float upon the water; to float or -INGLY. flow, to abound; to go, to pass, along, with an undulating, waving motion; resembling the motion of swimming.

Swimming of the head, (or vertigo,) a dizziness; D. Swymelinghe; Ger. Schwimmel.

A. S. Swimman; D. Swemmen, swimmen; Ger. Schimmen; Sw. Sima; anciently Swetima; Dan. Swømmer, nare, nature.

SWINDLE, v. s. -ER. To deceive, to defraud, under false pretences.

They are very modern words; and now in very common use; but their time and manner of introduction require to be ascertained.

The Ger. Schwindel is—vertigo; and Wach. thinks it derived either from winden, vertere, to wind; or schwinden, deficere, to swoon or swoond. Schwinden, he adds, is used—de quacunq; diminutione.

SWINE, s. A. S. Kins is the plural we

-ISH. have adopted for Cowen; ana-

-ISHLY. logy seems to point to Sow-en

-HERD. as the origin of Swine, by

-HERDSHIP. dropping the o in pronunciation.

-WARD, s. tion.

A. S. Sugn; D. Seughe, soegh, soch, soech; Ger. Sau; Sw. Sugga; Dan. Sog, a sow;—also, Go. Swin; A. S. Suin; D. Swyn; Dan. Swia, a swine. Wach. is inclined to derive the former set from Ger. Seug-en, lactare, i. e. from Ger. Saug-en; D. Sugen; Sw. Sug-a; A. S. Suc-can, to suck. The latter (with Jun.) from the Gr. Συωω, sullus.

SWING, v. s. -ER. Swing is usually app. to—a motion backwards and forwards, similar to that of a pendulum, held at one end, and making with the other a segment of a circle; or to—a motion rotatory—of any thing thrown or whirled round the whole circle; a vibratory, a rotatory, motion.

Swing, the s. is, met.—the full length or extent, the full sweep, the full throw; full, unchecked, course or progress.

A. S. Sweng-an; D. Swinghen; Ger. Schwenghen; Sw. Swing; Dan. Swinger. Som. exp.—to shake, to toss, to brandish, to move or stir, to jog. See WING, and SWINK. A. S. Sweng-an, swenk-an, swinc-an, to swing, swinge, swink, seem to have one radical meaning.

SWINGE, v. s. The v.—To throw out, -ER. to lash out; to whip, to flog. -INGLY. The s.—

A throw out, or any thing thrown out, to its full extent, as far as it will reach; and, Swinging,—extending, reaching far and wide: gen. large. A strapping, a thumping piece, are expressions of a similar kind.

A. S. Swing-an; D. Swinghen. Probably the same word as the preceding.

SWINK, v. s. -ER. To labour, to travail, to take pains.

A. S. Swinc-an, laborare, operari, sudare. See WIN, WINCE, WINK, and SWINO. Be-For-

SYN-THESIS, s. "He (Sir I. Newton)
-THET-IC. proposed that in our enquiries
-ICAL. into nature, the methods of analysis and synthesis should be both employed in a proper order; that we should begin with the phenomena or effects, and from them investigate the powers or causes that operate in nature; that from particular causes we should proceed to the more general ones, till the argument end in the most general: this is the method of analysis. Being once possesser of these causes, we should then descend in a contrary order; and from them, as established principles, explain all the phenomena that are their consequences, and prove our explanations: and this is synthesis."—Mac-laurin.

L. Synthesis; Gr. συνθεσις, compositio, (συν, and τίθεσθαι, ponere, collocare.)

T. It is not necessary to add any thing to what has already been said under letter D, (qv.)

TABARD, s. -ER. Speght, in his Gloss. says, a tabard is—"A jaquet or sleevelesse coate, worne in times past by noblemen in the warres, but now only by heraulds, and is called theyre coate of armes in servise." The inn where Chaucer's pilgrims met was so called. The Talbot, in Southwark, claims to be this identical inn.

Fr. Tabard, a long riding cloke or garment (Cot.); It. Tabarro; Sp. Tabarro; Low L. Tabardum.

TABBY, s. ad. A kind of wrought silk. Perhaps of Indian or Persian origin, or from L. Tapes. See TAPESTRY.

TABOUR, s. v. or TAMBOUR, s. A musical instrument.

-ET. The tambourin is said to differ -INE, or from the tabour in its form TAMBOURINE. and structure. It is played TAB-OURING. upon with the fingers.

-RET. To tabour,—to play upon, to beat, the tabour: gen.—to play upon, (by beating or striking;) to beat, to strike.

Fr. Tab-our, -ouer, tambour; It. Tamb-oro, -urino; Sp. -or, -ouren. Voss thinks the Fr. and Italians received the word from the Spaniards, and they from the Arabs. In Ar. Attambor is magnum tympanum.—Foss. de Vlt. Nō. & c. 12, in marg. The older versions of the Bible

(Gen. xxxi. 27.) have Timbale; common version, Tabret.

TACHE, s. That which tacks, takes or holds. And in Exod. xxvi. "Taches of gold" in Mod. Ver. are (in Bible, 1549,) buttons of gold. See TATCH.

TACHY-GRAPHY, s. -IC. The art of swift writing, sc. short hand.

Compiled from Gr. Tachy, swift, and γραφειν, to write.

TACIT, ad. Speechless, soundless; un-
-LF. expressed by speech or audible
-URN. sound; silent, still, quiet; un-
-URNITY. declared, unnoticed, unexpressed.

Tacit is opposed to—speaking; to—uttering or emitting any sound, any audible or perceptible notification.

Fr. Tacit-e, -urne; It. & Sp. -o, -erno; L. Tacitus, from Tac-ere, which (Voss. thinks) is from Gr. ἄκων, the unused theme of αἰέω, quietus, ne hiscene quidem. (Comprimens oe.—Scheldtus.) See SILENT. Re-ticence.

TACK, s. v. To touch, to take, to seize, -LE, s. v. to catch, to keep, to hold; to hold -LING. fast, to fix, to fasten. See TAG.

Tack (of a ship),—the way, course, direction—taken; or in which she is taken, or kept; certain ropes which confine other parts are also called tacks. To tack,—to take or hold, to keep in—a course or way, another course or way.

Tackle,—that which (sails, ropes, &c.) takes or holds or keeps, or by means of which a ship is taken, held or kept, guided or directed. Tackle (for hunting, shooting, fishing, &c.),—by which beasts, birds, fish, &c. are taken, or caught. Gen.—furniture, implements, equipment.

Tack,—a small nail,—to hold, fix or fasten.

Tack, or Tatch, (qv.)—a touch (sc.) with any thing foul or defiling, or otherwise injurious; a spot, a stain, a blemish.—Hammond.

TACT, s. Tactics,—the art of placing, or -ICS. disposing; arranging the places or -ICIAN. positions; changing, manœuvring the places or position of an army, fleet, &c.

Tact (a modern word, frequent in conversation,) is app. to—a skill or adroitness in adapting to circumstances our words or deeds.

Tactician is in common use.

Fr. Tact-ique; Sp. -ica; It. Tattica; Gr. Taktikoi, from tatt-eiv, ponere, statuere, to put or place, to put in order. Syn-tax.

TACTABLE, ad. That may be touched; -T-ILE. that may be felt by the sense of -ION. touch.

-UAL. Tact, i. e. touch, the sense of touch, is found in Ross, (Microcosmia.)

L. Tact-ilis, -io, from Tactus, past p. of Tangere, to touch. Con-

TAD-POLE, s. The young of the Toad. A. S. Tad, a toad, and folo, pullus.

TAFFEREL, s. The broad surface or table; app. to—the upper part of the stern of a ship. D. Taf-el, -elreel, -erest, a table.

TAFFETA, s. A thin silk.

Fr. Taffet-as; It. -a; Sp. Tafetan; and in Mod. Gr. Tafara: of unknown origin. Sk. thinks it may be of Indian or Pers. origin, or from L. Tapes. See TAPESTRY.

TAG, s. v. -GER. Any thing tacked, attached, or affixed (as the tag of a lace); hanging or appending; any worthless appendage.

Sk.—from the v. To tack, to fix, or fasten; that which fasteneth. Tooke,—from A. S. Ti-an, vincire; that which tieth or bindeth. Be- Un-

TAIL, s. v. -ED. The part attached, affixed, appended to the body; to the end, the nether end of the animal. The latter part or end.

A. S. Tag-i; Ger. Zahl, zagal, cauda. Wach. is inclined to derive from Ziehen, trahere, to draw, because it is the extreme part which the animal draws after it. May it not be Tag-dei, the dim. of Tag? Be-

TAILLE, s. A task or tax; an impost, -AGE, or an excise.

TALLIAGE, s. v. Fr. Taille; It. Tàglia. Spel.

TALLAGER. from Fr. Tallier, to cut; the portion cut or carved out, (seised from a man's property.) See also Foss. de Vit. lib. II. c. 18. Tooke considers it to be the past p. of the v. Til-las, to lift up, to raise; and, like Toll, to mean the part lifted off or carried away. To raise taxes—to levy taxes—a levy upon any persons—are, he observes, common expressions. De-En-Re-

TAILOR, s. -ING, ad. One who cuts (sc.) cloth or other material into form for the manufacture of clothes; one who cuts and makes up clothes.

Fr. Tailleur, a cutter, slitter, hewer, hacker, slasher, carver, graver, (Cot.) from the v. Tallier, to cut. It. Tagliare. See TALLY.

TAINT, s. v. To stain, to dye, to soil or -LESS. sully; to infect, to imbrue.

-URE. Our old writers seem to use it -ER.* as equivalent to—touch, or touch lightly:—"They tainted eche other on yo helmes and passed by. . . . The two knyghtes taynted eche other on the shelde, and passed."—Berners. **Beau. & F.*

Fr. Teindre; L. Tingere, to tinge, (qv.) to stain, to touch with stain. At-Un-

TAKE, v. To touch, or come in contact -ER. with; to seize, to catch; to seize, -ING. or catch hold; to hold or keep; -ING-LY. to choose, to prefer; to elect or -NESS.* select; to hold, to bear or bring, to carry, to convey.

Take (with or without prs.) is used as equivalent to L. Capere, prehendere, sumere, tenere, and their compounds:—

To capture, to captivate; to accept, to conceive, to deceive, to perceive, to receive.

To apprehend or apprise, to comprehend or comprize, to reprehend or reprove.

To assume, to presume, to resume.

To attain, to contain, to retain, to sustain, (qqv.)—**Bp. Taylor*.

Tallet. Driven word for left, or first story after an overture

TAL

TALC, s. Cot. calls it—A tender and transparent stone, which endures extreme heat and cold without breaking, and hath been heretofore used instead of glass.

Fr. Talc; Sp. Talco; Ger. Talk. Lapis pinguis—talcol, oleum talcol, ad cutem infundendam preparatum. Wach. refers to A. S. Talg, a tincture, from teigan, tingers, illinere, to stain, to dye.

TALE, s. -FUL* Any thing told; narrated, related, repeated, reckoned. A story, narration, relation, repetition; a reckoning or account, number told.

Gower writes Taled, i. e. telled. Chaucer, Tailer, or teller of tales. See TELL.
*Thomson.

TALENT, s. Endowments to put to use: gen.—mental endowments.

The mental wealth, or strength; or means or powers of, or skill in, acquiring or attaining; faculty, ability, or capacity of mind.

Dr. Webster, in his American Dictionary, has the word Talented—"furnished with talents, possessing skill or talents;" and it has been too hastily used in common speech—here.

L. Talentum; from Gr. Ταλάντων, from τάλα-ειν, to bear, to sustain; prima sua significatione libram notat, qua pondera appenduntur.—Voss. Fr. Talent-e; It. & Sp. -o. The Fr. and It. apply the word to—the will, just appetite, an earnest humour unto; and in Old Eng. it is so used. (See Sk.) Chaucer renders afectus, in Boethius, talentes. In Eng. the common usage is (met.) from the parable in the New Testament—as above. En-

TALIATION, s. TALION. A return of like for like. "The talion law of Moses yeeldeth an eie for an eie."—Holinshead.

Fr. & Sp. Talion; It. Tagliòne; L. Talis, from talis, like. Re-

TALISMAN, s. TALISMANIQUE. "This charm, which the Arabs called talisman or thalismam, the later Greeks, when they had borrowed the superstition, called στοιχεια; which shows of what house they supposed it to have come; στοιχεια being, as we have observed, the technical Greek name for hieroglyphic characters."—Warburton.

Fr. & Sp. Talis-man; It. -mano, as app. to magical characters, is supposed to have come from Ar. Thelem. (See Men.) Thomson forms it of Ar. Talea axman, to try fortune.

TALK, v. s. To speak, to confer, to converse, to prate, or prattle.

-ING. Talkative,—that can or may

-ATIVE. talk; that will talk; loqua-

-ATIVENESS. cious, garrulous.

This word had escaped Tooke's recollection when he asserted that we had not one single word of Anglo-Saxon origin, to which the term. ise has been given.

D. Tal-er; Ger. Tal-er; Sw. -a; Dan. Tal-e, -er; A. S. -tan, to tell, (qv.) Tal-ig-an, to tell, sc. by speech. Be-Inter- Out- Un-

TALL, ad. TALNESS. Raised, elevated, exalted, eminent, lofty, of great height; it is app. met. to men of high spirit, lofty courage, haughty. "I know your spirit to be tall."—Beau. & F.

TAM

Sk. refers to Welsh; but prefers Fr. Taille, from tailler, to cut. Tooke considers Tall, and the Fr. word Taille, as app. to stature, to meas- raised, lifted up, and to be pass p. of the A. S. tilian, to lift up, to ill, (qv.) Un-

TALLOW, s. v. Grease, suet, fat—of animals; mixture of fat substances (manufactured for candles).

D. Talgh, talch; Ger. & Sw. Talg, from Welsh Deillian, fluere, manare, to flow.—Wach. More probably from A. S. e. Talg-an, illinere, to smear; and from which v. Wach. himself derives the s. Talc. Be-

TALLY, s. v. The s.—Any thing cut or -ING. notched; a piece of wood scored -IER, s. or notched,—to keep count or reckoning; a reckoning or account; and, as similar pieces of wood, and reckonings upon them, were kept by the parties to the account—a tally is also,—Any thing that agrees with, or matches, another; and To tally,—

To agree with, to match, to fit, to suit, to correspond.

Fr. Tail-le, -ier, to cut, to notch; It. Tagliare; Sp. Taller, from L. Talos, a green branch, (cut from a tree,) from θαλλειν, a green branch; θαλλειν, virere.—See Men, Voss, &c.

TALMUD, s. "Under their proper heads -IST. he (Rabbi Judah) methodically -ISTIC. digested all that hitherto had been delivered to them of their law and religion by the tradition of their ancestors. And this is the book called the Mishnah. It became the subject of the studies of all the learned men; and the chiefest of them, both in Judea and Babylonia, employed themselves to make comments on it. These comments they call the Gemara, i. e. the Complement. The Mishnah is the text, and the Gemara the comment; both together, they call the Talmud."—Prideaux, vol. ii. pt. i. b. v. p. 469.

TALON, s. The claw, or clawing, bony or horny substance, affixed to the feet of animals.

Fr. & Sp. Tal-on; It. -ione, the heel; from L. Talus, the pastern bone.—Phisic, lib. xi. c. 46. The etym. of L. Talus is not satisfactorily accounted for. It was formerly written Talant; and Lye refers to the margin of the Bible (Jer. xli.) for tallented, furnished with talents or talons.

TAMARIND, s. A small, soft, dark, red Indian date, of a laxative property, and a good purger of the heat of choler.—Cot.

Fr. Tamar-ind; It. & Sp. -inda. Men calls it an Indian word, and Thomson composes it of Tamar Hindes, the Indian date.

TAMARISK, s. Cot. calls it—A shrub or small tree, red-barked, and leaved like heath.

Fr. & Sp. Tamar-is; It. -isco; L. Tamaris.

TAMBOUR, s. Tambour is app. to a frame shaped like a drum, upon which to work embroidery; also, to the embroidery itself; to other things from their shape.

See TABOUR.

TAME, v. ad. Tame, ad. is opposed to -ABLE. wild, whether the wildness arise
-LY. from fear or courage.
-LESS. Quiet, mild, gentle, tractable;
-NESS. quiet; dull, inanimate. To tame,—
-ER. To quiet, or cause to be or render -ING. quiet, peaceful, obedient, submissive, (timid, qv.); to subdue, to suppress;
to domesticate.

D. Tame, tam, tamen, tamen; Ger. Zam, zam-en; Sw. & Dan. Tam; Go. Tamjan, ga-lam-jan; A.S. Tamian, temian, domare, mansuere, claurare.—Som. To accustom to the hand, to render manageable or tractable. Be-En-Un-

TAMPER, v. -ing. Seems to mean—
To try or make trial or experiment upon the temper or disposition, the will or inclination; the frame or constitution; to practise upon it; to act or practise empirically.
Sk.—L. Temperare.

TAMY, s. A scarce or boulder, (also a -MIS. strainer), made of hair.—Cot. See
-MINE. TEMSE.

Chaucer writes Stamin, (qv.)

Fr. Tamsie,—also Fr. Etamine, the stuff tamine.
—Cot.

TAN, s. v. Tan, or Tawny, will be—the
-NER. colour of the chestnut. Tan,—
-NING. the bark, which gives that colour.
-LING. To tan,—to soak, season, imbue with, impregnate with, the tawny bark;
and, gen.—

To have or give a tawny or brown colour, to embrown.

Fr. Tann-er; D. -en, tynnen. Fr. "Tan is the bark of a young oak, wherewith (being small beaten) leather is tanned." Fr. "Tane, tanned, is also—swart, sallow, dusky, or tawney of hue, as things which have been tanned, or people which are overtold."—Cot. The greater part of etymologists derive from Castaneus, (see Men.) the first syllable being dropped.

TANG, s. v. App. com. to—the taste;
gen. to—sense or feeling.

Taste or touch, savour, flavour, relish;
tone or tune; sound.

Either (Sk.) from D. Tanghe, acer, acris, sharp, keen; or from L. Tangere, to touch: It has got a touch. Cudworth writes Tange, and it is perhaps merely Tinge (by change of i into a).

TANGENT, s. -IAL. A line—touching.
"The tangent of an arc is a line touching the circle in one extremity of that arc: continued, &c."—Hutton.

Fr. Tangent; It. -into; L. Tangens, touching.

TANGIBLE, ad. -BILITY. That may be touched; sensible to the feeling of touch.

Fr. & Sp. Tangible; It. -ile; L. Tangibilis, that may be touched; from tangere, to touch. In-

TANGLE, v. s. -Y. To tie, to bind, to fold, to perplex; to cause to be perplexed, embarrassed, intricate; to intertwine; to snare or ensnare.—Falconer.

Mins.—Quasi inter angulos duere. Sk.—from Tan, dim. of Tangl. Jun.—from Ger. Tang, forceps: Eng. Tongs; A.S. Tang. To entangle, he says, is properly to seize with pincers (forceps), and to hold at pleasure when so seized. Fr. Tangle; It. Atanagliare. Serenius gives Go, Tingle, to bind together; and A.S. Tian, tigan, to tie, is perhaps the root. En-Inter-Un-

TANIST, s. -RY. A chieftain.

Sk. suspects to be of Irish origin, otherwise he should suppose it to be from Thane, (qv.)

TANK, s. -ARD. A tankard contains a quart. A tank is unlimited as to the quantity it may contain.

Fr. Tan-guard; D. -chaerd. The Fr. refer to Rabelais as their early authority; and he (as Sk. thinks,) may have received it from us. Duchat suggests that we may have formed the word by corruption, from Tin-quart. Thomson returns it to Fr. Etain, tin, and quart. And Tank he derives from Fr. Estang, a great pond, pool, or standing water. L. Stegnum.

TANKLING. See TINK.

TANSY, s. A plant.

Fr. Tan-asie; It. -acido; D. -sey; Sp. Athanasia; L. Tanacetum, quod revera significat, vel per errorem veterum botanicorum, a voce Athanasia, (Gr. Athanasia).—Sk.

TANTALIZE, v. To offer or propose -IZATION. that for which we hunger or
-IZER. thirst—which we crave or de-
-ISM." sire—but to withhold or delay the attainment of it; to present, to tease by presenting, gratifications beyond our reach or power of obtaining.—Beau. & F.

From Tantalus, whose punishment was "to thirst in waves, and viewing banquets, starve."—Yalden. Ovid.

TANT-AMOUNT, ad. s. Of such, of so great (tantum) amount as; equal, or equivalent; co-adequate or commensurate. See PARAMOUNT.

Bp. Taylor writes, "This will not tant'a-mount to an immediate divine institution."

Sp. Tantamonta.

TANTARUM, s. Perhaps—out of tune.
See TRANGRAM.

TANTIVY, s. The huntsman's cry—corresponding to the sound of the horn.

Sk.—from Tanto vi, or Tanto vi, at all possible speed, or at full stretch?

TAP, v. s. To strike or hit with the tip
-LASH. (of the fingers), the surface (of the -ST-ER. hand)—lightly, gently, superfi-
-RY. cially.

To tap, or to strike, sc. the head or side of a barrel or other vessel:—Cot. says, "Fr. Tapper, is to bung, or stop with a bung," i. e. to strike a bung into the vessel, sc. to secure the liquor; and it may be also to strike the spigot (Dan. Tap) or other tubular instrument, by which the liquor may be drawn off; cons. to brach, or break into.

Heel-taps,—i. e. tips. See TIP.

Fr. Tapp-er; D. -en; Sw. -a; Ger. Zapfen; A.S. Tappan, promere, suppromere, to draw out drink.—Som. A tappetire,—a woman tapster. But it admits of conjecture whether to tap a barrel, and to tap or strike with the tip or top, on the tip or top, be not the same word.

TAPE, s. A flat, narrow band.

Sk. suggests Fr. Estoupe, from L. Stappa, because tape was (perhaps) formerly made of tow.

T A R

TAPER, s. v. -NESS. Taper, ad. may mean—Rising to a top, tip, or top; to a slender or small top or point; becoming gradually less in its rise or ascent.

Fr. Poincte was a wax candle, or taper, used in churches, and probably so called from its form or shape.

A. S. Taper, cereus, a taper, or wax light, (Som.); and Lye interprets taper-as,—an axe made in the form of a waxen (taper). Perhaps the reverse is the fact.

TAPET, s. Now app. to—Stuff covered or -ESTRY, worked with figures.—"Chaucer.

TEIL, s. L. Tilia, the Linden or Lime-tree.

TEINE, s. Sk. thinks—a tiny piece of silver. Tyrw.—a narrow thin plate of metal, perhaps from L.-Gr. Tenia. There seems no reason to conclude it to have been a plate. May it not have been a time, or piece in shape and size similar to a time (sc. of a harrow, fork)? See TIME, and TINY.—**Chaucer.*

TEINT. See TINT.

TELARY, ad. Weaving, or spinning webs; as “telary spiders.”—Brown.

L. Tela, a web. Some editions of Brown read Retiary. See RETIARY.

TELEGRAPH, s. An instrument by which signals are communicated to those distant.

The invention is ascribed to Chappe, and was first used in France about the year 1794, and within two years afterwards introduced into this country.

Mason says, is so called (from Τηλε, the end, and γραφειν, to write) because it answers the end of writing by signals. Analogy seems to prefer Τηλε, afar. See TELESCOPE.

TELESCOPE, s. An optical instrument

-IC. to enable the eye to see objects

-ICAL. afar off.

It. & Sp. Telescopio; Fr. Téléscope, from τελε, afar, and σκοπεειν, to view, to see.

TEN, ad. TENTH. App. to—the number of the fingers on both hands.

Tenth,—that unit which ten-eth, taketh, compriseth, or completeth the number ten. A. S. Tyn, ten, ties; D. Tien; Ger. Zehen; Sw. Tio; Dan. Ti. Wach. is inclined to derive the Ger., if not others, from the v. Ziehen, to draw, quia denarius est traciens decem unitatum; but A. S. he prefers to derive from the obsolete Tina, colligere. As Ten is properly the collection of all the fingers, Tooker thinks, Tyn, ten, is the past p. of the A. S. v. Tyn-an, to inclose, to encompass, to tyne. "It is," he observes, "in the highest degree probable, that all numeration was originally performed by the fingers, the actual resort of the ignorant: for the number of the fingers is still the utmost extent of numeration. The hands doubled, closed, shut in, include and conclude all number, and might therefore well be denominated tyne or ten." A. S. Tyn-an, and It. Tin-a, appear to be the same word. L. Decem, Gr. Δεκα, has also been derived from dey-odeca, comprehendere, to comprehend, or comprise. See HUNDRED.

TENABLE, ad. That can or may be —AC-ous. held or kept; preserved; sup- —OUSLY. ported. —OUSNESS. Tenacious,—holding or keeping, —TY. so. fast, close, tight; adhering

-LY. broken or torn in pieces; having
-NESS. passions or feelings easily affected
-LING. or acted upon, afflicted or distressed; soft, delicate; sensitive, feeling, having much fellow-feeling; compassionate; mild, gentle.—Shak.

Fr. Tendre; It. -ero; Sp. Tierno; L. Tener, from Gr. Tepno, (Voss.) by transposition of p and v. Others from Teiv-eiv, to stretch; and thus to mean—stretched, extended, dilated; and, cona. weakened, relaxed. See TEND. En- In- Un-

TENDER, v. s. -DRY. To stretch or reach out, (to or before;) to propose, to present, to offer; to direct, sc. the mind to; to observe, to heed or care for, to guard, to regard. Shak uses the s. in this latter signification, i. e. heed, regard: "Thou hast shew'd thou mak'st some tender of my life."

Formed upon Fr. v. Tendre, to tend, (qv.) Un-

TENDERS, s. i. e. Attenders,—a (small) ship, attending on another (a large one).

THAN, co. Also written Then.

The same word as Then, app. to—sequence, subsequence, succession, (for instance) in taking, choosing, selecting; gen. in acting or doing. Thus—I take this first, then that second, then that third: I take it upon comparison; I prefer it. I do this first, then that: I give this precedence, then that may succeed. And hence app. gen. in making comparison,—I take this before, sooner, rather than that; I do this sooner, rather than that; I think this better than, worse than, that. “Rather for your own causes beyng our christened subiectes, we would ye were persuaded then vanquished, taught then ouerthrowen, quietly pacified then rigorously persuaded.”—Grafton.

D. Dan; Ger. Danne; A. S. Thanne, thonne. Wyrtan thonne, wyrtan thonne, worse than.—Luke xi. 28.

THANE, s. “A thane was (in like manner as the earl) not properly a title -DOM. of dignity, but of service: so called in the Saxon of then-ian, (servire), and in Latin minister à ministrando.”—Spelman.

A. S. Thegn, a servant or servitor; Thegn-scipe, from the v. Thegn-ian, then-ian, to serve, to attend in service.

THANK, v. s. To be mindful of, sensible -FUL. of (properly sensufol) of a benefit; a favour, a kindness; to -FULLY. bear in or bring to mind, to -FULNESS. mind, to remember gratefully; -LESS. mind, to know, to acknowledge, to -ING. express, to declare acknowledgments of, gratitude for, benefits, favours, kindnesses.

Sk. calls it a word in very common use in Lincolnshire for the intestines cleansed for sausage-meat.—Ascham.

A. S. Thærm; D. & Ger. Derm.

THAT, pro. co. In A. S. That, i. e. thead, thead, means—taken, assumed; being merely the past p. of the A. S. v. Thean, theg-an, theon, (Go. Thi-han), thic-gan, thig-ian, sumere, assumere, accipere; (D. Düden, Ger. Deihen), to the, to get, to take, to assume. It and That always refer to some person or things spoken of before. We say either “It is a good action, or that is a good action; i. e. the said (action) is a good action, or the assumed action is a good action, or the action received in discourse is a good action.

That (used as a conjunction, sc. of sentences or numbers of sentences,) is the same pronoun; and this may be shewn by a resolution of the construction:—Ex. I wish you to believe that I would not wilfully hurt a fly. Res. I would not wilfully hurt a fly,—I wish you to believe that (assertion.) Tooke has other examples. To them a few may be added from our older writers.

“To the kyng he seide, that he must the castles astore” [restore].—He must the castles restore: he said that to the king.—R. Gloucester, p. 107.

“He commaundide to his disciples that thei schulden sey to no man that he was the Christ:” [they should say to no man that he was the Christ.] He commanded that to his disciples:—he was the Christ; they should say that to no man.—Wickif. Matt. xvi.

“She was so charitable and so pitous, she wolde wepe if that she saw a mous caughte in a trappe, if it were ded or bledde."—She saw a mouse caught in a trap: if that (or, give that) fact: she would weep.—Chaucer. Prol. v. 146.

"Good is, that we also, in our time among us here, do write of new some matre, ensampled of the old wise."—We also in our time among us here do write:—that is good.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Go. That; A. S. That; D. Das; Ger. Das; Dan. Det.

THATCH, s. v. Usually app. to—A cover —ER. or roof of straw, reeds, or similar —ING. material.

A. S. Thac-can, thec-en, tegere, integere, to cover, to cover over; Thac; D. Dak; Ger. Dach; Sw. Tack; Dan. Tække, tectum, the cover or roof. See TRACK.

THAUMATURGY,* s. -ICAL† A work of wonder.—**T. Warton*. †Burton.

Gr. Θαυματοργία, (θαυματος, ργον.)

THAW, v. s. -ING. App. to—The wet or moisture—of a hard, a congealed substance—softened or liquefied; melted, dissolved. To thaw,—to melt, to soften, to relax, to dissolve.

The same word as Dew, diff. written and app. A. S. Deaw-ian; D. Dawen; Ger. Tau-en; Sw. Toed; Dan. Toer, to dew, to wet or moisten. Un-

THE, v. art. "So the ich,"—so may ich (or I) the, (or thrive.) Mr. Tyrw. refers to two other instances of this expression in Chaucer, (vv. 12,881, 16,397.) The v. To the, (A. S. The-en), to take, to get, to gain, to thrive, is of common occurrence in our old writers.

At the time of Chaucer, (says Mr. Tyrw.) the prepositive A. S. article Se had been long laid aside, and instead of it an indeclinable The was prefixed to all sorts of nouns in all cases, and in both numbers.—Ess. p. 21.

The (our article, as it is called,) is the imperative of the v. Thean, (see THAT), which may very well supply the place of the correspondent A. S. article Se, which is the imperative of Se-en, videre, for it answers the same purpose in discourse, to say—see man, or take man. For instance—

"The man that hath not musike in himselfe is fit for treasons," &c. Or—

That man is fit for treasons, &c.

Take man, (or see man); taken man hath not musike, &c.

Said man, or taken man is fit for treasons, &c.—Tooke.

This is the only example he gives, and the solution of it seems easy, and as far as it goes, satisfactory; but other instances should be produced, and subjected to similar trial.

In Matt. iii.—"Make ye redy the weies of the Lord; make ye right the pathis of him;" i. e. take, assume ways of the Lord; take, assume paths of him: or, take, or assume that the Lord has (his) ways, has (his) paths; make ye them ready, make ye them right. Again—Take Lord, see Lord: See Lord—he comes—make ready his ways, make his paths right.

"Do ye penance, for the kingdom of hevenes schal neigh."—What kingdom shall I take, assume, see or look for, as coming, as nigh? Take kingdom of he-ven; kingdom known as kingdom of heaven—no other.

This may seem harsh; but a word without any meaning is worse: and it is manifest, that in all our uses of the article The, it directs what particular thing or things we are to take or assume as spoken of. "The (says Dr. Lowth) determines what particular thing is meant;" i. e. what particular thing we are to take or assume to be meant: and Wilkins (pt. iii. c. 5) calls The a demonstrative article, "which gives a peculiar emphasis to its substantive, and is applied only to such person or thing, as the hearer knows, or hath reason to know, because of its eminence or some precedent mention of it."

Suppose, in Matt., it had been written—"Make ready ways of Lord;" here would have been no word to express what ways to take or assume, as those ordered to be made ready; nor what Lord to take or assume, whose ways were so ordered.

Tyrw. says—The, when prefixed to adjectives or adverbs in the comparative degree, is to be considered as a corruption of Thy, which was commonly put by the Saxons for Tham, the ablative case singular of the article That used as a pronoun. The merrier, Eo lætius; the more merry, Eo lætiores; are of the same construction. "Yet fare they the worse; yet fare I never the bet." There seems no occasion for any such hypothesis. All these expressions are comparative, and refer to degrees of mirth, &c. assumed or taken as the subject of comparison.

Thedoms is—thrift.

Go. Tho; A. S. The; D. De; Ger. Die; Dan. Den.

THEATRE, s. A place for the exhibi-

-AL. tion of spectacles; of dramatic or -IC. other performances, displays, or -IC-AL. operations; app. met.

-ALLY. Theatrical, ad. is used also metaphorically to the effect, imitating the performance, or manner of performance, practised on the stage of a theatre.

Fr. Théâtre; Sp. -o; It. Teatro; L. Theatrum; Gr. Θεατρον, from θεα-σθαι, spectare; qd. a place for spectacles, sights, shews. Amph-

THEISM, s. A Theist or Deist,—one

-IST. who believes in a Deity or God:

-ISTIC. opposed to Atheist, and distin-

-ISTICAL. guished from every sect of Christian believers.

From Gr. θεος, a god. See DEISM. A. Also En-theist.

THEME, s. A position or proposition, a subject; any thing proposed as a subject of discourse or discussion; also the position or station whence any thing proceeds; the origin; the original word.

Fr. Thème; It. & Sp. Tema; Gr. ἔμα, from τίθεσθαι, ponere, to put or place. Ana-Epi-

THEN, av. THENCE. Also written Tham.

We have One, Once; Anon, i. e. in one (sc. moment); The nonce, i. e. the once, this once (sc. one time, occasion, purpose); and further, Then, Thence, and Hence: and it admits at least of one conjecture, that Then may be composed of the one, and thus denote—

The one (time); at the or that one time; for that one cause; in that one cause. And Thence,—

Of or from then; from the or that one time or place; for the or that one cause, source, origin.

Then is often found written Tho, from A. S. Thonne, by omission of final consonants, or the word One.

From Gr. Θαός; A. S. Thaune, thaune; D. Deu; Ger. Deus; Sw. Dag; Dan. Da, tunc, quando. Jun. derives—ab ovav, per aphareain, (sc. of the o; ) and this is all the etymologists supply. Thence, (A. S. Thonan), which (Miss. thinks) is there hence, is probably the gen. of Then, i. e. then-ee; and it has its correspondent Hence, (A. S. Hæon-an), as There has Here; Thither, Hither.

THEOCRACY, s. The rule, government, (immediate,) dominion of -ATICAL God.

Comp. of Gr. θεός, a god, and κρατειν, to rule or govern.

THEOGONY, s. -IST. The generation of the gods.

Gr. Θεογονία, (θεός, god, and γονος, generation.)

THEOLOGY, s. "Theology, containing the knowledge of God and his creatures, our duty to him and our fellow-creatures, and a view of our present and future state, is the comprehension of all other knowledge directed to its true end; i. e. the honour and veneration of the -LOGUE. -LOGASTER. Creator, and the happiness of mankind."—Locke.

THEOSOPHY, s. A knowledge (σοφία)

-IC. of God (θεός) or of divine things:

-ICAL. called by Cudworth, Divine Philo-

-ISM. sophy, but abused by enthusiasts

-IST. and pretenders. "Many traces of the spirit of theosophism may be found through the whole history of philosophy; in which nothing is more frequent than fanatical and hypocritical pretensions to divine illumination."—Engfield.

Gr. Θεο-σοφία; Lat. dicinarum rerum, scientia.

THERAPEUTIC, ad. -AL. "That physick or part of physick which prescribeth remedies for the curing of diseases, and recovery of health."—Cot.

Gr. θεραπευτικός, that can or may heal or cure (θεραπευ-ειν); Sp. Therapeutica; Fr. -ique.

THERE, av. As Hæc (qv.) is used as equivalent to this place, so There is to—that place; in that place; at that, or at some assumed point or moment in space or time. It is used emph. to fix or ascertain the identity or individuality, to give force or precision—to that which is predicated in the sentence. It is much used in composition: Thereby,—by that place, by that; Therefore,—for that—cause, &c.

Go. Ther; A. S. Thær; D. Deer; Ger. Da; Sw. & Dan. Der. There is probably comp. of the and er, (see En, Ean), signifying place. Er-en is—locus habitatus.—Lye.

THERF, s. Unleavened bread, or loaf. <sup>s</sup> Wicklif. D. Derf-brood; A. S. Thearf-loaf.

THERIAC, s. A composition,—so called, -ACAL either because made of viper's -AL flesh, or because a remedy against serpents, and gen. against poisons. See TREACLE.—<sup>s</sup> Holland.

Fr. Thériaque; It. Tertica; Sp. & L. Theriacca; Gr. θηριακός, from θηρίον, a wild beast; app. esp. to a serpent.

THERMAL, ad. Warm, hot.

-MO-METER. "The thermometer discovers

-METRICAL. all the small unperceivable

-SCOPE. variations in the heat or coldness of the air, and exhibits many rare and luciferous phenomena, which may help to better informations about those qualities, than yet we have any."—Glaswill.

Fr. Thermomètre; It. Termometro; Gr. Θερμότης, warmth, heat; and μετρον, a measure; or εκπορευν, to see.

THESIS, s. THETICAL.* A position or proposition; a subject of discussion or discourse.—H. More. Cudworth.

Fr. Thèse; It. Tesi; Sp. & L. Thesis; Gr. Θέσις, position, from τίθεσθαι, to put or place. See THEME. Anti-Hypo-Syn.

THE-URGY, s. Augustine calls it a -IST. species of magic, by which gods -IC. and demons are evoked and com- -ICAL. pelled to shew themselves to men, for the purpose of purifying their souls.

Gr. Θεουργία, opus divinum, (θεός, εργον.)

THEW,* s. -ED.* Thews seem to be—Gifts, attainments, acquirements, endowments; qualifications or qualities, bodily or mental.—Chaucer to Spenser.

From A. S. Theow, mos, ritus, consuetudo: we have our theow'd, bona indole præditus.—Lye. Theow is itself probably from A. S. v. The-an, to get, to the, (qv.); and means—Gotten or gained, gifted, endowed.

THEY, pro. (Persons or things) taken, THEIR. assumed in speech, spoken of.

THEM. Ger. Sie; A. S. Hi; so written by R. -SELVES. Gloucester, who also writes Heo, Hem, and Her, (having the same source as He), now They, Them, Their. So also P. Ploughman and others. The common root of these pro. or cris. The, That, They, &c. seems to be A. S. v. The-an, to take. (See THE, THAT.) They will then mean—as above.

THICK, v. ad. s. To thick or thicken,—to -EN, v. condense, to consolidate, to press close; to bring close, separate -ET. parts or portions; to be or become dense, or gross; close or -LY. compact; massive; large or -NESS. bulky. The ad. is also (met.)—Dull, stupid, impenetrable.

Thicket,—i. e. thicked, sc. with trees.

D. Dick, dicken; Ger. Dick; Sw. Tiock; Dan. Tykt, densus, crassus; A. S. Thic, past p. of thice-ian, densare, condensare, to press or squeeze, sc. into one mass; and cons. to augment, to enlarge.

THIEVE, v. To take, sc. that which be- -ERY. longs to another; to steal.

-ISH. Theft, is, theved, thev'd, theft,—

-ISHLY. Any thing, taken, stolen. Also

THIEF. app. to the act of stealing.

THEFT. **Chaucer.*

THIEFLY.* D. Dief; Ger. Dieb; Sw. Tiaf; Dan. Tyft; A. S. Theof; Gr. Thiebas; from A. S. Theof-ian, to take; rapere, arripere, surripere.

THIGH, s. The thick, sc. limb; from the knee to the hip-joint.

A. S. Theoh; D. Die, diege, which Martin. (see Sk.) derives from Ger. Deihen, crescere, to grow; and Tooke thinks Thigh (ph for ck) is thick.

THILK,* ad. A. S. Thillice, the or that it. See ILK, and SUCH. The margin of Wiclif (Apoc. c. 16.) gives "in that ilke" as a various reading.—**Wic. Chaucer. Gower.*

THILL, s. -ER. The raised shaft of a cart or waggon. The thill horse,—the horse that raises, bears the shafts.

A. S. Thille. A board, a plank, a joyst.—Sam. See TOOKE, 8vo. ed. Perhaps Till, to raise.

THIMBLE, s. -FULL. A cover or protection for the thumb; worn also on the finger. A dim. of Thumbl.

THIN, ad. v. Little, small, minute:

-LY. scanty, slim, slender; superficial,

-N-ESS. insubstantial:—opposed to thick.

-ING. A. S. Thinnas; D. Dunn; Ger. Dunn; Sw. Tunn; Dan. Tynd; from A. S. v. Thinnas, thinnas; Sw. Tynas, twins, to lessen, to decrease, to diminish; to dwine or dewindle, (qv.) to waste. See TWINE.

THING, s. Thing is—That which (aliquid), any (thing) which, we think, or which causes us to think; that which causes thought, sensation, feeling. It is usually contradistinguished from person, though sometimes app. emph. to persons.

"The universality of one name to many things, hath been the cause that men think the things are themselves universal; and so seriously contend, that besides Peter and John, and all the rest of the men that are, have been, or shall be in the world, there is yet something else that we call man, viz. man in general; deceiving themselves, by taking the universal, or general appellation, for the thing it signifieth."—Hobbs. "Axiome! What ever things are in themselves, they are nothing to us, but so far forth as they become known to our faculties or cognitive powers."—H. More. "Such ways of speaking, (sc. that fire is light and hot,) truly signify nothing, but those powers, which are in things, to excite certain sensations or ideas in us."—Locke.

D. Dingh; Ger. Ding; Sw. & Dan. Ting; A. S. Thinc, thing, which Wach., after Martin., derives from thein, facere, to do; thing, that which is done. A. S. The-an, theynian, then-tan, thenc-an, thinc-an, are variations of the same root. (See THE, and THINK.) It appears from Wach. himself, that Ger. Ding is of very various and extensive application, to any (thing) thought, said, or done; and Tooke considers Thing to differ from Think only in the final letter; and even this distinction is not preserved in certain provincial pronunciations. Bp. Hoper (he adds) wrote Thint.

Netthink is a vulgarism, but, like many others, it may have an effect in shewing the affinity of words. This word (Thing) cannot be explained in its general signification, without the use, express or implied, of itself.

THINK, v. To have feelings or sensations;

-ER. to feel, to perceive, to conceive,

-ING. to imagine, to fancy; to have

THOUGHT. or hold a perception or conception;

-FUL. an opinion, a judgment;

-FULNESS. to deem, to judge; to hold or -LESS. retain, to recal, a feeling, a

-LESSLY. perception; to remind, to re-

-LESSNESS. collect, to remember; to dwell upon our thoughts or perceptions; to observe, to consider, to meditate; to deliberate.

The word is app. very widely to the various attentions of the mind, sc. to things past, present, or to come.

Me thinketh, Him thinketh, i. e. it thinketh me or him, or causeth me or him to think. And see THIRST.

Go. Thano-an; A. S. Thano-ean, thinc-an; D. Denken; Ger. Denken; Sw. Tänka; Dan. -reri, sentire, concipere, percipere, cogitare. See TRYKE. Be. For. Mis. Un-

THIRD, ad. -LY. Formerly, Thridde.

That unit that threeth or maketh up the number three.

D. Derde, dryde; Ger. Dritt; Sw. & Dan. Tredie; A. S. Thrid-da; Go. ja.

THIRL, v. A. S. Thirl-ian, (as now written,) to thrill, (qv.)

THIRST, v. s. Anciently also written -Y. Thurst, Thrust.

-ILY. To dry; to be or cause to be dry, -INESS. to parch; to need moisture, to seek or require moisture; to desire, to wish for drink; gap. to desire or wish—with the eagerness of one coveting drink. In Job xviii. 9, Bible 1549, (following the Septuagint δυσωρες), has "The thrustie shall catch him." Mod. Ver.—"The robber shall prevail against him." The application extended from the desire to possess, to the act of seizing possession.

D. Dorst, dorslen; Ger. Durst, dur-ren; Sw. Torr; Dan. Torst, Wister; A. S. Thyrst, thyrst-an; Go. Thaurs-us, -yan, siccare, aresecere, sitire, to dry, to parch. Me thyrst,—sitit me; it thirsteth me, or causeth me to thirst. Thurst-ig, avidus, cupidus.—Lyv. A.

THIRTEEN, ad. -TEENTH. Three and ten.

Sw. Tretion; Dan. Traitlens; D. Derlton; Ger. Dreyschen; A. S. Threotlens.

THIRTY, ad. -IETH. Three tens, or three times ten.

D. Derlich; Ger. Dreysig; Dan. Tredtens; Sw. Trettio; A. S. Thrittig; Go. Thrinsteig.

THIS, pro. Without an etymological THESE meaning it is possible to give the THOSE usage only. It may be remarked that R. Gloucester writes Thike; and that Thick or Thig are still common in the western parts of England. The is from the-an; and Thike from theg-an, the same word as the-an, with the insertion of the guttural g, and also written thicg-ean.

The, with the addition of es, (qv.) forms thees; whence This. And This, with the same addition, forms thises; whence thise, and our common plurals These, Those. P. Ploughman writes Thuse.

This is sometimes distinguished from That; it is also app. to something nearer or more approximate in space or time than That; it was formerly used with plural nouns. "This Britons. . . This stones."—R. Gloucester. See Tooke, ii. 62. 8vo. ed. note.

A. S. Thyase, this, thes; D. Decae, decae; Ger. Dieser, dieser, hic.

THISTLE. s. -y. A plant.

D. & Ger. Distel; Sw. Tistel; Dan. Fidsel; A. S. Thistel, which Wach. and Ibre think is Thydsel, from the v. Thyd-an, to prick.

THITHER, av. Hither, (qv.) is used when the speaker means to express motion to the place where he himself is;—Thither,—from the place where he is, or to the place where he is not. Thither is probably comp. of That there.

Thither-ward,—see WARD.

Dan. Didher; A. S. Thider, thyder, Ilac.

THOLE, v. To bear, to suffer, to endure. Perhaps the root of Dole.

Go. Thul-an; A. S. Thol-an, -can, ge-thol-ian, Ger. Dol-en, duld-en, ferre, sufferre, sustinere, pati.

THONG, s. A thin or small strip or strap, lace or lash.

A. S. Thwong, thwang, and in Old Eng. Thwong, from A. S. v. Th-win-an, decrease, to lessen, to be or become thin, to wane, (qv.)

THORAX, s. -RACIC. Thoracic,—pertaining to, belonging to, the breast.

L. Thorax; Gr. Θωραξ, the breast.

THORN, s. -y. App. to the tree, from its tearing spines. Any thing tearing, lacerating, pricking; vexing, harassing.

Sw. Tärne; Dan. Torn; D. Doorne, deurne; Ger. Dorn; A. S. Thorn, thyrn, thyrne; Go. Thawrn; all perhaps from A. S. v. Tær-an, to tear. Torn, in A. S. is (met.) anger, wrath, rage; and is the past p. Tør-en, tørn,—and the addition of the aspirate would give Thorn. Un-

THOROUGH, pr. av. ad. Thorough or

-LY. through, is app.—to express

THROUGH. passage, from one side, from one end to the other, from beginning to end; means, instrument of passage. Gen.—means, instrument, agent or agency; passage ended, finished, complete. And hence Thorough, ad.—

Finished, complete, perfect.

Thorough-fare,—a fare, passage, or way through.

Throughout,—utterly through; from one end to the other.

Go. Thairh; A. S. Thurah, thurh; D. Deur, door; Ger. Durch; and in Low. Sax. Dur. (See DOOR.) Mins. and Jun. both concur that Door, &c. are derived from Gr. Θυρα. Sk. says—perhaps they are all from the Gr. or rather from Thorch, thurh, thurh. Thorough, he thinks, may be referred to Gr. Τρυειν, τρυειν, to bore, to perforate. "Our Eng. pr. Thorough, thorough, thorow, through, or thro', is no other than the Go. s. Dauro, or the Teutonic s. Thuruk; and, like them, means door, gate, passage. The Teutonic uses the same word Thuruk, both for the s. (Door), and for what is called the pr. (Thorough). The D., which has a strong antipathy to our Th, uses the very word Door for both. The A. S., from which our language immediately descends, employs indifferently for Door either Dure or Thure. The modern Ger. (directly contrary to the modern Eng.) uses the initial Th (Thur) for our s. (Door), and the initial D (Durch) for our pr. (Thorough)." (See TOOKE.) Wach. thinks the nouns, Door, &c. are all from the D. pr. Door. See TRUAXON.

THORPE, s. A. S. Thorpe, villa, vicus; a village, a street, a dorpe, a country village. Belgis hodie Dorp.—Som. **Fairefax*.

THOU, pro. THEE. Thou is com. called a pronoun of the second person, and is used by the person speaking (the first person), for or instead of the name (the noun or nomen) of the person to whom he speaks.

Go. Thū; A. S. Thū, tu; D. Ger. Sw. & Dan. Du; Fr. Tu (*tu*loyer, to thou one, Cot.); It. Sp. & L. Tu; Gr. tu. (See TAY.) The similarity between Go. Thū and L. Tu, and also between Go. Ich, ig, and Gr. & L. Ego, deserves to be remarked. Each class had a common origin. See I and Tu.

THOUGH, co. Allow, grant, give, even if, (i. e. gif.) Thus in Wiclif: "Though it behove," allow, grant it (as a necessary consequence) "that I dye with thee, I shall not" (on that account) "deny thee." In Chaucer,—" Though that I speke" allow, grant, that I speak, "plainly; arette it not" (rate, reckon it not) "my villanie." If, i. e. give, (or emph. even if.) may not unfrequently change places with Though. Thus in Wiclif, John: "But if (sc.) I do, though (etsi) ye wolen not bileve me, bileve ye the workis," might be written—But though I do, if ye wolen not, &c.

Go. Thauk; A. S. Thak; D. & Ger. Doek; Sw. Doek; Dan. Dog. Tho or though, or (as our country-folks more purely pronounce it) Thaf, thauk, and thaf, is the imperative thaf or thaf-ig of the v. Thaf-ian, or Thaf-en, to allow, permit, grant, yield, assent; and Thaf-ig becomes thak, thoug, thoug (and thock, as G. Douglas and other Sc. authors write it.) (See Took.) R. Gloucester writes Thogh; and R. Brunne, Thof.—See Hearn's Glossaries.

THOUSAND, ad. Ten, one hundred times; or one hundred, ten times repeated. Go. Thau-sand; A. S. -and; D. Dusent; Ger. Tausent; Sw. Tusend; per multiplicem contractionem, (says Jun.) from Taihus or tiguns hund, decies centum, ten times a hundred; and Wach. thinks the first syllable signifies ten, and the last to be corrupted from hund. See HUNDRED.

THRACK, * v. To carry, to load, to burden.—"South.

Ger. Tragen; D. Trecken, trahere, vehere, to drag, to bear.

THRALL, s. v. THRALDOM. A servant who had suffered the operation of having his ear drilled or bored; and then gen.—a servant, a slave, a bondsman.

A. S. Thral; Sw. Træl; Dan. Træl, seems to have been app. to designate a particular thow or servant—thral thow; and may be the past p. of the A. S. v. Thirlean, to pierce:—" Thirle his ears mid anum aile: drill his ears with an awl, (Exod. xxi. 6):—a custom retained by our forefathers, and executed on their slaves at the church door." Ellis, Eng. Poets, vol. i. p. 20. note 19. Be-En-

THRASH, or THRESH, v. To beat, to -ER. strike; to drub, to give or inflict -ING. blows. It is esp. app. to the beating of the ears of corn for the purpose of separating the grain.

D. Derschen, dorschen; Ger. Dreschen; Sw. Träks; Dan. Tærsker; A. S. Tharso-an, tharso-an, to beat, to strike.

THRASONICAL, ad. -LY. Boasting, bragging, vain-glorious.

From Thraso, a name given to a boasting soldier in the Roman comedies.

THRAVE, or THREAVE, * s. A drove or drove, or number driven, together. Any great number or quantity.

* Drayton. Bp. Hall.

A. S. Thraef, manipulus, a handful, a bundle and bottle.—Som. A. S. v. Thraf-ian, urgere; a cognate of Draf-an, to drive.

THREAD, s. v. Anciently also Thrid.

-BARE. Met.—A thin, narrow line;

-BARENESS. the line pursued; the course

-EN.* or tenor.

-Y.† To thread,—to pursue a linear course or direction; to pass through; to pierce or penetrate; to pass in and out (through any thing interwoven or intricate).

* Hackluyt. Shak. † Dyer.

D. Draed; Ger. Drat; Sw. Trödd; Dan. Tread; A. S. Thread. Thre,—from A. S. Thraeo-an, terquere, to twist, to wind; because thread is flax slightly twined or twisted, perhaps thridded, (or thrided), and so distinguished from twine. See TRESS. Un-

THREAP, v. The word is still common in the North, where it is also used as equivalent to—To urge, to press; and, as in Chaucer, to affirm.

To blame, rebuke, reprove, chide.—Brockett.

A. S. Thraep-ian, red-arguere, to reprove, to threapen.—Som.

THREAT, v. s. To menace, to announce

-EN, v. or denounce; to declare, to

-ENER. manifest evil, mischief, punish-

-ENING. ment, anything fearful or

-ENINGLY. dreadful.

-FUL.* Sidney invents Threatness.

D. Drot-en, dreyphen, trotsen; Ger. Trotzen; Sw. Trotta; Dan. Træer; A. S. Threat-ian, urgere, premere, arguere, minari, to urge, to press, to chide, to menace. Un-

THREE, ad. THRICE. Two and one.

Go. Thrin; A. S. Thri, thry; D. Dry; Ger. Drei; Sw. Tres; Dan. & It. Tre; Fr. Trois; Sp. & L. Tres; Gr. Opas. Thrice,—thri-an, thry-an. A-

THRENE, s. -ODY. Threne,—lamentation, bewailing.

Threnody,—a song of lamentation, or mourning.

L. of Low. Ages, Threnus; Gr. Θρῆνος, lamentatio; from Θρῆν-ειν, thlaira, lamentari, to lament, to bewail. Gr. Θρῆνῳδία.

THRESHOLD, s. App. gen. to—That on which we step under the gate or door.

A. S. Thresc-el, thrysc-el, thresc- or thraeo-wald; Sw. Träskel. Wach. & Jun. derive from Thraeo- or thraeo-an, to thresh, to beat, &c. with the feet. The D. Drampel is from Thraep-an, to trample. Wald (Jun.) is A. S. Wald, wald, silva, ignis; and the whole word is so app. because—the (thraeo or threshold) is constantly beaten and trampled upon by the feet of those going in and out.

THRID. See THREAD.

THRILL, v. s. -ANT.* To pierce or bore through; to pierce, to penetrate; to pass through; to shake or shudder; to tremble or feel a tremulous motion—as if by the action of boring or piercing.—Spenser.

A. S. Thril-an; D. Drillen, drillen; Sw. Trilla; Dan. Driller. See THIRL, THRILL, DRILL. En-

a from Thresh a gladiator

THRING. See THRONG.

THRIVE, v. To gather, to collect; to -ER. heap or accumulate, to gain or
-ING. acquire; to be or become rich.

THRIFT, s. wealthy, prosperous; to prosper,
-Y. to succeed, to improve; to be
-ILY. frugal, provident, cautious, care-
-INESS. ful.

-LESS. Thrift is thrived, thriv'd, thrift.

Dan. Triver; perhaps from A.S. Thraf-tan, ur-gers, cogere, co-agere, to press or force together.
See THRAVE. UN-

THROAT, s. v. -Y. The projected front of the neck.

A.S. Throte, throta, throt-bolla, the throat-bowl.
Perhaps from Thrao-an, jacere, to throw, (thraowed, thraw'd, thraw't.) A-

THROB, s. v. -ING. To press or push; to beat or strike; to make frequent pulsations, or beats; to palpitate.

Jun. and Mins. derive from Gr. Θροβειν, to disturb. Sk. thinks it formed from the sound.
Perhaps from A.S. Thraep-tan, to urge, to press.

THROE, *v.* s.* or THROW, s. The s. is app.
to—Any painful effort; a struggle, agony, anguish.—Surrey.

A.S. Throw-tan, pati, to suffer or endure; perhaps from Thraw-an, to throw, to heave, (sc. as women in travail.)

THRONE, s. A seat; emph. app. to the
-ED. seat of potentates; of persons in
-IZE, *v.** honour, power or authority. App.
also to—the persons occupying such seats,
or places of eminence.—Fabyan.

Fr. Trone, thron; It. & Sp. Trono; Ger. Thron; D. Troon; L. Thronus; Gr. Θρονος, a seat; from the unused θραειν, to sit. De-Dis-En-In-Un-*THRONG, v. s. To press; to compress;

-ING. to press together in close ranks,
-LY. great numbers—busily, actively; to crowd, to swarm.

D. Dringhen; Ger. Dringen, trengen; Sw.
Tränge; Dan. Trænger; A.S. Thrang, from the v. Thring-an, "to press, squeeze or thrust, to thrust together. Chaucer useth Thringing for thrusting, clustering together."—Som.

THROSTEL, s. Dim. of thrush, (qv.)
A.S. Throstle, throsle.

THROTTLE, s. v. To throttle,—to take, hold or seize, to press or compress the throat; and thus, to stop the breath; to choak. Throat-dal, the dym. of Throat.

THROW, v. s. To throw, seems equiva-
-ER. lent to—To cast,—a word which it
-ING. does not appear the A.S. possessed.
-STER. See CAST.

To cast, to fling, to hurl, to toss; to heave.

With Eng. prepositions joined—To throw,
(as To cast also,) is equivalent to certain compounds of the L. Jacere.

A.S. Thraw-an, jacere, jactare, to hurl, to fling.
—Som. Be-Mis-Over-Out-Un-Up-

THROW, \ s.* In a throw, uno oculi conjectu seu nutu; in one throw or cast of the eye; in a nod, (Sk.) in the time of an instantaneous action. And Mr. Tyrw.—

Time, a little time.—Chaucer. Gower.

THRUM, v. s. To knot, tie, or fasten;
-BLE, v. to twist or twine together; to
-MING. weave; to dress or work with -MY. thrum, or any thing interwoven or matted together; to thicken; to close or crowd together; to compress, to collect.

To thrum, sc. on a fiddle, (Beau. & F.)
is, perhaps, to drum.

Lye says,—“the end or extremity of a web;”
and refers to Isl. Thrumm, the extremity or end.
Cot. has,—chambre de sang, clots or clusters of congealed blood. Sk. says,—perhaps from A.S.
Trum, ge-trum, a knot; or (he adds) from Ger.
Trucken, to thrust. The A.S. Trum is probably from the v. Trymman, firmare, confirmare, robo-rare, to render firm or strong, to strengthen; and hence, To thrum, may be—as above exp.

THRUSH, s. An ejection, an eruption.

This word is not found in older lexicographers, Mins. Sk. or Jun. The etym. is unsettled: “from Thrust, a breaking out.”—Dr. Johnson. Perhaps merely a throw or throe.

THRUSH, s. A bird.

D. Droes-el, -el; Ger. Tröstel; A.S. Thrise, Dim.—throstle. See THROSTLE.

THRUST, s. v. -ING. To push, to press forcibly; to intrude, to obtrude; to compress, to compel; to impel.

Sk. derives from L. Trudare; Lye, from Isl.
Thrista, trudere.

THRUST, \ s. i. e.* Thirst.—Spenser.

THUMB, s. v. -ING. “The hand is divided into four fingers bending forwards, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb.”—
Ray.

D. Duym; Ger. Daum; Sw. Tumme; Dan.
Tomme; A.S. Thuma. Wach. derives from Gr.
Θυμω, θυμω, θυμω. It is probably connected with the v. To thump, (qv.)

THUMP, v. s. -ER. To beat hardly or heavily, (with something broad or blunt,) so as—to compress, to thicken; to beat or hit hard; to thrash.

It. Thumbo, thombo, ictus validus et sonorus, (Sk.) a strong and loud blow. It may be from A.S.
Trym-man, to thrum, (the r being dropped.) Be-

THUNDER, v. s. To sound loudly,
-ER. noisily; to roar; to sound, to echo,
-ING. with frequent repetitions, or rever-
-OUS. berations.—Milton. Brome.

D. Don-der; Ger. -ner; Sw. Dunder; Dan.
Tord-en, -ner; A.S. Thunder; Fr. Tonnerre; It.
Tuono; Sp. Trueno; L. Tonitru, from Tonare, to

THURIBLE, \ s.* -RIFICATION.† Thurible, —a vessel in which to put, to burn (thus) incense. Thurification,—burning incense.

**Bp. Hall*. †Bp. Taylor.

THURROK, s. Also written Thorruke.
D. Dorch or dorch, sentina.—Kilian. Tyrw.
says it is a Sax. word, which the Glossaries render cymba. “It seems,” he adds, “to have signified any sort of keeled vessel, and from thence, what we call the hold of the *Gr above a strong ship." Tooke states Thorruke—to be door, (gale, passage.) In our Ladies Mirroure, it is described to be—"A place in the bottome of a shippe, wherein is gathered all the fylthe, that cometh into the shyppe." It seems equivalent to our usage of Draught, (Matt. xv. ; Mark vii.)

THURS-DAY, s. Thor, an old Saxon deity, to whom the fifth day of the week was sacred; thence called Thorsdag, now Thursday.

D. Donder-dagh ; Ger. -stag ; Dan. Torsdag ; Sw. Thorsdag ; A. S. -dag.

THUS, av. In this, to this,—sort, or kind, manner, degree.

A. S. Thus ; sic, ita, talis, hujusmodi ; it is perhaps the same word as This, (qv.) into u.

THWACK, v. s. To threaten, to beat or thump.

Lye derives from A. S. Thaccan, to strike. Sk.—from Ger. Zwicken or Zwicken, to pluck; and Wach. refers this to A. S. Twice-an, -ian, to pluck or twitch.

THWART, v. ad. cu. -NESS.* To wrest, to twist; to wrest out of its straight course; to pervert, to traverse, to cross.

Thwarts,—things (sticks, blocks, &c.) laid across.—Bp. Hall.

Thwart is Thweort, or Thweorted, past p. of Thweortian, to wrest, to twist; and upon this pt. the v. is formed. A. Over-

THWHITE,* v. -EL.† To cut, to carve.

**Hollinshed. Holland.* †Chaucer.
A. S. Thwit-an, excindere, to cut out, to cut from. See WHITEL.

THY, pro. THINE. Of or pertaining or belonging to thee.

Go. Thins ; A. S. Thine, tuus; D. Dym ; Ger. Dux ; Sw. & Dan. Din ; Fr. Tien. Thine is thy-en. See THE, THOU.

THYME, s. -y. A plant.

Fr. Thym ; It. Timo ; L. Thymum ; Gr. Θυμος.

TIAR, s. -A. A round wreathed ornament for the head, (somewhat resembling the Turkish turband,) worn in old times by the princes, priests, and women of Persia.—Cot.

Fr. Tiars ; It. Sp. & L. Tlars ; Gr. Tiapas.

TICE, v. See ENTICE. To tice is still common in the North (see Brocket):—To allure, to tempt; to hold out, or offer, or present, allurements or temptations.

TICK, s. Tick, Fr. Tique,—the vermin -ER. that tacks or fastens itself upon different animals. "At tick," in Drayton,—at take or touch.

Tick of a bed,—in which the feathers or other materials are tacked or fastened, which holds the feathers.

Ticket, Fr. Etiquet,—"A little note, breviate or bill; esp. such an one as is stuck upon the gate of a court, signifying the seizure, &c. of an inheritance by order of justice."—Cot. Stuck, i. e. tacked.

Ticket,—a bill, label, note, or notification attached; and subsequently,—detached.

To go on tick,—i. e. a ticket or note being made or taken instead of payment; cons.—to go on trust or credit.

In all its applications, Tick appears to be from the v. To tack, to fasten. See TACK.

TICKLE, *ad.* v.* The ad.—Fastened in a -NESS.† slight degree; weakly, feebly, affixed -ER. or attached, insecurely; and thus, -ING. cons.—weak, feeble, insecure, un- -ISH. steady, unstable, infirm. To tickle,—

To touch lightly; to act upon, excite, by light touches; to titillate; to excite by slight touches of a pleasing kind; to awake to sensations of pleasure;—as, to tickle the palate by a touch or taste, but not to gratify with full enjoyment. "For all tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the thinness of the skin, and suddenness, and rareness of touch, do further: for we see, a feather, or a rush, drawn along the lip or cheek, doth tickle; whereas a thing more obtuse, or a touch more hard, doth not"—Bacon. "Chaucer to Beau. & F. "Chaucer. Mir. for Mag.

Misa. derives from Gr. Τίλλω, vel lino, to pluck. Sk. suggests A. S. Tincles; D. Tindelen, Wüllere, (à quo ultimo,) from which last, the other two (he adds,) have descended to us; but there is no notice taken of the ad. Tickle. May not the word in all its applications be merely the dim. of Tick (qv.)? Un-

TICK-TACK, s. Fr. Tric-trac, the inside or playing side of a pair of tables; the tables themselves. The game (Tick-tack) at tables; also,—the clattering noise made by the tablemen, &c.—Cot.

It. Tricche tache ; D. Tick-tacker, tick-tack-bord, a chess-board.

TIDE, s. v. -FUL.* Tide,—the moment when, or at which, any thing comes or goes, happens, takes place or befalls; time, season.

Tideful, i. e. timely, in good time or season. Wiclif renders "temporaneum et serotinum,"—tideful and lateful.—James v.
Tide of the sea,—time or season of ebb or flow. Met.—motion or commotion, (like the tide,) flood, stream, current.

Tyde, v. in R. Gloucester, ("Tyde wat so bytyde;") Tidde, in Chaucer, ("I durst have sworn, thee should never have tidde so fair a grace;")—to come to, to have the hap or chance. See BETIDE. To move as the sea, or tide of the sea, (Feltham, &c.): "They are tyded down the stream."

Tide is frequently conjoined to the preceding word:—morrowtide, noontide, eventide, &c.—Wiclif.

"A. S. Tid, tempus, hora, a time, a season, an hour. Ger. Zeit ; Belg. Tijd. Hence happily, our Tide, for the ebbing and flowing of the sea at certain hours or seasons, according to the course of the moon."—Som. In A. S. Tiden; D. Tiden, tyen; Ger. Ziehen; and in Go. Tiden, ire, procliaci, to go or come, to move. Be. Misa-

TIDINGS, s. Any thing happening, or that has happened; a tale, story, narrative of such things; news.

D. Tydinghe; A. S. Tid-an, to come, to come to, to come to pass, to happen.

TIDY, ad. Timely, seasonable; suited, prepared, dressed for the season; ready, in due order, orderly, neat.

Tid, in the North, (Grose,) is,—lively, sprightly; and Tidy,—small. The Gloss. to G. Douglas says,—handy, adroit; and in these applications, Doll Tear-sheet may be intended to use the word.

A tid-bit is yet common in speech for—a delicate little bit.

From A. S. Tid, time or season; D. Tydelick. Tidlic,—seasonable, in good time; and, as in Wiclif,—tidful. See TIDE. Un-

TIE, v. s. or TYE, v. Gen.—To bind fast, —ER. to hold or keep fast; to fasten; to

TYING. join or conjoin, to unite; to knit, to constrain, to restrain; to bind or oblige.

Tight, (qv.)—is the past tense, and so used by Spenser,—“A chain he tight.”

D. Tuy-eren; A. S. Tian, tigan, vineire, ligare, to bind;—by infolding one plant or flexible material round another, and pulling it till it holds fast. Un- Up-

TIER, s. Anciently also Tire.

Gen.—A row, a rank, a line.

Fr. Tiere, tiere. Rank, place, order, &c.—Roquefort. D. Tyser, (Kilian;) a long row or rank of things fastened or tied (connexarum) together; from the v. Tuy-eren, to tie.

TIERCE. See TERCE.

TIFF, s. A drink. Perhaps corrupted from Tip, i. e. Tipple, tip, tiph, tiff.

TIFF, * v. To deck, or decorate.—“Search. Fr. Tifer, attifer, to deck, prank, trick, trim, adorn. Of uncertain etym. See Mén.”

TIFFANY, s. The thinnest and softest of silks, (Sk.) from Fr. Tiffer, (see TIFF), to adorn; because silk is suited for show and ornament.

TIGER, s. The animal, as well as the —OR-ESS. river, are said to be so named —ISH.* from their swiftness.

Tigris, “in the Medians’ language, betokeneth a shaft!” (sagittam).—Holland, Plinie, b. vi. c. 87. **Str P. Sidney*. Fr. It. & Sp. Tigre; L. Tigris.

TIGHT, ad. Fast or fixed; close, strict, —LY. compressed, compact; compressed

—NESS. into form or shape; opposed to—

—EN, v. loose, slovenly, lazy;—neat, brisk, handy, active.

From Ger. Dicht, and that from L. Tectum.—Sk. Tight is used by Spenser, as the regular past p. of Tie, (qv.); and Tooke forms it thus,—Tied, tied, tight. Beau. & F. write Tith, (qv.)

TIKE,* or TYKE, s. An animal subject to or infected with sicks, (qv.); a dog; a lousy, dirty, vulgar fellow.—“P. Ploughman.”

TILE, s. v. A cover: app. to—separate —ER. pieces (tile-shards, as Holland calls

—ING. them,) of baked or dried clay or earth, &c. used for covering houses.

Fr. Tuile; It. Tig-ola; Sp. -a, -illa; L. Tegula, from Teg-ere, to cover. In D. also, Teghel, tichel; A. S. Tig-el. Un-

TILL, co. To while or time.

A. S. Til, which (Tooke thinks) is formed by the coalescence of the two A. S. words To-while, i. e. to and while, i. e. time. From morn till night, is no more than—“From morn to time night:” but even in our oldest writers, Till is app. to—place as well as time; as, “he fled till Ireland,” “they gon till Athenes;” and is used, as in other cases, as equivalent to To.—“He spake till the chevalree;” “turned till a bere.” Wiclif uses the strong pleonasm Till to (i. e. to while to), and till into. To while, may be the words of which Till is comp.; and time included in it, may have been lost sight of; and thus, the whole word used as equivalent to one of its parts only. In vulgar speech, this usage is now not rare; as, “I sent till him.” Un-

TILL, v. To till the earth is,—to raise, —ABLE. lift, turn it (sc. with the plough,

—AGE. spade, &c.); and thus to cultivate —ER. it. In Gower, “the craft of plough

—ING. tilling” is—the craft of lifting up,

—MAN. turning the earth with the plough.

TILTH. Tilth,—any manner of operation, which tilleth or turneth up, or raiseth the earth; also app. to the land when tilled.

To till a snare, (Browne),—to set it up, to raise it; to set a toil. See TOIL.

Tiller of a boat or other vessel,—gubernaculum—A mobilitate.—Sk.

Till or tiller of a shop (for the money),—a moveable drawer, easily lifted or carried away.

A. S. Til-ian, tyl-ean, to travel, to labour, to toil.—Som. D. Tylen, tyulen, colere terram, tillen, levare. Tooke considers the primitive meaning of the A. S. v. to be toltere, to lift up, to raise, to turn over. In R. Gloucester, tilleth is—moveth, goeth, travelleth, proceedeth. See TALL, TELL, TILT, TOIL, TOLE, TOLL, TOOL. Un-

TILT, s. v. —ING. The raised cover of a boat or waggon.

To till a vessel, (properly, to till it,) is—to raise it.—Sk. and Tooke.

To run at till is perhaps merely (hastis elevatis), with spears titled or upraised; for so the combatants entered the field:—(met.) with the force or speed of a combatant at till.

To ride “tilting o’er the waves,” (Milton), is—to ride surging, rising, as the waves rise.

Tilled, tild, till, past p. of the v. Tilian, to raise, to lift up. See Tooke. A-Over-

To run at till—(hastis iudae), Min. derives from D. Tillen, levare, loco movere, or from the v. To tell, because all the strokes are told, or numbered, (See TALL).—Rach (says Sk.) too forced: and he prefers the A. S. Teatirian, to totter, to nod, from the motion of the combatants in their saddles, while engaged.

TIMBER, s. —ED. Timber-trees,—trees supplying wood for building; the thick stem or trunk.

A well-timbered man,—a well-built and strongly formed man, with strong limbs.

D. Timm-er, -eren; Ger. Zimm-er, -eren; Sw. Tim-mer, -ra; Dan. Tommer; A. S. Timbr-e, -ian, to build, to construct. Un-

TIMBRE,* s. Timbre, Timberlere, (which —ER-EL. Lye and Tyrw. think are from —ELLED,* A. S. Tumbere, a tumbler, a dancer,) may be merely tambour. Tambours or tamborines are still beaten, cast, and caught, as described by Chaucer:—

"The timbres up fall subtilly
Thel casten, and hent hem full oft
Upon a finger faire and soft,
That thei ne failed never mo."

*Chaucer. †Milton.

Perhaps, timboral, or tamborell. See TAMBOR, and Sk.

TIME, s. v. "The consideration of duration, as set out by certain periods, and mark'd by certain measures or epochs, is that, I think, which most properly we call time." — Locke. "Our conception of time originates in that of motion; and particularly in those regular and equable motions carried on in the heavens, the parts of which, from their perfect similarity to each other, are correct measures of the continuous and successive quantity called Time, with which they are conceived to co-exist. Time therefore may be defined,—The perceived number of successive movements." — Gillies. Aristotle's Ethics. Analysis.

Timely,—seasonable, in good season, early.—Ralegh. †Bacon.

Dan. Time; Sw. & A. S. Tima; Fr. Temps, from L. Tempus.—Sk. It admits at least of conjecture, that Time may be from A. S. v. Tym-an, to bear or bring forth, to teem. A woman's time is yet used emph. for the period of travail or labour. See SEASON. See TEMPORAL, for the supposed etym. of tempus. Be-Over-Un-

TIMID, ad. Gen.—Fearful; afraid, afraid. — Idity. frightened; easily frightened; — Orous. apprehensive of danger, or — Orouslly. difficulty.—Elyot.

— Orousness. Fr. Tim-ide, ore; It. Ido, ordeo; — Erosity. Sp. Tem-do, -roco; L. Timidus, timor; Gr. Δειμα, (Voss.) from δειν, and this from δειν, to blind; app. to that feeling of afright which deprives of the power of speech; blinds or holds fast the tongue. (A. S. Tum-ian, to tame, dom-are.)

TIMONEER, s. The beam, or draught-tree of a waggon, &c.; also, the staff, or handle (which we call the whip) of the rudder, or stern.—Cot.

A steersman, a helmsman. The word has not gained currency, nor do we want it. It. Timoniere, from Timone; Fr. Timon; L. Timon.

TIN, s. A metal.

— Ner. D. Ten; Ger. Zinn; Sw. Tenn; Dan. & — Ny. Estamo; L. Stannum. Wach. thinks that the metal and the name were transported at the same time from Britain:—but it was called by the Gr. Κασσίτερος, which (Lennep thinks) is from the v. Kassivai, junta admoveo, to move near or close to; and to have been given as a name to this metal, because by it, when melted, other harder metals may be joined (i. e. soldered) together. Pliny and Plutarch tell how renowned his was for its use in soldering other metals; and it is not improbable that it is an A. S. word, from the v. Tym-an, claudere, to close, to shut; (to line;) to fasten; and thus (perhaps) to solder.

"Two pieces of black lead cannot possibly be soldered together without this tinglesse." — Holland. Pliny. "Like as tin-solder doth knit and rejoynes a crackt peece of brasse." — Id. Plutarch.

TINE, s. -ED. The sharp, piercing, scratching, tooth of a harrow, prong of a fork; any thing sharp, piercing, cutting.

Tine of horns: Sk. is at a loss. It may be from A. S. Tin-an, irritare, (see To TERN;) to vex, to trouble.

TINE, v. To light, to kindle, to burn, to TIND, v. inflame, to enrage, to rage.

— ER. Tinder, (A. S. Tender;)—matter to kindle or make fire with.—Sam.

**Spenser*. Milton. Dryden. †Wiclyf. Go. Tandyn; A. S. Tend-an; D. Tenn-an; Ger. Zenden; Sw. Tenda; Dan. Tender; Sc. Tind, tynde, accendere, incendere, to light, to kindle, to burn:—To tine or tin a candle,—to light it.—Ray. See TERN.

TING, v. To sound, or cause to sound, — LE, v. as metal stricken; to ring, — LING. cause, or emit the sound of

TINKLE, v. z. bells, when rung; to feel a tremulous, jarring sensation,

— ING. like the ringing of metal,

— ER, or when stricken.

TINKER. Tinkle—is app. to a less, a sharper and shorter sound. Tinkle-tanking, (Bess and F.)—a mere reduplication.

Tinker,—so called either from the noise they make, upon something metallic, to announce their coming, or when at work. It is still pronounced Tinkler, in the North of England. See Brockett.—Chaucer.

D. Tingke, tauchen, tintelen; Fr. Tinter; It. Tintinnare; L. Tinnire, p. p. Tinniens, whence Tinniens may be formed. Tinkle is the same word as Tingle, by the mere change of g into t.

TINGE, v. z. To stain, to dye; to dip — ENT. into, to imbue with—a stain,

TINCT, or to die, or colour; to colour;

TINT, s. v. to give a hue or complexion:

TINCTURE, s. v. app. also (met.) to give a tang, (qv.) or taste, or flavour; to imbue, to impregnate.—Boyle.

Fr. Tindre, teinct, teinture; It. Tingere, tinta, tintura; Sp. Tintar, tinta, tintura; L. Tingere, tinctum; Gr. Tintan, madefactura, humectura, to wet; and, cons. to stain or dye. De-Un-

TINNIENT. See TINA.

TINSEL, s. ad. v. A stuff or silk wrought with silver, (i. e. glittering speckles of silver;) any thing sparkling or glittering:—merely sparkling or glittering; shining, showy, specious.

"Tinsell of seignorie," in R. Branne — "fine robes, honour." — Heorne.

Sk. from Fr. Estincelle, a spark; estinceller, to sparkle; qd. a sparkling or glittering stuff or silk.

TINTI-MARRE, s. An obstreperous noise, and such as is made by great collision or clashing; also the clamour of quarrelling; any great and disagreeable noise.—Sk.

Fr. Tintamarre; Intier, to ring, and marre, a maddock. Any horrible din.—Cot. Sk. thinks either from thunibus mortuus, or (which he likes much better) formed from the sound.

TINY, ad. "Tiny,—puny, little. It is usually joined with little as an augmenta-tive; so they say,—A little tiny thing.”—Ray. Lye refers it to Teine, (qv.)

TIP, s. v. The s.—The top or summit; the -STAFF. highest or most elevated point; the -TOE. extreme point or edge. To tip,—

To reach, to touch, to put or place on the top or summit, the extreme point or edge; to cover the point or edge; to do any thing lightly or superficially by a light or superficial motion or action.

To tip off,—to fall off the tip, point, or edge. To tip off the liquor, is—to turn up the top or edge of the vessel till all is out (see To TIFPLE, and TIFF); to tip over,—to turn tip or top over; to topple, (qv.)

Tip-staff,—an officer carrying a tipped-staff.

Tip-top,—emph. the very highest point or part. D. Tip, top. Dan. Tip.

TIPPET, s. An article of dress worn on the tip or top.

A. S. Tæppet, an upper article of dress.—Lye.

TIPPLE, v. s. To drink frequently; to -FLER. drink continually.

-SY. Tipsy,—having tipped or tippled too much strong drink.

The dim. of Tip, (qv.)

TIRE, v. To tear or rend in pieces; to -EDNESS. prey upon, to feed upon, to -LING, ad. your;—to harass or distress, to -SOME. vex, to trouble; to wear out or weary, to fatigue.

“Tesiphus whose stomachke foules tiren evermo.”—Chaucer. “The vultour will eaten ne tyren no more.”—Id. “Like an emptie eagle tyrs on the flesh.”—Shak.

A. S. Tirian, or Tyrian, to tears or rent in pieces; to tire or weary.—Som. The v. is otherwise written and app. Tear-an, Tir-an, Tear-ton. See TAR, TART, TARRY, TARDY, TARMISH, TEAR, s. TEAR, v. TORMENT, TORRENT. Over-Un.

TIRE, v. s. -MENT. To tire or attire, (qv.) to clothe or invest; to clothe, to dress.

The s. is gen. app. to a dress for the head; whence it has been supposed by some to be a corruption of Tiara.

TIRE. See TIER.

TIRE, s. i. e. The ti-er or binder of the wheel, or parts of the wheel, together.

TISSUE, s. v. A texture; or, as the Fr. Tissure,—“A weaving or plaiting; an interlacing; also, the woofs or weft, the thread which crosseth the staff, or goeth overthwart it in the weaving; also, any woven stuff, but esp. cloth of gold, silver, silk,” &c.—Cot.

Fr. Tis-su, -sure, -trer, to weave. Fr. Tissure is textura opus; and Fr. v. is not improbably from L. Tessere, to weave. Enter—

TIT, s. A small horse.—Sk.

Perhaps Tid, (s into t)—small. See TIDY.

TITH,* ad. i. e. Tight, (qv.)—**Beau. & F.*

TITHE, s. a. “Tithes are defined to be -ABLE. the tenth part of the increase, -ER. yearly arising and renewing from -ING. the profits of lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants.”—Black-stone. “The civil division of the territory of England is into counties, of those counties into hundreds, of those hundreds into tithings or towns.”—Id.

Sc. Teindis; Dan. Tiende; A. S. Teotha, decimus; teoth-ian, decimare, to tith; to set out or take the tith or tenth part.

TITILLATE, v. To tickle; “to touch, -ION. stir, or move with delight.”—Cot.

-IVE.* **Chesterfield*.

Fr. Titiller; It. -dre; L. Titillare, by reduplication of the first syllable from Gr. Τιττα-ειν, vel-lere, or cellicare, to pull, to twitch: nam ex levi vellicatione sive tractatione provenit titillatio.—Voss.

TITLE, v. s. To have or receive, to give

-T-ULAR. or bestow, a name (sc. in -ULARY, ad. s. honour, or for the sake of

-LELESS.* honourable distinction); to -ULAR-ITY.† have or give a name, sc. as

-LY.‡ owner, possessor, as having a right to own or possess; as claimant; and, thus, to have or give a right or claim. Gen.—to name, or denominate, to call.

**Chaucer.* †Brown. ‡R. Mountagu.

Fr. Ti-tre, -ulaire; It. -olo, -oldre; Sp. -ulo, -ular; L. Titul-us, -are, to bestow a title or name. Voss derives the L. Titulus, from Gr. Τιττα-ειν, the reduplication of τι-ειν, to honour; others from τιττω, honoured. At. Dis. En. In. Un.

TIT-MOUSE, s. So called from its diminutive size. See TIT.

TITTER, s. v. i. e. To twitter, (qv.)

App. to—A shaking, tremulous, low—laugh.

TITTLE, s. A point; any thing as small or minute as a point; the smallest part, particle, or portion.

Wiclif so renders the L. Apes; and in the Ger. version of Luther, (Matt. v. 18.) the word is tittel, which Wach. interprets—punctum, apex, and derives from A. S. v. Thyg-an, figere, pungere. See THISTLE.

TITTLE-TATTLE, s. i. e. Tattle-tattle.

TLE, (term.) the dim. (also le), is dle or dæl, a part or portion; as, set-tle, bund-le (bund-dle), tipple.

TO, pr. “The preposition To, (in Dutch written Toe, and Tot, a little nearer to the original,) is the Gothic substantive Tau, or Tauhts, i. e. act, effect, result, consummation; which Gothic substantive is indeed itself no other than the past part. Tauit, tawids, of the verb Tausyan, agere: and what is done, is terminated, ended, finished. In the Teutonic, this verb is written Tuan or Tuon, whence the modern German Thun, and its preposition, (varying like its verb,) Tu, (Zu.) In the A. S. the verb is Teog-an, and the prep. To.” “Lowth says—the preposition To, placed before the verb, makes the infinitive mood. He would have said more truly, that To placed before some nouns, makes verbs:” and To was so prefixed to distinguish the infinitive from the noun, after the infinitive had lost that distinguishing termination (an) which it had formerly. Chaucer sometimes uses the infinitive termination, excluding to, as —“He was worthy han (i. e. to have) his life.” Sometimes he drops the infinitive, and uses to, as —“Women desiren to have soveraynte,” (Wif of Bathes Tale.) Sometimes he uses both termination and sign, as —“Than longen folke to gon (i. e. go-en) on pilgrimages, and palmeres for to seken strange strondes,” (Prologue.) (See Tooke.) Lye says, —To, in compounds, signifies ad and dis, (a curious instance of the determination with which our lexicographers wrench a word to any meaning they please,) as, To-bær-an, adferre; To-bræc-en, disrumpere. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, —To, in composition with words, is gen. augmentative; “as the helmes they to-hewen, and to-shrede,” i. e. hewe and cut to pieces, (into shreds.) The bones they to-brest, i. e. break in pieces: with other instances; —in all of which To, (which might as properly have been written Do), including in itself action, gives emphasis to the action expressed by the v. to which it is preposed. Such words in A. S. are abundant. In R. Gloucester, and R. Brunne, and in Piers Plouhman, they are also frequent. Wiclif uses Torent, —“The veil of the temple was torent,” (Matt. xxvii.); Tobarst, —“And he was hanged and tobarst the myddil,” (Dedis, i.); Tobreyd; with others.

To is used in opposition to from.

D. Toe, tot; Ger. Zu; Sw. & Dan. Til; A. S. To; Go. Du. —Omnia affinia Latino Ad. —Wach To, —as To make, To walk, To do, —a Græco articulo to, idem est ut to ποσειν, to περιπατειν, to περιπατειν. —Mine. (See Do.) Un-

Toad-eater. from the Spanish
todita (a todo
all) a little slave who does every thing for his master.

TOAD, s. -EATER. An animal. Toad-eater, —one who, a dependant who, will swallow, and approve, any thing from a superior, a patron, &c. for selfish purposes.

Dan. Tudne; A. S. Tade; perhaps from the v. Teon, tecg-an, to extend, to expand. The L. Euso is supposed, by some etymologists, to be app. to this animal, —quia tumida bestia est.

TOAST, s. v. -ER. Any thing baked; usually, bread sliced and baked before the fire.

“A rare drunken toast,” in C. Cotton, appears to be a drunken toss-pot: and Toast, may be a something as a signal for each toss in a company of toss-pots. And hence —

To toast, —to name or propose, any one whose health, success, &c., any sentiment which is to be drunk: and a toast, —any one who, or any thing which, is so named or proposed. See Tais in Jamieson; and see Tailer, No. 24.

Fr. Tostée, a toast of bread; from L. Tostum, past p. of Torrere, to bake.

TOBACCO, s. “There is an herbe [in CON-IST. Virginia] which is sowed apart -ING.” by itselfe and is called by the inhabitants Vppowoc: in the West Indies it hath diuers names, according to the severall places and countreys where it groweth, and is used. The Spaniards call it Tabacco. —Hackluyt. *Bp. Hall.

Said to be so called from an island in the West Indies. Perhaps Tabasco in the Bay of Campanchy. Sk. —Ab insulâ in Americâ —Tabaca.

TOD, s. v. As much wool as is tied in one bundle. Gen. —any thing thick and bushy; a bush, a thicket.

Tod is still the common name of a fox in Scotland; and perhaps so called from his bushy tail.

A certain measure of wool, (Sk.) —from Ger. Zotte, a lock or bunch of hair. Mina. proposes the Flemish Todderen, nesters, which is the common D. v. Tuyeren, to tie.

TO-DAY, av. TO-MORROW. To-day, —this present, passing day.

To-morrow, —the day next following to-day or this, the present day.

A. S. To-day, hodie, this day. A. S. To-may-en. See To, and Morrow.

TODDY, s. The name of a tree, from which is drawn a vinous juice. App. to —a mixture of spirits, water, and other ingredients; for which application we are probably indebted to our seamen.

TOE, s. A finger of the foot.

P. Plouhman writes the plural Ton. See in v. Toor. Chaucer writes it —Tone, i. e. To-en. D. Tee, teen; Ger. Zake; Sw. Ta; Dan. Taar; A. S. Ta; which the etymologists derive either from Gr. Ta-eiv, extendere, or the A. S. v. Teon, to extend, to expand; or from Tes, because that is their number. (See Wack and Jun.) It is probably from Te-on, to take; app. first to the talons or claws of an animal.

TO-FORE, av. Before, afore.

A. S. To-foran, ante, præ.

TOFT, s. A place where at some time a rustick mansion which they call a messuage was situated. —Spelman.

A word common in conveyances of lands and tenements. Law L. Toftum.

TOGATED,* ad. TOGED,† Dressed or invested with a gown, (toga), gowned.

The first folio (Shak.) —tongued; which, Mr. Boswell observes, agrees better with the context. —*Wood. †Shak. L. Togatus.

TO-GETHER, av. Gathered, collected, in one body, in one place, at one time; unitedly, conjoinedly.

A. S. Togadere, una, simul, pariter. See AX-TOGETHER, and GATHER. All-

TOIL, s. v. To till: —gen. to labour, to -ER. work, to travail.

TOIL, s. Any thing lifted or raised; a snare, set up, sc. to catch animals. A spider's web is a toil, i. e. something lifted up, or raised, to catch flies.

Fr. Toiles. Toil de araignée, a cobweb, Sk. derives from L. Tela. See TILL.

TOILETTE, s. Now app. to—The dressing table.

Fr. Toilette, from toil, cloth; and toil, from tela, linen cloth.—Col. The Eng. (says Men.) call it a combing cloth.

TOKEN, s. v. To teach, to make known, -ING. to notify, to denote, to declare, to -LESS.* designate, to mark.—Byrom.

D. Teek-en; Ger. Zeichen; Sw. & Dan. Tegn; Go. Tackn-gan; A. S. Tackn-ian; D. Teechn-en; Ger. Zeichnen; Sw. Tæcn-a, to mark; probably from A. S. Tæc-en, to teach. Be- Fore-

TOLE, or TOLL, v. Chaucer writes Tull. Ray says—To toll, is to entice or draw in, to decoy, or flatter; as the bell tolling calls in the people to church;—and Milton speaks of—A tolling sign post, hung out to call passengers. Bp. Burgess appears to coincide with this origin, and thinks To toll may be—to produce an effect by slow, insensible degrees; but it seems more probably to be a cons. usage of Toil, (see TILL), to draw into, to lure into, a toil: gen.—to draw along; to induce, to allure, to entice.

TOLERABLE, ad. That can or may be -ABLY. borne or suffered, supported, or -ANT. sustained, or endured; sufferable, -ANCE. supportable; met.—that may be -ATE, v. suffered or permitted; scarcely -ATION. allowable or excusable; indifferent.

Fr. Toler-er; Sp. -er; It. Tollerare; L. Tolere-re, from tolere, to lift or raise, to till;—and Tooke thinks L. is from A. S. In-Un-

TOLL, s. v. A tax or tribute levied or -ING. raised. To toll,—to raise or TOL-BOOTH. levy, a tax or tribute; also, to -LAGE. pay it.

To toll,—to raise, and cons. to sound—a bell; to sound it (at a particular hour, as a signal, or call).

Fr. Tollin, the toll taken by a miller. Tollu, taken, removed, lift, or carried away. Tollir,—to remove, to take away, sc. the force or validity; make void. Gen.—to take away, to withdraw. To toll a bell, Sk. thinks, is formed from the sound. He and Jun. derive Toll, a tribute; A. S. Toll; D. Tol; Ger. Zol; Sw. Tet; Fr. Tailier, from Gr. Tel-or. Others give it the same origin as Tally, (qv.) (See also TALLAGE.) Tooke thinks that Toll, and the Fr. Taille, (qv.)—taken of goods—differ only in the pronunciation, and consequent writing of them. It is a part lifted off, or taken away. To raise taxes, to levy taxes, a levy upon any person, are common expressions. "The toll of a bell," he adds, "is its being lifted up, which causes that sound we call its toll." See TILL. At-tollent. Ex-tol.

TOLUTATION, s. App. to the ambling pace of a horse.—Brown.

L. Tolut-arius equus, from Tolutum; and that from tolere, to raise or lift up.

TOM-TIT, s. The Tit-mouse, (qv.)

TON, s. The tone; the air, sc. of fashion; the style, the vogue, the mode.

Fr. Ton, the tone or tune.

TON. See TUN.

TONE, s. v. A stretching; an extension; -ING. an extension of the voice, of sound; -IC. sound. App. frequently to—an -ICAL. excess of, an affection of, particular sounds—as, a whining, drawing tone. Also met. to—the intention, tension, or general state or temper of mind.

Fr. Ton; It. Tono; Sp. Tono; L. Tonus; Gr. Tonus, from tonoiv, intender, (sc. vocem), to stretch the voice. See TILL. Dis- De- In-tonate.

TONGS, s. That which takes, seizes, holds; a tool, an instrument for that purpose.

A. S. Tang, tang-an; D. Tanghe; Ger. Zang; Sw. Tong. Ihre and Wach. derive from Tago, to take, to seize, to hold.

TONGUE, s. v. The organ of speech; -LESS. the power or faculty of speech; -TIE. the language. Also app. to—

Any thing projected or protruded as the tongue from the mouth:—a tongue of land. Go. Tuggo, (tuggo); A. S. & Dan. Tang-e; Sw. -a; D. Tonghe; Ger. Zung, which (Wach. thinks) is the same word as Ding, loquela; Ding-en, loqui; and this in A. S. is Thing-un, locutio; Thing-an, loqui, to speak.

TONSILE, ad. -SURE. A shearing, shaving, cutting or clipping.

Fr. Tonsura. It. Sp. & L. Tonsura, from ton-sum, past p. of Tondere, to shave, to shear.

TONSILS, s. A swelling in the jaws, (& tollendo.—Voss.)

Fr. Tonsilles; L. Tonsilla, a dim. of Toles, (tumor in faucibus.)

TONTINE, s. "Annuities for life have occasionally been granted in two different ways: either upon separate lives, or upon lots of lives, which in French are called Tontines, from the name of their inventor."—A. Smith.

TOO, av. i. e. To. To pref. to verbs gives emphasis. (See TO.) Written Too, and—

Placed before ads. or avs. it gives addition, increase, augmentation, excess; and then, gen. implies—more, also, likewise; more than; over, beyond.

TOP

TOOL, s. Tool is—(some instrument, any instrument toll'd lifted up, or taken up, to work with; (met.)—

App. to persons, who are the tools or instruments employed or used by others.

A. S. Tol, tote, toli; from til-lan, to labour.—Sk.

TOOT, s. -ER. To advise, or advertise; to make known; to announce,—by (the loud noise of) the horn; to sound the horn; or, (in Dutch,) to make known by the low sound of a whisper; to whisper.

D. Tuyte, tote, cornu; tuyten, canere cornu, to sound a horn.—Ellian. A. S. Tot-lan, eminere tanquam cornu e fronte.—Lye. D. Tuyten is also strepere, tinnire, to make a noise; tuyten in de oore,—to tell, to whisper in the ear. Neither the horn nor the whisper is part of the meaning. To toot, seems to be app. to any means of knowing, or making known:—to search, to seek, to peep or pry; to ken, to espy, to look into, to look out. In P. Ploughman, "a beams toten," is—a beam espy: "his ton toteden out," is—his toes peeped, looked out. A toting hill, Udal himself explains, i. e. a peak. A toting run,—a ruff looking over or out, projecting, overhanging. Toting noses,—projecting, prominent. Tooters, (in Beau. & F.) were to announce the king's approach (by sound of horn). The origin seems to be A. S. To-witana. Lye notices the phrase—Is do eow to witana,—I do you to wit; Isdo vos scire; scire loot. To wit, loot, is an obvious course of corruption.

TOOTH, s. v. That which suggesth or -FUL. tootheth; pulls or tears (to pieces).

-LESS. App. gen. to the mouth, the palate.

-SOME.* Met.—to any thing placed like,

TORNADO, s. A turn, sc. by wind; a whirl-wind.

Sp. Tornado, from torner, to turn.

TORPEDO, s. A fish, so called from its benumbing qualities.

Fr. Torp-ide; It. Adino; Sp. & L. Torpedo, from torp-ere, to benum.

TOS

TORPENT, ad. Sluggish or slothful.
-P-ESCENT. inert; nummed, or deprived of
-ID. activity or power to act or move;
-IDITY. motionless.
-IDNESS. It. Torpido, -ere; L. Torpidus— torpens, from torpere, to hulk; to be or
-ITUDE. become lazy. (A.B. Tir-en, to tire, qv.)
-OUR.

TORQUET, ad. Wreathed.

*Hacklgt. Fr. Torque.

TORRE-FY, v. To parch, to scorch, to -EFACTION. burn; to parch or dry by heat
-ID. or fire.

Fr. Torrid-e; It. & Sp. -o; L. Torridus, from torrere, which Voss derives from torrus, and that from Gr. Tripav. (A.B. Tir-en? to tire, qv.)

TORRENT, ad. s. A rapid, violent, stream or current.

Fr. It. & Sp. Torrente; L. Torrenta, from torrere, (see TORRE-FY), either because it becomes quickly dry, or because it boils with rapid violence.

TORT, s. A wrong; an injustice; an -ION. injury, a harm, or hurt; a damage,

-IOUS. mischief.

-IVE. Tortious,—wrongful. Tortuous,—

-UOUS. wrung or wrenched, (sc. out of a -UOSITY.* straight line,) twisting, wreath-ing, crooked.

For Torcentious, Chaucer, or his copiers or printers, must answer.—*Holland, &c.

Fr. Tort, tortueux; It. Tort-o, -uoso; Sp. -uoso, from L. Tortum, past p. of tortuare, to torture, (qv.) to twist, to wrench, to wring, (to tear, qv.)
Con-De-Dis-Ex-Re- Also In-torted.

TORTOISE, s. An animal.

Fr. Tortis, tortue, tartarasse; It. Tartaruga;
Sp. Tortuga, so called, either because barde, slow, or torta, twisted, wreathed.—See Men. Fr. & It.
Dictionaries.

TORTURE, s. v. To wrest, to wring;

-ER. to wrench; to inflict, or afflict

-ING. with pain or agony; to agonize,

-INGLY. to excruciate, to rack; to pull out

-OUS.* to the full stretch.—*H. More.

Fr. Tort-ure, -urer; It. Sp. & L. Tortura, from tortum, past p. of tortuare, to torture, (qv.)

TORVE, ad. -OUS.† Harsh, stern, grim.

*Fuller. †Denham.

It. Törvo; L. Torus, perhaps from tortus, twisted, sc. into harshness or sternness.

TORY, s. -ISM. "Such men are ruder than torges and wild Americans."—Glanvill.

"The words Whig and Tory, although they are not much above 30 years old, have been pressed to the service of many successions of parties, with very different ideas fastened to them."—Swift.

Tory Rory (says Sk.), and an Irish Tory or Thory, from Ger. Thor, insane; unless, as I suspect, the word be of Irish origin.

TOSS, v. s. To pull, push about; to put

-ER. into commotion or agitation; to

-ING. sling, to throw; to agitate, to disquiet.

A toss-pot,—one who tosses or throws,
sc. the liquor from the pot; a great drinker.
See TOAST; and Tais, in Jamieson.

Mina (Sk.) derives from D. Tas-en; Fr. -er, to heap up, to accumulate; or from D. Tasseren, to offer violence; perhaps to touse, or tease.

TOU

TOTAL, ad. s. All, whole, entire, com--PLETE. full.

-ITY. Fr. & Sp. Tot-al; It. -ale; L. Tot-us, (Tot-er), whole.

T'OTHER, pro. i. e. The other; as tone,
the one. Still used in Nottinghamshire.

TOTI-PRESENT, ad. -ENCE.* Entirely, wholly present.—*Search.

TOTTER, v. -RY. To tremble or shake,
(sc. as if not firmly set.)

Totty,—unsteady, dizzy.

A. S. Tættrian, is—"to stagger, to reel, to shake, to waver, and (as Sam. writes it) to toller," D. Touteren, tremere.

TOUCH, s. v. "Touch is a sense spread

-Y. over the whole body, though it be

-INESS. most eminently placed in the tip

-ING. of the fingers. By this sense the

-INGLY. tangible qualities of bodies are discerned; as hard, soft, smooth, rough, dry, wet, clammy, and the like. But the most considerable of the qualities, that are perceived by this sense, are heat and cold."

—Locke.

To touch,—to feel by the sense of touch.

To be, or cause to be, or become in contact or in conjunction; to finger, to handle; to come close to, near to; to reach, to approach, to approximate; to appertain, to affect, to effect, to infect. Also—

To do or effect any thing, by a mere touch;
cursorily, without pressure, rest, or stay.

Touch, the s. is further app. emph.—to the right touch or feeling; that quality, those qualities, that cause such feelings;
and hence, Touch, and Touch-stone,—

A test or proof, a criterion, standard, sign, mark: also to—a mere touch, a dash, hit, stroke. And further—to a pledge or contract, bargained or confirmed (perhaps) by touch of hand; as, to keep touch, is to keep promise, &c.

Touchy,—susceptible of touch or feeling
(sc. to excess); easily irritated or provoked.
See TETCHY.

Fr. Toucher; It. Toc-care; Sp. -ar, which appear to come from Ge. Tak-en, (see Men); whence also (Junn.) not only the v. To take, but also to touch. See To TAKK. Re-Un.

TOUGH, ad. Drawing, extending, sc.

-EN, v. without separation of continuity;

-LY. viscid; tenacious, or holding to-

-NESS. gether; and hence,—not easily broken, subdued, overpowered; hardy, sturdy; stiff, inflexible; stubborn, unmanageable.

A. S. Toh, tenax, tentus, tough as bird-lime.—
Som. Tough is toweth,—that which toweth, tug-geth or draweth; or which we tow or drew.

TOUPEE, s. Fr. Toupée,—a topping or tuft; a woman's hair laid out on her forehead; a horse's foretop.—Cot.

TOUR, s. Fr. Tour,—a turn, round, circle, compass, wheeling, revolution, circumvolution; also,—a turn, bout, or walk.—Cot.

TOUR. See TOWER.

TOURN, or TURN, v. App. to—A mar-
-EY, s. v. tial or military sport or enter--ING. tainment, in which the performers
-AMENT. displayed their skill in the ma-
-agement of their horses in turning, return- -ing, wheeling, during the engagement or encounter.

To turn,—to turn, return; "they tourne home ayen."—Gower.

Fr. Tourn-oy, -oyer; It. Torn-do, -edre; Sp.
-eo, -ear. A turn, To turn or turney,—quils (so.) equos celeriter in orbem circumversant, because they swiftly wheel their horses in a circuit.—Sk.

TOURN, or TURN, s. App. to—A court held by the sheriff; "because he keepeth his turn and circuit about the shire."— Bacon. At—

TOUSE, v. To pull, to pluck, to draw or
-EL, v. drag; to pull (out of order, to dis-
-ING. order).

To tease wool, carpere lanam, (Jun.) i. e. to tease
it. See THASE.

TOW, v. s. Tow, s.—That which tuggeth,
-AGE. or with which we tug or draw.
-ING. Also,—

-Y. Tow, A. S. Tow, D. Touw,—made of
-KER.* flax, which (Sk.) may be derived from the v. To tow or draw, because it may easily be drawn out or extended by the hand;—
but as Tow is that which, the rope which, draws, the name may have been early app.
to—the material of which it was made.

*Sir T. Elyot.

D. Tog-hen; Ger. Ziehen; A. S. Tson, toog-an;
Go. Tishan, trahere, to draw; Fr. Tosen, to togg,—to draw, to hale. See DUCZ, TOORN, and TOUGH.

TO-WARD, pr. av. ad. or -WARDS, pr. av.
-LY. With a look or view to; in a way,
-LINESS. course or direction to; tending,
-NESS. or approaching to; coming to,
acceding to; and hence,—

Toward, ad.—concurring, yielding or complying; docile, tractable.

A. S. To-werd, -ward, futurus, venturus, future, to come.—Som. Un—

TOWEL, s. A cloth to wipe (the wet away);—though perhaps of the same origin as Fr. Toil. See TOILET.

Fr. Touaille; It. Tovaglia; Sp. Toalla. Sk.
(says Wach.) derives the Eng. from the Fr.; Men-
—the Fr. from the It.; and Ferrarius,—the It.
from L. Toralla, (sed duro partu, et sensu alieno, nam mantilla non sunt lintea cubitoria.) The
Ger. Zweil, tersorium ex linteo; D. Dwalle, dweil, Wach. thinks, is so called, from its use in washing; by wiping and cleansing; and he derives from Go. Thwahian; A. S. Thwa-an, to wash; and Jun. does so likewise.

TOWER, s. v. or TOUR, s. A building,
-ED. an edifice, standing on high ground;
-Y. raised upon or above another build-
TOURET. ing; a lofty (sc.) fortress; a great height. To tower,—

To rise, to ascend; to soar on high or aloft.

Towered,—furnished or garnished with towers.

Fr. Tour, touraille; It. & Sp. Torre; L. Turris;
Gr. Typore, an edifice upon a height or eminence.

—Hagchius. See Foss. The A. S. Tor is,—
"tower, a rock, a high scarp or hill. Hence, the Tor by Glassenbury, and divers in Cheshire, and elsewhere."—Som. The A. S. Torre is also a tower; and see Tir, Tyr, princeps, principatus, in Lge;
which probably supplies the root.

TOWN, s. A place inclosed or encom-
-ISH. passed. App. to—An undefined
-SHIP. collection of houses or habitations;
-ED. also to—the inhabitants: emph. to —the metropolis.

Tun-scipe,—those of a town or township.
—Som.

A. S. Tun, "a hedge, a fence, any inclosure."
—Som. D. Tugn; Ger. Zuan, locus septimatus cinctus.—Wach. Jun.—from A. S. Tyn-an, clau- dere, circumspire, "to inclose, to fence, hedge, or teene."—Som. And Verstegan says, To tyn was, in his time, still used for sepere, to hedge round. See TAN, TUN.

TOY, s. v. Gen.—Any shewy trinket, a -FUL. plaything, a play or sport; a
-ISH. trifle; any thing trifling, or fan-
-ISHNESS. ciful. To toy,—
-OUS.* To play or sport, to trifle, to dally.—"Warner.

Mins. from D. Toyen, toophen, to ornament;
qd. puerorum ornamenta,—fine, shewy things for children. The D. Toy-en is probably A. S.
Taw-ian; D. Towwen, parare, colere, to dress.
Jamieson derives Sc. Dis, from Su.-Ga. Ty-s, sufflore. See TAW.

TRACE, s. v. A draught, drawing out, or -ABLE. prolonging; a progress, pro-
-ER. cess, or proceeding; a conti-
-ERY. nuous course or way; a road,
-ING. a path; mark or marks formed in passing, trodden in passing;
-LESS. footsteps; vestiges.

TRACT, s. v. Tract is also app. to—an extent
-ABLE. of land or country; and also,
-ABLENESS. (immediately from L. Trac-
-ABILITY. tare), a Tract (L. Tractatus,
-ATE. Fr. Tractie), is,—

-ATION. A treatise,—any writing, book,
-ILE.* essay, discourse, dissertation,
-ILITY.† disquisition, &c. See TREAT.

-ION.‡ Tractable is—treatable, or that may be drawn or led; induced to come or go, or do, as we wish; manageable, govern-able, compliant, obedient.

To trace,—to proceed or go, to proceed in, after, in search or pursuit of; in a path or course gone; to pursue or follow vigilantly or carefully.

Tracery, in Architecture,—formed by intersections of various parts.

*Bacon. †Derham. ‡Paley.

Fr. Trac, trac-e, -er; Tracit, tractable; It.
Trac-to, -idre, tractabile; Sp. -ado, -able, (see TREAT.) L. Tractus, from trahere, (Voss. Tram- ochera.) to draw, (qv.) Abs. Ad. Con. De. Dis-Ex. Pro. Re. Sub-tract. In-Un-tractable. Ob-traction. Por-tray. Un-traced.

TRADE, s. v. A way or course trodden,
-ER. and retrodden, passed and repassed;
-WIND. a way, a path or course pursued or
-ING. kept. "The savage beast's trade."
-FUL.* (Spenser;) "Being in the right
-LESS.† trade of religion," (Udal);—a concourse or intercourse; or regular or habitual course or practice; employment, occupation in merchandize or commerce; intercourse for buying, selling, or bartering; commerce, traffic.

To trade, (formed upon the s.)—to pursue or cause to pursue a path or course; to exercise or practise; to train:—"We haue traded our liues familiarly with him. . . . Wel seen and familiarly traded in the Latine and Greke tongues," (Udal;) "Professors dailie trade vp the youth," (Holinshed.) And gen.—to follow or carry on trade.

*Spenser. Warton. †Young.

Fr. Trac (see TRACE), is a trade or course; and our Eng. s. Trade, which Sk. derives from It. Tratta, (see again TRACE), is the past p. of the v. To trade. Chaucer writes Trade as the past tense of Tread (qv.), the way or path traded or trade,—(semita quam quis premit, ut sibi suisque victum parat.) See TRAFFIC. Surrey renders peruisus usus, "a common trade." "The wind blowing trade" (Hackluyt,) (whence Trade-wind) is—in a regular, steady course. Over-Un-

TRA-DITION, s. v. "Tradition is any -IONAL. way of delivering a thing, or -IONALLY. word, to another; and so every -IONARY. doctrine of Christianity is by -IONER. tradition. I have delivered unto -IONIST. you, saith St. Paul, that Christ -IVE.† died for our sins."—Bp. Taylor. -OR.‡ Tradition is usually distinguished from—genuine and authentic written documents, or records.

*Fuller. †Bp. Taylor. ‡Hooker.

Fr. Trad-ition, It. -istina; Sp. -icion; L. Traditio, from Tradere, to give over or across; to pass over or deliver to. See TRACTOR.

TRA-DUCE, v. To transmit, to transfer, -ER. (to translate;) to convey, to -IBLE. confer; to descend, to derive; -MENT.* (met.) to draw away from, (sc. -DUCT, s.† v.‡ privacy or security, before -DUCT-ION.‡ the public, into notice; and -IVE.‡ hence)—to expose (to derision, scorn, or infamy;) to defame, to scandalize, to vilify, to detract.—*Shak. †Howell. ‡H. More. ‡Not uncommon in old divines and scholastics. ‡Warburton.

Fr. Trad-uire; It. -urre; Sp. -ucir, (to translate;) L. Traducere, tra-ductum, to draw, lead, or bring over or across, from one side to another, from one thing to another.

TRAFFIC, s. v. App. to—Buying, sell- -ABLE. ing, or bartering; commerce; mer- -ER. cantile business; occupation or employment in merchandize; in market- ing, in cheapening.

Fr. Traf-Aque; It. -Aco; Sp. -ico; Sk. says, all of Arabian origin. Jun. forms it from It. & Sp. Trato, (see TRACE), trafficare, trafficare.

TRAG-EDY, s. App. gen. to—Any dis- -IAN. tressful, calamitous, mournful, -IOUS.* story or event. A tale or story -GIC. or event of woe, misery, or wretch- -GIC-LY. edness. -AL. "Tragedy, then, is an imitation -ALLY. of some action that is important, -ALNESS. entire, and of a proper magnitude—by language, embellished and rendered pleasurable, but by different means in different parts—in the way, not of narration, but of action—effecting through pity and terror, the correction and refinement of such passions."—Twining. Aristotle.

"Tragedie is to sayn a certain storie, As olde bookes maken us memorie, Of him that stood in gret prosperitee, And is yfallen out of high degree In to miserie, and endeth wretchedly."

*Fabyan. Wood. Chaucer.

Fr. Trag-édie, It. & Sp. -edia, -ico; L. Tragedia; Gr. Tragœdia, quasi kithreion dices, from τραγος, kithrus, and œdon, cantus; the song of the goat. See VOX.

TRA-JECT, s. v. A traject,—a passage -ION. or ferry. Fr. Traject.

-ORY. To traject,—to throw or cast, to pass or cause to pass, over, or through; to transmit, to transpire.

Trajectory, (Paley)—the course, or orbit, through which a planet is thrown or passed.

Fr. Tra-jecter; It. -gettare; L. Tra-ferre, -jectum, to throw or cast over or across, or through. See TRAJET.

TRA-JET, v. Fr. Trajectaire,—A juggler, -GET-OUR. impostor, cozenner.—Cot.

-RY. Mr. Tyrw. (who could find these words in no language but our own,) has written very laboriously and very copiously upon them without arriving at any conclusion satisfactory to himself. It is singular that the Fr. Trajectaire, or Trajectaire, It. Tragettatore, (see Mem.) should have escaped his keen and careful researches. Sk. says,—perhaps—a trajectendo, because he (the trajectour) throws his balls across (trajecti) from one hand to the other with such swiftness as to surpass the quickest motion of the eye.

TRAIL, s. & TRAWL. To draw or drawl, to draw along, to produce or prolong; to protract; also to trace or track, sc. the course or path.

A trail,—a drag; any thing drawn or dragged; a trace or tract.

Fr. Trailler; Ger. Draelen; D. Treylen, to draw a ship with a rope.—Kithian. D. Treylen is from D. Treck-en, to drag or draw, whence Drabble, Drawl; and Trawl or Trail differs from the latter only in the first letter. En-

TRAIN, s. v. A train,—any thing drawn; -ABLE. drawn out in length, drawn out in -ER. succession or consecution; pro- -ING. longed, or placed or laid out length- -Y.* wise; and hence app. to—

A train of artillery; a train—of a gown, of followers or attendants; a retinue.

A train of events,—a consecutive series.

A train of gunpowder,—laid out lengthwise, in a long line.

A train,—to seduce, allure, entice, or ensnare.

To train,—to draw along; to educate or educate; to seduce or allure.—*Gay.

Fr. Train-er; It. -dre, to draw; probably of the same origin as Trail, (qv.) Mis-Un-Up-

TRAMMEL, s. v. A trammel.—Any thing that involves or entangles, shackles or em- barrasses. To trammel.—

To involve or wrap up; to shackle, to embarrass, to hamper.

It. Tramaglio; Fr. -ail, -eau, a net for par- tridges; a kind of drag-net or draw-net.—Cot. Mina. happily enough (as Sk. thinks) derives from L. Trama, a web, (whence Fr. Tram-er, It. -are, to weave;) from Trameare or Tranmeare, to pass over or across. But Cot. also says—Tram- iller is to weave, bind, fasten or insnare by threefold meshes or mails. And Men. refers to Maille, macula retis, the meshes of a net.

TRA-MONTANE, ad. Gen.—Beyond the mountains; foreign.

Fr. Tramontan-s; It. & Sp. -a. App. to those who live across or beyond the mountains (trans, extra, montes) on the northern boundary of France, or Italy, or Spain.

TRANS-VOLATION, * s. A flight or flying over or beyond.—**Bp. Taylor.*

TRAP, v. s. To catch or take; to overtake, or over-reach; to take in a snare; to ensnare, to beguile.

A trap,—a plaything, with a hollow to take or hold a ball. Met.—a snare, a stratagem.

D. Trappen; Ger. Treffen; A. S. Treppan; Fr. Attraper; It. -päre, to catch. At-Be-En-

TRAP, v. Trappings,—app. to certain
-P-ER. holdings, fastenings, bindings,
-INGS. trimmings of the housings or coverings of a horse; ornamented, decorated: and then, gen., any ornaments, decorations, embellishments; ornamented dresses or dressings, or trimmings.

Trappings, (says Sk.) Mina. derives from Fr. Drap, cloth. Trappours, by which G. Douglas renders Phalera, the Gloss. derives from Fr. Draperie; but Douglas also renders redimiculis (ribbands), Æn. ix. 616, by this same Trappours: and hence Lye supposes Trappours may have been first app. to the ribbands—not without their ornaments—and thence transferred to the phalera of a horse:—what he thence inferred to be the etym. he does not say. It may be remarked, that redimiculus, (from redimire, to bind round,) is also app. as equivalent to legens, a noose, a snare: and we seem hence to be led to a conjecture, that Trap, Trappings, have the same origin as Trep, to take, to catch; to hold. Be-En-

TRAPE, v. s. To tramp; or rather—to trail up and down idly—like a slut or sloven.

Sk. from Ger. Traben, D. Treppen, to tramp.

TRAPEZIUM, s. -ZOID. A quadrilateral figure, which has not its pair of opposite sides parallel.

Fr. Figure trapèze, unequally sided and cornered.

TRASH, v. z. -y. A trash,—any thing (man, dog) trashed or traced or confined in traces, that it may not, because it would, run or pursue too fast, rashly;—like an untrained dog; a worthless hound: hence, it is—any thing worthless; any trumpery. Unripe, unwholesome, things, (fruits, sweets, &c.) are called Trash. And To trash is, gen.—

To restrain, or hold in, to withhold, to curb, to check—and farther, to lop, to prune.

Fr. Trasser is, also,—to make the first (rude) tracing; the outline or profile; and, cons. unfinished, imperfect; of little value, worthless.

"Pied liveries come trashing after," (The Puritan,) is—come tracing after—following the track or trace, like hounds in a pack; or, as the Editor of the Ancient British Drama affirms, like a hound with a trash, or long piece of rope fastened to his collar, and dragging loose on the ground.

Mr. Brockett, and the Craven Dialect, say—To trash, is "to tramp about with fatigue:"—it is merely to trace, to keep in a trace or course; to keep tracing about, pacing about.

This word has much employed the commentators on Shak.—Sk. makes it to be the same word with Dross, as app. to—any thing worthless; but he does not attempt to account for the other usages of the word. Fr. Trasher, trasser, is—to trace; to put in traces, to confine or restrain in traces. Be.

TRAVAIL, or TRAVEL, v. z. To trouble,—TRAVELL-ER. to vex, to harass, to molest, -ING. to disquiet, or disease, to distress; to toil, to labour; to pain, or take pains; to weary. And thus—

To go or pass a wearisome length of way; to take or make a toilsome or laborious journey; to journey, to go or pass (on foot or in carriage) along the way, the road, through a country—over the sea.

Fr. Tra-vailleur; It. vegliare; Sp. bajar. Various conjectures are recorded in Men. & Fr. and Italian etyms. Sk. thinks it is from Transvolare; qd. something beyond the strength, or above that which any one (naked) is able to effect: L. Tribulare has also been suggested. In Wiclif, Mark v. 15, the Version of 1551 has trered; in Mark v. 25, diseasent; and in Luke vii. 6, trouble. Our Common Version has—troubled, trouble, in the two latter instances. And there seems little reason to doubt, that A. S. Tribulan, (also written Tribel-an), to break, to bruise, to pound, to vex, is the root of Travail or Trouble. See TROUBLE. Over- Un-

TRAVE, s. -is.† The frame whereinto farriers put unruly horses, when they shoe or dress them.—Col. Sp. Trava or Traba.

Trave or Travis is also a cross-beam, a traverse, and a curtain thrown across, (It. Traversa), to divide a chamber. It is also written Travers. See TRAVERSE.

**Chaucer. †Fabyan.*

Fr. Travall. (See Moore's Suffolk Words.) Sk.—Trave may be from Traba.

TRAVERSE, v. ad. s. -ABLE. To turn across; to cross; to go or move across; to thwart; to go or throw athwart; to put or place any thing athwart—as an obstacle; to obstruct, to oppose; to turn, to wind; to turn and turn again, or return; to pass over or across from side to side, sc. in search or pursuit of; to investigate.

A traverse,—any thing thrown across; a seat, curtain, &c. (And see TRAVIS.) Also gen.—

A way across, or crossing; a cross, a turn, a way, a path.

Fr. Traverser; It. -dre. See TRANSVERSE.

TRAVESTY, v. s. To change the vest or garb; to put on, or assume another dress (usually in burlesque).

Sk. says,—concealed from the eyes of men by change of vest. Fr. Travestit, se travestir, to disguise, to shift his apparel, (i. e. his vesture), to mask it, to take on him another man's habit; to play the counterfeit.—Col.

TRAULISM, s. A stuttering.

TREASON, s. A giving over, a deliver- -ABLE. ing up, any person or thing en- -OUS. trusted or confided; a breach of faith or fealty; perfidy. "Treason (proditio) in its very name imports a betraying, treachery, or breach of faith: it therefore happens only between allies, saith the Mirror.—When disloyalty so rears its crest as to attack even Majesty itself, it is called, by way of eminent distinction, High treason.”—Blackstone.

Fr. Tra-hison; It. dizione, dimento; Sp. -icion; Low L. Traditio; Fr. Traikir; It. Tradire; L. Tradere, to give up; to give or yield up, to deliver over, &c. any thing held in trust.

TREASURE, s. v. To put up, or store
-ER. up gold; and then, gen.—
-SHIP. To store up; to lay up or hoard,
-ESS. carefully, anxiously; and a Treasure,—
-Y.

Any thing stored or hoarded; wealth, riches; any thing worth or thought worth, hoarding; any thing precious or valuable.

Fr. Tresor, the-saurier, -saurier, -saurier; Sp. -soro; It. Tesoro; L. Theasurus; Gr. Thea-upor, from Gr. Theo-eiv, to put or place, and the ancient supor, or supor, whence L. Aurum.—Voss. En-In-Un-

TREAT, v. s. To handle, to manage, to -ABLE. entertain, to conduct; to carry on
-ABLY. any business, to negotiate; to have,
-ER. hold, or keep; to behave to or
-ISE. towards; to manage or conduct
-MENT. any thing in discourse, oral or
-Y. written; to discourse. And a
-ISOR.* treatise, or tract, (qv.)—
-URE.† A discourse, a dissertation, a disquisition.

Treatable, in our old writers, as Tractable, (qv.)

To treat is also—to entertain, to behave—hospitably, kindly; to supply with good cheer, good fare.—Bp. Hall. †Fabyan.

Fr. Traictier; It. Tractiere; Sp. -ar; L. Tractare. “A. S. Traktian, tractare, interpretari, exponere; and trakt, tractatus, a treatise.”—See Som. L. Tractare, Voss. derives from trah-ere, tractum. En-Over-

TREBLE, ad. s. v. is Triple, (qv.)

-Y. Three-fold; increased or augmented
-NESS. thrice or three times.

Treble, in Music,—the highest or acutest part of the human voice. Fairefax writes Triple: “The humane voices sung a triple hie.”

TREE, s. App. to—A plant advanced to firm growth; strong, steadfast, established,—with a strong stem, trunk, branches. See OAK; so called from the size to which it ekes or grows.

Treen is used as the plural, and as the ad. Go. Tris; Dan. Træ; A. S. Treo, treow, treow, treow-en, arboreus; D. Taere, or tere, appel-tere, notal-tere, which (Kilian) were anciently appel-boom, notel-boom: (boom is beam, qv.) Jun. is inclined to derive from Gr. Δρυς. May it not be the A. S. Treow-an, confirmare, stabilire?

TREILLAGE, s. Treille,—an arbour or -LIS. walk, set on both sides with
TRELLISED. vines, &c. twining about a treillis, or latticed frame.

Fr. Treillage, treillis,—a lattice before a door or window; a grate, set thick with cross-bars of wood.—Cot.

Men. derives Fr. Treille, from L. Trichia, a walk covered with leaves, (thick as hairs, Gr Τριχες.) with vines, or other trees or plants.—See Men. and Voss. A more obvious etym. is,—that the v. Treiller is the same word as Treiller, to train: the trees or plants forming the treille, and supported by a treillis, are trailing trees or plants—and the treillis, that on which they depend.

TREMBLE, v. s. To shake, to quake, to
-ER. shiver, to shudder.

-ING. To be in a tremble, is a common
-INGLY. expression.

Fr. Trembler; It. -oldre; Sp. Temblar; L. Tremere; Gr. Τρεμ-ειν, to fear (to tremble), from the effect of fear, viz. running away. That tremere and treμ-ειν orig. signified to run, or run away. Bp. Burgess justly infers from the existence of the two words, εδοκμον, I ran, and δρουν, the act of running:—and thus our Eng. Fear, (qv.) from To fare, to go, to run away.

TREMENDOUS, ad. That ought to be feared or dreaded; fearful, dreadful, terrible, awful.

Tremendous-ly, -ness, are regular sub-derivatives, and (the former esp.) not uncommon in exaggerating speech.

L. Tremendus, (from tremere), that ought to be trembled at.

TREMOR, s. A shaking, shuddering,
-MUL-ous. shivering; a quivering, (usually
-OUSLY. from fear or some ailment.)

Fr. Trem-our; It. -dre; L. Tremor, from tremere, to tremble, (qv.)

TRENCH, v. s. To trench,—to surround,
-ANT. to fortify with trenches, with ditches,
-ER. earth, &c., cut or dug out; to cut,
-ING. to carve, to dig; to cut into, to
-MORE.* carve out of, &c. the property of another; and thus, to encroach.

A trencher,—upon which any things (food, victuals,) are cut.

A trencher-man or mate, a trencher-friend,—a man who consumes largely the contents of the trencher; a friend while well fed.

**Holinshed.*

Fr. Trencher; It. Trin-cidre; Sp. -char, to cut or carve. Casen.—from trans-scindere, to cut across; Men.—from truncare, to cut off. De-En-Re-

TREND, v. To turn; to make or take
-ING. a turn; to turn away, to diverge,
-LE. to bend, to bend its course.

Formed perhaps upon past p. Tyrn-ed, tyrn'd, of A. S. Tyrnan, vertere, to turn, by the common transposition of the letter r. D. & Ger. Treunen, disjungere, divertere, seem to be the same word. A. S. Trendle, is a spinning-wheel, a treadle; any thing turned; a bowl, an orb.

TRENTAL, s. Thirty, &c. masses.

Fr. Trent-e; It. -e; Sp. Treinta; L. Trigtinta.

TREPAN, v. s. Fr. Trépane,—“An in-PANNER. strument having a round and
-PHINE. indented edge, wherewith chi-rurgeons open a fractured skull, and by the help of a levator (within it) raise up the crushed and depressed parts thereof, and take out pieces of bones and clotted blood.”—Cot. The Trephine was a smaller instrument.

To trepán,—to catch or take; to over-take, to overreach, to take in a snare; to ensnare, to beguile.

It. Trep-ano, Fr. -ene, a surgical instrument. Huet (see Men.) derives from Gr. τρῆσανον, a word, he adds, of the same meaning. Τρῆσανον is from τρῆσαι, to perforate, to penetrate. And (Cot.) Fr. Trepasse is—"a stone-cutter's drill; the tool wherewith he bores little holes in marble." But the Eng. v. Trepase, or Trapan, is to entrap; and Sk., by a violent and rather ludicrous metaphor, deduces this application from the surgical operation: others, he tells us, derive from Τρεπασί, a town of Sicily, into which some English in a storm were invited, and then detained. To trapas, or (more properly trapas, though written without distinction,) to entrap, is D. Trappen. See TRAP.

TREPIDATION, s. The trembling, quaking, shaking, (frequently of fear, implied.)

Fr. Trepidation; It. -azione; Sp. -acion; L. Trepidatio. Festus derives L. Trepido from Gr. Τρεπιδος, vertere, quia turbatione mens vertitur.—See Foss., who refers to Gr. Τραπιδος, pavere, terre. In-trepid.

TRESPASS, v. s. To pass over or beyond, to exceed, sc. our right, our duty; beyond due bounds or limits; to transgress; to go over, or into, that which is the property or right of another; to enter wrongfully; gen. to act wrongfully.

Fr. Tres-passer, to pass from, sc. this life; to decess: also—to pass beyond; to overpass, or exceed.

TRESS, s. A three-fold or tripled portion—ED. ad. or quantity; a lock or curl (of -URE. hair); any thing hanging like -URED. the hair.

Tressure,—a lace, or laced border. Fr. Trescheur.

Fr. Tresse de cheveux,—a lock of hair. Tresser,—to plait, weave, or make into tresses. Old Fr. Trees; It. Traccia; Sp. Trensa, -ar. Sk. thinks that it may be from fricare, intricare. (See INTRICATE.) Casen.—from Gr. τρῆσαι, three, because a tress is formed by interlacing three pieces. Men.—that it is from Gr. ἑρῆς, eris, hair. In A. S. Thras, or thras, is a fringe; and thraest-an, is to wreath, to twist.—See Lye and Som. A twist is any thing twiced; a thread, or thrid, is, perhaps, any thing three-ad, thred, or thrid; and a tress may be, any thing triced or thriced,—thus bringing home the etym. of Casen. Un-

TRESSEL, TRESTLE, or TRETTLE. s. TRESTLER. It is sometimes also written and spoken Trussel.

Perhaps—A frame having three stalls, or standings, or legs. See TREVEY.

Bar. L. Trestellum; Fr. Trastous or Trattous, a tripod, three-footed or three-legged frame, to support a table. Mr. Moore says, in Suffolk they have sometimes four.

TREVET, TRIVET, s. A three-foot; a stool with three feet. Fr. Tripied, a tripod.

TREY, ad. Fr. Trois, three.—"Chaucer.

TRIAD, s. Triad,—a co-union of three. -ALITY. Triarian, (L. Triarii),—soldiers -ARIAN. of the third line.

-ARCHY. Triarchy,—a government of three. Fr. & It. Triade; L. Trias; Gr. Τριας, three.

TRIANGLE, s. A figure containing -ED. three angles.—"Holland.

-GUL-AR. Fr. Triangle, -alaire; It. -olo; Sp. -ulo; L. Tri-angulus.

-ARITY.

TRIBE, s. v. App. gen. to—A portion, a -AL. division, of people into districts; in -ED. races or families; of animals or vegetables, into classes or orders; a class.

To tribe,—to class, or arrange in classes.

Fr. Tribu, -u; It. -o, -à; Sp. -u; L. Tribus, so called (Var.) because the Roman land was at first divided into three parts. See TRIBUNE.

TRIBULATION, s. Vexation, affliction, distress.

Fr. Tribulation; It. -olazione; L. of Lower Ages, Tribulatio, from Tribul-are, to trouble. See TRAVEL, TRAVEL.

TRIBUNE, s. Gen.—The seat of justice or judgment; a court of -ATE. justice.—"Bacon.

-ITAL. Fr. Tribun; It. & Sp. -ano; L. Tribunus, one who (orig.) was placed over a tribe (tribus). Tribunal, locus, sedes, -ITIOUS. the place, the seat of the tribune.

TRIBUTE, s. -ARY, ad. s. Tribute,—sum paid, portion paid; tax, assessment; impost, subsidy; a token or acknowledgment of subordination.

Tributary,—subject to tribute; subject, subordinate.

Fr. Tribut; It. & Sp. -uto; L. Tributum, so called a tributum, because this money, required from the people, was extracted through the tribus, (tributum.) in proportion to the estimated value of the estate or property of each. At-Con. Dis. Re.

TRIBUTION, s. L. Tributio, from Tribuere, to pay.—"Chaucer.

TRICE, s. In three—moments, minutes; or before you can say or tell three.

Fr. Trois, three; (Trice,—Gower,) in a trice or thrice (three-es).

TRICK, v. s. ad. To entangle, to ensnare -ING. or delude, or deceive; to practice ensnaring or deceptive arts; -ISH. to set off, with delusive appearances, with imposing ornaments; -MENTS. to adorn, to deck, to embellish; -SY. to dress with finery, ostentatiously.

A trick,—a snare, a deception, an artifice; an artful, an artificial habit or practice; an habitual manner, way or practice.

To trick, in Heraldry,—to draw with a pen (in profile).

Tricky, i. e. trickish, artful, dexterous, adroit, active, smart.

Trick, s. in B. Jonson, ("Your spangles or your tricks,") is perhaps Tress, (qv.) Low L. Trica, crines intexti.—See Du Cange.

**Beau. & F.* †Warner. Shak.

Fr. Tricker; from Tricare, Gr. Τριχες, hairs; gen.—any entanglement. En-trick. Ex-Intricate.

TRICKER. See TRIGGER.

TRICKLE, v. To run in a thin or slender course or stream, in drips or drippings; to distil.

Sk. supposes Trickelen, a dim. of D. Trachen, to trace: "to flow," he adds, "as drops in a long continuous track or course." It may be merely the dim. of Track, qd. Trackle, by the change of the vowel. Serenius and Dr. Jamieson resort to the Icelandic.—See Trigle, in Jamieson.

French says
tribulum
a winnowing machine.

TRI

TRI-DENT, s. -ED.* App. to the sceptre of Neptune, having three teeth, three forks or prongs.—Quarles.

Fr. It. & Sp. Tridente; L. Tridens, three-toothed, having three teeth or tines, (tres dentes.)

TRI-ENNIAL, ad. Continuing for, returning, recurring at, the end of, three years. Fr. Triennal; It. & Sp. -lo; L. Triennium, (tres anni), three years.

TRI-ETERICS,* s. -ICAL.† Three years. **May.* †Gregory.
L. Trieteris; Gr. Τριετία.

TRI-FALLOW,* v. TWIFALLOW,† v. Fallowing or turning the land into fallows, a second—third time.

**Tusser.* †Sir J. Harrington.

TRI-FISTULARY,* ad. Having three fistulae or pipes.—Brown.

TRIFLE, v. s. A trifle,—any thing small -ER. or minute, of little weight or
-ING. value; inconsiderable, unimportant, unworthy.
-LY. tant, unworthy.
-NESS. To trifle,—to be or cause to be of little worth; to diminish the weight or value; to employ in, to be busy in, trifles; in light, frivolous, foolish things; to treat or behave towards, as to a thing of no value; to play with, to make sport of; to act idly, frivolously.

Sk.—either from D. Treyfelen, nugari, pellicere, blandire, or Fr. Truffe, a joke. Probably from A. S. v. Trifel-an, to pound, to break, to comminute; cons. to reduce to minute parts, of little weight or value. See TRIVIAL, and TRAVAIL.

TRI-FLUCTUATION,* s. A concurrence of three waves, (tres fluctus.)
**Brown.*

TRI-FOLIATE,* ad. Having three leaves, (tria folia.)—Harte.

TRI-FORM,* ad. L. Triformis, three formed, or having three forms. Boviform, formed like an ox. Hominiform, formed like a man.—Cudworth.

TRI-GAMY,* s. A third marriage.
**Sir T. Herbert.*

TRIGGER, or TRICKER, s. That which drags, or that which we drag or pull.

Sk. suggests D. Dragghe, harpago, uncus, as he explains it. But D. is a Dragee; and Trecken, is to drag; and a Trigger, whether to hold a wheel, or loose the cock of the gun, is a drag.

TRI-GLYPH, s. "The word τρεγλυφος, in Greek imports a three sculptur'd piece, —quasi tres habens glyphas," (Evelyn,) as if having three grooves.

Fr. Tri-glyphe; It. & Sp. -glifo; Gr. Τρύφων, a grave or groove; Γλύφειν, to grave.

TRI-GON, s. Trigon,—a figure having
-AL. three angles.

TRI-LATERAL, ad. Having or consisting of three sides (tria latera).

TRI-LITERAL,* ad. Having or consisting of three letters (tres literas). See BILITERAL.—Sir W. Jones.

TRILL, v. s. To turn, to turn (round and round), and, cons. to bore, to penetrate; to shake or cause to shake, (as by the act of boring or penetrating); to quiver or quaver.

D. & Ger. Trillen; A. S. Thril-ian. See THRILL, and THOLL.

TRILL, v. To run in a thin or slender course or stream, in drips or drippings; to distil. Corrupted from Trickle, (qv.)

TRIM, v. ad. av. s. To set or put in order; -LY. to fit, to adapt, to bring or reduce, -M-ER. to diminish, to cut—into fit form -ING. or shape.

To dress; to array, to rig; to set out, in order, neatness or niceness.

To decorate. To trim, met. is—

To suit or adapt, or accommodate, sc. to circumstances, to expedients; to prepare for the safest side. "Three Scottish ships, manned and trimmed with ordnance."—Fabyan.

A. S. Tryman, trimman, parare, ordinare, disponere; and hence, formare, stabilire; to set in order, to dress. Be-En-Un-

TRI-METER, s. A verse, having three measures or six (iambic) feet.

Gr. Τριμετρος, versus tria metra seu tres mensuras habens.

TRINE, ad. s. v. Threefold, tripled, compounded or composed of three. -ITY. In Astrology,—a third portion of -ITARIAN. the zodiac.

To trine,—to be or place in one of the trine angles.

Fr. Trine; It. & Sp. -o; L. Trinus, (from Tres), three.

TRINKET, s. -TING. Trinket may have orig. been app. to small cuttings for ornaments—of any material—linen or metallic. And thence to—

Any small pieces of ornament or decoration, of more ornament than use; toys, trifles; small playthings; a strip of ornamented stuff, for a sail. "Sayling alwayes with the sheates of our maine saile and trinket warily in our hands."—Hackluyt.

The Fr. Trinquet; It. -chello, (from which Sk. derives our word.) Cot. says—is properly "the top or top gallant, on any mast; the highest sail of the ship." This nautical usage was familiar to our old writers. The Low L. has Tringuetum, or Triquetum; Fr. Trictrac; in Eng. Tick-tack. The It. Trinci, (Florio,) are cuts, jags, or snips in garments; various ornaments in garments; and in Mod. It. Trincio is a piece of stuff cut (trinciato) for ornament.

TRI-BOLARY, ad. Homo trioboli, a man worth three oboli: good for nothing.

**Howell.*

TRI

TRIP. Sc. of sheep, goats, &c. See TROOP.

TRIP, v. s. To foot it—nimble, lightly;
-PER. to caper; to move, raise, lift the
-ING. foot from the ground; to throw or
-INGLY. cast from the ground; to lose footing, to make a false step; to strike the foot against, to stumble.

Also—To take a step, to go a short space;
to make a short, quick or sudden movement, excursion, journey.

Fr. Treper, triper; Sp. Trepar; D. Trippen,
tripelen, irpelen; Dan. Triper, saltare, tripudiare, (ter pede, sc. cedere, or, terram pavere, i. e. cedere, see Voss.) to strike (the feet) upon the ground. Over-

TRI-PARTITE, ad. Consisting of three parts or parties (tres partes).

TRIPE, s. The bowels; also the stomach of ruminating animals cooked.

Fr. Trip-e; It. -pa; Sp. -as; D. Tryp, intestinum; from Gr. Τρεπ-ειν, volvere, from the convolutions of the bowels, (see Sk.) It is more probably the same word as Trape, a trawl,—any thing drawn or that draws out.

TRI-PERSONAL,* ad. -ITY.* Consisting of, constituted by three persons, (tres-personæ).—Milton.

TRI-PLASIAN,* ad. Three-fold
**Cudworth*.

Gr. Τριπλας, τριπλασιος, triplex.

TRIPLE, ad. v. Three-fold. See TREBLE.

-ET. Triplet,—three lines terminat-three, and plicare, Gr. Πλε-ειν, to fold.)

TRI-POD, s. A three-footed stool, or table.

Fr. Trip-ted; It. -ode; Sp. -ies; L. Tripos; Gr.
Τριπους, having three feet, (τρεις ποδας.)

TRI-PUDIARY,* ad. -ATION.† Tripu-diary divination, by birds, pullets,—when they ate so greedily that the food fell from their mouths, and, striking on the ground, rebounded.—Brown. †Bacon.

It. Trepudiare; L. Tripu-diare, to strike on the ground. See TO TRIP.

TRI-REME, s. "Thucydides writeth, that Aminocles the Corinthian built the first trireme with three rows of oars to a side."—Holland. Plinie.

L. Treremis, Tres remorum ordinis.

TRIS-AGION, s. "The seraphical hymn, called the trisagion, Holy, holy, holy, &c."
—Bp. Bull. Gr. Treis, three, and αγιος, holy.

TRIST,* ad. Sad, pensive, grieved, doleful.
-FUL.† **Pairefax*. †Shak. †Feltham.
-ITIAE,† v. Fr. & Sp. Trist-e; It. -o; L. Tristis.

TRO

TRITE, ad. Rubbed, worn with rubbing;
-NESS. thread-bare; common.

-ICAL.* **Swift*. †Popo.

-ICALNESS.† It. Trito; L. Tritus, (past p. of Terere, to bruise, to rub.) At- Con- De-triment.

TRI-THEISM, s. The doctrine, opi-
-IST. nion, belief, of three gods. Tri-
-ISTIC. theism is distinguished from the
-ISTICAL. doctrine of the Trinity.

Gr. Τριθεα, (τρεων θεων.)

TRITHING, s. "When a country is divided into three of these intermediate jurisdictions, they are called trithings, which were anciently governed by a trithing-reeve."

... "These trithings still subsist in the large county of York, where by an easy corruption they are denominated ridings;
the north, the east, and the west-riding."—
Blackstone.

Tertia pars provincie, says Sk. See Spel. in Thingus, Thungreivus, and Trithinga.

TRITURATE, v. To pound, to crush,
-ATION. to rub; to grind into powder.

-ABLE. Fr. Tritur-er; It. -a; L. Triturare, from Tritum, past p. of Terere, to bruise. See TAITE.

TRIVANT,* s. -LY.* i. e. Trivant, trewant,
truant, (qv).—Burton.

TRI-VIAL,* ad. s. Trivial,—common, as
-LY. aught on the public ways, the high
-NESS. road; common, ordinary, of little price or value or estimation; worthless; trifling.

Trivial and Trifle bear a remarkable similarity in sound, and application.

Fr. It. & Sp. Triviale; L. Trivialis, from Trivium, (tres vie), a place where three ways meet; a public place. Hence,—a place of common meeting.

TRIUMPH, s. v. App. to—A ceremony,

-AL, ad. s. a pomp, a token, in celebration

-ANT. or commemoration of victory or

-ANTLY. conquest; to—the victory itself;

-ER. to—the feeling of exultation or

-INGLY. gladness; to—a pomp or show in resemblance or imitation of a triumph.

Fr. Tri-omphe; It. -onfare; Sp. -umfo; L. Tri-umphus; Gr. Θριαμβος. Voss seems inclined to derive from θρα, the leaves of the fig-tree, and αμφ, around; because the soldiers of Bacchus returned from their Indian victory with their heads encircled by the leaves of the fig tree. The editor of Lennep thinks the Gr. Θριαμβος; (a word employed by later Greek authors to express the L. Triumphus), to be so written for θριαβος, that again for θριαβ, from θρα, and to have denoted—a multitude of men tumultuously assembled.
Tooke,—perhaps from A. S. Drym-an, to make a joyful noise. See TO TAUMF; and TAUMF at cards. Un-

TRIUM-VIR, s. -ATE. One man of three, (trium virorum), sc. who were appointed to,
or who assumed, power in the state.

L. Trium-vir.

TRI-UNE, s. TRINI-UNITY.* Three-one.
**Milton*.

Formed of L. Tres, three, and unus, one.

TROAD,* or TRODE, s. The way, path, (trode or trodden).—Spenser. May.
A. S. Trode, past p. of Tread, qv. and Trade.

TROCHEE, s. A foot, consisting of a -CHAIC, ad. long and a short syllable.

-CHAICS. L. Trocheus; Gr. Τροχαιος, from τροχ-εiv, to run; quia chori, ubi uisatus est, agilius mouentur in morem currentium. Also called Chores.

TROCHILIC, s. -ICS, s. "Trochilics, or the art of wheel-instruments."—Wilkins.

From Gr. Τροχος, rota, a wheel; from τροχ-εiv, to run or turn round.

TROCHIST, or TROCHISEE, s. -CHISK. A little runelle or cake whereinto divers medicinable things be reduced, the better to be kept, and the readier to be used.—Cot.

It. Tro-cisco; Fr. -chique. From Gr. Τροχισκος, a wheel or circle, so app. from its round form.

TROLL, v. s. or TROUL, v. In some usages, To troll seems equivalent to—To drawl or draw; and may then be the same word.

To turn, or move round, like a wheel or a ball; to run quickly round; to move, to drive, to utter or speak volubly.

A troll, used in fishing for pike,—over which a line of great length rolls.

To troll, met.—to allure, (as with a baited trolling line.)

Ger. Trollen or trillen: D. Drollen or drillen, vertere, volvere; A. S. Thrið-ian, to trith, thrill, or drill, (qqv.) Un-

TROLLOP, s. -EE. One who goes, strolls, (drawls) about, from place to place, carelessly, loosely dressed.

Trollopee,—a loose dress.

Fr. Trotter, "to trowla, to range. Trolierie, a trowling, a disordered ranging."—Cot. See TROLL.

TROOP, s. v. A number led or brought -ER together; led or conducted in a collected number, in a company.

TRIP. To troop,—to collect in troops; to move, to march in company, in a body; to move, to march.

Fr. Troupe; Dan. Tropp; It. Trappa; Sp. Tropa; which Voss. Men. and Sk. transpose from L. Turba. In Low L. Troppus, is grex.—See Du Cange, and Voss. (de Vit. lib. ii. c. 18.) But the words exist in the northern languages. A. S. Trep-as; D. Troppe; Ger. Tropp, trupp; which Voss. derives from Ger. Trieb-en, agere, agitare, ut agmen ab agendo, quia à duce suo agitur. R. Brunne writes it Trip. A trip of goats, sheep, &c. will be a drove, a number driven together, (see Jamieson.) brought together. En-

TROPE, s. A trope,—a turn, a change, -IC, a metaphor.

-ICAL. Tropology,—speech or writing in

-ICALLY. tropes, changes, (e.g. of literal

-OLOG-Y. meaning,) in metaphor.

-ICAL. A trope,—whence the sun ap-

-ICALLY. pears to turn or return.

-IZE, v. Cudworth.

Fr. Trop-e, -ique, -ologique; It. -o, -ico, -ològico; Sp. -ico, -ològica; L. Tropus; Gr. Τροπος, τροπικός, τροπολογία, from τροπ-εiv, to turn.

TROPHY, s. -IED. A sign or signal, sc. that the enemy has turned their backs, has fled; a monument of victory.

Fr. Trophée; It. & Sp. Trofeo; L. Trophæus; Gr. Τροφαειον, from τροφω, a turning, (sc. in sight,) from τροπ-εiv, to turn.

TROSSER. See TROUZER.

TROT, v. s. -TER. To tread, to trample; to tread about, move about, run with a quick, short, or high motion of the foot.

"When a horse trots, his legs are in this position, two in the air, and two upon the ground, at the same time crosswise; that is to say, the near-foot before, and the off-foot behind, are off the ground, and the other two upon it, and so alternately of the other two."—Berenger.

An old trot, (Sc. trate,)—one who moves about, backwards and forwards, busily, officiously; one who has moved or traddled about much. Illa gradum studio celerabat anili,—"she hyit furth with slaw pace like ane trat."—G. Douglas. "An aged woman's trot."—Surrey.

Fr. Trotter, trot; It. Trotta-ère, -o; Sp. Trotar, trotar; Ger. Trotten. The D. Trotten, also written Torden, (Kilian), and Torden, is torden, treden, to tread.—Som. in v. Tread-an. Hence, To trot; as to trot up and down. Thus, the trot of a horse (technically described by Berenger) is the tread. Sk. resorts to L. Torquere.—See also Wack in vv. Trotten and Trot; and Men. who wander afar from that which Som. could see at hand.

TROTH, s. -LESS. Otherwise written Trath.

That which any one troweth, plighted to be tru, or *tru*sty, or faithful; trath, veracity, faith, fidelity, fealty.

Trothless, i. e. truthless.

TROUGH, s. Anciently also Treff. App.

to—A shallow vessel, a canoe; a vessel, for watering horses, feeding hogs, &c.

A. S. Trog, trogge, alveus; D. Trock; Ger. Trage;

Sw. Trog; It. Trugge. All perhaps from A. S.

Drag-an; Ger. Tragen; D. Trecken, trahere, v-here, to draw, or drag; D. Trock, tractus, as well as alveus, because easily dragged, hauled. See

TRUCK and TRAT.

TROUNCE, v. To lash; gen. to beat to punish.

Sk. derives from Fr. Tronçon, a truncheon; qd. to beat with a truncheon or club. It may be from the Fr. Troncir, to cut; to cut with a lash.

TROUT, s. A fish.

Fr. Truite; It. Trutta; Sp. Trucha; L. Trutta, trouta; Gr. ῥαχμή, from ῥαγν-ειν, vorare, comedere, to devour, to eat.

TROW, v. To throw,—to think, to have

TRUE. thoughts, ideas; to believe firmly; to be thoroughly persuaded; to be convinced of.

-LY. True, anciently written Trew

TROWEL, s. A tool, used by masons, bricklayers, &c.

Fr. Truelle; D. Trouwel, truwel, from the L.

Trulla, a dim. of Trua, a ladle. — Men. Sk. and

Lye. Against these authorities the D. Troll-en, to turn or move around or about, may still be suggested.

TROWSE, s. or TROUZE. A dress or

-ERS. clothing for the lower limbs; perhaps

-ED. so called from their being tied, girt, or laced tight, buttoned fast; to distinguish them from a former or other dress. See the commentators on Shak. Hen. V.

Fr. Troussie, a tuck or tucking up in a garment; trousser, to truss, tuck, pack, gird or girt in, pluck or twitch up. — Col. See Tauss.

TRUAND, or TRUANT, s. One who in-

-ANDISE. vents excuses; who neglects or

-ANTLY. omits under false pretences; and,

gen. an idler, a loiterer, a lazy loitering fellow.

In Fr. and in Old Eng. — one who begs (under false pretences, pretences of his own finding or invention).

Fr. Truan, truand, a beggar, a knave; truand-

-ise, -er. In Sp. Truhan, a buffoon, jester, a flattering fool. D. Trouwant, a vagabond, a deceiver. Sk. suggests the A. S. Thurh, thorough, and wendan, to wend or go, — to wend or wander through. May it not be from Fr. Trouant, er, to find, to invent, to contrive, to devise; and hence, invent tricks, excuses, pretences?

TRUCE, s. -LESS. A plight or pledge—

to cease, or forbear, or suspend hostility:

and hence, app. to—

A suspension, cessation, interruption, intermission, forbearance.

Fr. Trêves; It. & Sp. Tregua, from Ger. Trew, faith; because it is a faith given for a time to the enemy. — Sk. See Treuga, in Wach. Truce, or trewea, is the regular past tense of A. S. v.

Trywe-ian, to pledge one's faith, to plight one's troth, (Tooke); sc. to forbear from acts of hostility.

TRUCH-MAN, s. -MENT. An interpreter;

an explainer.

Fr. Trucheman, drogueman; It. Torcimanno, dragomanno; Sp. Truchaman, dragoman; from

Ar. Tordgeman, an interpreter. (See Men.) Jun.

seems inclined to call him — a truce-man, inducia-

rum vir.

TRUCK, v. s. A truck is—a dray, i. e. a

-KER. carriage dragged. And To

-KLE, v. s. truck may be—to drag, or carry

-CAGE.* goods or wares in barter or exchange, to a mart or market. To chop or change, to exchange, to barter.

To truckle, — to yield to terms in exchanging or bartering; to yield, to concede.

A truckle-bed, — a bed with wheels, that may be drawn from place to place. See

Sk. — Milton.

Fr. Troquer, troq; It. Truccare; Sp. Trocar, to barter or exchange; from Trug, traws; Treg-

en, to deceive. (See Men.) It may be from Trig- en, in its literal meaning—to drag or draw. D.

Trucken. See Tavon.

TRUCULENT, ad. -ENCY. Savage,

barbarous, terrific.

Fr. Truculent; — truculent, cruel, threatenful of countenance, terribly looking. — Col. L. Trucu- lentus, from Trux; Gr. τροχ ειν, alterere, affigere, to bruise to pieces.

TRUDGE, v. To move or keep upon the tread or trot; to keep on, get on, keep (the feet) in motion.

It. Truccare, to trudge, to skud, to pack away.—Florio. And Sk. derives from the It. or from To trot: perhaps more immediately from Tread, in Go. Trud-an, (trud-ig-an.)

TRUE, TRUTH. See TROW.

TRUFFLE, s. A vegetable growing under ground; of the mushroom kind.

Fr. Truffe, truffe; It. Tartufa; Sp. Turma di tierra; L. Terra tubera.

TRULL, s. A common harlot.

From It. Trulla, a dirty woman.—Sk. A.S. Thyrl, thyrl, foramen, a hole bored or pierced.—Som. The past p. of A.S. Thyrl-ian, perforare, means—allquid perforatum; by the common transposition of r, is the Eng. Throth, thrul, or trull. (See Tooke.) G. Douglas renders Spiracula—ane thrull or synding stede; i.e. a hole or breathing place.

TRUMP, s. v. App. to the sound, noise, —ET, s. v. clamour of joy or rejoicing, of —ETER. triumphing; (see TRIUMPH,)—the —ER.* instrument;—the drum—beaten; the trump or trumpet—blown.

To trump—to sound, to make a noise, a clangor, or clamour of rejoicing, or triumph, of congratulation;—of glory, vain glory;—to sound or make a noise.

To trump is also, at Cards,—to throw down, to play, a conquering, victorious, triumphant card. (Gr. Triompher; It. Trionfo; Sp. Triunfo; and Dan. Trumfer.) And hence—to get the victory, to get the better, the advantage; to over-reach, to circumvent; and further—to contrive, to devise:—(Fr. Tromper) “to trump up a story.”

To be put to his trumps,—i.e. to the necessity of playing the trump-card; met. making all exertions to conquer difficulties. Chaucer.

Fr. Trump-pe, pelle; It. -ba, -batta, -pella; Sp. -pa, -pelle. All from L. Tuba. (See St. Jun. and Men.)—The D. Tromp, trompet; Ger. Tromp, trompette, trummelte; Ger. Drommetten or Trompeten, to trumpet; Sw. Trumpet, are all (as well as the Fr. It and Sp.) from A.S. Dreman, drym-an, (to drum), to make a joyful noise, jubilate, (by the mere change of d into t.)

TRUMPERY, s. Trumpery,—Any vain-glorious display; or any display of mere vanity; any worthless finery.

Fr. Tromperie, impostura; tromper, D. Trompen, circumvenire, to impose upon, to circumvent; but this is clearly a consequential usage. (See To TAUNT.) G. Douglas, in his Prologue of the Eycht Booke, uses trumpes, a thing of little value; tenues res, (Æneidos, l. 5. v. 690), the sobri trumpis, i.e. mean, inconsiderable goods, says the Glossarist.

TRUNCATE, v. ad. Truncate,—to cut off —ATION. (the branches,) to cut, to TRUNK, s. v. lop.

TRUNCHEON, s. v. Trunk,—that from which, —ER. the stem, stock, body, or bulk, from which boughs or limbs, are cut or lopped off: gen. the stem, the main body. Also (says Cot.),—the poor man's box in charities; i.e. a bulk or block, hollowed out (to receive alms; to serve as a boat); and then app. to a chest: and further, to the proboscis of the elephant, or other animal; to any thing formed like a stem whether solid or hollow.

Trunchion,—a staff (with the branches cut off); a log, a club; a large thick piece.

To truncheon,—to use a truncheon; beat or strike with one.

Fr. Tronc, truncation, anner; It. -o, -dre, -dar; Sp. -o, -on, ar; D. Tronck, troncken; L. Truncum from Gr. Τρυχ-ειν, ter-ere. See Foss. and Schneer De-In.

TRUNDLE, s. v. —NEL. To turn (sc.) a ball, a hoop; to bowl.

Fr. Trondel; A.S. Trendel, a turning wheel; any thing turned or turning; a varadde, globe, orb. To trundle, (a dim. of turn, qd. turn-del.)

TRUSION, s. A thrusting or pushing.

L. Trusum, past p. of trudere, to thrust. Go. Trud-an, calcare, concutere, to tread, to tread down together. Abstruse. De-Ex-In-Ob-Pro-Re-trude.

TRUSS, v. s. —ER.* To pack up; to bind or bundle up; to close up; (to) pluck up, to twitch up.—Cot. Jun. says—a truss man is a well knit man, of small but compact frame.—**Bible*, 1549; Jer. xlviii.

Fr. Trousser; D. Tross, trossen; Ger. & Sv. Tross; Low L. Trossen, trossare, to pack up (the baggage, utensils, tools); perhaps (Sk.) a trussula, from thrusting or pushing. See TROWAL. Un-

TRUST, v. s. To think or believe to be —EE. true or faithful; to confide, or be —ER. confident; to place confidence in;

—LESS. give confidence or credit to; to —Y. credit; to rely, or depend upon;

—ILY. to act, to do, any thing upon credit

—INESS. or confidence, reliance or dependence. See TRUCE.

A.S. Tryves-ian, to believe or think true or faithful; fidere, confidere. Tryves-ed, tryved, tryvest, trist or trual. To trist, trist, or trual. Be-Dis-En-In-Mis-Over-Un-

TRIABLE. the test; to search into, investi-

TRIAL. gate, examine, (sc.) the proofs,

TRYER. the evidence; to put or place

TRIEDLY. under examination; to make experiment or essay; to essay, to attempt, to endeavour.

Probare, tentare, Jun. thinks may mean—to prove, (sc.) to be true; to be innocent. A.S. Triowan, fidum se probare. In Law L. Triare, trialor, triallo, exactissima litis contestata ex-actio; a most careful sifting or examination of any contested dispute.—Spei. Un-

TUB, s. Perhaps, orig.—A log, hollowed out; an open vessel, without top.

D. Tobbe; Ger. Zuber, tuppa.

TUBE, s. Any thing hollow or concave

—UL-AR. (with some degree of length); a —ATED. cane, a pipe.

—OUS. Fr. Tub-e, -ale; It. & Sp. -o; L. Tubus, gen. derived from immere, to swell;—or from trere, qd. hollowed out by beating: trere, to beat or strike.

TUBEROUS, ad. —CLE. Swollen; risca or rising in pimples, knobs, veus.

TUCK, v. s. -ER. Jun. thinks may be—to take up:—

To take up, or to tug or draw up.

To take up,—to fasten that which is taken.

To tack up,—to take or draw up the edges; to draw in, to confine.

Tucker, (employed in Fulling,)—"Be-clawed with tuckers' cards."—Holland. Plut.

Tucker is also a border to confine the edges.

Sk. thinks either from Ger. Trucken, to press, or from Tacken, to sink down.

TUCKET, s. A flourish on a trumpet. A tucket sonance,—the name of an introductory flourish on the trumpet.—Stevens. It. Toccata.

TUFT, s. v. App. to—A number of small—

TUN, s. v. or Ton, s. Any inclosure; any

-N-AGE. package or bundle, a certain

-AGING. quantity or weight in one pack-

-EL, s. v. age; a certain measure of liquid inclosed in one vessel; the vessel holding such measure.

Tunnel,—any inclosure, inclosed way or passage; e. g. for smoke in its passage out; for liquor, in its passage into a tun or other vessel; a net, said to be shaped like a tunnel for liquids, wide at the mouth, and diminishing to a point. And, To tunnel,—to make nests in this form, is used by Derham:—"Some foreign birds not only plat and weave the fibrous parts of vegetables together, and curiously tunnel them, and commodiously form them into nests."

Low L. Tonna, or tunna; vicinum est tina (Voss.); Fr. Tonn-e, -eau; D. & Ger. -s; It. Tina; Sp. Ton-el, -elado; A. S. Tunn-s; Sw. -a; Dan. Ton. Sk. (followed by Wach. and others,) derives from L. Tina, and that from Gr. Δειvor, a kind of vessel for wine, according to Hesychius. Tooke thinks Tun, and its dim. Tunnel, (A. S. Tanel, tenet), are the past p. of the v. Tyn-an, to inclose, to encompass; and that L. Tina is itself from Tyn-an. Hence Tun or Ton,—merely an inclosure: and Bar-ton (A. S. Bere-tun), is a strong, a secure inclosure. A. S. Beorg, a place of defence; and Tun, an enclosure. It is also written Bark-en. See BAR and BARK. Wyr-tun was an inclosure for worts. See ORCHARD, also TOWN.

From Fabian (quoted by Tooke), Tunne was a place to inclose or hold prisoners. In the Reprint, by Mr. Ellis, the word is Tower, p. 400. "Certain persons of London brake up the tunne in the wards of Cornhill, and tookte oute certayne persons that hither were committed."—Fabjan. Edw. I. p. 142.

TUNCLE, s. That which infolds or in-TUNIC. wraps, or invests; a vest, a cloth-ATED. ing, an integument, a covering.

Tuncle of the eye,—a thin coat or covering of the eye.

Fr. Tunique; It. Tonica; Sp. & L. Tunica; for which Voss. finds no etym. that he can approve. In the A.S. version of the Scriptures, Tuneca is of common occurrence, (see Lye.) but it may have been adopted from the Latin; though, as undoubtedly some roots of Latin words are to be found in our Northern language, it admits at least of conjecture that the A.S. Tynan, to inclose, to infold, to inwrap, may be the origin of the L. Tunica. See TOWN, TOW, TEN.

TUNNY, s. A fish.

Fr. Thon, thyn; It. Tonno; Sp. -ina; L. Thynnus; Gr. Ouvos, from thor-eiv, or thueiv, furere, either from its swiftness, or the fury with which it is said to be seized—sub caniculis ortum.

TUP, s. v. The common name for the ram in the North. Tup, tupe, teap; perhaps top.

TURBAN, s. "A Turkish hat, of white -BANT. and fine linnen, wreathed into a -BANED. rundle, broad at the bottom, to inclose the head, and lessening, for ornament, towards the top."—Cot.

Dampier calls it,—a turbat.

Fr. Turb-an; It. & Sp. -ante. See Voss. de Vit. lib. ii. c. 18; and Mén.

TURBARY, s. Low L. Turbaria, locus cespitibus fodiendis idoneus; a place for digging turf or turves. Sk. calls it Turfery. See TURP.

TURBID, ad. Turbid is,—Troubled, -IDLY. disordered, vexed, disquieted, -UL-ENT. agitated, muddy, -ENTLY. Turbulent,—disquieted, agitated, confused; confusedly noisy, -ENCE. or clamorous; stormy, tempestuous, -ENCY.

Fr. Turbulent; It. Torbidò, turbulento; Sp. Turb-ado, -ulento; L. Turb-idus, -ulentus, from Turba; Gr. Tupßn, a mob or multitude. Lennep derives from ovp-eiv, trahere; and his Editor from rup-eiv, miscere. By mere transposition of the letter, it appears to be the same word as Tribul-are, to trouble. See TROUBLE.

TURBINATED, ad. Formed like a top (turbo), like an inverted cone; or a cone—spiral; moving like a top.

Fr. Turbine; L. Turbinatus.

TURBOT, s. A fish.

Fr. Turbot; D. Turbot, terbot. In L. called the Rhombus, from Gr. Poußos, peuß-eiv, to turn or roll round; and Scal. thinks the turbot is so called from Turbo, a top.

TURCISM, s. TURKISHNESS. Religion, manners, &c. of the Turks.

TURF, s. v. -y. App. to—The grassy surface of the ground, (dug off, thrown off, turned off;) to the same surface cut into pieces.

Turfy,—grassy; consisting of turf or turves.

A.S. Tyrb, tyrfe, turf; D. Turf, torf; Ger. & Sw. Torf; Dan. Torv; Fr. Tourbe; Low L. Turba, turfa. In Isl. Torf, from their v. Torf-va, foðna, to dig, to dig out or up. Wach.—perhaps A.S. Torf-ian, jacere, ejicere, to throw, or throw out or up.

TURGENT, ad. Swelling, dilating, dis- -G-ESCENCE. tending; tumid.

-ESCENCY. Fr. Turgent; It. -ido; L. Turg-idus, -ens, p. p. of turgere, to swell; of unknown origin. Voss. suggests from

-IDITY. urgere, by prefixing t. (Qy. A.S. Tir-an, Tyrig-an. See TO TAKE, &c.) In-

TURKEY, s. A fowl; Gallus Africanus; avis Turcica vel Afra.

TURKOIS, or -quois, s. Lapis Turcicus, a stone brought from Turkey; or from its colour, (It. Turchino.) azure.—Sk.

Fr. Turquoise; It. -chese; Sp. -quasa.

TURM,* s. A troop.—**Milton*. L. Turma.

TURMOIL, s. v. -ing. App. to—Turbulence or trouble; confusion, agitation; confused commotion, or perplexity.

Sk. says, he knows not whether from Fr. Tremouille, tremie, (de mouillon) a mill-bopper. Perhaps compounded of tres—a word (Cot.) never used but in composition, and then adding to that which it precedes, the superlative energy of trice, most exceedingly, &c.—and the v. Moudre, to grind, to pound into pieces, reduce to dust or powder.

TURN, v. s. To move or cause to move

-ER. out of a straight line, out of a

-ERY. direction or course; to be or cause

-ING. to be, to take, to put or place, in

-COAT. another, an altered, a changed

-PIKE. course or direction; an altered or

-STILE. changed form, posture, or position.

state or condition, or appearance; to change or alter; to wind, to round.

Turn—with prs. expressed or understood —is used as equivalent to various compound words derived from the Latin; as—

To avert, to convert, to invert, to pervert, to revert or reverse.

To deflect, to inflect, to reflect.

To revolve, to retort; to transfer, to transpose, to transform.

Turn, the s. besides its usage in common with the v. is app. to—

A vicissitude, a chance, an occasion, an opportunity, a purpose.

TUSK, s. v.* Tusks, or Tushes, of a boar,—-y. the projecting teeth of the boar.

TUSH. Tusked,—having tusks.

To tusk,—to shew, or move the tusks. **B. Jonson*.

A. S. Tazas, (Tug-a-a?) dentes exerti. See TOOTH.

TUSSEL, s. v. i.e. A Tousel, dim. of Touse or Tease.

TUT, int. Perhaps Toot, toot, i. e. See, see. See TOOT.

TUTSAN, s. A plant. Fr. Tutsan. Sk. says it is remarkable for its efficacy in healing wounds, and thinks it so called, qd. Totum sanum or sanans.

TUTTY, s. The true tuthe (Cot.) is bred of the sparks of brazen furnaces whereinto store of the mineral calamine, beaten to dust, hath been cast.

Fr. Tuthe; Low L. Tutia, from Ger. Toolsen, explorare, to try, to examine; or Fr. Toucher; to touch.—See Foss. De Vit. lib. II. c. 18.

TUZ, s. A tuft—of hair or other things.

Perhaps from Fr. Tasse, a tuft (or tuft) of grass; Tasse de foin, a bundle of hay, (Cot.); or it may be a corruption of Tush or Tusks; tufts of hair projecting like tusks. Donne, in his Hist. of the Septuagint, has the expression—Tussets of all fruits: "A girdle of flowers and tussets of all fruits, intertied and following together," (p. 49, ed. 1638.)

TWAIN, or TWEY, ad. TWEYN. Two.

A. S. Twy, tweg, tweg-en, tweg-en; D. Twes; Ger. Zwen, zween. Twens, v. in P. Plouhman, ("hue *tuene*th ful menyne,") from A. S. Twæon-an, dubitare, to doubt or put in doubt; in hazard; and hence, as Dr. Whitaker interprets it,—"to ruin." See TWO, TWIN. At-Be-

TWANG, s. v. The sound of metal—the reverberation from the con-

TWANK, v. cushion, shaking, quavering, of metal; of a bow-string in quivering motion; then app. to other ringing sounds.

Twang of the vessel, (in Search,) should be Tang.

Either (as Minshew believes) from L. Tang-ere; or rather a word formed from the sound.—Sk.

A. S. Twæg-an, twæon-an, is, hæsitare, fluctuare. Twæonunge or Twæoung, hæsitatio, a hesitation, a sticking; fluctuatio, a fluctuation, a wavering.

TWATTLE, v. s. -ER. Various written Twaddle, Tweddle, Twittle. To make a small chattering noise; a small unmeaning or insignificant noise or sound, like the tuning of an instrument; the bad play.

Twatting, then gen.—To chatter idly, unmeaningly; fondly; to fondle, to coax.

Perhaps Tattle—Jun. Twittle, Twattle, and Tittle-tattle, differ only in the v. Be-twatted, Mr. Brocket explains—Stupidified, confounded, infatuated.

TWEAGUE,* s. Perplexity, anxiety, fluctuation of mind.—**Swift*.

From Twæge, indie. of Twæg-an, dubitare, hæsitare, (says Lye,) comes Sw. Tuckan, and our Twæagus.

TWEAK, v. s. To pluck or pull.

A. S. Twiccan, twiccan, to pluck, to catch, to twick.—Som. See TWITCH.

TWEEZE, v. -ER. Tweezers,—now usually app. to—a small instrument, to pinch and pull out hairs, &c.

It. Astaccio; Low L. Estugium. Derived by some from L. Theca. (See Men.) Fr. Estuy, a sheath, case, or box to put things in; and, more part. a case of little instruments, or sixsars, bodkin, penknife, &c. now com. called an Ettwee.—Cot. Ettwee is used by Shenstone, (Economy, pt. II.

TWELVE, ad. TWELFTH. Twelve,—two left, above or more than ten.

Twelfth,—that unit which completes the number twelve, or the number two beyond ten, for a second decimal numeration. See ELEVEN.

D. Twelf, twelf, twelf; Ger. Zwelf; Sw. Tolf; Dan. Tolv; A. S. Twelf; Go. Twa-lth, -lf, duo-decim—numerus in quo unitates duas reliquuntur supra denarium, unde tota numerandi ratio de novo subinde resumitur ac veluti redintegratur.—Jun. See also Wach.

TWENTY, ad. -IETH. Twain, or two tens; twice ten.

D. Tweyntigh; Ger. Zwanzig; A. S. Twentig, teontig; Go. Twain-tig.

TWI-BILL, s. A two-edged, bill, or axe.

A. S. Twy-bill; D. Twes-bill, bipennis, bicuspis, securia.

TWICE, av. Two times.

D. Twes, twy-as, twies, twiss, twice, the gen. of twy, twey, or two.

TWI-FALLOW. See TRI-FALLOW.

TWIG, s. v. Something (branch, slip of a -G-EN. tree) twaked or twitched; a branch

-ER. twitched, snatched, plucked, severed; a small branch.

To twig, to twenak,—to flog with twigs; to lash, to flog.

A. S. Twig, twiga; D. Twigh; Ger. Zweig, perhaps from A. S. Twic-an, to twick.

TWI-LIGHT, s. The waning light immediately after the setting, or before the rising of the sun. A dim light; a dim sight.

D. Twes-licht; A. S. Twæon-licht, dubia lux. Twæon, from twæon-an, dubitare, to doubt.

TWILL, s. -ED, ad. A cane, a reed; and in the contested passage of Shak. (Tempest,) twilled may be merely can-y, reed-y, or abounding with twills, canes, or reeds. A quill is very com. called twill in the North. See Ray.

In Ovid's Banquet of Sense, by Chapman, (1625,) Mr. Steevens found twill-pants enumerated among flowers.

From Fr. Tuyau, we have tewell, twill, or tull or twill, any thing tubular. See TAWELL.

TWIN, v. s. ad. To twin, is—to twain, to -LING. disunite in twain; to separate, -N-ING. to disjoin, to part with or from, to -ER. depart; to sever. (See TWAIN, and TWINE.) It is also (Shak.) to unite in twain, to conjoin.

Twins,—are two or twain at a birth. Hence, To twin, is also, to bear or bring forth twins. In Astrology, Castor and Pollux, "the Spartan twins."

A. S. Twin, ge-twin; Ger. Zwen, gemi, gemelli.

TWINDGE, v. s. To pinch.

Ger. Zwing-en; D. Dwing-en; Sw. Twing-a; cogere, coarctare, comprimere, to press, to pinch. A. S. Twice-ian, to twitch.

TWINE, v. s. A double thread, one thread strengthened by another twined around it; a thin string.

To twine,—to turn, roll, or wind around; to convolve, to involve; to embrace.

To twin or twine, is—to unite into two; make two into one; and also, to disunite into two; to make one into two; to separate. See TO TWIN.

Dan. Twinder; D. Twyns, twyns; A. S. Twin, twyne, or twined, thread, flum duplex, from the v. Twain-an, duplicate, to twine, (i. e. to twain), or twist, (i. e. twic't.) En-In-Inter-Un-

TWINK, v. To shine with a sparkling, -LE, s. quivering light; to sparkle, to -LING. quiver; to emit or throw forth a small portion of light.

A twinkling (of a star) is caused by the apparent separation of the continuous surface.

The twink or twinkle of the eye,—the quick separation of the lids, or the sparkle caused by it; the space of time in which it is finished.

A. S. Twinc-lan, rutillare, scintillare, is probably the dim. of Twyn-an, to twine, to separate.

TWIRE, v. To swerve from a straight line; to look or direct the look askance, asquint, obliquely; to leer, to wink, to twinkle.

In Chaucer, Twireth appears to be app. to the interrupted, intermitted sounds of a bird, its short chirp or whisper of gladness on escaping from its cage—as distinguished from continuous song: "And twirethe, [silvas dulci voce susurrat,] desiring the woode with her swete voisie."

"Twyereth, (says Sk.) is interpreted—singeth; twyer, to sing; I know not whether from D. Wieren; Fr. Vire; It. Girare, circuire; gyrare, i. e. vocem reciprocare, vibrissare, et q. circumrotare. Steevens thinks—Twire may perhaps have the same signification as Quire, or that it may be a corruption of Twink, for Twinkling. Gifford says, To twire is—to leer affectedly, to glance at obliquely or surreptitiously, at intervals, &c. But whence have we the word? It is perhaps A. S. Thwyr-ian, thwyr-ian, to wrest, to twist, (to twirl), to turn or put out of a straight course; to swerve.

TWIRL, v. s. To turn, to run or cause to run round; to revolve fast or speedily; to whirl about.

Holland writes Twirling, the same word probably as Trilling, from A. S. v. Thwirl-ian, to turn round, to turn about.

TWIST, v. s. -ING. To double, or duplicate; to turn one round another. Gen.—to turn or wreath around, to infold, to wind, to implicate. "A man of common height might easilie go vnder his twist without stooping."—Holiashed. In S. of Salomon ii. 42. "The time of the singing (of birds)," is in Bible 1549, "The twystynge tyme;" καυπος τῆς τῶν.

A. S. Ge-wisan, to twice. Twist,—that which is twiced, twist; and hence, the v. En-Inter-

TWIT, v. -INGLY. To name, or tell of, a fault, defect, infirmity; any matter of blame, scoff, mockery; to scoff, to reproach. (And see TOOT.) Or—

To pull or pluck; to have a twit or pull at; to carp at; and hence, to taunt, scoff, flout.

A. S. Edwit-an, to reproach, to rebuke, to taunt, to twit, to backbite, to slander, to deprave.—Som. And Edwit-an, Sk. forms of ed, again, and wit-an, to give to wit, (or cause to wit or know;) i. e. openly to signify to any one the fault he may have committed. A. S. Wit-an is not only—to know, but to censure. Chaucer and G. Douglas use the s. Wit; and Spenser the s. and s. as equivalent to twit, i. e. censure, reproach.—Farrie Quene, b. ii. c. 12, s. 16; b. vi. c. 2, s. 16. May it not be from Twight, the past p. of Twist? At—

TWITCH, v. s. -ING. To pluck, to catch, to snatch.—Som.

Ger. Zwicken; A. S. Twice-an, -tan, vellere, carpere, to pull.

TWITTER, s. v. -ING. To tremble, to shake, (with any passion, hope, or fear; with laughter;) to utter or emit a trembling, shaking sound.

A common word in Lincolnshire, says Sk.; from Ger. Zittern, tremere, to tremble; both formed from the sound. Ray says,—to twitter thread or yarn, is to spin it uneven.

TWIXT. See BETWIXT, BETWEEN.

TWO, ad. Two gen. means—One separate unit added to one separate unit, or one and one.

Go. Twai, twos, two; A. S. Tu, twa, two; D. Twes, twy; Ger. Zwei, zwo. From A. S. Twæman; D. Twæen; Ger. Zwein, dividere, separare, disidere, to divide, to separate, to disjoin. See Dis, in composition.

TYDY, s. A bird, perhaps so called for its small size, or small and delicate notes.

D. Tyde. Avia quælibet minor.—Illius. See TYOT.

TYMBAL, s. A timbrel, or a little brazen drum, to dance to.—Cot. See TIMBREL. Fr. Tymbale.

Fr. Tyran, tyran-niser; Sp. -o, -izar; It. Tirann-o, -izzare; L. Tyrannus; Gr. Τυραννος. The cause of the appellation may be, that they dwelt in towers (turres) or palaces. The word was used orig. for a king, or prince, or chief. Lye says, A. S. Tir, (T-ir, see Er, Hæro), was quivis dux, princeps, dominus, imperator; any leader, prince, master, or commander; and hence, perhaps, (he adds,) the tyrannos of the Greeks.

U.

U. As a vowel, (says B. Jonson,) it soundeth thin and sharp, as in use; thick and flat, as in us. It never endeth any word for the nakedness, but yieldeth to the termination of the diphthong ew, as in new, acrew, &c.; or the qualifying e, as in sue, due, true, and the like.

UMPIRE, s. v. One who (like a father) -AGE. composes strife, and conciliates -SHIP. peace.

Some from Imperator; Sk. admires the ingenuity, but doubts the truth of Min.'s etym. from Fr. Un-père.

UN, pref. An, en, in, on, mean one: To one, is—to un-ite, to join; and hence the augmenting force of en, in, or on (collectivè unus. See EN.) But whence its negative force? This question, an attempt must be made to answer.

One (emph.) means one, and no more.

Al-one, is—one being all; one—severed, separated, apart from other; one, or more, (numerically.) To one, is thus—to be, or cause to be, al-one, sole; to sever or separate from all other; to deprive, to disjoin, from all other. We have then thus—

One, separativè unus, (opposed to One, collectivè unus), denoting, in composition, a separation, a privation, a negation, sc. of the positive meaning of the word to which it is prefixed.

This opposition is not confined to On, en, in; it is found in Dis;—in Dis-sever, dis augments the force; in Dis-unite, dis negatives or reverses the meaning. See also To TWIN.

Un and In (neg.) were in many words, and in some still are, used indiscriminately. Un has in numerous instances, most esp. in words of L. origin, given place to In (im, ir). Our old translators of the Bible, and authors long after them, wrote Un-possible; and our common people still so speak. Wiclif, translating from the Latin Vulgate, im-possible, perhaps introduced im-possible into Eng.; but the two modes, Un and In, may be supported by concurrent testimony from Chaucer to Bp. Hall; perhaps still lower.

1. Words with the prefix Un may be distinguished into privative and negative: the verbs (e. g. To un-arm, To un-close, To un-cover), are privative; they express a positive act of privation, and are equivalent in meaning to—To dis-arm, To dis-close, To dis-cover, though they differ in application. Of these, we have not a great number.

2. The ad. and part. Un-absurd, Un-abridged, &c. &c. are purely negative; they express no act, nothing done; merely the negation or absence of that which is denoted by the more simple terms, absurd, abridged, to which Un is written as a prefix. In such words, Un has the force of Not, and may be employed almost as universally. We must take care, however, not to coin such monsters as Un-walkative, Un-fattable, Un-amorousness, which Bp. Wilkins introduced into his pages.

3. Yet again, there are some, though a very few, which by consequence have obtained a positive signification; thus, Un-graceful, Unhappy, import not merely the absence of gracefulness or of happiness, but the presence of the contrary, sc. of awkwardness, of ill hap, misfortune, distress;—these, and the first class (the privative), are placed in one list, and are explained; the second class, the negative (purely so) are placed in another list, and are not explained; it is quite unnecessary to do so.

A few instances will be found of Un, from A. S. On, intensive; as Un-bide, Un-less, Un-rip, (qqv.) &c.

In Ger. D. &c. these compounds are scanty in comparison with our own.

Go. A. S. & Ger. Un; D. & A. S. On; Sw. O; Dan. U; in L. In, and in Eng. both In and Un.

UNDER-MONIED, pt. Fuller means by this quaint word—Taken by corrupt means of money.

UNDERN, \ s.* In Go. Undaurni-mat, is —ER-MEAL. (Jun.) prandium; and Onderen-TIME is in some northern dialects, prandere.—Kilian. Undern and Underntid (Wach.) the third hour of the day, with us the ninth. Som. says (from Bede) that three times were allowed for drinking, (ad potandum: on undern, on mid-dæg, on non;) and adds, that both Chaucer's interpreters and Verstegan are to be corrected, who by Undern and Underntide understand—afternoon. Undernsang (he says) is nine o'clock service—nonam ante meridiem. Sk. adopts the same opinion as Verstegan. Under is used in A. S. in composition with various words denoting food, a dish or messe, dinner, supper, repast, (Som.;) whence it may be inferred, that Undern (or Onderen) is formed upon Under, and used elliptically, or with a subaud. of some s.—e. g. tide or time, meal, &c.

In the Promptorium Parvulorum (says Gifford) Under-mele is Latinized by post meridiem, and he calls it an afternoon's meal, a slight repast after dinner.

Mr. Tyrw. says he never met with any etym. of this word Undern; but the following passage (he thinks) may lead one to suspect that it had some reference to Undernoon. In the town-book belonging to the corporation of Stamford, 28 Edw. IV. it is ordained that no person opyn ther sack, or set ther corn to sale afore hour of ten of the bell, or els the undernone bell be ronyng.—*Peck. Desid.  indeed is the proper Latin name for any incorporation whatever. The University of Smiths, the University of Taylors, &c. are expressions, which we commonly meet with in the old charters of antient towns."—
A. Smith. "The present Universities of Europe were originally, the greater part of them, ecclesiastical corporations, instituted for the education of churchmen. They were founded by the authority of the pope; and were so entirely under his immediate protection, that their members, whether masters or students, had all of them what was then called the benefit of clergy, that is, were exempted from the civil jurisdiction of the countries in which their respective Universities were situated, and were amenable only to the ecclesiastical tribunals. What was taught in the greater part of those Uni- versities, was suitable to the end of their institutions, either theology, or something that was merely preparatory to theology."—Id.

UN-LESS, co. (see LESS and ONLESS), is (Tooke) A. S. Onles, dimitte, imperative of the v. On-lesan, to dismiss. Les, (qv.) the imp. of Les-an, is sometimes used by our old writers. A great variety of examples is produced to shew that Onles, Onlesse, was the common mode of writing; and Tooke believes Tyndall to have been one of the first who wrote the word with an u. In the Bible, 1551, it is written with o; in the collection of his Works, 1573, with u. In Barnes, published with Tyndall, Onles.

Dimitas, put, take away, except, this; or this being dismissed, put, taken away, or excepted.

UN-LINK, v. To loosen the link, or the concatenation; the connexion, folds or twists.

UN-QUEEN,* v. To strip off, to divest of, the rank of queen.—Shak.

UN-QUICK,* ad. -ENED. Not lively, or enlivened, or spirited, or animated; not active or sharp.—Daniel. Sw. Ogwick.

UN-RAVEL, v. To ravel and To unravel, have by usage been greatly confused in their application. To ravel is,—to tear (reave) or pull asunder, sc. any thing involved or complicate; and thus,—to unfold, to disclose. And To unravel is,—

1. To involve or complicate; to disorder.
But To ravel is also,—to tear or pull asunder, sc. any thing whole or entire, into shreds, into ragged particles; and hence,—to pull or put into disorder or confusion; to confuse, to perplex, to entangle. And To unravel,—

2. To remove the confusion or perplexity; to disentangle, to place in order; to make clear or plain, to evolve.

In each case, Un may be neg.; but see To UNREAVE, and To UNRIP.

VAGABOND, ad. s. A wanderer, a vagrant, (qv.)

Fr. Vagabond, -onder; It. -ondo, -dre; Sp. -undo; Low L. Vagabundus, qui non habet domicilium, sed hodie hic, et cras alibi.—Du Cange.

VAGARY, s. Vagrant is—A wanderer, -GR-ANT, ad. s. . a roamer. A vagary, -ANCY. A wandering or roaming:

app. (met.)—to a quick motion or fitting to and fro; a caprice, a whim, a freak.

Fr. Vagrier, to vagary, to wander, to roam.—Cot. Sp. Vagar; It. & L. Vagare, to wander. See VAG-ILLATE.

VAGIENT,* ad. Crying like a child.

**H. More.* Fr. & Sp. Vagir; L. Vagire.

VAGINI-PENNOUS,* ad. Having the feathers or wings covered with a sheath or case.—**Brown*.

Fr. Vagine; It. & L. Vagina, a sheath, and penna, a feather.

VAGUE, s. v. ad. To wander, to roam, -LY, to stray, to err. And Vague, ad. -NESS. (L. Vagus),— Wandering, unsettled, unsteady, uncertain, unsure, indeterminate, indefinite.

Fr. Vague, -uer; It. -ante, -dre; Sp. -ar; L. Vagare, to wander, to roam. See VAGANT. Extra—

VAIL, v. s. To fall; to drop, to put, to lay down, to lower, to depress, to sink; to submit, (to fail.)

Vail, s.—"Any casual emolument," any gain, profit, &c. that may fall in. In vulgar speech, a wind-fall.

Fr. Avaler, (to avale, qv.) to let, puff, lay, or fell down, to let fall down (Cot.); from D. Fallen; Ger. Fallen; A. S. Fællan, to fall or cause to fall.

VAIL,* v. -ABLE.† To have value, force, or effect; influence or power; to serve, aid or assist.—**Gower. Berners.* †Chaucer. Gower. Sir T. Smith. A- Pre-

VAIMURE,* or VAUMURE,† s. An avant-mure, fore-wall, out-wall, or outward wall.—Cot. **Hackluyt.* †Sir T. Wyatt. Fairefax.

Fr. Avant-mure, a van or vauant-mure, (qv.)

VAIN, ad. The Fr. ad. Vain is—"Faint, -LY, weak, feeble, forceless" (Cot.); -NESS, fruitless, frustrate, idle, trifling, frivolous; rejoicing in trifles, ostentatious of, displaying trifles, or decorations.

VANITY. "Vanity is that species of pride, which, while it presumes upon a degree of superiority in some particular articles, fondly courts the applause of every one within its sphere of action; seeking every occasion to display some talent or some supposed excellency."—Cogan.

Vain glory, &c.—now usually written as one word. "Vaine-glorie is for to have pompe, and delit in his temporal highnesse, and glorye him in his worldly estate."—Chaucer.

Fr. Vain; It. & Sp. Vano; It. & Sp. Vanagloria; L. Vanus, for which Voss. proposes various etyms. Tooke derives it from A. S. Fyn-igean, to wither, to fade, to pass away, to faint. It may be more immediately from A. S. v. Was-ian, to waste, to fall away.

VALANCE, or -ENCE, s. -ENCY. Florio calls it—A kind of saye, serge, or stuff to make curtains for beds with.

Valiant, in the first folio of Shak., has been altered by the editors to valenced, which Malone explains,—"fringed with a beard."

It. Valenzana del letto: perhaps (Sk.) from Valentia, a town so called both in Italy and Spain

VALE, s. VALLEY. App. to—Ground surrounded by eminences; ground lying in a bottom, lying low in relation to that adjoining or encompassing it.

Fr. Vallée; It. & Sp. -e; L. Vallis, for which Voss. proposes three different etyms: the most plausible of which is Gr. Βαλλειν, deficere, diminere, to cast or put down; but its true origin seems to be D. Fallen, Ger. Fallen, A. S. Fællan. See VAIL, and AVALE.

VALE-DICTION, s. -TORY. A saying or bidding to fare well; a farewell.

From L. Valedicere, (vale, farewell, and dicere, to say,) to say or bid farewell.

VALENTINE, s. Met.—A letter, -s person seen, selected—on Valentine's day, (Feb. 14.)

VALERIAN, s. A plant.

Fr. Valerian-e; It. -a. So called of valere, to avail, because of its great virtues; or of Valerius, who first used it in physic.

VALET, s. Gen.—A hireling.

Fr. Valet. See VALEET.

VALETUDINARY, s. App. gen. to -IAN, ad. s. the bodily state or condition; -INESS,* and hence,—

Valetudinarius, a valetudinary, — one whose bodily state or condition requires care or cure; an unhealthy, sickly, infirm, person.—**Cheyne*.

Fr. Valetudin-aire; It. -ario; L. Valetudinarius, from L. Valetudo, strength, health. See VALIA.

VALIANT, ad. Strong, powerful, robust, -ANCE,* bold, brave, courageous, (well.)

-ANCY,* Fr. Vaillant, is—a man's whole

-ANT-LY, estate or worth, all his substance

-NESS,* (Cot.); and such seems the

VALOUR, s. Boldness, bravery, courage, -OR-OUS. valiancy, (qv.)

-OUSLY. Fr. Val-eur, eureux; It. -bre, -oroso; Sp. -or, -eroso; L. Valor, of questionable authority. Fr. Val-eur, or valoir, is the worth or value, (anciently written Valure, qv.) price or estimation; and hence the ad. Valereux, valoroux, is app. as equivalent to Feillant; and our Eng. s. Valour, to worth in arms.

VALUE, s. v. The worth; the estimated

-ABLE. or rated worth, the estimation,

-ABLENESS. rate, price.

-ATION. Sir T. More writes Valour.

-ATOR. *Common in old writers, Berners, Hackluyt, &c.

-LEGS. -ER. Fr. Val-eur, -oir; It. -ore; Sp. -er, -ure, **s.* Fr. Val-eur, from L. Val-e, to be sound, whole or entire, (see VALID, VALIANT, VALOUR.) to be worth or worthy. Dis-In-Mis-Over-Out-Un-

VALVE, s. A folding door or shutter; a cover, folding or lapping, and refolding, over the aperture.

Fr. Valve; L. Valvea, q. valvea, quia introitum revolvantur;—folding, sc. doors or shutters.—Voss.; who well distinguishes the valvea from the biforee.

VAMP, s. v. Fr. Avant, the vam or fore part, is frequently corrupted into vam, as Vambrace, Vamure, (see VAI-MURE, VANT-BRACE.) And Sk. thinks, that the vamp of the boot or shoe is the fore or front, and cons. the upper part of it,—the upper leather; and that To vamp boots is—

To repair them by the addition of new upper leather. Sp. Avampier, the short splatter-dash or gaiter, has probably the same origin. Hence, To vamp, gen.—

To patch old with new; to give any thing that is old, worn-out, or thread-bare—a new face or appearance.

VAN, s. The front, the fore part. See -COURIER. VAUNT.

-GUARD. Fr. Avant; It. Avante; D. Van, fore, before; and Ger. Von, from, are the same word. The Fr. etymologists endeavour to trace the Fr. and It. pra, to the L. pr. Ante. Wach. attempts no etym. Though in D. and Ger. Van or Von are used merely as pra, in Eng. Van is a s.

VAN, s. v. -ING. To van, (or fan, qv.)—To act upon with the wind, to beat with the wind. And a Van,—any thing that catches or holds the wind, that beats or strikes the wind; sc. a wing, a sail.

Fr. Van, vanner; It. Vanni; D. & Ger. Wanne; A. S. Fenne; from L. Fannus,—say the etymologists; and L. Fannus, from Gr. βαλλειν, to throw or cast, ob jactationem et succussionem vanni, because the corn is winnowed by the stroke,—the blow or blast of the air; but the origin is probably northern. See WINNOW, and WIND.

VANE, s. Any thing placed to catch the wind, and move as it blows.

A. S. Fan-a; Ger. -a; D. Faene, vexillum. A standard, an ensign (Som.); who adds,—hence our Fane and Vane, pru tritons. Chaucer writes it Fane, (qv.) and see VAN.

VANISH, v. -ING.* To disappear, to pass or go away, out of sight or view, beyond perception; to be or become imperceptible.—*Chaucer.

Fr. Vanoyer, vanouir; It. Scanire; L. Fanes-cere, from vanus, for which Voss. gives six different etyms. Tooke,—from A. S. Fyn-ig-san, to corrupt, spoil, decay, wither; and this is not improbably formed upon A. S. Wan-ian, to wane, to decrease, to decay, to fall away. See VALE. E-

VAN- or VAUNT-MURE, s. See VAI-MURE.

VANQUISH, v. To overpower, to over--ER. come, to beat, or get the better; -ABLE.* to subject, to subdue, to con--MENT.† quer.—*Gayton. †Bp. Hall.

Fr. Valquer; Sp. Vencer; It. & L. Vincere, which Voss. derives from Gr. Nuc-eiv, by a transposition of the two first letters, and by prefixing the letter v. (A. S. Wan-ian†) Con-Un-

VANTAGE, v. s. To place or set before or forward, to prefer;—to promote (or advance), to benefit, to profit. Ad-Dis-Un-

VANT-BRACE, or -BRASS, s. VAMFLATE. Also written Vambrass.

Any thing placed before the arm,—to protect it. Armour for the arm. Also called Garde-brace, (Chaucer,) Fr. Garde-bras.

Vamplate,—the annotator on Sidney calls—a gauntlet, an iron glove. It is considered to be the same as Vambrace.

Fr. Avant-bras.

VAP, *s. Vapour,—a reek, a steam, a fume,

-ID. an exhalation; a spirituous

-OUR, s. v. emission; a breath, a puff;

-OR-ER. more grossly, the wind; a

-Y. swelling or tumour caused by

-ISH. air or wind; and app. (met.)

-OUS. to the mind, the humours of

-OUSNESS. the mind.

A vaporier,—a puffer, one filled with airs of his own conceit; a bragger.

Vapid,—having emitted or ejected all spirit; spiritless. And the Vap,—the dead body after the spirit is gone.—*Bp. Taylor.

Fr. Vap-ide, -eur; It. -bre; Sp. & L. Vapor, which Voss. derives from Gr. Kavve, status, halitus; and this from the unused xav-eiv, to blow. The origin is probably Gothic. The A. S. Wap-ian, facture; Wap-etian, effervescere, appear to present an affinity. E-

VARDINGALE, s. Com. written Fard-thingale, (qv.)

VARE, *s. Sp. Vara, a rod, a wand, a twig, a stick.—Delpino. *Howell. Dryden.

VARLET, s. -RY. One receiving hire, or wages, or some equivalent for hire; an attendant, a follower in service, a servant; a menial, a low or base person.

Tooke considers Varlet to be the same word as Varlet, by the omission, in slovenly pronunciation, of the letter r, (as in My lord, constant among barristers for My lord;) and that Varlet is also the same word as Harlot, (the aspirate changed to v;) meaning simply—a hireling. See HARLOT.

VARNISH, or VERNISH, v. s. VARNISHER. To lay on or impose a bright, a burnished—surface; to give a bright or glossy, a shining or dazzling—appearance; and thus to cover, hide, or conceal deformity, or disagreeable reality.

Fr. Vern-is, -iser; It. -ice, -icdre; Sp. Barn-is, -isar; L. Vernicia, a word (Voss.) unknown to the ancients. Now (he adds) many people so call the gum of the juniper, much used by painters to brighten colours. Some learned men think it so called, quasi verum rorem, because it flows from the tree in spring. But he agrees with Salmasius, that it is Gr. Βερνικκ, Βερνικκ, sive Βερνικκ, which the Græco-barbarians use pro succino, for amber. Sk. refers to Burnish, (qv.) Un-

VARY, v. s. To change, to alter, to
-I-ABLE. differ, to diversify; to have

VASSAL, s. v. A follower or attendant;
-AGE. one bound to follow or attend;
-ATION.* one holding certain lands under
-ESS,† bond, or obligation, or allegiance —to follow or attend, to aid or assist.

“Feudatory or vasal, was only an other name for the tenant or holder of the lands; though, on account of the prejudices which we have justly conceived against the doctrines that were afterwards grafted on this system, we now use the word vasal opprobriously, as synonymous to slave or bondsman.”—Blackstone.

**W. Mountague. †Spenser.*

Fr. Vass-all; It. & Sp. -allo; Low L. Vassallus.
The etymologists have written very largely upon this word and its origin.—See Men., Wach., Du Cange, Voss., and Jun. In our old writers, (sc. Chaucer, Gower, G. Douglas,) as in the Ancient Romance, Vassalage, or as it is sometimes improperly written Vasselage, is used as equivalent to—Valour, valianthess, prowess. And Jun. supposes it to be so used from the powerful and faithful assistance which the fiduciary clients, then called Vassi or vassali, supplied to their superior lord in times of danger; the word was indeed evidently as much a term of honour as knighthood was. Low L. Vassus is derived by Voss. (de Vit. p. 634) from vas, a pledge or surety; and the vassals undoubtedly were tenants in vas—io, upon wage or gage, or pledge, sc. to render certain services to the lord or proprietor, such as to follow and assist in war; and were so far bondsmen, that, by the very nature of their tenure, they were bound, or under obligation or allegiance, to the performance of certain conditions. Voss., with little reason, hesitates to derive vas (vass, vadis) from vaders, which we have in A. S. Wad-an, to go, gen.; not as we now restrict the v. To wade. Low L. Vad-ium was also written Wad-ium; A. S. Wada, pignus, vadimonium. En-

VENT, s. v. May be explained—An open-
-AGE. ing or aperture, for the utterance
-AILE. or emission; an emission, an utter-
-ER, s. ance; an opening, for the sale or disposal; a means of sale; a mart or market overt. And, To vent,—

To open, for make an opening; to give opening, for the utterance or passage; to utter, to let out, to send forth, to emit; to bring forth, to put or set out for open sale, to sell, to dispose of.

Ventail of a helmet,—the opening; the part that is, or lifts, open, (sc.) to give air or light. Chaucer writes it Aventail, (Canterbury Tales, v. 9080.)

The Glossary to Spenser seems to think Vent, in Shepheard's Calendar, is from ventus, the wind.

To vent into the wind is—to open or expand his nostrils to the wind.

Fr. Vent; It. Sventare. Both English and French lexicographers consider that there are two words so written, Vent, Fr. Fente, from fendra, L. Findere, to cleave or split open; and Vent, Fr. Vendre, L. Vendere, to sell.—Hackluyt, speaking of the vent of commodities,—a vent to make sales,—seems to use it as equivalent to utrerance, an opening for the utterance, a mart or market overt.

VENTILATE, v. To give wind or air;
-ILATION. to give an opening or passage;
-OSE, ad. s. to expose to the wind or air;
-OSITY. and (met.) to winnow, to sift, to
-INDUCT.† discuss.

Ventose,—windy. A ventose or cupping glass (Fr. Ventose),—a glass that sucks or exhales the blood.

Chaucer uses Ventousing:—

"———Neyther veine-blood, ne ventousing, Ne drinke of herbes may ben his helping."

* Brown. † Boyle.

Fr. Vent-iler; Sp. -ilar; It. & L. Ventilare; to give wind or air (ventus). E-Sub-Un-

VENTRICLE, s. Cot. calls Ventricle,—

-TR-AL. "The place wherein the meat
-ILO-QUY. sent from the stomach is digested;
-QUOUS. some so call the stomach itself."
-QUIST. Also, a hole or cavity.

Ventriloquy and Ventriloquism, are words in current use. "The pretenders to the art of necromancy, who were chiefly women, had a way of uttering sounds, as if they were formed, not by the organs of speech, but deep in the chest, or in the belly; and were thence called εγγαστριμυθοι, ventriloqui, (i.e. ventriloquists)."—Lowth. "A tuneful bird is a ventriloquist. The seat of the song is in the breast."—Paley.

Fr. Ventr-icle; It. -colo; Sp. -culo; L. Ventr-iculus, (dim. of Venter;) Gr. Εντερον, intestinum, intestinatorum locus. E-venterate.

VENTURE, v. s. That which is to come,

-ER. which may come. Any thing
-OUS. which is risked, or hazarded
-OUSLY. upon, put to the chance of.
-OUSNESS. And hence,—
-SOME. A trial, risk, hazard, chance.

-ING. Fr. Vent-ure; It. & Sp. -ura; L. Venturus, that is to come, from venire, venire, to come. Venture, that is to come: Future, that

Venue, Veneu, or Venny, in Fencing,—a coming, a coming on, an onset; a turn or bout; a hit. The commentators on Shak. have produced a great variety of instances; and differ in their explanations, because they mistake application for meaning.

Fr. Venue, from venir; L. Venire, to come. Blackstone seems to think, with Sk., Venue to be a corruption of viene; or his explanation may be intended for viene only:—"The court will direct a change of the venue or viene, (that is, the vicinia or neighbourhood in which the injury is declared to be done.)" VIE, s. v. To urge, to press on (sc. the way), to press forward, to strive to surpass or outstrip; to ply, to strive or contend; to emulate, to rival, to challenge to a contest; to defy.

To vie, at Cards,—to throw down, or play a card, in challenge to the adversary, for him to play upon, or in return; to revie,—to play in return or acceptance of the challenge. And hence, further, Vying and Re-vying, (qv.)—

Challenging and retorting, criminating and recriminating; defying.

Sk. prefers Ger. Wagen; D. Waeghen, periclitari, to put to hazard. He believes that there formerly existed a Fr. v. Fier, still preserved in the compound Revier, to revy, at play. Fr. Envier escaped his notice, or it might have led him to infer, that Envier was formed upon the s. Vie, L. Via, as Envoyer is upon Voye, the same word as Vie, differently written, and meaning, as Voyager does,—to go on the way; to put, to send on the way. Cot. tells us, that Vie-vie (an av. of encouraging or commanding) signifies—"On, on apace, go on, forward, make haste, march, march quickly; speed it, my hearts." We have similar expressions now in use—Keep on, get on, go it. And hence the v. To vie may denote—as above explained. Out-Re-VIEW, s. v. To see, to look; to behold, -ER. to observe, to hold or keep before -LESS. the eye, in sight, in prospect; to keep before the mind; to perceive, to examine, to regard.

W.

W hath taken his name (says Butler) not of his force, as other letters, but of his shape, which consisteth of two U's (UU); or (B. Jonson), according to our present mode of writing, it is V germinated (W) in full sound. B. Jonson adds,—Though it have the seat of a consonant with us, the power is always vowelish, even where it leads the vowel in any syllable; as, if you mark it, pronounce the two uu, like the Gr. u, quick in passage; and these words, uu-ine, u-ine, uu-ant, u-ant, suu-am, su-am, will sound, wine, want, swam. Put the aspirate before, and huu-at, hu-at, &c. will be what, &c.

WABBLE, v. -ER. To boil, to bubble.

A pot-wabblers,—a pot-boiler.

A. S. Wapel-ian, scature, ebullire, effervesce: from Wap-ean, fluctuare, to wave, to fluctuate, to undulate; and in this application To wabble is sometimes used.

WAD, s. A. S. Wad, i. e. Wood, (qv.)

WAD, v. s. -ING. App. first to a quantity, mass, of weft or wad; then to a lump, package, bundle. Wad is now used to denote any thing pressed, squeezed, stuffed in—into a gun, clothes, &c.

Lye calls it a coarser kind of cloth, to stuff cloaths; from Id. Pad, vod. Sk.—a wad of straw, fascis stramine, from A. S. Wood, straw, (i. e. weed.) Holland translates manipulus—a wad or bottle, (i. e. bundle.) Thre says, Wad is Scythian, and to be found in every dialect of that tongue. Ger. Wad (Wach.) is—tela, opus textum, (perhaps any thing waved, wad'd, weed, erud.) sive pannus, sive linteum. See WEED.

WADE, v. WADDLE, v. Gen. as now app.—To walk through water, high grass, any thing impeding the motion; and hence, to move slowly and laboriously.

To waddle, (a frequentative of Wade,—Lye.) to move with frequent efforts on each side alternately.

A. S. Wad-an; Ger. -en; Sw. -a; D. Waad-en; Dan. Vader, (L. Fadera) ire, ambulare,—to go, to walk, (to make way.)

WAFER, s. v. -ER. A small cake: used in the Roman-Catholic celebration of the Eucharist. A still smaller, to close letters, &c.

Fr. Gaufre, gofre; D. Wafel. In Low L. Gafrum.—Foss. De Vit. Martin. (In v.) derives from Gr. Kαρυπιον, crustulum, a small cake. Sk.—from the v. To wave, qd. to raise, and when raised, moved backward and forward with the hand—in reference to the elevation of the Host. P. Plouhman writes Wafrestre.

WAFt, s. v. To move, or cause to move; -AGE. to impel by a waving motion, or -ER. motion of the waves, of the wind; -ING. to blow, to inflate; to move or float; -URE. over or upon the waves or water; to make a waving motion, as a sign or notice; to beckon.

Wafst, s. is the past p. of the v. To wave, (qv.)—waved, waf'd, waf't; and the s. formed upon the s.

WAG, s. v. To move, to go; to move -G-ERY. frequently to and fro; to shake.

-ING. A wag,—

-ISH. One who makes playful, merry

-ISHLY. motions, plays merry, frolic-

-ISHNESS. some tricks or antics; a droll,

-LE, v. a joker.

-LING. Go. Wag-an; A. S. Wag-lan; D. Waeghen; Ger. Wacken; Sw. Waggs; Dan. Vakker, movere, motitare, to move, to move frequently. Waggie, freq. of Wag. See WADE, WAY. (A. S. Wac-an, wicel-lan, wac-illare, to oscillate, qv.)

WAGES, s. Wages, plural—That for

WAGE which any persons gage, or en-
-ER, s. v. gage, or bind themselves to per-
-ERER. form certain duties.

-ING. Wage, Wager, or Gage,—a pledge, a stake; a pledge of battle, or to maintain and carry on battle; and—

To wage is—to gage, or—to engage, (in battle, or war); to engage in, to undertake, to commence, to carry on.

A wager is also—a pledge, a stake. And To lay a wager,—to lay down a pledge or surety; to bet.

By mere change of g into w, is Fr. Gage, a pawn or pledge; in Eng. also a Gage, (qv.) Plural, "gages, wages, hire, stipend."—Cot. See GAG, KAG, KAT, QUAT.

WAGON, or WAGOON. A carriage—used

-G-ONER. to carry loads—formerly used in -ONEY. war, &c.

A. S. Wag-en; D. Waeghen; Ger. Wagen; Sw. Wagn; Dan. Vagn, from the v. Wag-an, to carry, to bear. See WIGH. As Curvus & currando, so Ger. Wagen, from wag-en, movere.—Wack. See WAG and WAT.

WAIL, s. v. To utter loudly, (sc.) grief,

-FUL. sorrow; to complain, to lament, to

-ING. moan, to deplore.

Serenius,—from Go. Wall, planetus, waita, vo-ciferari; and this probably A. S. Gyllan, giellan, gal-en, ejulare, ululare, to yell; and hence also It. Giulare, and L. Ejulare. Be- Out-

Fr. Guermeter, guarmenter. Men. endeavours to form it from L. Quarere or quaritare.

WAIN, s. A corruption of Wagon:—wag'n, wan, or wain.

WAINSCOT, s. v. -TING. Any inclosure, side of a room or other building, formed of materials (deals) resembling or presenting the resemblance of waving lines; now commonly of any kind of boards, and sometimes even of other materials.

The deals of oaks are especially called wainscot.

D. Waeghen-schot, waerge-schot, from waeghe, fluctus, (see WAG), a wave, (Kilian); and Sk. inclines to an opinion, that wainscot was so called from the waving veins or fibres of the material. Pliny in some degree confirms this:—"In all feelings and wainscot whatever it be, whether Greekish, Campaine, or Sicilian, it (firre) runs alwaies round and winding, like the tendrils of a vine, as the leyner runneth over the painels and quarters with his plainer." Holland.—Scot, in D. Schot, beschot, (which Kilian calls consignatio intermedia), and Ger. Ge-schose, are from A. S. Scitt-an, D. Schiet-en, schutten, Ger. Schlaesen; schutten, to shut; and hence,—to close, to inclose.

WAIST. See WASTE.

WAIT, v. s. To watch or be on the watch;

-ER. to be vigilant, attentive, observant;

WAITS. to attend, to observe; to lie, stay, or keep—upon the look out, in attendance, in observation, in expectation; to stay, to expect.

Waits is a name app. to musicians, who go round in the night, and wake the neighbourhood with their music and the congratulations of the season.

Fr. Guetter, aguetter; Ger. Wachten: same word as Watch, diff. written and pronounced. A- Un-

WAKE, v. s. To rouse, (sc.) the senses

-FUL. from inertness or inaction,

-FULLY. from dormancy, from sleep; to

-FULNESS. rouse, to be or cause to be alert,

-EN, v. to excite, to quicken.

-ENER. A wake is a feast kept on the

-ENING. first day of the consecration of

-ING. a church, and on the anniver-

-ER.* sary of it; and so called because the night is spent awake (in watching) and partly in singing; they were subsequently transformed into meetings of amusement and pastime, conviviality and licentiousness.

Liche-wake,—a watching of the dead.

Wake of a ship,—course kept or watched.

**Chaucer*.

A. S. Awacian, wac-lan; Ger. Wachten; D. Wacken; Sw. Waka; Dan. Vakker, vagter, vigilare, excubare, to be vigilant; to raise, rise, or rouse. See WATCH, and VIGILANT. (A. S. Wag-lan, to move. See WAG.) A- Be- For- Re- Uh-

WAKE-ROBIN, s. A plant,—so called (Sk.) because its acrimony will awake the sleeping.

WALK, v. s. Walk, a. is app. to the -ER. motion, the gait; the way or path, -ING. the course or track.

To walk, as a species of voluntary motion, is distinguished in bipeds from To run; in quadrupeds from To run, to trot, to canter, to gallop.

To walk yarne, in Rastall, is—to tread it, to press it.—Sk. "That the walker, and fuller shall truly walks, ful, thicke, and worke every webbe of woollen yarne, which he shall have to walke, ful, thicke & worke, without any flocks, &c."—Rastal.

Ger. Wall-en, ire, egredi, ambulare.—Wack. Sk. thinks Walk is from A. S. Walc-an, to roll; and Som. suggests the same origin. In v. Walc-an, to roll, to turn, to tumble, to revolve, to roll back, to turn up and down, to return often; hereof (he adds) probably our To walk, ambulare. Over- Out-

WALL, s. v. App. to—Any materials, brick, stone, mud, clay, wood, &c. consolidated, cemented, or fastened together.

The A. S. Weal was not only so applied, but also to the mortar, or that by which the materials are cemented or connected.

Wall-flower, Wall-wort, &c.—so called (Sk.) because they principally grow on or near walls.

D. Ger. & Sw. Wall, A. S. Weal, gen. from L. Fallum. Tooke, on the other hand, derives both Fallum and Wall from A. S. Wit-an, to join together, to consolidate, to cement. En- In- Out- Un-

WALL, ad. Sk. writes—"Wall or whall ey, a disease of horses; I know not whether from any likeness to the eyes of the whale fish. Brockett says—"In those parts of the north, with which I am best acquainted, persons are said to be wall-eyed, when the white of the eye is very large, and to one side. On the Borders, sic folks are considered unlucky." The author of the Craven Glossary explains Wall-ey to mean white or green (grey). Grose defines it,—"An eye with little or no sight, all white like a plaistered wall." Cooper, in his Thesaurus, 1573, renders glauclotus—a horse with a waicle eye. "Wall-eyed wrath," in Shak. seems to correspond with L. Glauci oculi, which Cooper renders, "eyes with furie (berie) ruddiness." Wall or Whall, Whally, Whally-eyed, are from A. S. Hwel-an, oontabescere, putrescere.

WALLET, s. A traveller's bag or pouch; any thing hanging like a bag.

From Ger. & D. Wallen; A. S. Wæll-tan, to go, to go abroad, to travel.

WALLOW, v. s. To roll; usually app. -ER. to—rolling for indulgence or enjoyment. *ment, as swine in the mud; men in sensual gratifications.

Wallowish,—rolling or toeing; as any thing nauseous in the stomach or bowels;

WALTER,* s. To wallow or wælder, (qv.) **Sir F. More*.

WAMBLE, s. s. To be ill at ease, in a state of tumult, in the belly.

From A. S. Wamb, the womb or belly.

WAN, ad. To wane.—To decrease, to fall

WANE, s. s. away, to decline, to diminish, -ING. to decay, to faint.

-W-ED. Wan-hope,—waned, decreased, -ISH. ing, decaying, dying hope. Chaucer calls it "despair of the mercy of God."

Wan,—faint, languid, worn out, or exhausted.

See GAUNT, WARD, and WANT, s. A. S. Wan, past p. of wanian, to decrease, to fall away. The moon in the wane, is the moon in a decreased state. "The waters were wane," (Shakspeare) i. e. decreased.—See Tooke.

WAND, s. A waned stick or staff; a small, thin, slender, stick or staff; a rod.

WANDER, v. To move or go from place

-ER. to place, from (met.) thought to -ING. thought; to move or go in an -INGLY. unsettled course, without certain -MENT. or direct aim or object; to rove, to ramble, to stray, to deviate.—**Ep. Hall*.

Ger. Wand-ern; D. in-er; Sw. ra; Dan. Vandrer; A. S. Wand-rion, (from the v. Wend-an, ire, ašire, to go,) to go about from place to place. For- Mis- Un-

WANG, s. -ER. "The mandible or jaw wherein the teeth are set; hence, with Chaucer, we call the cheek-teeth, great teeth or grinders, wangs or wang-teeth; as in that old rime:—

'And in witnes that this is sooth
I bite the wax with my wang-teeth.'"

Wanger,—a pillow for the cheek.—Som.

A. S. Wang, wangs, wangs; D. Wange; Ger. Wang, Wanger,—A. S. Wangere; D. Wanger. Maxilla (Matt. v. 39) is in A. S. Ver. Wangs.

WANION, s. WANTY. Not in any of our dictionaries. Nares had met only with the phrase—"with a wanion." Sir T. More writes—"in the wanion." Nares thinks it evidently either from A. S. Wanung, detriment, (see WANE.) or Wanion, pleasure, to deplore: he produces an instance from Fox's Ecclesiastical History, where it is written Wants.

Wang, Whang, or Wheang, is in Suffolk and the North—a thong; and To wang is—to bang, in Devonshire also. See Grose, Brocket, and More.

A wand is—a leather girth.

Waniand, in Sir T. More, seems to have some reference to cart furniture: "He would of lykelyhood bynde them to cartes and beate them, and make theym wed in the waniand."

WANT, v. s. -LESS.* To be or become less, diminished, or decreased; to fail, to be deficient; to be without (sc. a something to complete a whole); to be without, to be destitute, to need, to be in need of; to feel the need of; and, cons. to seek or long for, to desire, or covet. (Sc.) to do without, bear or endure the want.—**Warner*.

D. & Ger. Wan. "Want, the s. (Tooke) is—Waned, wand, want, the past p. of To wane, (qv.) to fall away;" and the v. is formed upon the s. Want,—A. S. Wand, talpa, a mole, Sk. derives from A. S. Wend-an, to turn, à vertendo terram. Un-

WANTON, ad. s. v. App. to—One who -IZE, v. pursues or follows, indulges his -LY. own desires, his wish for pleasure, -NESS. his lusts; loosely or dissolutely, mirthfully or playfully, licentious, luxuriantly.

Lascivus, qd. he or she that wanieth one.—Jun. And to the same purport Mims. Sk. prefers D. Wannen, (to wane), to think, to imagine, to fancy; one who has a fancy or wish, who lightly wishes for; or from D. Wendelen, to wander, to rove, sc. from pleasure to pleasure. It is perhaps formed upon the v. To want, to seek or long for, to desire, to covet. Over-

WAN-TRUST,* s. Waned or decreased trust; want of trust; distrust.—**Chaucer*.

WANTY. See WANTON.

Fr. Werble, parole, propos, discours. Werblers, parler à haute voix, reciter, discourir.—Roquefort. Warble (says Sk.) is perhaps from D. Werelen, (to whirl), gyros agere, and hence app. to musio-vocem reciprocantibus modulis circumagere, vocem vibrare, vibrasare; and Jun.—cantum crebro vocis inflexu variare ac subinde mutare.

WARD, v. s. The primary meaning seems -EN. to be—To look at, (tueri), to look -ENRY. after; and cons. to defend, to -ENSHIP. protect, to keep harmless. -ER. To look at or after; to watch, to -MOTE. look vigilantly; to defend, to -SHIP. protect, to save or keep harm- -LESS.* less; to keep or hold off; to keep in custody.

A ward,—a district under its own guardianship or protection, that appoints its own guards or protectors. Also—

Any one under the protection of another. A ward of a lock,—that guards or secures it, constitutes its security or strength.

Ward, term. "May be joined to the name of any person, place, or thing, to or from which our view or sight may be directed." In our old writers are found—to God-ward, to Rome-ward, to me-ward, to her-ward, &c. &c.

Ward-mote,—meeting of the ward.

A warde-corps,—Fr. Garde-corps.

A ward-robe,—Fr. Garde-robe.

WASTE, or WAIST, s. Compared with the breadth across the shoulders, and across the hips, is the smaller, the wasting, diminishing part. See WASTE, ante.

Sk. says,—perhaps from the L. Vastus, qd. eastior corporis pars, the larger part of the body, which appears to be the reverse of the fact.

WASTEL, s. The Fr. etymologists consider the name to be given to a kind of bread from the size (à vastitate), baked in one mass.

Wastel-bread is repeatedly mentioned in our old statutes regulating the assize of bread.

Perhaps (Spel.) from D. Vaeten, to fast. Sk. prefers Fr. Gasteau, a cake; and Tyrw. assents to Sk. In Picardy, Gasteau is called Quastel.

WATCH, v. s. To be wakeful or vigilant;

WEARISH, or WEARISH, ad. Wearish opinions,—opinions of naught, or no worth.

A wearish elf, a wearish man, a wearish countenance, — malicious, evil, cursed, shrewish.

Sk. thinks it may be Wegerish, from Ger. We-geren, recusare; app. to a taste causing nausea and dislike. It is probably formed upon the ad. Weary,
(A. S. Wearig), which Som. explains, not only lassus, fessus, but—naught, malicious, cursed.

WEARY, ad. v. Cona.—Tired, fatigued,

WEE, ad. Dr. Jamieson has produced many instances of the usage of Wee with the ad. little, whence he seems inclined to suspect that Wee is way; and, from its frequent union with the ad. little, it may itself have been used to denote—little, small. But A. S. Wac, wace, our own Eng. Weak, may, by dropping the e or k, have given us this word.

WEED, s. v. The meaning of the word, -ER. whether app. to the grass, the her- -ERY. bage (the verdant clothing) of the -Y. field, (subsequently restricted to -LESS. useless or hurtful plants,) or to a clothing of the human body, is, probably,—

A covering; that which covers, spreads over, vest or vestment, clothing or garment.

To weed,—app. to the destruction of particular plants, covering or overspreading the ground, is—

To hoe, or cut up or out; to eradicate, or root out; to extirpate.

Chaucer contrasts wicked weeds with wholesome herba.

In Matt. vi. 30, The grass of the field, strumum agri, is in A. S. Acres wood. Wood also denoted vestis, vestmentum. Out- Un-

WELEW, v. To decay. "Whanne the sunne roos up it welewise (exaruit) for hete. . . And so a riche man welewith (marcescit) in hise weica."—Wiclif. See To WELK.

WELK, v. -IN. To welk,—To turn, to roll, to revolve; also—to devolve, to roll or turn, or cause to roll or turn, to go down. "The welked Phœbus," is Phœbus having completed his revolution. "To welke in west,"—to devolve, to turn or go down, to set. "Winter welked hath the day,"—completed the revolution of day.—Spenser.

Welkin, ad.—rolling; the rolling sea, the rolling sky, a rolling eye: used, substantively, to denote,—the sky. In A. S. Welcn, wolcn.

A. S. Wealc-an, volvere, revolvare, to roll, to revolve. Welkin,—A. S. Wealcynde; as Wealcynde ea, revolvens aqua. For—

WELK, v. To decay, to fade, to wither, to decrease, to descend. Brocket has preserved this word in his Gloss.; and Grose observes, that "mown grass, in drying for hay, is said to welk."

Welk, and Welew, (Wel-ic, -ig, -ew,) appear to be the same word, and have probably their origin in A. S. Wal, weale, cædes, clades.

Lye explains,—marcere, elanguescere. D. Welcken, ver-welcken; in Ger. Welkin, ver-welken. See Kilian, and Wach.

WELL, v. s. To spring or flow out or up.

A well,—a place where water or other fluid hath sprung or flowed out. Met.—the source, spring, origin.

WETHER, or WEDDER, s. A castrated ram.

D. Weder, weer; Ger. Wider; A. S. Weder, wether. Aries castratus, ab adversando dictus; (Kilian and Jun.) from D. Wederen; Ger. Widern; A. S. Witheran, resistere, adversari, to resist, withstand, turn against.

WEX. See WAX.

WHALE, s. A fish.

A. S. Hwal; D. & Ger. Wal; Sw. Hwal. Jun. suggests wal, abyssus, but with other etymologists prefers Gr. Βαλωνα, or φάλανα. It is more immediately from D. & Ger. Wallen, A. S. Walu-ian, to roll, to wallow. "Part huge of bulk, wallowing, unwieldy."—Paradise Lost, vii. 411.

WHAPE. See WAFLE.

WHARF, s. A place, thrown out, projected, sc. from the bank, on -INGER, which to land goods.

Go. Hwæt; A. S. Hwæt; D. Weyt; Dan. Hwæde; Ger. Weizen, which Wach, composes of Ger. Witt, and Gr. Zea. Jun., Sk., and other etymologists, agree to derive from the colour "white," ob farina candorem (Martin); and Wach, refers to Pliny: "There is no wheat in the world comparable to ours here in Italie, for it surpasseth all others both in whiteness and also in weight."

WHEEDLE, v. As now app.—To beg, (with importunity, with appeal to the affections,) to persuade (by an assumed degree of fondness); to cajole, to coax.
A. S. Wædi-ian, indigere, mendicare, to want, to beg, or go a begging.—Som.

WHEEL, v. s. To roll or turn round, to -ER, revolve; to take or make a circular -Y,* or rotatory movement.—J. Phillips.
A. S. Hwægel; D. & Ger. Wiel; Sw. Hvit; Dan. Hvit, hvaler; from A. S. v. A-wytan, (wyt-ian, wittigan, wælc-an, see WELKIN), volvere, revolvere, to roll, to revolve. A-En-In.

WHEEZE. See WEASE.

WHELK, s. There is a shellfish so called, -ED. (from its twisted shell?) and may -Y. have received its name from weal-can, to turn. (See WELK.) So also whelky pearls, and whelked horns: but Welk, the s. app. to Bardolph's face, (Hen. V.) may be from weal, (weal-ig, weal-ic, welk.) See WEAL, or WALE.

WHELK. See WELK.

WHELM, v. To cover; to pour over; to flow or rise over; to overflow, or overflowed. Jun. says "A. S. Weim-an is—to boil over." (See TO WEL.) Sk. thinks from A. S. Hwylf-an, obruere; Chaucer writes—Overwhelve, (qv.) Perhaps formed upon the v. Hel-an, to cover. See HELM. Over—

WHELP, s. v. That which (a young animal which) yelleth or yelpeth, or howl-eth; any noisy young creature.

WHERE, ad. There, is the-er, i. e. the place, that place; and Where, is who-er, i. e. which or what place, at or in which or what place.

Where is much used in composition: Whereby,—by which or what place; by which or what. (See WHO.) Wherefore,—for which or what.

Go. & Sw. Hwar; A. S. Hwar; Ger. War, (in composition Wor); D. Waer; Dan. Hoor, ubi; Sc. Quhere.

WHERRIT, v. To attack, to assault; to attack unceasingly; to harass, to tease.

A teaser, is a name now well known among boxers, and seems to be given to a blow calculated to perplex and try the temper of the receiver.

A wherret on the ear, ictus pugni, a blow of the fist. "I believe," says Sk. "from the sound." Perhaps, from Worry, or Werry.

WHERRY, s. The name of a light boat, adapted for speed or swiftness; for the quick impulse of the oars.

From To ferry, or To hurry; or from L. Vehere, or A. S. Far-an, to go.—See SK. It seems to be very plainly from A. S. v. Werri-an, werrig-an, lanciare, incitare, to werry; to urge on, sc. at all speed.

WHERVE, s. "So fine, so round and even a thread she [the spider] spins, hanging thereunto herself, and using the weight of her own bodie instead of a wherve: that a wonder it is to see."—Holland. Plinie.

There is no corresponding word in the original, nor has the word occurred elsewhere: but it is probably formed from A. S. Hwærf-an, volvere; or Wærf, a warp, to which it appears to be equivalent.

WHET, v. s. -TER. To sharpen; to give sharpness or acuteness, an acute or sharp edge; to edge or egg; to stimulate, to incite.

D. Wet-ien; Ger. -zen; A. S. Hwettan, acutere, incitare, inutigare.

WHETHER, av. Thither, is that there, (that, the place; that specific place;) and Whither is, what or which place; what, which end, or object moved to or from. Whether is the same word (with the mere difference of a letter). Wiclif writes, "Whether publicans done not this?" i. e. nonne et publicani hoc facerent?

Whether daughter he should trust (R. Glouc.), whether side it drew (Gower), i. e. which daughter, which side, of the daughters there, the side there, before him, in the sight or view, in the mind or thought; what or which of two or several; this or that, so or so.

Wicliſ, Chaucer, &c. also write Wher. See WHO.

Go. Wheather; A. S. Hweath-er, -ere; D. & Ger. Weder, ater, utrum, an, an-ne, non-ne.

WHEY, s. v. App. to—the watery portion -EX. of milk; to any thing pale (as if -ISH. steeped or sodden); as a wey face. See WAT. A. S. Hwæg; D. Wey. Martin. (says Jun.) suspects from L. Uvidus, as wey is the watery portion of milk. Perhaps from Ger. Weich, D. Weych, maceratus.

WHICH, WHILE, pro. Which is composed of who-sach. See WHO, ILK, and THILK.

Go. Hwilt-acks; Sw. -ken; A. S. Hwilt; Ger. Welch, welche; D. Welch, welche; Dan. Holthen.

WHIFF, s. v. A whiff,—a waft or waft; -LE, s. v. as much air as is produced by -L-ER. waving (e. g. a fan); a slight -ING. blast, a puff.

To whiff,—to breathe, exhale, expire, emit—a slight blast or puff.

To whistle,—to move, to stir with a slight blast; to puff or blow about or away; to change or turn, to veer with every wind. To blow a slight wind-instrument, as a fife, a pipe.

A whistler,—a blower, a piper. One who changes with every wind, who makes frequent noise to little purpose.

A. S. Wast-an, to speak foolishly; wast-ere, an idle-headed fellow; perhaps formed upon the v. To waf or wave.

WHIG, or WIG, s. App. to wey; to any thing made with whey. In Nottinghamshire—a kind of light cake is so called. See WHEAT.

WHIG, s. Dr. Jamieson mentions a MS. -GISH. poem called, The Whiggamer -QISHLY. Road into Edinburgh, Nov. -GISM. 1628. He also cites at length from Burnet; and as follows from Woodrow:—"The poor honest people, who were in raillery called whiggs, from a kind of milk they were forced to drink in their wanderings and straits, became name-fathers to all who espoused the interest of liberty and property through Britain and Ireland."—Hist. vol. i. p. 263. Bp. Burnet writes:—"From a word whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamers, and shorter the whiggs. . . . This was called the whiggamers' inroad: and ever after that, all that oppressed the court came in contempt to be called whiggs: and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction."—Own Times.

WHILE, s. v. av. While is app. gen. to WHILES. time; strictly, it is—A turn, or WHILST. time of taking a turn.

WHIL-ERE. Whil-es,—time, that or which. -OM. Whilst,—a corruption of Whiles.

To while,—to pass away or spend time in doing something merely to pass it away—without languor or wearisomeness.

Whilere,—erewhile, a while or time before.

Whilom (A. S. Hwilon, also written Hwilon and Hwikum),—at one time; some time or times.

-ING. The Ger. Wismern (Wach. says) is Jammers (prefix W); in A. S. Geom-ien (gemere), to moan, sigh or sob.

WHIN, s. The thorny broom. Usually derived from the Welsh Chwynn.

WHINE, v. s. As app. it is—To drawl -ER. out the tone, the murmur of la- -ING. mentation or complaint; to murmur out prolonged notes of moaning.

Go. Wainon; A. S. Wanien; D. Wanen, placare, dedere, vagire, to moan or bemoan.

WHINIARD, s. WHINGER. A kind of sword.

Whinger (Dr. Jamieson), is a sort of hanger.

Essie, gladius. Various etymologies are proposed for this word. See SK and Mine.

WHINNY, v. In L. Hinnire, to neigh, (qv.)

WHIP, v. s. To scourge, to lash; to throw -PER. out, to strike with a lash; to fasten -PING. or confine; to inwrap or infold by -STER. any thing (lash, string, thread) thrown or cast; to put or patch, to stitch, hastily together; to do or perform any thing with a mere throw or cast, by a quick active movement.

A. S. Woop-an; D. Wipen, to scourge. Un-

WHIR, v. s. To turn or move rapidly; to hurry along, around, away; to whirl, (qv.)

"To whir or whirry away, is to fly off with such a noise as a partridge or meer-coek makes when it springs from the ground."—Jamieson, Supplem.

WHIRL, v. s. To run round; to drive,

-BAT. or force, or hurry round; to throw -POOL. or cast round.

-WIND. A. S. Whari-en, gub-wari-en, circumire, -IGIG. circumagere, to go or run round, to drive round. Ger. Wirbel, vortex, werben, vertere; D. Werv-el, -elen, -en; Sw. Hwirl-wel, hwirf-wa; Dan. Hvirver; A. S. Hwirlfan, hworfan. The frequentative of Hworfan would be Hwirlfehan, and this, by dropping the aspirate and the letter f, would become Wirl, or Wari-en. See TO HURL. Out-

WHISK, v. a. To wipe away; to brush.
-ER. to sweep away (by a quick, light
-ERED. motion or action); to move with
-ING. quick, sweeping, brushing action.
-Y. A whisk is app. to a quick, sweeping motion; also to a kind of brush or broom adapted to its use.

A whisker of hair,—so called from its resemblance to a whisk; formed of long slender materials.

A whisky,—a carriage moving quickly, easily moved.

D. Wisch, wischen; Ger. Wischen; Sw. Wiscen, Dan. Fisker, tergere, detergere; to wipe away.

WHISKEY, s. A spirituous liquor; (corrupted from Uiscebaugh.)

WHISPER, v. s. To speak in a low voice.
-ER. "In the speech of man, the whispering, which they call susurrus -INGLY. in Latine, whether it be louder or softer, is an interior sound: but the speaking out is an exterior sound: and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing, in whispering."—Bacon.

D. Wisperen, sen, insusurrare; Ger. Wispeln, (which Wach derives from the L. Sibilare.) Sw. Wispka, A. S. Wisprian, submissa loqui, murmurare.

WHIST, v. s. WHUST. To be, or cause to be, to keep, silent; to be still or quiet. "They whistled all."—Surrey. "The wild waves whist."—Shak. "A whisht is when we bid them hold their peace, that have least cause to speake, and can doe little good with their talking."—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique.

Whist,—a game at Cards, at which silence is to be kept.

Hist, Hust, Hush, are the same word, with a little variation in sound. See HUSH.

WHISTLE, v. s. -ER. A wind-pipe, either natural or artificial; the sound emitted or issued from it; any similar sound.

The A. S. Whistlian, whillan, sibilare. Wistle, fistula, the etymologists agree to be formed from the sound. Whis, or hwis, (in Whisper, Whist, and Whistle.) Lye thinks was used by our Northern ancestors to express—lenem susurrum.

WHIT, or WIT, s. Any thing known, seen, felt; any thing that can be seen or perceived; any thing, however small or minute; a point, a bit, a moment.

A. S. Awit, (aught.) wit, or hwit; Go. Wadit. See WIT. A—

WHITE, ad. s. v. Having the colour of -EN, v. foam or froth; of snow. App. -NESS. met. to denote—

-ISH. Pure, unspotted, unstained, un-
-LY. blemished, innocent, harmless.

Also—

Colourless, pallid, pale. And—
White, s.—the white (mark) of a target, the white (part) of an egg, distinguished from the yolk, i. e. the yellow.

Whitel, (A. S. Hwitel), a white vest or covering.

Whit-leather,—white leather.

**Shak. Southernc.*

Go. Weiss or quell; A. S. Hwiti; D. Wit; Ger. Weiss; Sw. Hwiti; Dan. Hoide. Wach suggests from Wissen, videre, because white things are most conspicuous. Tooke,—from the Go. Gwathjan, spumare, to foam.

WHITHER, ad. Which or what place; to which or what place. See WHETHER and WHO.

Go. Hwath; A. S. Hwader, wider; Sw. Hwari; Dan. Hoorhen.

WHITING, s. A fish. Some think so called from its whiteness.

D. Wytlingh, wytlingh.

WHIT-LOW, s. A tumour, which Lye considers to be so called from the colour of the ulcer, and the burning heat of the pain.

Written by Holland and Wiseman a Whitflow; is called by Sk. a hybrid word, from A. S. Wite, pain, and Fr. Loup, lupus: Lupus tum ob coloris sævitiam, tum quod vicinas partes depascitur. Lye more rationally composes of white (albus), and low (flamma).

WHITSTER, s. i. e. A whitener or bleacher.

WHIT-SUNDAY, s. -N-TIDE. So called from the white vests in which the candidates for baptism appeared.

Ger. Weisse sonntag, dominica alba.—Wach. Sk. speaks to the same effect.

WHITTLE, s. A Sheffield whittle (i. e. knife) is still a common name.

To whittle,—to whet, to sharpen; to be or become sharp or eager.

A. S. Hwitel, or Hwittle. Cutellus, a knife,—Sk. derives from To whet (or sharpen).

WHIZ, s. v. To make a noise—between humming and hissing.

Stridere: manifestly (Sk.) from the sound. See Hiss.

WHO, pr. It has been suggested in v. that WHOM. How is from A. S. Hwian, to hew; WHOSE. Hwæ, effigies, the form or fashion, the manner or means, the state or condition. How (quo modo) does he look? how does he do? how does he feel?—are questions all app. to the form or fashion, &c. of the person concerning whom the inquiry is made. How, in A. S. is Hw, and also Hwu. Who is Hwa, hwa; and this latter, by a mere change of place in the aspirate, is Wha, (a broad, Whaw), whoo, who. R. Gloucester and others, following the A. S. form, Hu, hwa, (without the aspirate,) write—Ho, hoo, i. e. Who, whose; and Ihre tells us how variously the Sw. Ho was written. The transposition hw into wh is common. See Lye.

Who, then, may be explained to denote,—the form or frame, the model, the image, of some person or thing spoken of; latterly restricted to the person only, to the identification of the individual person.

From Who, are composed, Who-se, Who-m, by the addition of the term. es, and em.

What is—who-ad, or who-ed, what, what: the past p. Hw-ad, hwed, hwad, hwat, of the v. Hw-an.

Which is—who-each. See SUCH.

WHO

When is,—who (or what) one, sc. moment.
See THEN.

Where is,—who (or what) ere, i. e. place.
See THERE.

Whither is,—who (or what) there (the ere), i. e. what the place.

Wiclif writes, "Ye witen which we were:" Bible, 1551, "Ye know after what manner we behaved." Wiclif, "He forgot which he was:" Bible, 1551, "He forgetteth what his fashion was;" Bible, 1583, "What manner of one he was."

The Sc. corresponding words are,—Quha, quhilk, quhen, quhar. The Sc. etymologists have written largely to account for this Q. Some learned persons have suggested that it may be the "ancient Æolic digamma, aspirated in pronunciation." This digamma must be accounted for from a different letter; viz. B, and its cognates P, F, V. Q is the common Go. or A. S. pref. Ga, Ge, or Ce, united in pronunciation with the vowel following; thus, in A. S. we find the v. Hiw-an, or heaw-ian, with the pref. Ge (Ge-heaw-ian, Lye); and the past p. Ge-hi-w-ad, or ge-heaw-ad, ge-hwad, ge-hwat, would become Ghwat, and by transposition, Gwhat or guhath:—and so of the others, Quhilk, quhen, &c. And see QUAKE, QUASH, QUAYER, QUICK, &c. Lennep does not attempt to give any reason for the Gr. pref. K and Γ, and Scheide misnames them—literas serviles. See Q.

Some other pronouns not hitherto traced to their source, seem to claim an origin in common with How and Who; and it may be prudent to place them in connexion here.

Why (qua re),—A. S. & Sw. Hwy; D. Wy; Dan. Hvi.

We (pro.), differing little in form from D. Wie, who, or Ger. Wie, how, has been app. to denote—the person speaking; in grammatical arrangement called the first person plural, and nominative case.

We (oue), with the common term. es, forms We-es; by contraction, Wes; by change of vowel, Wos, or wus; and it is, by transposition, variously written,—Ows, Ous, Us.

Our (Sw. Wa-or, Dan. V-or), is,—we, or ou, with the common term. er.

The pr. You, ye, must be ascribed to the same root. You, in A. S. is ew; Your is ewer; and anciently they are respectively written,—Oue, ow or ou,—ower or oure: they are also written,—Gow, ghou, goure; and the G must be accounted for as in the Sc. Quha; it is the common pref. Ge-; thus, Ge-ow, gow, or ghou; and the G softened, as in numberless other instances, into Y. And this Y may have been preserved, pref., to discriminate the identification of persons spoken to, from those speaking.

Your (A. S. Eower), is,—you, with the common term. er. It has been noticed under different pronouns (He, It), that they were not anciently confined to gender or number; and it is equally clear, that We, Ou, and You, were not restricted to person. Chaucer writes,—It am I: and the expressions, I am he, we are they, you are they, are current in modern speech.

Go. Hwas; A. S. Hwa, hwa; Dan. Hwa; D. Wic; Ger. Wer; Sw. Ho, (anciently Hwa, hwa, hue, and ha.—Ihre.) Dan. Hwa.

WHOB-UB, s. See HUB-BUB. Probably formed from the reduplication of Whoop,—Whoop-whoop, whoop-ooop, whob-uh.

WHODE,* s. i. e. Hood.—*Bale.

WHOLE, ad. s. Total, entire, sane or -LY. sound, complete, perfect.

-SOME. Whole-some, (also written Hole-some-ly some),—conferring, conducting -NESS. to, or preserving—soundness (health); healthy, salutary, or salubrious.

Whole-sale,—distinguished from retail; sale of the gross.

Tooke says,—whole, the same as hale, i. e. covered; as a wound or sore is healed or whole; that is, covered over by the skin.

A. S. Walg, walgig, hal, halig; D. Heel, ge-heel; Dan. Heel, from A. S. Hal-ian, ge-haltan, halan, ge-halan, manere, sanscare, to heal, from the a. Hal-an, to cover; and hence,—to close, sc. a breach, a solution of continuity; to make, or come to be or become—entire. Whole, also written Hole, is (if not the same word) equivalent to All. A. S. Hwi, hwyy; Sw. Hwi; Dan. Hwi, our, quare, quam ob rem.

WICK, ad. s. Wick, ad. i. e. quick. Very common in the northern parts of England.

Wick, s.—that which quickens, catches fire, keeps the light.

Wick, s.—A. S. Wic, a dwelling-place; whence (Sk.), the terminations of so many towns and villages.

D. Wicks; A. S. Wices; from A. S. Wic-an, manere, habitare, vivere; Ge-wician, catholicus, to quicken.

WICKED, ad. Tempted, allured, enticed, -LY. drawn, led—to vice, to the com- -NESS. mission of any vice, sin, or crime; to viciousness, sinfulness, criminality; and hence—vicious, sinful, criminal, flagitious, depraved; also—mischievous, pernicious, baneful. Our old authors write also Wick.

WIF

Jun. says, —A. S. Wicca, was an enchanter, confessus; and that, with the L. comic poets, Pene-fusus was app. to—persons of infamous character. Sk. among other suggestions, proposes A. S. Wice-lan, incantare, qd. bewitched; and Tooke considers Wicked to be merely Witched, (t for ck,) and (as Witch also,) to be the past tense, used as a pt. of A. S. Wiccan. "All atrocious crimes," he observes, "were attributed by our ancestors to enchantment, sorcery, and witchcraft; and in indictments at this day, the crime is attributed to the instigations of the devil."

WICKER, ad. s. -ED. Quick twigs, or twigs quickly grown—cut soon, or before grown too large.

Sk. from Ger. Wickeln, to roll over; because wicker-work is formed by twining or turning one (twig) over another. Perhaps from A. S. v. Wiccan, to quicken. See QUICK.

WICKET, s. The sticks set up at cricket—not sufficiently apart to allow the ball bowled at them to pass through,—is called the wicket.

Fr. Guichet, a wicket or hatch of a door. D. Wicket, winchet. Men. considers it a dim. of Huis, (a door);—Huis, hutsel, wissel, guisel, guichet.

WIDE, ad. Wide is not accurately distinguished from broad. The one -EN, v. might be restricted to superficial -NESS. extent where no depth, and the WIDTH. other where depth, existed; as, a broad plain, a wide river or gulf. Both are distinguished from long.

Extended, expanded, distant, remote.

Wild-ing,—a wild plant; a wild fruit—

apple, pear, &c.

D. Ger. & Sw. Wild; Dan. Vild; A. S. Wild, awildan; Ger. Wilden, sylyescere. Wach. says,—it is spoken, 1. of beasts; 2. of plants; 3. of any things that are in sylis, and then, allegorically, of the manners of animals. Tooke begins where Wach. ends—with the manners or dispositions of the animals, sc. "as willed, wild'd, (or self-wild'd), in opposition to those (whether men or beasts) who are tamed or subdued (by reason or otherwise) to the will of others or of societies." "Wild, as ye please to call it, or self-wild'd."—Beau. & F. The word would then be extended to the places inhabited by such animals, to the natural productions of such places. Be-

WING, s. v. App. to.—The limbs by which -LESS. a bird flies or moves through the

-Y. air; also—to any thing appended as sides to the main body; as the wing of a building, or of an army. And To wing—

To bear or carry, to move by, to act upon the wing; to fly or move in flight; to affix wings; to append or attach, as wings to the side. Also, to divest of, deprive of, the wing or use of the wing.

Sw. Wings, which Ihre derives from Welsh Gwingo, to move often, to wag. Som. has Gehwing, angulus, a corner, a nook, a wing. The D. Quicken, or quicken, movere, agitare, motare, tremulo motu ferri, to move, to shake, to move frequently, to be carried along by a tremulous motion, seems to express the action of a bird in its flight; and thus to account for the application of the name. With (in composition) is said to denote opposition, resistance, negation, privation. D. Weder; Ger. Wider; A. S. Wither, contra, adversus; witherian, adversari, resistere. But to with-draw, e. g. implies a putting forth or forward; and then a drawing back from one person or thing to another; and, considered in relation to that from which, &c. it denotes privation; but considered in relation to that to which, &c. it denotes a reunion; agreeably to the meaning of the word—With. So also With-hold, With-stand, (qqv.)

A. S. With, withinnan, withlutan. With has descended to us from two different A. S. verbs, viz. With-an, to join, and (Go. Wairthan) Weorthan, wyrth-an, to be. From the latter we have the compounds With-in and With-out; i. e. be in, be out. With, when from the v. Wyrthan, is equivalent to By, (the imper. of Be); and Tyrw. considers the expressions—with mischance, with misadventure, with sorwe—to be parenthetical curses: and so far Tooke coincides; the literal meaning of those phrases being, (not, as Tyrw. thinks—God yeus, but,) Be mischance, be misadventure, be sorrow,—to him or them, concerning whom those words are spoken. Tyrw. also supposes—with evil profe, with sory grace—to have the same meaning; from which Tooke dissents, believing With to be in those instances the imper. of With-an, to join. This difference of opinion shews that the distinction is not always manifest: in some cases it is clear enough, as—He was slain with a sword, He was slain with all his company. Gen. speaking, when With denotes—instrument, cause, means, it is the imper. of Wyrth-an, to be: when it denotes—union, conjunction, it is the imper. of With-an, to join; and see With, s. Usage appears to have established some distinctions, where the meaning is the same; as, He died with hunger, He died by poison.

WORLD, s. The universe, or whole -LY. system of created things; the -LINESS. earth or globe, the human inhabitants, the countries or regions -LING. of it; (as in A. S.) app. also to time, the age or duration of it; the state or condition, course, manner, or manners of life or existence; the business, employment, or occupation of life; a great multitude; the people.

Worldly (met.) is opposed to heavenly; as Earthly also is:—seeking the goods, pursuing the pleasures, of this world.

A. S. Weoruld, weoruld; D. Weereld, wereld; Sw. Werd; Ger. Welt, werelt, anciently Wer-olt, which (Wach. thinks) meant the age of man, (Wer, vir, man, and old, age,) and thence transferred—ad mundum. Kilian derives Wereld from Weran, to endure, to last, (to wear.) Jun. thinks that Weoruld was first used to denote seculum, and subsequently mundus; and that this application was made from the unceasing motion and circumvolution of ages; and thus he traces it to the A. S. v. Wari-an, bi-wari-an, to pass, Ymb-warlan, to pass, or go, or turn round, (to whirl.)

WORM, s. v. To worm,—to act like a -Y. worm; silently, slowly, insensibly; -WOOD. to penetrate, make way into, gradually; to effect by sly use of opportunities. To draw or take away a worm.

A. S. Wyrm; D. Worm; Ger. Wurm. Martin.—from L. Vermis, and this from Gr. Epy-ov, to creep. Jun.—from the Gr. Opwca, tenuis funiculus, ob manifestam similitudinem. Wach. if he could decide upon a Ger. origin, would prefer Werb-en, to move in curved lines, to turn, to return, (to warp). Worm and Ferm-is have evidently the same origin. See VERMICULAR. Un-

WORRY, v. -IER. Worry is the same word as Warray, or Warray,—To attack hostilely; to continue to attack or assail; to persecute, to harass, to distress; to destroy by repeated or continued attacks.

D. Worphen; Ger. Wurphen, pecare, jugulare; formed upon the respective vs. War-en and War-en. See WAR.

WORSE, ad. av. v. To worse or to worst,— -EN, * v. is to impair or reduce, (sc. Worst, ad. s. v. the goodness or strength,) to diminish, to weaken, to injure or hurt, to defeat.

Worse, ad. is used (grammatically) to express comparatively a greater degree of bad or ill.

Worst,—a superlatively greater degree.

Worser,—is common in our old writers, and is used even by Dryden; yet Butler, in his Grammar, which was published in 1633, observes, (p. 37.) “that worser and lesser are not comparatives, but superfluous comparatives of comparatives; which seem ignorantly use for worse and less.”

* Milton.

To wear; the A. S. Werian, gerere, et gerere deterere; whence Wore is destritus: he would prefer Wriest, from Wry, tortus, obliquus. (See WEAR, and DETERIORATE.) Worst is the past p. of Wyrrsian. Wyrrsed, wyrrs'd, wyrrst, or worst.

WORSHIP, s. v. To think, to deem -PER. worthy; to respect, to regard as -FUL. worthy, to honour, to revere; to -FULLY. offer, to make offerings of honour -PING. or reverence; to perform offices or ceremonies of honour or reverence; to adore.

A. S. Wyr; D. Worte, wortel; Ger. Wurze; Sw. Oort; Dan. Fort. (See ORCHARD.) Wach. resorts to the Gr. Op-ew, excitare, attollere, surgere, crecere, to lift up, to rise, to grow. May it not be from A. S. Ord, ortus?

WORT, s. New beer or ale.

A. S. Wyr, mustum; D. Werte, worte. Wyr (see WORT, ale) is app. to all sorts of smelling flowers, spices, &c., and may be app. to the new beer on account of its pleasant smell; or it may have sprung from the v. Orath-ian, sprare, to breathe.

WORTH, v. Go. Wairthan; A. S. Weorth-an; D. Werden, worden, fieri,—to be or become, or cause to be or become. Wo worth is a very common expression in our older writers,—Woe be; Wo be to you. See WITH.

WRY, ad. v. -NESS. Crooked, bended, turned, sc. out of a right or straight line.

Dan. Vrien. From Writh, by dropping the th. A-

X.

X, says B. Jonson, is rather an abbreviation, or way of short writing with us, than a letter: for it hath the sound of e and s, or k and s. It begins no word with us, but ends many: as sir, fax, box. In some cases it seems to approach the sound of gz, as in example.

Y.

Y, says B. Jonson, is mere vowelish in our tongue, and hath only the power of I, even where it obtains the seat of a consonant, as in young, younger. Butler calls it both an Eng. consonant, and a Gr. vowel; the latter sounded as I, and rightly used in words originally Gr.: in this agreeing with B.
Jonson. He adds, that the force of the consonant is seen in yarn, and therefore it is unrightly named wei: which hath in it the force of w, not y, for wei-a-r-n, soundeth warn, not yarn; but it is rather to be called yi.

YACHT, s. App. to—A kind of nautical vessel, from its aptness for speed.

884

Dan. Jagt; D. Jaghte, jaght-schip. Navis pre- datoria incredibilis celeritatis.—Kilian. So called (Sk. and Lye suggest,) from Jaght-en, to hunt, to course or run after, to hasten.

YARD, s. A place, surrounded or inclosed, as church-yard, court-yard.

A. S. Geard, past p. of the v. Gyrd-an, to gird, to surround, to inclose. See YARR.

YARD, s. A yard to mete or measure with. A. S. Metgeard,—

A mete-yard, i. e. something prepared to mete or measure with.

A yard-wand,—a wand prepared. By usage, mete and wand are now omitted.
(See Tooke.) Orig. no certain length was denoted; now, three feet, of twelve inches.

Sail-yards,—wands, rods, to support the sails.

A. S. Gyrd; D. Garde, gaerde; Ger. Gert, past p. of Gyrwan, gyrian, to prepare. See YARE.

YARE, ad. Ready, prepared, provided.

-LY. "Heavy and yare of steerage,"

-AGE.* (North,)—provided, furnished.

Yarage,—furniture, equipment, tackling.

*North.

A. S. Ge-arwe, ready, quick, prepared. (Som.) : from Ge-arwian, gyrwan, gyrian, to prepare. See ARROW, GARDEN, YARD, and YARN.

YARN, s. Cotton, silk, wool, prepared (by spinning).

A. S. Georn, past p. of Gyrwan, gyrt-an, (to gare;) to prepare, to make ready. See TOOKE.

YARROW, s. A herb.

A. S. Gearewe; D. Garwe, millefolium.

YATE, s. i. e. Gate, (qv.)

YAW, s. i. e. The jaw, or chaw. See JUN.

YAW,* s. A yaw is that unsteady motion which a ship makes in a great swell, when, in steering, she inclines to the right or left of her course.—Gifford. **Massinger*.

YAWL,* v. i. e. To yell.—**Fairefax*.

YAWL,* s. Low L. Agyale, (Du Cange,) a kind of fishing boat. Thomson seems to think it is the same kind of boat as that called the Jolly-boat.—**Anson*. Cook.

Itre has Julla, scapha, navicolum, — which Rudbeckius derives from Julka, vacillare, a word with which Itre professes himself to be unacquainted. He refers to Low L. Agyale.

YAWN, v. s. To gape, to open; app.-ING. to the opening of the mouth—INOLY. (through drowsiness.)

A. S. Cin-ian, gan-ian, geon-an; D. Ghienon; Ger. Gien-en, hincere, hñare, occitare, to open the gates, jaws, or chaws, (qqv.) and see GUN.

YE, pro. And anciently in English written You. Ghe, Ghou, Ghour. Ye and You are Your. commonly called pronouns of the second person in the plural number, and are used by the person speaking (the first person) for or instead of the names (the nouns) of the persons to whom he speaks.

It is also commonly addressed to a single person.

We now write Yourself, Yourselves: it was formerly written Ye-self, You-self.

Go. Jus, vos; A. S. Ge, juh, cow, vos; cower, vester; D. Ghy; Ger. Jhr. For etym. see WHO.

YEA, Yes, av. Used to denote—Assent or consent; affirmation or confirmation.

More immediately the Fr. sing. Aye, have thou, and pl. Ayez, have ye. But Tooke still considers them to be the imperative of a v. of northern extraction, and Aye, and Yes, to mean,—have it, possess it, enjoy it; and Yes, to be Ay-es, have, possess, enjoy that. See AS. This northern v. is probably the A. S. Agan, Go, Aig-an, to have, hold or possess. See OWN.

YEAN, v. -ING. To bring forth; as the ewe doth her lambe.—Som.

A. S. Ean-ian, to cane, or (as some speak) to jeane; see EAN.

YEAR, s. "The time measured by the sun's revolution in the ecliptic,"

-LY, ad. av. from any equinox or solstice, -LING.

to the same again, is called the solar or tropical year, which contains 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 57 seconds; and is the only proper or natural year, because it always keeps the same seasons to the same months."—Ferguson.

Go. Jer, or yer; A. S. Gear; D. Jaer; Ger. Jahr; Sw. Aor; Dan. Aor. Jan. thinks from Gr. ἵππο, gyrase, to revolve. The Sw. Aor is used to denote also mensis annona, from era, metere, to reap. The root may be the A. S. Erian, ge-erian,—arare; and year intended to mark the time of ploughing; and then the interval between the times of ploughing in one season and the next.

YEARN, v. To long after, or for; to -ING. pant after, to desire or covet eagerly -FUL,* or anxiously; to be deeply, painfully anxious; grievously affected.—**P. Fletcher*.

A. S. Geornian, gyrnan; i. e. Ge-gyr-an, to run after, to pursue, to seek after. See TO EARN.

YEAST. See YEAST.

YEDDING,* s. Perhaps gestes, or story-telling.—Tytw. Gaddings.—Sk.

**Chaucer*.

YEDE,* YODE,* v. i. e. Go-ed, gode. We now say,—went. Yead,—to go.

**Fabyan*. Spenser.

YELK. See YOLK.

YELL, v. s. -ING. App. to—A frightful or hideous cry, as of wild and savage beasts; a cry of ravening, of terror.

A. S. Gyll-an, giell-an, clamare, to call out, clamorously. See CALL, GALE, &c.

YELLOW, ad. s. v. The colour of flame: -ISH. (a golden colour.)

-NESS. Dan. Gust; A. S. Ge-alewe. The A. S. Ge-ælged (Som.) is coloured, painted, tawned, sun-burnt: and this past p. of the v. Ge-alan, to kindle, appears to have been softened into Ge-alewe; and hence also the It. Giallo, Fr. Glaive, jaune. See TOOKE. The L. Flammens, and flavus, are flame-coloured. Brown is the colour of things burned. See GOLD and ALX.

YELP, v. s. App. to the short, sharp, bark of a dog, fox, &c.; of a young dog (a whelp); to any similar noise.

A. S. Ge-alp-an, from Gi-ell-an, to yell.

YEOMAN, s. "Gemen is now in the

-LY. moderne Teutonicke written Gemeyn, -RY. and it is as much to say as common; and, as in sundry other ancient words, so in this, the letter g being altered into y, it is of gemen become among us yemen; and varying yet farther in orthography, it is written yeomen. And seeing that gemen is all one with common, a yeoman is rightly understood a commoner."—Verstegan.

"A yeoman is he that hath free land of forty shillings by the year; who was anciently thereby qualified to serve on juries, vote for knight of the shire, and do any other act, where the law requires one that is probus et legalis homo."—Blackstone.

YOK

LYE derives from Gaemen, an inhabitant of a village. Spel. prefers Geonga, a young man, which Smith discounts: he also (Spel.) suggests Gemen, common; and this is adopted by Verstegan.

YERK, v. s. i. e. To jerk, (qv.) So written by our old authors, e.g. Holland, Beau. & F., North.

To strike, to throw out.

YERN, s. -Y. i. e. Iron, irony.—**Joye.*

YES. See YEA.

YEST, s. -Y. Yest, or Yeast, is app. to—The raging surge of the sea,—the froth or foam of it; and also of fermenting beer.

Dan. Yest; A. S. Ystig, stormy, tempestuous; Yst, a storm, a tempest; from the v. Yrsian, torian,—traci, to be angry or enraged. Yrst, the past p. (by dropping r) becomes gst.

YESTER-DAY, s. -EVENING. The day passed; the day last past.

A. S. Gystran-day, geostertile; D. Ghister, ghistern, ghisterigh; Ger. Gestern, from the L. Hesternus.—Sk. "Gestrin (says Tooke) is the past tense and p. of Ge-strin-an, to acquire, to get, to obtain; but a day is not gotten or obtained, till it is passed; therefore Gestrin-day is equivalent to the passed day. The L. Hesternus, is Ghestern."

YET, co. Yet, meaning get, must be interpreted as equivalent to—being or having been got or gotten.

A. S. Get, gela, giti, gila, adhuc, modo, praterita.—Som. Jun. derives from Gr. Er, or advir. Yet is A. S. Get, the imperative of get-an, to get.—Tooke. Be.

YEVE, **YEVE*, **YEFT*, s. i. e. Give, giver, gift.—**Common* in our oldest writers.

YEW, s. i. e. Ewe, (qv.)—**W. Browne.*

YEW, s. A tree. Also written Ewe, Eugh, Yough.

Fr. If; D. Ieuen, ieuen boom; Ger. Eiben baum; A. S. Iw. See EUGH.

YON, av. Gone, and, therefore, distant, YOND, at a distance.

-ER. Yond, ad.—is outrageous. Fr. Oultrageux, from Oultré, or outré; L. Ultra.—Upton.

Yon, Yonder, is classed by B. Jonson among the pronouns.

A. S. Geond, geoned, goned, gon'd, or gon. Be.

YORE, av. App. to—A year, or years past, gone, ago; in time past, in former time. A. S. Geara, from Gear, a year.

YOUNG, ad. s. App. to any thing (ani--MAL. mal or vegetable) on its first whatsoever openeth the womb, both of man and beast, it is mine."—Exod. xlii. 3. Or Gyna-an,

in-ire, incipere.

YULE, s. Yule-clog, Yule-cake, Yule-song.

—A large clog or log laid on the fire on Christmas eve, a ceremony still preserved in the northern parts of England. Cakes or songs, made or sung on Christmas eve, or during Christmas.

Sw. Jul; Dan. Jul (in R. Browne Gale); A. S. Gekul, natalis Domini, Christmas, which in the northern parts (of Lancashire, Yorkshire, &c.) they yet call—geol, gewl, geole.—Som.

Warner writes Ewle. The month of December was called Ewra Geold, because it came before

Z.

Z (says Wilkins) is by some styled S soft; it is framed by an appulse of the tongue towards the upper teeth or gums, and then forcing out the breath from betwixt the tongue and the upper teeth, with a vocal sound, which makes a more dense kind of *hiss*ing (than S), mixed with some kind of murmur. It is of the same affinity with S, as B with P, D with T; and, for the sake of a consistent uniformity, we ought to write z wherever we pronounce it; as, Authorize, catechize, criticize, which are usually written with s.

ZANY, s. v. It Zane, the name of John. Also a sillie John, a gull, a noddie. Used also for a simple vice, clowne, foole or simple fellow in a play or comedy, (Florio;) and Sk. seems inclined to favour this etym.: and Men. also considers it to be a corruption of Giovanni. Tooke supposes Sanese (an inhabitant of Sienna) was used to denote a fool; and that the first part of the word (Sane) has given us Zani, and the latter, (ness), nixxy. ZENITH, s. Opposed to nadir, (qv.)

ZEPHYR, s. The west wind; any bland and gentle wind.

Gr. Ζεφυρος, quasi ζωηφωρος, δωε το ζην φερειν, bringing life.

ZEST, s. App. to—Any thing that gives or adds, a relish, a savour: gen.—that enhances a pleasure or enjoyment.

Sk. says—is a small piece of orange-peel scraped and pressed into wine; perhaps from Fr. Zeul, the inner skin of the walnut; or rather (its me Deus amet) from Yeast. Why the name is given either to the orange-peel or the walnut-skin, the etymologists say not a word. Vanbrugh is the earliest authority that has occurred.

ZIG-ZAG, s. v. ad. -GED. Lines turning sharply, as in the letter Z.

Fr. Zig-zag.—Men. considers to be formed from its likeness to the thing it is intended to denote: perhaps from the repetition of the first syllable of the name of the Gr. Z, i. e. Zeug, zeug.

ZINC, s. Perhaps formed upon Ger. Zin, tim, (qv.)

ZODIAC, s. -AL. "Zodiack [Ζωδιακος], from ζωδιον, an animal, because most of the constellations in it, which are twelve in number, are the figures of animals. ZOO-GRAPHY, s. -ER. A description of (animal) life; of animals.

From Gr. ζωον, life, and γραφειν, to write.

ZOO-LOGY, s. "Zoology is the noblest

-G-ER. part of natural history, as it comprehends all sensitive beings, from reasonable man, through every species of animal life, till it descends to that point where sense is wholly extinct, and vegetation commences."—Pennant.

From Gr. ζωον, life, and λογειν, to discourse.

A NEW DICTIONARY
OF THE
ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

BY CHARLES RICHARDSON.

This work consists of two large quarto volumes, upon the composition of which the author has been employed for more than 20 years: and though the expense of publication has exceeded the sum of 6000*l.*, it is published at the moderate price of five guineas. The two volumes contain nearly 2300 pages of 3 columns each, closely yet clearly and beautifully printed. In this Dictionary equal care has been bestowed upon the Etymologies and Explanation; and also upon the copious selection of quotations in illustration of both:—these are arranged in chronological series from Wiclif and Chaucer to Burke and Cowper.

"We are inclined to consider the English language as having attained that fulness of maturity which leaves no wish for increase, but only anxiety for preservation. As helps to this, we have the various acceptations, in which every word has been used by approved writers, collected by Mr. Richardson, in a Dictionary, such as, perhaps, no other language could ever boast: and we have a new guide for the theory and use of languages, exemplifying his (Horne Tooke's) principles, by applying them to our own tongue."—Quarterly Review for March, 1827.

"We may now say, without drawing upon the truth, that we have a Dictionary surpassing in entertainment and knowledge most books. The deep research and extensive reading which have amassed this wealth of quotations, make us acquainted with stores of thought, hitherto buried in the dust of time, or accessible only to the favoured few. The divines, the poets, the dramatists, the philosophers, the historians, who have helped to build up the noble fabric of our language, are made in short but appropriate sentences to give us their own literary portraits: and, if style be an index to character, and expression to thought, we have here a fine opportunity of comparing age with age, not only in its literary, but also in its intellectual features. We add, that no deeper stain could be marked upon our national reputation, than that such a work, so grand in its design, and so perfect in its execution, should meet with indifference, or even with partial success."—Gloucestershire Chronicle.
